(B) At least 7 of the members of the Board of Trustees appointed by the Board of Regents under this paragraph shall be of Indian ancestry.

(C) Any vacancy on the Board of Trustees that is caused by the failure of a member of the Board of Trustees appointed under subparagraph (A)(iv) to complete the term of office of such member shall be filled by any individual appointed by the Board of Regents without regard to subparagraph (A)(iv), but subject to the requirements of subparagraph (B).

(D) The term of office of each of the members of the initial Board of Trustees appointed under clauses (iii) and (iv) of subparagraph (A) shall be 3 years.

(2)(A) Upon the expiration of the terms of office of the members of the initial Board of Trustees appointed under clauses (iii) and (iv) of paragraph (1)(A), the Board of Trustees shall thereafter consist of—

(i) the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution,

(ii) an Assistant Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution designated by the Board of Regents, and

(iii) 23 individuals appointed by the Board of Regents from a list of nominees submitted by the Board of Trustees.

(B) At least 12 of the members of the Board of Trustees appointed under subparagraph (A)(iii) shall be of Indian ancestry.

(C)(i) Except as otherwise provided in this subparagraph, the term of office of each member of the Board of Trustees appointed under subparagraph (A)(iii) shall be 3 years.

(ii) Of the initial members of the Board of Trustees appointed under subparagraph (A)(iii), who succeed the members appointed under clauses (iii) and (iv) of paragraph (1)(A)—

(I) 7 members shall have a term of office of 1 year,

(II) 8 members shall have a term of office of 2 years, and

(III) 8 members shall have a term of office of 3 years.

The Board of Regents shall designate the term of office of each of these members at the time the member is appointed.

(3) Any member of the Board of Trustees appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term of office for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of such term.

(d) A majority of the members of the Board of Trustees shall constitute a quorum and any vacancy on the Board of Trustees shall not affect the power of the Board of Trustees to function.

(e) Members of the Board of Trustees may be reimbursed for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by the members in the performance of their duties as members of the Board of Trustees.

DIRECTOR; STAFF

SEC. 6. (a) The Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution may appoint and fix the compensation and duties of the Director of the National Museum of the American Indian and of such other officers and employees of the Museum as may be necessary for the efficient administration, operation, maintenance, and preservation of the Museum.

(b) The Director of the Museum and 2 other employees of the Museum may be appointed and compensated without regard to the provisions of title 5 of the United States Code governing appointments in the competitive service and chapter 51, and subchapter III of chapter 53, of title 5 of such Code.

(c) All employees of the Heye Museum serving at the time of the transfer of its collections, endowment, and other property to the Smithsonian Institution shall be offered employment with the Smithsonian Institution under the usual terms of employment with the Smithsonian Institution and may be appointed without regard to the provisions of title 5 of the United States Code governing appointments in the competitive service and chapter 51, and subchapter III of chapter 53, of title 5 of such Code.

FACILITY IN NEW YORK

SEC. 7. (a) Notwithstanding any provision of law other than the provisions of this Act, the Administrator of General Services is authorized, upon such terms and for such periods as may be mutually agreed upon by the Administrator and the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, to furnish at a nominal charge to the Smithsonian Institution, for a period of not less than 99 years, space (as provided in section 4(b)(2)) in the Old United States Custom House at One Bowling Green, New York, New York. The Smithsonian Institution shall reimburse the Administrator for the Smithsonian Institution's pro rata share of the cost of utilities, maintenance, cleaning, and other services incurred with respect to such space and the full cost of any repairs or alterations requested by the Smithsonian Institution with respect to such space.

(b) The City of New York, New York, and the State of New York shall each contribute the lesser of—

(1) one-third of the total cost of the design, construction and renovation of the space in the Old United States Custom House at One Bowling Green, New York, New York, that is to be used by the Museum for the facility that is required to be established under section 4(b)(2), or

(2) $8,000,000.

(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act or of any other law, the Board of Regents is authorized to charge the public a fee for admission to the facility of the Museum that is required to be established under section 4(b)(2).

(d)(1) All receipts from charges paid by the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution under subsection (a) to the Administrator of General Services for the furnishment of the space described in subsection (a) shall be deposited into the fund established under section 210(f) of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (40 U.S.C. 490(f)).

(2) There are authorized to be appropriated to the General Services Administration such sums as may be necessary to reimburse the fund established under section 210(f) of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (40 U.S.C. 490(f)) for the difference between the amount the Administrator of General Services charges the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution under subsection (a) for the furnishment of the space described in subsection (a) and the amount the Administrator would otherwise charge for such space under section 210(j) of such Act.

(e) There are authorized to be appropriated to the General Services Administration $25,000,000 from the fund established under section 210(f) of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (40 U.S.C. 490(f)) for the repair and alteration of the Old United States Customs House at One Bowling Green, New York, New York, but not for those portions of the building assigned by the Administrator of General Services to the Smithsonian Institution under terms and conditions agreed to under subsection (a) that make the Smithsonian Institution responsible for the repair and alteration of such portions of the building.

(f)(1) The Board of Regents shall—

(A) loan artifacts and exhibitions from the Smithsonian Institution to the successor to the Heye Foundation at Audubon Terrace, 3753 Broadway, New York, New York,

(B) provide training, technical assistance, scholarship support, and such other assistance as is deemed necessary to such successor to maintain and operate museum programs, and

(C) ensure that at least 2,000 square feet at Audubon Terrace is publicly accessible and physically suitable for related exhibition activities.

(2) The successor to the Heye Foundation at Audubon Terrace shall make a good faith effort to respond to community cultural interests.

(3) Fees associated with traveling exhibits of the Smithsonian Institution that are charged to the successor to the Heye Foundation shall be determined according to the ability of the successor to pay such fees.

RELATIONSHIPS WITH OTHER MUSEUMS; INDIAN PROGRAMS

SEC. 8. (a)(1) The Board of Regents is authorized to enter into agreements with museums, educational institutions, and cultural organizations to—

(A) loan Native American artifacts and objects from the collections of the Smithsonian Institution,

(B) sponsor and coordinate a variety of traveling exhibitions, and

(C) provide training and technical assistance.

(2) The Board of Regents shall, in carrying out its responsibilities under this subsection, give priority to agreements with Indian tribes, museums, cultural centers, educational institutions, libraries, and archives. Agreements entered into with such Indian entities may provide loans or services at minimal cost or no cost.

(b)(1) The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to make grants to Indian tribal museums for the purpose of renovating, repairing, or constructing facilities for the museums (including ventilation and security systems) to enable the museums to receive and exhibit objects and artifacts loaned to the museums from the collection of the National Museum of the American Indian.

(2)(A) There is hereby established within the Treasury of the United States a trust fund to be known as the "Tribal Museum Endowment Fund" (hereafter in this subsection referred to as the "Endowment Fund"), consisting of such amounts as may be deposited into the Endowment Fund under subparagraph (B) or credited to the Endowment Fund under subparagraph (D)(iii).

(B)(i) The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to accept contributions to the Endowment Fund of any funds that were not derived from the Federal Government and shall deposit such contributions into the Endowment Fund.

(ii) Amounts appropriated to the Endowment Fund may be deposited into the Endowment Fund only to the extent that an equal amount of funds that were not derived from the Federal Government has been contributed to the Endowment Fund and deposited into the Endowment Fund under clause (i).

(C) The Secretary of the Interior shall be the trustee of the Endowment Fund, and shall submit an annual report to the Select Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate and the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives on—

(i) the financial condition and the results of the operations of the Endowment Fund during the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year in which such report is submitted, and

(ii) the expected condition and operations of the Endowment Fund during—

(I) the fiscal year in which such report is submitted, and

(II) the 5 fiscal years succeeding such fiscal year.

Such report shall be printed as a House document of the session of the Congress to which the report is made.

(D)(i) The Secretary of the Treasury shall invest the funds in the Endowment Fund in interest-bearing obligations of the United States. For such purpose, such obligations may be acquired—

(I) on original issue at the issue price, or

(II) by purchase of outstanding obligations at the market price.

(ii) Any obligation acquired by the Endowment Fund may be sold by the Secretary of the Treasury at the market price.

(iii) The interest on, and the proceeds from the sale or redemption of, any obligations held in the Endowment Fund shall be credited to, and form a part of, the Endowment Fund.

(E) The capital of the Endowment Fund shall not be available for expenditure. The amounts credited to the Endowment Fund under subparagraph (D)(iii) shall only be available for grants made under paragraph (1).

(F) The Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to pay out of amounts in the Endowment Fund that are credited to the Endowment Fund under subparagraph (D)(iii) such sums as are necessary to fund the grants made under paragraph (1).

(3) There are authorized to be appropriated for the Endowment Fund for each fiscal year beginning after fiscal year 1991, $2,000,000.

(c)(1) The Board of Regents is authorized to establish special programs to—

(A) serve Indian tribes and communities, and

(B) in concert with educational institutions (including Tribally Controlled Community Colleges), enhance the opportunities for Indians in museum studies, management, and research.

(2) The Board of Regents shall establish an American Indian Museum Management Fellowship program to provide stipends to Indians who are receiving training in museum development and management.

(3) There are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year $2,000,000 to carry out the provisions of this subsection.

INDIAN HUMAN REMAINS

SEC. 9. (a)(1) Subject to the provisions of this section and notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Board of Regents shall, in consultation and cooperation with traditional Indian and Native Hawaiian religious leaders and tribal government officials, initiate a process for the inventory of Indian and Native Hawaiian human remains and funerary objects in the collection or control of the Smithsonian Institution to identify, to the fullest extent possible, the geographic and tribal origins of such remains and objects. The identification of the human remains and funerary objects shall be based upon the best available scientific and historical documentation.

(2) If the identification process conducted under paragraph (1) has established by a preponderance of the evidence the Indian tribal origin of any particular human remains or funerary objects, the Board of Regents, as soon as possible, shall cause the affected Indian tribe or tribes to be notified of such identification.

(3) If the identification process conducted under paragraph (1) has established by a preponderance of the evidence the geographic origin of any particular human remains or funerary objects of Native Hawaiians, the Board of Regents, as soon as possible, shall cause notice of such identification to be made to a Native Hawaiian organization which has been certified by the Governor of the State of Hawaii as the appropriate entity to receive such notification.

(b)(1) If a preponderance of the evidence establishes that human remains in the possession or control of the Smithsonian Institution are of a particular Indian, or are of an individual who was culturally affiliated with a particular Indian tribe, the Board of Regents, upon request of the known descendants of such Indian, or such Indian tribe, as the case may be, shall expeditiously return such remains, and any funerary objects associated with such remains, to such descendants or Indian tribe.

(2) If a preponderance of the evidence establishes that human remains in the possession or control of the Smithsonian Institution are of a particular individual who is believed to be Native Hawaiian, the Board of Regents, upon the request of the known descendants of such individual, shall expeditiously return such remains, and any funerary objects associated with such remains, to such descendants.

(3) If a preponderance of the evidence establishes that funerary objects in the possession or control of the Smithsonian Institution, not associated with any human remains, were removed from a specific burial site of an individual culturally affiliated with a particular Indian tribe, the Board of Regents, upon the request of such Indian tribe, shall expeditiously return such objects to such Indian tribe.

(4) If a preponderance of the evidence establishes that funerary objects in the possession or control of the Smithsonian Institution, not associated with any human remains, were removed from a specific burial site of an individual believed to be Native Hawaiian, the Board of Regents, upon the request of the descendants of such individual, shall expeditiously return such objects to the descendants.

(c)(1) Within 120 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution shall establish a committee to monitor and review the implementation of the inventory and identification process required under subsection (a) and the restoration activities required under subsection (b).

(2) The committee established under paragraph (1) shall be composed of 5 members, 3 of whom shall be appointed from nominations submitted by Indian tribes and organizations. None of the persons appointed to the committee shall be Federal employees or officials or be affiliated with the Smithsonian Institution.

(3) The committee established under paragraph (1) shall be responsible for—

(A) monitoring the inventory and identification process conducted under subsection (a) to ensure a fair, objective consideration and assessment of all available relevant information and evidence,

(B) reviewing, upon its own motion or upon the request of any affected party, any finding relating to—

(i) the identity or origin of human remains or funerary objects, or

(ii) the return of such remains or objects,

(C) arbitrating disputes between Indian tribes relating to the return of human remains or funerary objects,

(D) consulting with Native Hawaiian religious leaders and Native Hawaiian organizations on matters within the scope of the work of the committee affecting Native Hawaiians; and

(E) performing such other related functions as the Secretary may assign to the committee.

(4) The Secretary shall ensure that the committee established under paragraph (1) and the members of the committee have full and free access to human remains and funerary objects under review and to associated scientific and historical documents.

(5) Members of the committee established under paragraph (1) shall be reimbursed at a rate equal to the daily rate for GS-18 of the General Schedule under section 5332 of title 5, United States Code, for each day (including traveltime) for which the member is actually engaged in committee business and for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses.

(6) The Secretary shall—

(A) designate one of the members of the committee established under paragraph (1) as chairman,

(B) establish such rules and regulations for the committee as may be necessary, and

(C) provide reasonable administrative and staff support necessary for the deliberations of the committee.

(7) The committee established under paragraph (1) shall terminate at the end of the 120-day period beginning on the day on which the Board of Regents certifies, in a report submitted to the Congress, that the work of the committee has been completed.

(d) Nothing in this section shall be interpreted as—

(1) limiting the authority of the Smithsonian Institution to return or repatriate human remains or funerary objects to Indian tribes or individuals or to Native Hawaiian individuals,

(2) delaying actions on repatriation requests that are pending on the date of enactment of this Act,

(3) denying or otherwise affecting access to the courts, or

(4) limiting any procedural or substantive rights which may otherwise be secured to Indian tribes or individuals or to Native Hawaiian individuals.

(e)(1) The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to make grants to Indian tribes for the purpose of assisting such Indian tribes in reaching and implementing agreements with the Smithsonian Institution, other Federal agencies, and non-Federal entities for the repatriation of human remains and funerary objects.

(2) The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to make grants to Native Hawaiian organizations for the purpose of assisting such organizations in reaching and implementing agreements with the Smithsonian Institution, other Federal agencies, and non-Federal entities for the repatriation of human remains and funerary objects.

(f) There are authorized to be appropriated—

(1) $1,000,000 for fiscal year 1991, and such sums as may be necessary for succeeding fiscal years, to carry out the inventory and identification process required under subsection (a),

(2) $250,000 for fiscal year 1991, and such sums as may be necessary for succeeding fiscal years, for the expenses of the review committee authorized under subsection (c), and

(3) $1,500,000 for fiscal year 1991, and such sums as may be necessary for succeeding fiscal years, for grants authorized under subsection (e).

PLEDGE

SEC. 10. The faith of the United States is pledged that the United States shall provide such funds as may be necessary for the design, construction, administration, maintenance, and operation of the Museum and the administrative expenses and costs of operating the Museum, including the protection and care of collections acquired by the Board of Trustees or the Board of Regents, so that the Museum shall at all times be properly maintained and, except as otherwise authorized in section 7(c), collections contained therein shall be exhibited regularly to the general public free of charge.

TRANSFER OF FUNDS

SEC. 11. Any funds appropriated to carry out the provisions of this Act may be transferred to the General Services Administration which, in consultation with the Smithsonian Institution, is authorized to enter into contracts and take such other actions, to the extent of the funds so transferred, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 12. (a)(1) Subject to the provisions of paragraph (2), there are authorized to be appropriated to the Smithsonian Institution—

(A) $10,000,000 for fiscal year 1990, and

(B) such sums as may be necessary for each of the succeeding fiscal years, to carry out the provisions of this Act for which no other specific authorization of appropriations is provided in this Act.

(2)(A) The total amount authorized to be appropriated for the construction of the facility described in section 4(b)(1) shall not exceed two-thirds of the total cost of such facility.

(B) The total amount authorized to be appropriated for the facility of the Museum established under section 4(b)(2) shall not exceed one-third of the total cost of such facility.

(b) Funds appropriated under the authority of subsection (a) for any period prior to the availability of the facilities described in section 4(b) shall remain available without fiscal year limitation for administrative and planning expenses and for the care and custody of the collections of the Museum and the Heye Museum.

(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, no funds may be appropriated for the purpose of constructing the museum facilities authorized by this Act until the Smithsonian Institution provides to the Congress and to the Administration an analysis of the total estimated cost of such construction and a cost-sharing plan projecting amounts for Federal appropriations and for non-Federal contributions.

IMPLEMENTATION OF PRESIDENT'S DRUG CONTROL STRATEGY

WALLOP AMENDMENT NO. 912

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. WALLOP submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 1711) to implement the President's drug control strategy, as follows:

At the end insert the following new section:

SECTION . DRUG TESTS FOR CERTAIN INDIVIDUALS APPLYING FOR OR RECEIVING AID TO FAMILIES WITH DEPENDENT CHILDREN.

Section 402(a) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 602(a)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (39);

(2) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (40) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and;

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(41) provide that the State agency—

"(A) shall require each applicant who is a parent or caretaker of a dependent child, as a condition of eligibility for aid under this part, to submit to a confidential test for illegal drugs approved by the Secretary;

"(B) shall implement a drug testing program under which any individual who receives aid under this part may be selected to submit to a confidential test for illegal drugs approved by the Secretary (such individuals selected for testing under this clause shall be selected on a random basis);

"(C) shall require that any individual required or selected to submit to a test for illegal drugs under this paragraph resulting in evidence of illegal drug use by such individual shall register for and participate in a drug treatment program approved by the State as a condition for continued eligibility for aid under this part; and

"(D) shall provide that—

"(i) if an individual who is required or selected pursuant to the provisions of this paragraph to submit to a test for illegal drugs and without good cause fails to submit to such test or refuses to participate in the State approved drug treatment program the needs of such individual shall not be taken into account with respect to such individual's family under paragraph (7) of this subsection, and if such individual is the parent or other caretaker relative, payments of aid of any dependent child in the family in the form of payments described in section 406(b)(2) (which in such a case shall be without regard to clauses (A) through (D) thereof) will be made less the State agency, after making reasonable efforts, is unable to locate an appropriate individual to whom such payments can be made;

"(ii) any sanction described in clause (i) shall continue—

"(I) in the case of the individual's first failure to comply, until the failure to comply ceases;

"(II) in the case of the individual's second failure to comply, until the failure to comply ceases or 3 months (whichever is longer); and

"(III) in the case of any subsequent failure to comply, until the failure to comply ceases or 6 months (whichever is longer); and

"(iii) the State will promptly remind any individual whose failure to comply has continued for 3 months, in writing, or the individual's option to end the sanction by terminating suh failure.".

SEC. . DEFINITION OF ILLEGAL DRUGS.

Section 406 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 606) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(i) The term 'illegal drugs' means a controlled substance in Schedule I or II, as defined under section 102(6) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802(6)); the possession of which is unlawful under such Act. The term 'illegal drugs' does not include a controlled substance used pursuant to a valid prescription or authorized by law.".

SEC. . REGULATIONS.

The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall prescribe such regulations as the Secretary deems necessary to implement the illegal drug testing program and required by the amendments made by section 2.

SEC. . EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act shall become effective on October 1, 1990.

RUDMAN AMENDMENT NOS. 913 AND 914

Mr. RUDMAN proposed two amendments to the bill S. 1711, supra, as follows:

AMENDMENT No. 913

Proposed new section 523 is amended by inserting the following new subsection:

"(d) STATE IMPACT STUDY.—Of funds appropriated to the National Institute of Justice for fiscal year 1990, not to exceed $400,000 shall be made available to the National Criminal Justice Association to carry out a study of the fiscal and other impacts in states of implementing drug testing programs for targeted classes of arrestees, individuals in jails, prisons, and other correctional facilities, and persons on conditional or supervised release before or after conviction, including probationers, parolees, and persons released on bail. Six months following enactment of this section, the associaton shall report on its preliminary study findings. The final report on the study shall be completed one year after enactment of this section.

AMENDMENT No. 914

Proposed new section 523(a) is amended by striking, where appears, "subject to periodic review by the Attorney General,".

BURNS AMENDMENT NO. 915

Mr. BURNS proposed an amendment to the bill S. 1711, supra, as follows:

On page 3, after line 10, insert the following:

"(d) In issuing regulations pursuant to subsection (b) of this Act, the Attorney General shall also take into account any limitations on the ability of a State to meet the requirements of this Act due to the schedule of its regular legislative sessions and its procedural time requirements for adopting legislation and regulations.

WIRTH AMENDMENT NO. 916

Mr. WIRTH proposed an amendment, which was subsequently modified, to the bill S. 1711, supra, as follows:

At the appropriate section, insert the following:

That the Office of the National Drug Control Policy is directed to develop a coordinated policy in conjunction with state and local governments to counteract youth gang involvement in the distribution, sale and use of illegal drugs;

That the coordinated policy to be developed, as referenced above, include, though not be limited to, programs or means to prevent young people from joining a gang and methods to reform, rehabilitate, educate or train gang members and turn them away from illegal gang activities.

That this policy be implemented as soon as practical but no later than Feb. 1, 1991.

BIDEN AND HATCH AMENDMENT NO. 917

Mr. BIDEN (for himself and Mr. HATCH) proposed an amendment to the bill S. 1711, supra, as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill insert the following:

SUBTITLE G—FEDERAL LAW ENFORCEMENT AGENCIES

(6) For the United States Marshals: $9,000,000.

BOND (AND HATCH) AMENDMENT NO. 918

Mr. BOND (for himself and Mr. HATCH) proposed an amendment to the bill S. 1711, supra as follows:

On page 2, strike lines 1 through line 10 on page 3 and insert the following:

"DRUG TESTING DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM"

"SEC. 523. (a) DEMONSTRATION PROGRAM.—The Attorney General shall establish a federal drug testing demonstration program under this section, which shall be based in part on scientific and technical standards determined by the Secretary of Health and Human Services to ensure reliability and accuracy of drug test results. In addition to specifying acceptable methods and procedures for carrying out drug testing, the program may include guidelines or specifications concerning—

(1) the classes of persons to be targeted for testing;

(2) the drugs to be tested for;

(3) the frequency and duration of testing; and

(4) the effect of test results in decisions concerning the sentence, the conditions to be imposed on release before or after conviction, and the granting, continuation, or termination of such release.

"(b) There is authorized to be appropriated $5,000,000.00 in fiscal years 1990, 1991, and 1992 to carry out the section.

MOYNIHAN (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 919

Mr. MOYNIHAN (for himself, Mr. DOLE, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. DODD, Mr. HATCH, and Mr. BRADLEY) proposed an amendment, which was subsequently modified, to the bill S. 1711, supra, as follows:

SECTION 1. SUBSTANCE ABUSE TREATMENT SERVICES AND MEDICAID.

(a) PURPOSE OF TITLE XIX.—Section 1901 of the Social Security Act is amended by striking "and" before the number "(2)", and inserting after "self-care," the following: "and (3), at State option, substance abuse treatment services so that treatment on request may be provided to all individuals eligible for assistance under this title (A) who desire to rid themselves of substance abuse problems, and (B) whose income and resources are insufficient to meet the cost of such treatment,".

"SUBSTANCE ABUSE TREATMENT SERVICES

"SEC. 1927. "(a) At the option of the State, the State plan for medical assistance described in section 1902(a) may include as medical assistance, substance abuse treatment services and related case management services (described in subsection (b)) under the plan to all individuals eligible for assistance under this title who desire to rid themselves of their substance abuse problems.

"(b) DEFINITIONS.—(1) The term 'substance abuse treatment services' includes—

"(A) inpatient substance abuse treatment services, including counseling, which are provided in a hospital (or distinct part thereof) or other entity if such entity is legally authorized to provide such treatment under State law;

"(B) outpatient substance abuse treatment services, including counseling, which are provided by a hospital (or distinct part thereof) or other entity if such entity is legally authorized to provide such treatment under State law; and

"(C) substance abuse treatment services, including counseling, which are provided in a residential substance abuse treatment center or other entity if such entity is legally authorized to provide such treatment under State law.

"(2) The term 'case management services' means, for purposes of this section, services which will assist individuals eligible under the plan in gaining access to needed medical, social, educational, and other services.".

SECTION 2. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this amendment shall take effect on October 1, 1990.

HEINZ (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 920

Mr. HEINZ (for himself, Mr. BOND, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. LOTT, and Mr. WARNER) proposed an amendment to the bill S. 1711, supra, as follows:

SECTION 1. EXCLUSION FROM THE LEASE AND GRIEVANCE PROCEDURE FOR ANY EVICTION OR TERMINATION OF TENANCY FOR CRIMINAL ACTIVITY.

Section 6(k) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 is amended by striking the last sentence and inserting the following: "An agency may exclude from its procedure any grievance concerning an eviction or termination of tenancy for criminal activity, including drug-related criminal activity, in accordance with subsection (L)(5). An agency may exclude from its procedure any other grievance concerning an eviction or termination of tenancy in any jurisdiction which requires that, prior to eviction, a tenant be given a hearing in court which the Secretary determines provides the basic elements of due process.".

SEC. 2. NOTIFICATION BY PUBLIC HOUSING AGENCY TO THE UNITED STATES POSTAL SERVICE THAT TENANTS HAVE BEEN EVICTED FROM PUBLIC HOUSING FOR DRUG-RELATED CRIMINAL ACTIVITIES.

Section 6 of the United States Housing Act of 1937 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(n) Where a public housing agency evicted any member of the household from a dwelling unit for engaging in criminal activity the public housing agency shall notify the local post office serving that dwelling unit that the household member is no longer residing in the dwelling unit.".

NUNN (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 921

Mr. NUNN (for himself, Mr. LIEBERMAN, and Mr. WILSON) proposed an amendment, which was subsequently modified, to the bill S. 1711, supra, as follows:

At the appropriate place insert the following:

SEC. . STUDY OF ANTI-DRUG ASSISTANCE TO THE ANDEAN REGION.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the operations of international narcotics trafficking organizations pose a direct threat to the national security of the United States and Latin America;

(2) international narcotics trafficking operations have grown so large and powerful that they threaten the democratic governments of the Andean region;

(3) recent events in Colombia make clear the need for addressing the threat of international narcotics trafficking in Peru and Bolivia before situations there further deteriorate;

(4) for any anti-narcotics strategy to work in the Andean region an integrated program of economic development, interdiction and eradication must be developed;

(5) U.S. government anti-narcotics policies toward the Andean region have not in the past been coordinated with our country's trade and economic policies as exemplified by recent negotiations over the international coffee agreement;

(6) any successful strategy for combatting the influence of international narcotics trafficking in the Andean region must address the economic situation in that region;

(7) many of the farmers who produce coca leaf in the Andean region do so as the sole means of economic livelihood for themselves and their families;

(8) many of these farmers would stop growing coca if provided with alternative means to earn a livelihood;

(9) the economic assistance component of an Andean strategy must reduce the political pressures generated by a successful interdiction and eradication program, offset its negative economic impact on the countries foreign exchange earnings, create jobs for people who lose their livelihood, and in the long run, deal with the region's fundamental structural and development problems;

(10) individual country resources are not adequate to manage the immediate and short-run economic and social issues, much less solve the narcotics problem. Neither will indigenous resources grow fast enough to sustain present levels of development, unless the economies grow briskly and the political systems are stabilized and reinforced;

(11) national, regional and U.S. resources, combined, are also insufficient. The overall effort must be internationalized to include Japan, Canada and Western Europe;

(b) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Not later than 60 days after the conclusion of the international conference, known as the International Conference on Combatting Illegal Drug Production, Trafficking, and Use in the Western Hemisphere, required by section 4104 of title IV of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 (Public Law 100-690), or 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, whichever comes first, the President shall report to Congress on

(1) the outcome of the International Conference;

(2) his strategy for increasing economic development to the Andean region, to be used in conjunction with a program of interdiction and eradication;

(3) his program for coordinating trade and economic policies of our government with our nation's overall anti-narcotics strategy for the Andean region;

(4) his strategy for internationalizing the economic development assistance to the Andean region in order to include assistance from Japan, Canada and Western Europe;

(5) the cost over the next five years for a program of economic assistance that would provide an alternative to coca production in the Andean region;

(6) the cost over the next five years of the eradication and interdiction components of the Andean strategy;

(7) the feasibility and cost of purchasing the entire coca crop in the Andean region, and;

(8) any recommendations for the modification of U.S. debt strategy to take into account the unique and exceptional burden imposed on the Andean economics by terrorism and drug trafficking.

(c) BUDGET REQUEST.—The President shall submit to the Congress, with the submission of the budget required by section 1006 of Public Law 100-690, such supplemental budget requests for fiscal year 1990 and 1991 covering the United States share of the cost of additional economic assistance as is necessary to carry out his Andean anti-narcotics strategy.

SIMON AMENDMENT NO. 922

Mr. SIMON proposed an amendment to the bill S. 1711, supra, as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill insert the following:

SUBTITLE F—MISCELLANEOUS

At the appropriate place in the bill insert the following:

Subtitle C—Public Corruption

SEC. 31. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Anti-Corruption Act of 1989".

SEC. 32. OFFENSE.

Chapter 11 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 225. Public corruption

"(a) Whoever, in a circumstance described in subsection (d), deprives or defrauds, or endeavors to deprive or to defraud, by any scheme or artifice, the inhabitants of a State or political subdivision of a State of the honest services of an official or employee of such State, political subdivision, or Indian tribal government shall be fined under this title, or imprisoned for not more than 10 years, or both.

"(b) Whoever, in a circumstance described in subsection (d), deprives or defrauds, or endeavors to deprive or to defraud, by any scheme or artifice, the inhabitants of a State or political subdivision of a State of a fair and impartially conducted election process in any primary, runoff, special, or general election-

"(1) through the procurment, casting, or tabulation of ballots that are materially false, fictitious, or fraudulent or that are invalid, under the laws of the State in which the election is held;

"(2) through paying or offering to pay any person for voting;

"(3) through the procuremnt or submission of voter registrations that contain false material information, or omit material information; or shall be fined under this title or imprisoned for not more than 10 years, or both.

"(4) through the filing of any report required to be filed under State law regarding an election campaign that contains false material information or omits material information.

"(c) Whoever, being a public official or an official or employee of a State, political subdivision of a State, or Indian tribal government in a circumstance described in subsection (d), deprives or defrauds, or endeavors to deprive or to defaud, by any scheme or artifice, the inhabitants of a State or political subdivision of a State of the right to have the affairs of the State, political subdivision, or Indian tribal government conducted on the basis of complete, true, and accurate material information, shall be fined under this title or imprisoned for not more than 10 years, or both.

"(d) The circumstances referred to in subsections (a), (b), and (c) are that—

"(1) for the purpose of executing or concealing such scheme or artifice or attempting to do so, the person so doing—

"(A) places in any post office or authorized depository for mail matter, any matter or thing whatever to be sent or delivered by the Postal Service, or takes or receives therefrom, any such matter or thing, or knowingly causes to be delivered by mail according to the direction thereon, or at the place at which it is directed to be delivered by the person to whom it is addressed, any such matter or thing;

'(B) transmits or causes to be transmitted by means of wire, radio, or television communication in interstate or foreign commerce any writings, signs, signals, pictures, or sounds;

"(C) transports or causes to be transported any person or thing, or induces any person to travel in or to be transported in, interstate or foreign commerce; or

"(D) uses or causes to use of any facility of interstate or foreign commerce;

"(2) the scheme or artifice affects or constitutes an attempt to affect in any manner or degree, or would if executed or concealed so affect, interstate or foreign commerce; or

"(3) as applied to an offense under subsection (b), an objective of the scheme or artifice is to secure the election of an official who, if elected, would have some authority over the administration of funds derived from an act of Congress totaling $10,000 or more during the 12-month period immediately preceding or following the election or date of the offense.

"(e) Whoever deprives or defrauds, or endeavors to deprive or to defraud, by any scheme or artifice, the inhabitants of the United States of the honest services of a public official or person who has been selected to be a public official shall be fined under this title or imprisoned for not more than 10 years, or both.

"(f) Whoever being an official, or public official, or person who has been selected to be a public official, directly or indirectly, discharges, demotes, suspends, threatens, harasses, or, in any manner, discriminates against any employee or official of the United States or any State or political subdivision of such State, or endeavors to do so, in order to carry out or to conceal any scheme or artifice described in this section, shall be fined under this title or subject to imprisonment of up to 5 years or both.

"(g)(1) Any employee or official of the United States or any State or political subdivision of such State who is discharged, demoted, suspended, threatened, harassed, or in any other manner discriminated against because of lawful acts done by the employee as a result of a violation of subsection (a) or because of actions by the employee on behalf of himself or others in furtherance of a prosecution under this section (including investigation for, initiation of, testimony for, or assistance in such a prosecution) may in a civil action, obtain all relief necessary to make such individual whole. Such relief shall include reinstatement with the same seniority status such individual would have had but for the discrimination, three times the amount of back pay, interest on the back pay, and compensation for any special damages sustained as a result of the discrimination, including reasonable litigation costs and reasonable attorney's fees.

"(2) An individual is not eligible for such relief if that individual participated in the violation of this section with respect to which such relief would be awarded.

"(3) A civil action or proceeding authorized by this subsection shall be stayed by a court upon the certification of an attorney for the Government, stating that such action or proceeding may adversely affect the interests of the Government in an ongoing criminal investigation or proceeding. The attorney for the Government shall promptly notify the court when the stay may be lifted without such adverse effects.

"(h) For purposes of this section—

"(1) the term 'State' means a State of the United States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and any other commonwealth, territory, or possession of the United States;

"(2) the terms 'public official' and 'person who has been selected to be a public official' have the meaning set forth in section 201 of this title; the terms 'public official', and 'person who has been selected to be a public official' shall also include any person action or pretending to act under color of official authority;

"(3) the term 'official' includes—

"(A) any person employed by, exercising any authority derived from, or holding any position in an Indian tribal government or the government of a State or any subdivision of the executive, legislative, judicial, or other branch of government thereof, including a department, independent establishment, commission, administration, authority, board, and bureau, and a corporation or other legal entity established and subject to control by a government or governments for the execution of a governmental or intergovernmental program;

"(B) any person acting or pretending to act under color of official authority; and

"(C) includes any person who has been nominated, appointed or selected to be an official or who has been officially informed that he or she will be so nominated, appointed or selected;

"(4) the term 'under color of official authority' includes any person who represents that he or she controls, is an agent of, or otherwise acts on behalf of an official, public official, and person who has been selected to be a public official; and

"(5) the term 'uses any facility of interstate or foreign commerce' includes the intrastate use of any facility that may also be used in interstate or foreign commerce.".

"(d) 'Debt' means liability to the United States on a claim.

"(e) 'Debtor' means a person who is liable to the United States on a claim.

"(f) 'Debt collection personnel' means personnel employed by any agency of the Federal government whose primary duties are the collection of the debts owed to the United States.

"(g) 'Disposable earnings' means that part of the earnings remaining after all deductions required by law have been withheld and 'nonexempt disposable earnings' means 25 percent of disposable earnings.

"(h) 'Earnings' means compensation paid or payable for personal services, whether denominated as wages, salary, commission, bonus or otherwise, and includes periodic payments pursuant to a pension or retirement program.

"(i) 'Garnishee' means a person other than the debtor who has, or is thought to have, possession, custody or control of any property of the debtor, including obligations owed to the debtor whether such obligations are past due or have yet to become due, against whom a garnishment has been issued by the clerk of the court.

"(j) 'Judgment' means a judgment, order or decree entered in favor of the United States in any court whether arising from a civil or criminal proceeding regarding a claim.

"(k) 'Judgment creditor' means the United States in situations in which the United States has judgments in its favor, whenever referred to in this chapter.

"(l) 'Judgment debtor' means a person against whom the United States holds a judgment on a debt.

"(m) 'Person' includes a natural person, including individual Indians, a corporation, a partnership, an unincorporated association, a trust or an estate or other entity, public or private, including local governments and Indian tribes.

"(n) 'Prejudgment remedy' means the remedies of attachment, garnishment, replevin, receivership, sequestration, injunction or a combination of any of the foregoing that are sought prior to judgment.

"(o) 'Property' includes any present or future interest in real, personal (including, but not limited to, earnings, goods and choses in action), or mixed property, whether legal or equitable, tangible or intangible, vested or contingent, and wherever located and however held, whether held as a tenancy in common, joint tenancy, tenancy by the entirety, community property, in partnership, or in trust (including spendthrift and pension trusts), and excludes any property held in trust by the United States for the benefit of any Indian tribe or individual Indian or any Indian lands subject to restrictions against alienation imposed by the United States.

"(p) 'Service' under the provisions of this chapter shall be in accordance with the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

"(q) 'State' includes the several states, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealths of Puerto Rico and the Northern Marianas and any of the territories and possessions of the United States.

"(r) 'United States' includes an officer or agency thereof, a Federal corporation, Federal instrumentality, department, commission, board or other Federal entity.

"(s) 'United States marshal' means the United States marshal, his designee or contractor.

"§ 3002. Rules of construction

"In this title—

"(a) 'includes' and 'including' are not limiting;

"(b) 'or' is not exclusive;

"(c) the singular includes the plural;

"(d) the provisions are general and intended as a unified coverage of the subject matter;

"(e) if any provision or amendment made by this chapter or application thereof to any person is held invalid, the provisions of every other part and their application shall not be affected thereby;

"(f) the cases arising under the provisions herein shall not affect cases arising under admiralty jurisdiction;

"(g) the provisions of this chapter do not and should not be construed to curtail or limit any rights the United States has to collect taxes under any other provision of Federal law;

"(h) the provisions of this chapter do not, and should not be construed to, curtail or limit any rights the United States has under any other provision of Federal law to collect any fine, penalty, assessment, restitution, or forfeiture arising in a criminal case; and

"(i) the provisions of this chapter do not, and should not be construed to, curtail or limit the rights the United States has under any other provision of Federal law to appoint receivers.

"§ 3003. Nationwide enforcement

"Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any writ, order, judgment, or other process, including a summons and complaint, filed under this chapter may be served in any State and may be enforced by the court issuing the writ, order, or process, regardless of where the person is served with the writ, order, or process.

"§ 3004. Priority of claims of the United States

"The priorities established by the various provisions of this chapter shall be superseded by the provisions of section 3713 of title 31, United States Code, when the debtor or, if deceased, his estate is insolvent as determined under that section and the priority of the United States shall be in accordance therewith.

"§ 3005. Claims of the United States not barred by State statute of limitations

"The United States shall not be barred by the statute of limitations of any State in the enforcement of any of its claims.

"§ 3006. Right of set-off or recoupment

"Except as specifically provided for in this chapter, nothing in this chapter shall be construed to affect the common law or statutory rights to set-off or recoupment.

"§ 3007. Discovery

"(a) The United States may have discovery from any person including the debtor regarding the financial condition of the debtor in any case in which the United States seeks to enforce a claim. Such discovery may be before judgment or after judgment is entered in the case and in the manner in which discovery is provided for in the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

"(b) After judgment, the United States may also subpoena the judgment debtor or a third party to appear before the court at a location consistent with the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure with all records, books and other documents and to answer under oath questions regarding the debtor's financial condition and ability to satisfy the judgment.

"(c) The court shall impose appropriate sanctions as provided by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure or the court's contempt power, including arrest of the offending person or debtor, for failure to comply with these discovery procedures.

"§ 3008. Affidavit requirements

"Any affidavit required of the United States by this chapter may be made upon information and belief, where reliable and reasonably necessary, establishing with particularity, to the court's satisfaction, facts supporting the claim of the United States.

"§ 3009. Perishable property

"At any time during any proceedings, other than those under section 3103(a), the court may determine on its own initiative or upon motion of any party, that any seized or detained property, or any portion thereof, is likely to perish, waste, or be destroyed, or otherwise depreciate in value during the pendency of the proceedings. The court shall order the sale of the property or portion thereof and require the proceeds to be deposited with the clerk of the court. For purposes of liability on the part of the United States, the price paid at any such sale shall be conclusively presumed to be the fair market value.

"§ 3010. Immunity

"Counsel for the United States, but excluding any private attorneys authorized by contract to conduct litigation for collection of debts on behalf of the United States, and non-attorney debt collection personnel shall have absolute immunity in their individual and official capacities from any liability arising from errors, omissions or negligence in performance of their official debt collection duties.

"§ 3011. Proceedings before United States magistrates

"A district court of the United States may assign its duties in proceedings under this chapter to a United States magistrate to the extent not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the United States. A district court may adopt appropriate rules to carry out any such assignment.

"§ 3012. United States marshals' authority to designate keeper

"Whenever the United States marshal is authorized to seize property pursuant to the provisions of this chapter, the United States marshal shall be authorized to designate another person or Federal agency to hold for safekeeping such property seized.

"§ 3013. Co-owned property

"The remedies available to the United States under this chapter shall be enforced against property which is co-owned by a debtor and others to the extent allowed by the law of the State where the property is located.

"For the purposes of this section, 'property' does not include the rights or interest of an individual other than the debtor in a retirement system for Federal military or civilian personnel established by the United States or any agency thereof. A 'retirement system for Federal military or civilian personnel' means a pension or annuity system for Federal military or civilian personnel of more than one agency, or for some or all of such personnel of a single agency, established by statute or regulation pursuant to statutory authority.

"§ 3014. Assessment of charges on a claim

"The United States may assess on a claim a charge of 10 percent of the amount of the claim to cover the cost of processing and handling the litigation and judicial enforcement of the claim.

"§ 3015. Funding

"It is hereby authorized that such sums be appropriated as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this chapter. Appropriations authorized under this section shall remain available for obligations necessary to implement this chapter for 1 year.

"§ 3016. Investigative authority

"When the United States has reason to believe that an activity in violation of legal standards threatens to deprive it of a claim, the appropriate United States Attorney may commence a proceeding against named or unknown parties for the purpose of determining whether a claim for relief should be asserted under applicable law, and all discovery proceedings available under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedures shall be available in such proceeding.

"§ 3017. Subrogation

"When the United States asserts a claim against a debtor for sums alleged to be due the United States, the United States may name as an additional defendant then or by way of amendment of its complaint, any party reasonably believed to owe sums to the debtor arising out of the transaction or occurrence giving rise to the obligation to the United States, including but not limited to obligations on account of requirements to provide goods or services pursuant to a loan or loan guarantee extended pursuant to Federal law. If such party pays or is found liable, any amounts paid to the United States shall be credited to the account of the debtor.

"§ 3018. Effective date

"This Act and the amendments made by this Act shall take effect 180 days after the date of enactment and shall apply to all claims and debts owed to the United States and judgments in favor of the United States.

"SUBCHAPTER B—PREJUDGMENT REMEDIES

"§ 3101. Prejudgment remedies with prior notice

"(a) APPLICATION.—(1) The United States may in conjunction with the complaint or at any time after the filing of a civil action, make application, under oath, to the court to issue any prejudgment remedy allowed by law.

"(2) Such application shall be filed with the court and shall set forth the factual and legal basis for each prejudgment remedy sought.

"(3) Such application shall state that the party against whom any prejudgment remedy is sought shall be afforded an opportunity for a hearing.

"(b) GROUNDS.—Any prejudgment remedy may be issued in favor of the United States by any court of the United States on application before judgment when—

"(1) the application sets forth with particularity, that all statutory requirements for the issuance of such prejudgment remedy sought under this chapter have been complied with by the United States; and

"(2) the court finds that the United States has shown the probable success of its claim.

"(c) NOTICE; FORM OF NOTICE.—Upon the filing of an application, the clerk of the court shall issue a notice directed to any person against whom any prejudgment remedy would operate, substantially in the following form—

"NOTICE

"You are hereby notified that your [property] may be taken away from you by the United States, which says that you owe the United States a debt of $[amount]. The United States wants to take your property so that it can be sure you will pay if the court decides that you owe this money.

"If you do not want to have your property taken away, you may ask for a hearing before this court. You may ask for the hearing anytime within 20 days from the date that this notice was mailed as indicated below. The hearing, if you so demand, will take place within five working days after you notify the court, or as soon thereafter as is practicable. You may ask for the hearing by checking the box at the bottom of this notice and filing it with the court at the following address: [address of court]. You must also send a copy to counsel for the United States at [address], so that the United States knows that you want the hearing.

"At the hearing, the court will decide whether the claim against you is probably valid and whether other legal requirements have been met. In addition, there are certain exemptions under Federal law which you may be entitled to claim with respect to the property.

"If you do not check the box requesting a date for a hearing and take this notice to the court within twenty days, the court will automatically assume you do not want a hearing and you will lose your right to a hearing before the United States may take your property with the court's permission.

"If you have any questions concerning your rights or this procedure, you should consult an attorney.

"DATE OF MAILING: _____

"(d) SERVICE OF NOTICE AND APPLICATION.—(1) A copy of the notice and a copy of the application for issuance of any prejudgment remedy shall be served by counsel for the United States by first class mail on each party against whom any remedy is sought. If such service is not possible, then service may be made under rule 4 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, as appropriate.

"(2) Proof of service by mail may be made by affidavit or certification of mailing and shall set forth the actual date of mailing.

"(e) TIME TO REQUEST HEARING DATE; FORM OF REQUEST.—(1) Each person served with a copy of the notice set forth above and the application for any prejudgment remedy may request a date be set for the hearing on such application by filing with the clerk of the court within 20 days after service of the notice a written request for hearing date. The request for hearing shall be made by using the form provided or in some other writing. A copy of the request for hearing date shall be mailed by the person requesting the hearing to counsel for the United States.

"(2) The clerk of the court shall apprise counsel for the United States and the person requesting the hearing of the date of hearing.

"(f) WAIVER OF HEARING.—(1) If no request for hearing date is filed within the required time, counsel for the United States shall file an affidavit of default setting forth that service was made, that no request for hearing date was filed and that the party against whom any prejudgment remedy is sought has apparently waived any hearing. Counsel for the United States shall also file a proposed form of the written order requested. Upon filing of such affidavit, the clerk shall enter the order of waiver of record and any party so defaulted loses his right to a hearing prior to the issuance of the prejudgment remedy sought.

"(2) Upon entry of the order of waiver, the clerk shall immediately deliver the court file to the judge to whom the matter is assigned.

"(g) JUDICIAL REVIEW APPLICATION; ISSUANCE OF PREJUDGMENT REMEDIES WITH NOTICE.—(1) The court shall, within 5 days after hearing or the entry of the order of waiver, or as soon thereafter as is practical, review and examine all pleadings, evidence, affidavits and documents filed in the action to determine the following:

"(A) that evidence of service has been filed together with the original of the application and copy of notice;

"(B) where an order of waiver has been entered, that the affidavit of default has been filed and the order entered by the clerk;

"(C) that the claim or claims of the United States are based on facts established by the evidence or stated in the affidavit are sufficient to show that such claim or claims are probably valid; and

"(D) that any statutory requirement of this chapter for the issuance of any prejudgment remedy has been shown.

"(2) Upon the court's determination that the requirements of subsection (g)(1) have been met, the court shall issue all process sufficient to put into effect the prejudgment remedy sought.

"§ 3102. Prejudgment remedies without prior notice

"(a) GROUNDS.—Any prejudgment remedy may be issued by any court without prior notice to the person against whom it will operate when the United States has a reasonable cause to believe that—

"(1) the person against whom the prejudgment remedy is sought is about to leave the jurisdiction of the United States with the intent to hinder, delay, or defraud the United States and has refused to secure that debt, or is a fugitive from justice;

"(2) such person has secreted or is about to secrete property;

"(3) such person has or is about to assign, dispose, remove, or secrete property, wholly or in part, or that such person is about to assign or dispose of property with the effect of hindering, delaying, or defrauding creditors;

"(4) the United States is the owner, lessor or otherwise is lawfully entitled to the immediate possession of the property claimed and is seeking a prejudgment remedy in the nature of replevin, receivership or sequestration;

"(5) a prejudgment remedy is required to obtain jurisdiction within the United States;

"(6) a constructive or resulting trust should be impressed on the property in favor of the United States if such person is likely to put the property beyond the reach of the United States;

"(7) the person against whom the prejudgment remedy is sought is converting, is about to convert or has converted his property of whatever kind, or some part thereof, into money, securities, or evidence of debt in a manner prejudicial to creditors;

"(8) the person against whom the prejudgment remedy is sought has evaded service of process by concealing himself or has temporarily withdrawn from the jurisdiction of the United States; or

"(9) the debt is due for property obtained illegally or by fraud.

"(b) APPLICATION; AFFIDAVIT; BOND; ISSUANCE OF WRIT.—(1) Contemporaneously with or at any time after the filing of a civil action, the United States shall file an application supported by an affidavit made upon information and belief, where reliable and reasonably necessary, establishing with particularity to the court's satisfaction facts supporting the probable validity of the claim and the right of the United States to recover what is demanded in the application. The application shall state the amount of the debt owed the United States, including principal, interest, and costs, if any, and one or more of the grounds set forth in section 3102(a) and the specific requirements of the specific remedy sought.

"(2) No bond is required of the United States.

"(3) Upon the court's determination that the requirements of subsection (b)(1) have been met, the court shall issue all process sufficient to put into effect the prejudgment remedy sought.

"(c) NOTICE AND HEARING; WAIVER OF HEARING.—(1) Upon filing of an application as provided in this section, the clerk shall issue notice in substantially the following form to the counsel for the United States for service upon the party against whom any prejudgment remedy is sought in accordance with subsection (3) of this section—

"NOTICE

"You are hereby notified that your [property] is being taken away from you by the United States, who says that you owe it a debt of $[amount]. The United States is taking your property because it says

[Insert one or more of the specific grounds set forth in section 3102(a).]

"In addition, you are hereby notified that there are certain exemptions under Federal law which you may be entitled to claim with respect to your property.

"If you disagree and think you do not owe the United States, or that you have not done what is stated above, then you can ask this court to hear your side of the story and give your property back to you. If you want such a hearing, it will be given to you within five working days if you so demand after you notify the court that you want one. To do so, check the box at the bottom of this notice or prepare your request in writing and mail it or take it to the clerk of the court at the following address: [address]. You must also send a copy to counsel for the United States at [address], so that the United States will know you want a hearing.

"If you do not request a hearing within thirty days from [date of issue] your property may be disposed of without further notice.

"You should consult a lawyer if you have any questions about your rights about this procedure.

"(2) When a prejudgment remedy is issued under this section, the person against whom it is sought may immediately move to quash such order and the court shall on the request of the debtor hear such motion within 5 days from the date the request was filed. The issues at such hearing shall be limited to—

"(A) the probable validity of the claim or claims of the United States and any defenses and claims of exemptions of the party against whom such prejudgment remedy will operate; and

"(B) the existence of any statutory requirement for the issuance of any prejudgment remedy sought, plus the existence of any ground set forth in section 3102(a) of this chapter.

"(3) Counsel for the United States shall, at the time of the seizure, attachment or garnishment, or within 3 days thereafter, exercise reasonable diligence to serve the person against whom a prejudgment remedy is sought with an application, order and prescribed notice of the seizure, impoundment or such other act ordered by the court and of said person's right to an immediate hearing contesting the same.

"(4) If no request for a hearing is filed with the clerk within 30 days after the notice of seizure is issued by the clerk, the United States may dispose of the property as provided for in this subchapter.

"§ 3103. Attachment

"(a) PROPERTY SUBJECT TO ATTACHMENT.—(1) All property of the debtor or garnishee, except earnings and property exempt under the provisions of this chapter, may be attached pursuant to a writ of attachment in any action in which a debt or damages are recoverable and may be held as security to satisfy such judgment and costs as the United States may recover.

"(2) The amount to be secured by an attachment shall be determined as follows—

"(A) the amount of the debt owed to the United States by the defendant; and

"(B) the estimated amount of interest and costs likely to be taxed by the court.

"(3) In any action or suit for an amount which is liquidated or ascertainable by calculation, no attachment shall be made for a larger sum than the amount of the debt and such additional amount as is reasonably necessary to provide for interest thereon and costs likely to be taxed in the action.

"(b) AVAILABILITY OF ATTACHMENT.—The United States after complying with the provisions of section 3101 or 3102 may, in the following cases, have the property of the defendant attached as security for satisfaction of any judgment which may be recovered by the United States—

"(1) in an action upon a contract, express or implied, for payment of money which is not fully secured by real or personal property, or, if originally so secured, the value of such security may, without any act of the United States or the person to whom the security was given, be substantially diminished below the amount of the debt;

"(2) when an action is pending for damages in tort and the defendant is about to dispose of or remove his property beyond the jurisdiction of the United States;

"(3) in an action for damages or upon contract, express or implied, against a defendant not residing within the jurisdiction of the United States; or

"(4) in an action to recover fines, penalties, or taxes.

"(c) ISSUANCE OF WRIT; CONTENTS.—(1) A writ of attachment shall be issued by the court directing the United States marshal of the district where the property is located to attach so much of the defendant's property as will be sufficient or is available to satisfy the debt of the United States.

"(2) Several writs of attachment may, at the option of the United States, be issued at the same time, or in succession, and sent to different districts until sufficient property is attached to satisfy the debt.

"(3) The writ of attachment shall contain—

"(A) the date of the issuance of the writ;

"(B) the court title and the docket number and name of the cause of action;

"(C) the name and last known address of the defendant;

"(D) the amount to be secured by the attachment; and

"(E) a reasonable description of the property to the extent available.

"(d) LEVY OF ATTACHMENT.—(1) The United States marshal receiving the writ shall proceed without delay to levy upon the property of the defendant found within his district, unless otherwise directed by counsel for the United States. The marshal shall not sell property unless ordered by the court.

"(2) In performing the levy, the United States marshal may enter onto the lands and into the residence or other buildings owned, occupied or controlled by the defendant. In cases where the writ is issued pursuant to section 3101, the marshal shall not enter into a residence or other building except upon specific order of the court.

"(3) When real property is levied upon, the United States marshal shall file a copy of the notice of levy in the same manner as provided for judgments in section 3202. The United States marshal shall also serve a copy of the writ and notice of levy upon the defendant in the same manner that a summons is served in a civil action and make his return thereof. If the United States marshal is unable to serve the writ upon the defendant, he shall post the writ and notice of levy in a conspicuous place upon the property and so make his return thereof.

"(4) Levy upon personal property is made by taking possession of it. Levy on personal property not easily taken into possession or which cannot be taken into possession without great inconvenience or expense, may be made by affixing a copy of the writ and notice of levy on it or in a conspicuous place in the vicinity of it describing in the notice of levy the property by quantity and with sufficient detail to identify the property levied upon. A copy of the writ and notice of levy shall also be served upon the defendant in the same manner that a summons is served in a civil action. Upon completion of the levy of personal property, the United States marshal shall so make his return thereof.

"(e) RETURN OF WRIT; DUTIES OF MARSHAL; FURTHER RETURN.—(1) A United States marshal executing a writ of attachment shall return the writ with his action endorsed thereon or attached thereto and signed by him, to the court from which it was issued within 30 days after the date of the levy.

"(2) The return shall describe the property attached with sufficient certainty to identify it, state the location where it was attached, when it was attached and the disposition made of the property. If no property was attached, the return shall so state.

"(3) When personal property has been replevied as authorized by section 3103(j), the United States marshal shall deliver the replevin bond to the clerk of the court to be filed in the action.

"(4) When the property levied on is claimed, replevied or sold after the return, the United States marshal shall immediately make a further return to the clerk of the court showing the disposition of the property.

"(f) LEVY OF ATTACHMENT AS LIEN ON PROPERTY; SATISFACTION OF LIEN.—(1) A levy on property under a writ of attachment creates a lien on the property in favor of the United States.

"(2) The levy of the writ of attachment upon any property of defendant subject thereto is a lien from the date of the levy on the real property and on such personal property as remains in the custody of the attaching United States marshal and on the proceeds of such personal property as is sold.

"(3) The lien in favor of the United States marshal shall be ranked ahead of any other security interests perfected after the time of levy and filing of a copy of the notice of levy pursuant to subsection (d)(3) of this section.

"(4) The lien shall arise from the time of levy and continue until a judgment in the case is obtained or denied, or the action is otherwise dismissed. The death of the defendant whose property is attached does not terminate the attachment lien. Upon issuance of a judgment in the action and registration under this chapter, the judgment lien so created relates back to the time of levy.

"(5) Upon entry of judgment for the United States, the court shall order the proceeds of the personal property, if any has been sold, to be applied to the satisfaction of the judgment, and also order the sale of any remaining personal property and the sale of any real property levied on to satisfy the judgment.

"(g) ATTACHMENT OF PERISHABLE PROPERTY; SALE; PROCEDURE.—(1) When personal property that has been attached is not replevied, the court may order it to be sold when it appears that the property is in danger of serious and immediate waste or decay, or that keeping it until trial will result in such expense or deterioration in value as substantially will lessen the amount likely to be realized therefrom.

"(2) In ascertaining whether the property is in danger of serious and immediate waste or decay or that keeping of the property until trial will result in such expense or deterioration in value as will substantially lessen the amount likely to be realized therefrom, the court may require or dispense with notice to the parties and may act upon such information provided by affidavit, certificate of the United States marshal or other proof, as appears sufficient to protect the interest of the parties.

"(h) DISPOSITION OF PROCEEDS OF SALE OF PERISHABLE PROPERTY; REPORT OF SALE.—Within 5 days after sale, the proceeds of the sale as provided in subsection 3103(g) after deduction of the United States marshal's expenses therefrom shall be paid by the United States marshal making the sale to the clerk of the court. The proceeds shall be accompanied by a statement in writing and signed by the United States marshal, to be filed in the action, stating the time and place of sale, the name of the purchaser and the amount received with an itemized account of expenses.

"(i) PRESERVATION OF PERSONAL PROPERTY UNDER ATTACHMENT.—If personal property in custody of the United States marshal under a writ of attachment is not replevied, claimed or sold, the court may make such order for its preservation or use as appears to be to the interest of the parties.

"(j) REPLEVIN OF ATTACHED PROPERTY BY DEFENDANT; BOND.—At any time before judgment, if the property has not previously been sold, defendant may replevy the property or any part thereof by giving a bond approved by counsel for the United States or the court and payable to the United States in double the amount of the debt.

"(k) JUDGMENT WHERE PERSONAL PROPERTY REPLEVIED.—When personal property under attachment has been replevied, the judgment which may be entered shall be against defendant and also against the sureties on his replevin bond for the amount of the judgment, interest and costs.

"(l) RESTORATION OF PROPERTY OR EXONERATION OF BOND; LEVY ON EXEMPT PROPERTY.—(1) If the attachment is vacated or if the judgment is for defendant, the court shall order the property or proceeds thereof restored to defendant or exonerate the replevin bond. The court may determine under what circumstances the defendant is entitled to receive the proceeds rather than the attached property.

"(2) When any property claimed to be exempt is levied upon, defendant may, at any time after such levy, apply to the court for vacation of such levy. If it appears to the court that the property so levied upon is exempt, the court shall order the levy vacated and the property returned to defendant.

"(m) REDUCTION OR DISCHARGE OF ATTACHMENT.—(1) If an excessive or unreasonable attachment is made, the defendant or person whose property has been attached may submit a written motion to the court which issued the writ for a reduction of the amount of the attachment or its discharge. Notice of such motion shall be served upon the United States in accordance with the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The defendant may move for reduction or dissolution of attachment as appropriate.

"(2) The court shall order a part of the property to be released, if upon hearing the court finds that the amount of the attachment is excessive or unreasonable or where the attachment is for a sum larger than the liquidated or ascertainable amount of the debt plus an amount necessary to include interest and costs likely to be taxed.

"(3) The court shall dissolve the attachment if the amount of the debt is unliquidated and unascertainable by calculation.

"§ 3104. Garnishment

"(a) All prejudgment garnishments shall meet the requirements of sections 3101 and 3102.

"(b) All prejudgment garnishments as authorized by the court hereunder shall be issued and answered in the same manner and to the same extent as set forth in section 3306 with the following exceptions—

"(1) The writ shall specify the date that the order authorizing prejudgment garnishment was entered.

"(2) The writ shall specify the amount claimed by the United States.

"§ 3105. Injunctions

"Whether or not there are other remedies available to the United States under this chapter, nothing in this chapter shall be construed to preclude or otherwise limit the United States or any other party from obtaining injunctive relief under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure in actions for debts owed the United States.

"§ 3106. Sequestration

"(a) APPLICATION FOR WRIT OF SEQUESTRATION AND ORDER.—If the United States claims in its complaint the right to title or possession of property or seeks to enforce a lien or security interest in such property, the United States may file an affidavit showing—

"(1) a description of the property sufficient to identify it;

"(2) the approximate value of the property;

"(3) the location of the real property, or in the case of personal property, the last known and likely locations of the property;

"(4) the availability of sequestration.

"(b) AVAILABILITY OF SEQUESTRATION.—The United States after complying with, or in addition to, the provisions of sections 3101 or 3102 may have property sequestered—

"(1) upon a showing that there exists an immediate danger that the debtor or garnishee of such property will ill treat, waste, destroy or convert to his own use the property, which includes, but is not limited to, crops, timber, rents, perishable goods, livestock or the revenues therefrom; or

"(2) upon a showing that title to or possession of such property has been secured by the debtor or other defendant or the party in possession by surreptitious means, trick, scheme, fraud, force, violence, claim of adverse possession or such other claims or any means adverse to the claim in title or possession, or both, of the United States.

"(c) ISSUANCE OF WRIT.—A writ of sequestration shall be issued by the court directing the debtor or other defendant or party in possession to sequester the property and deliver it to the United States.

"(d) Unless inconsistent, the provisions governing section 3103 (g) through (l) shall be applicable to this section.

"(e) These writs shall be served in accordance with the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

"§ 3107. Replevin

"(a) APPLICATION FOR WRIT.—If the United States claims in its complaint the right to possession of specific personal property, the United States may, at any time after complying with the provisions of section 3101 or 3102, file an affidavit showing—

"(1) that the United States is the owner of the property claimed, or is lawfully entitled to its immediate possession;

"(2) a description of the property;

"(3) that the property is wrongfully detained by the defendant;

"(4) the approximate value of the property.

"(b) SEIZURE.—If the court determines the United States has met the above requirements, it shall order that the United States marshal take possession of the specified property and deliver it to the United States.

"(c) REDELIVERY OF POSSESSION TO DEFENDANT.—The defendant may obtain redelivery of the property or any part thereof by giving bond as set forth in section 3103(j).

"§ 3108. Receivership

"(a) APPOINTMENT OF A RECEIVER.—The United States may apply for the appointment of a receiver for property in which it has an interest and which is or is to be the subject of an action in court. The application may be filed at any time prior to judgment or during the pendency of an appeal if there is a danger that the property will be removed from the jurisdiction of the court, lost, materially injured or damaged, mismanaged or the United States has otherwise established grounds for such relief under section 3101(a) or 3102(a). However when the security agreement so provides, a receiver shall be appointed without notice or without regard to adequacy of security. An application made by the United States when it is not already a party to the action constitutes an appearance in the action and the United States shall be joined as a party.

"(b) POWERS OF RECEIVER; EMPLOYMENT OF COUNSEL.—The court appointing a receiver may authorize him to take possession of real and personal property and sue for, collect and sell obligations upon such conditions and for such purposes as the court shall direct and to administer, collect, improve, lease, repair or sell such real and personal property, as the court shall direct. A receiver appointed to manage residential or commercial property shall have demonstrable expertise in the management of these types of property. Unless expressly authorized by order of the court, a receiver shall have no power to employ attorneys, accountants, appraisers, auctioneers or other professional persons. Upon motion of the receiver or a party, powers granted to a receiver may be expanded or limited. A receiver appointed under the terms of a security agreement shall be entitled to recover the rents and profits of the property covered by the security agreement as additional security and to pay them over to the United States in payment of any amount due arising from a default by the debtor.

"(c) UNITED STATES AS SECURED PARTY.—In the event of any default or defaults in paying the principal, interest, taxes, water, rents, or premiums of insurance required by the security instrument or in the event of a nonfinanced default or defaults, the United States in any action to foreclose the security interest shall be entitled, without notice and without regard to adequacy of any security for the debt, to the appointment of a receiver of the rents and profits of the premises covered by the security interest, and the rents and profits of the premises are assigned to the United States as further security for the payment of the debts.

"(d) DURATION OF RECEIVERSHIP.—In an action to foreclose a security interest, the receivership shall terminate when the purchaser at the foreclosure sale takes lawful possession of the property unless the court directs otherwise. In all other actions, the receivership shall not continue past the entry of judgment unless the court orders it continued under section 3302(b) or unless the court otherwise directs its continuation.

"(e) ACCOUNTS; REQUIREMENT TO REPORT.—A receiver shall keep written accounts itemizing receipts and expenditures, describing the property and naming the depository of receivership funds and his accounts shall be open to inspection by any person having an apparent interest in the property. The receiver shall file reports at regular intervals as directed by the court and shall serve the United States with a copy thereof.

"(f) REMOVAL.—Upon motion of any party or upon its own initiative, the court which appointed the receiver may remove him at any time with or without cause.

"(g) PRIORITY.—If more than one court appoints a receiver, the receiver first qualifying under law shall be entitled to take possession, control or custody of the property.

"(h) COMMISSIONS OF RECEIVERS.—

(1) GENERALLY.—A receiver is entitled to such commissions not exceeding 5 percent of the sums received and disbursed by him as the court allows unless the court otherwise directs.

"(2) ALLOWANCE WHERE FUNDS DEPLETED.—If, at the termination of a receivership, there are no funds in the hands of a receiver, the court may fix the compensation of the receiver in accordance with the services rendered and may direct the party who moved for the appointment of the receiver to pay such compensation in addition to the necessary expenditures incurred by the receiver which remained unpaid.

"(3) PROCEDURE.—At the termination of a receivership, the receiver shall file a final accounting of the receipts and disbursements and apply for compensation setting forth the amount sought and the services rendered by him.

"SUBCHAPTER C—JUDGMENTS; LIENS

"§ 3201. Judgment by confession

"(a) GENERAL PROVISION.—On application, a court may enter a judgment by confession in favor of the United States without the filing of a civil action for money due and owing.

"(b) VENUE.—The confession of judgment shall be filed in the district in which one or more of the defendants reside, can be found, are doing business at the time of the application, or in cases proceeding by in rem or quasi in rem jurisdiction where the property sought to be adjudicated is located.

"(c) STATEMENT BY DEFENDANT; CONTENTS.—Before a judgment by confession shall be entered, a sworn statement in writing shall be made and signed by the defendant after default and subsequent notice by the United States and filed with the court along with the application, stating—

"(1) the amount for which judgment may be entered and authorizing the entry of judgment;

"(2) the facts out of which the debt arose and that the amount confessed is justly due; and

"(3) that the person signing the statement understands that a judgment by confession allows the entry of judgment without further proceedings and authorizes enforced collection of the judgment.

"(d) ENTRY OF JUDGMENT.—The confession of judgment may be filed with the clerk of the court. The clerk shall enter a judgment for the amount confessed.

"(e) CONFESSION BY JOINT DEBTORS.—One or more joint debtors may confess a judgment for a joint debt due. Where all the joint debtors do not join in the confession, the judgment shall be entered and enforced against only those who confessed it. A confessed judgment against some of the joint debtors is not a bar to an action against the other joint debtors.

"(f) ENFORCEMENT OF JUDGMENT BY CONFESSION.—Judgments by confession shall be enforced in the same manner as other judgments.

"§ 3202. Judgment lien

"(a) CREATION OF LIEN GENERALLY.—A judgment shall be a lien upon all real property of a judgment debtor upon filing a certified copy of the abstract of the judgment in the manner in which a notice of tax lien would be filed under section 6323(f) (1) and (2) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

"(b) IN CRIMINAL CASES.—A judgment obtained by the United States in a criminal case shall create a lien as provided in sections 3565 and 3613 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

"(c) IN TAX CASES.—A judgment obtained by the United States in a tax case shall create a lien co-extensive with any lien created prior to judgment under section 6321 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986; if no lien was so created prior to the judgment, then the procedure in subsection (a) shall be followed.

"(d) AMOUNT OF LIEN.—A lien created hereunder is for the amount necessary to satisfy the judgment, including costs and interest.

"(e) PRIORITY OF LIEN.—A lien created hereunder shall have priority over any other lien or encumbrance which is perfected later in time. However, liens created under sections 3565 and 3613 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, regarding criminal judgments or under section 6321 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, regarding tax judgments shall have priority as otherwise provided by law.

"(f) DURATION OF LIEN; RENEWAL.—(1) A lien created hereunder is effective, unless satisfied, for a period of 20 years.

"(2) The lien may be renewed for one additional period of 20 years upon filing a notice of renewal in the same manner as the judgment was filed and shall relate back to the date the judgment was filed. The notice of renewal must be filed before the expiration of the first 20-year period to prevent the expiration of the lien.

"(3) The duration and renewal of a lien created under sections 3565 and 3613 of title 18, United States Code, regarding criminal judgments, or a lien created under section 6321 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, regarding tax judgments shall be as otherwise provided by law.

"(g) RELEASE OF JUDGMENT LIEN.—A judgment lien shall be released upon the filing of a satisfaction of judgment or release of lien in the same manner as the judgment was filed to obtain the lien.

"(h) EFFECT OF LIEN UPON ELIGIBILITY FOR FEDERAL GRANTS, LOANS OR PROGRAMS.—Any person who has a judgment lien against his property for any debt to the United States shall not be eligible to receive any grant or loan which is made, insured, guaranteed or financed directly or indirectly by the United States or to receive funds directly from the Federal Government in any program, except funds to which such person is entitled as beneficiary, until the judgment is paid in full or otherwise satisfied. The agency responsible for such grants and loans may promulgate regulations to allow for waiver of this restriction on eligibility for such grants and loans.

"§ 3203. Sale of property subject to judgment lien

"Upon application to the court, the court may order the United States to sell pursuant to the provisions of sections 2001 and 2002 of title 28, United States Code, any real property subject to its judgment lien. This provision shall not preclude the United States from using an execution sale to sell real property subject to a judgment lien.

"§ 3204. Interest on judgments

"(a) Judgments for money, other than criminal or tax judgments, shall bear interest at the greater of—

"(1) the rate in an express contract or negotiable instrument, if the action was brought for the recovery of an amount due on the contract or negotiable instrument; or

"(2) the rate established by statute or regulation applicable to the debt owed;

"(3) the judgment interest rate established in accordance with this section.

"(b) The judgment interest rate, where applicable, shall be calculated from the date of the entry of the judgment, at a rate equal to 150 percent of the coupon issue yield equivalent (as determined by the Secretary of the Treasury) of the average accepted auction price for the last auction of 52-week United States Treasury bills settled immediately prior to the date of the judgment. The Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts shall distribute notice of that rate and any changes in it to all Federal courts.

"(c) Interest on judgments shall accrue daily from the date of entry of the judgment at the rate determined herein and shall be compounded annually to the date of payment.

"(d) Interest on tax judgments obtained under the Internal Revenue Code shall be allowed under section 6621 of such Code.

"(e) Interest on criminal judgments shall be allowed as provided in title 18, United States Code.

"(f) Nothing in this section shall preclude the assessment of prejudgment interest that is otherwise allowable by law.

"3309. Arrest of judgment debtor.
"3310. Discharge.

"SUBCHAPTER D—POSTJUDGMENT REMEDIES

"§ 3301. Enforcement of judgments

"(a) A judgment may be enforced by any of the remedies set forth in this subchapter, and the court may issue other writs pursuant to section 1651 of title 28, United States Code, as necessary to supplement these remedies, subject to the provision of rule 81(b) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

"(b) The property of a judgment debtor which is subject to sale to satisfy the judgment may be sold by judicial sale, pursuant to sections 2001, 2002, and 2004 of title 28, United States Code, or by execution sale pursuant to section 3304(g) of this subchapter.

"§ 3302. Orders in aid of execution

"Where the judgment debtor has an ownership interest of any kind in property which is not exempt and cannot readily be attached or levied on by ordinary legal process, the United States is entitled to aid from the court by injunction or other appropriate order to reach the property to satisfy the judgment whether the property is located in the same district or other districts.

"(a) ORDER.—The court may order the property, together with all documents or records related to the property, that is in or subject to the possession or control of the judgment debtor or another person, to be turned over to the United States for execution or otherwise applied toward the satisfaction of the judgment. Where the judgment debtor or other person refuses to turn over the property, the court may enforce the order by proceedings for contempt or other appropriate order provided the judgment debtor or other person, as appropriate, is served with a copy of the order or has actual notice of the order.

"(b) RECEIVER.—The court may appoint a receiver of property where appropriate in accordance with section 3108 of this chapter.

"(c) SAME OR INDEPENDENT SUIT.—These proceedings may be brought by the United States in the same suit in which the judgment is rendered or in a new and independent suit.

"(d) COSTS.—Upon request, in a proceeding under this section, the United States shall recover from the judgment debtor 10 percent of the reasonable costs. This provision shall apply to the extent that recovery of costs by the United States is not provided for under other applicable provisions of Federal law.

"§ 3303. Restraining notice

"(a) ISSUANCE; ON WHOM SERVED; FORM; SERVICE.—A restraining notice may be issued by the clerk of the court or counsel for the United States as officer of the court. It may be served upon any person, except the employer of a judgment debtor where the property sought to be restrained consists of earnings due or to become due to the judgment debtor. It shall be served personally in the same manner as a summons. It shall specify all of the parties to the action, the social security number of the judgment debtor, if known, the date the judgment was entered, the court in which it was entered, the amount of the judgment and the amount when due thereon, and the names of all parties against whom the judgment was entered. It shall set forth the requirements of subsection (b) below and shall state that disobedience is punishable as a contempt of court.

"(b) EFFECT OF RESTRAINT; PROHIBITION OF TRANSFER; DURATION.—(1) A judgment debtor who is served with a restraining notice shall not sell, assign, transfer or hypothecate any property, except as may be reasonably necessary for the maintenance or support of the debtor or a dependent of the debtor and if the debtor is engaged in business, as may be reasonably necessary for the payment of expenditures for the continuation, preservation, and operation of such business.

"(2) A person other than the judgment debtor who is served with restraining notice shall not—

"(A) repay any obligation to the judgment debtor;

"(B) return any property to the judgment debtor; or

"(C) sell, assign, transfer or hypothecate any property—

"(i) specifically described in the restraining notice;

"(ii) that the other person knows to be owned by the judgment debtor; or

"(iii) in which the other person could have reason to believe by the exercise of due diligence that the judgment debtor has an ownership interest.

"(3) The restraining notice shall remain in effect for 1 year from the date the notice is served, or until the judgment is satisfied or the restraining notice is vacated by order of the court, whichever occurs first.

"(c) DISCLOSURE.—The person upon whom a restraining notice is served, other than the judgment debtor, shall disclose to the counsel for the United States, in writing under oath within 10 days after receipt of the restraining notice, the type or nature and value of such property of the judgment debtor as may be in his possession or custody. Upon such person receiving or acquiring property of the judgment debtor after receipt of a restraining notice, that person shall disclose to counsel for the United States, in writing under oath within 7 days of receipt of the property, the type or nature and value of such property of the judgment debtor as may be in his possession or custody.

"(d) DISCOVERY.—Any discovery request under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure which accompanies this restraining notice and which seeks the disclosure of the type, nature and value of property of the judgment debtor must be responded to within 10 days of service of the notice and discovery request or within 10 days after property of the judgment debtor comes into the possession of the person served. Upon request, a reasonable extension may be granted.

"(e) SUBSEQUENT NOTICE.—Leave of court is required to serve more than one restraining notice upon the same person, other than the judgment debtor, with respect to the same judgment.

"(f) NOTICE TO JUDGMENT DEBTOR.—A copy of the restraining notice shall be mailed by first class mail by counsel for the United States to the judgment debtor within 4 days after the time of service of the restraining notice on a person other than the judgment debtor.

"§ 3304. Execution

"(a) PROPERTY SUBJECT TO EXECUTION.—All property which the judgment debtor possesses and in which the judgment debtor has an interest shall be subject to levy pursuant to a writ of execution; co-owned property shall be subject to execution to the same extent as it is under the law of the State in which it is located. The judgment debtor must identify any property claimed to be exempt under the provisions of subchapter E.

"(b) EXECUTION LIEN.—A lien shall be created in favor of the United States on all property levied upon under a writ of execution and shall date from the time of the levy. This lien shall have priority over all subsequent liens and shall be for the amount due on the judgment. If the United States has a judgment lien, the execution lien shall relate back to the judgment lien date.

"(c) FORM OF WRIT OF EXECUTION.—

"(1) GENERAL REQUIREMENTS.—An execution writ shall specify the date that the judgment was entered, the court in which it was entered, the amount of the judgment if for money, the amount of the costs, and the sum actually due when the writ is issued, the amount of interest due, the rate of post-judgment interest, and the name of the party against whom the judgment was entered. The writ shall direct the United States marshal to satisfy the judgment out of all property, real and personal, of the judgment debtor not otherwise exempt pursuant to this chapter. An execution writ shall direct that only the property in which a named judgment debtor, who is not deceased, has an interest be levied upon or sold thereunder, and shall state the last known address of that judgment debtor.

"(2) EXCEPTION.—There shall be no requirement that personal property be levied upon and sold prior to levy and sale of real property of the judgment debtor.

"(3) EXECUTION FOR DELIVERY OF CERTAIN PROPERTY.—An execution issued upon a judgment for the delivery to the United States of the possession of personal property, or for the delivery of the possession of real property, shall particularly describe the property, and shall require the marshal to deliver the possession of the property to the United States.

"(4) EXECUTION FOR POSSESSION OR VALUE OF PERSONAL PROPERTY.—If the judgment is for the recovery of personal property or its value, the writ shall command the marshal, in case a delivery thereof cannot be had, to levy and collect the value thereof for which the judgment was recovered, to be specified therein, out of any property of the party against whom judgment was rendered, liable to execution.

"(d) ISSUANCE.—(1) The clerk of any court where a judgment is docketed, entered or registered, upon written application of counsel for the United States, shall, and without other or further order of a judge of that court, forthwith issue writs of execution. The writs shall be addressed to "Any United States Marshal," and may be served and executed in any judicial district of the United States, but shall be returnable to the issuing court. The writ shall be signed by the clerk of the court issuing the writ.

"(2) Multiple writs may issue simultaneously, and successive writs may issue before the return date of a writ previously issued.

"(e) RECORDS OF UNITED STATES MARSHAL.—(1) The United States marshal receiving the execution shall endorse thereon the exact hour and day when he received it. If he receives more than one on the same day against the same person, he shall number them as received.

"(2) The United States marshal shall make a memorandum in writing of the date of every levy and specify the property upon which the levy has been made on the process or in an attached schedule. The memorandum or schedule shall also set forth the marshal's costs, expenses and fees.

"(f) LEVY OF EXECUTION.—(1) The United States marshal receiving the writ shall proceed without delay to levy upon the property of the debtor found within his district, unless otherwise directed by counsel for the United States.

"(2) In performing the levy, the United States marshal may enter onto the lands and into the residence or other buildings owned, occupied or controlled by the debtor.

"(3) When real property is levied upon, the United States marshal shall file a copy of the notice of levy in the same manner as provided for judgments in section 3202. The United States marshal shall also serve a copy of the writ and notice of levy upon the debtor in the same manner that a summons is served in a civil action and so make his return thereof. If the United States marshal is unable to serve the writ upon the debtor, he shall post the writ and notice of levy in a conspicuous place upon the property and so make his return thereof.

"(4) Levy upon personal property is made by taking possession of it. Levy on personal property not easily taken into possession or which cannot be taken into possession without great inconvenience or expense, may be made by affixing a copy of the writ and motion of levy on it or in a conspicuous place in the vicinity of it describing in the notice of levy the property by quantity and with sufficient detail to identify the property levied upon. A copy of the writ and notice of levy shall also be served upon the debtor in the same manner that a summons is served in a civil action. Upon completion of the levy of personal property, the United States marshal shall so make his return thereof.

"(5)(A) Real property subject to a security interest or conveyed in trust as security for any debt or contract may be levied upon and sold on execution against the interest of the judgment debtor, subject to such mortgage, and the terms and conditions thereof.

"(B) Personal property pledged, assigned or security for any debt or contract, may be levied upon and sold on complying with the conditions of the pledge, assignment or security interest.

"(g) EXECUTION SALE PROCEDURES.—

"(1) SALE OF REAL PROPERTY.—

"(A) Real property, or any interest therein, shall be sold for cash at public auction at the courthouse of the county, parish or city in which the greater part of the property is located or upon the premises or some parcel thereof.

"(B) The time and place of sale of real property, or any interest therein, under execution shall be advertised by the United States marshal, by publication of notice, once a week for at least 3 weeks prior to the sale, in at least one newspaper of general circulation in the county or parish where the property is located. The first of these publications shall appear not less than 25 days immediately preceding the day of sale. The notice shall contain a statement of the authority by which the sale is to be made, the time of levy, and the time and place of sale; it shall also contain a brief description of the property to be sold, sufficient to identify the property, such as a street address the urban property, and the survey identification and location for rural property, but it shall not be necessary for it to contain field notes.

"(C) The United States marshal shall give written notice of public sale by personal delivery, or certified or registered mail, to persons and parties known to him to claim an interest in property under execution, including lienholders, co-owners and tenants, at least 25 days prior to the day of sale, to the last known address of such persons or parties.

"(2) SALE OF CITY LOTS.—If the real property consists of several lots, tracts, or parcels in a city or town, each lot, tract, or parcel must be offered for sale separately, unless not susceptible to separate sale because of the character of improvements.

"(3) SALE OF RURAL PROPERTY.—If the real property is not located in a city or town, the debtor may divide the property into lots of not less than 50 acres or in such greater or lesser amounts as ordered by the court, furnish a survey of such prepared by a registered surveyor, and designate the order in which those lots shall be sold. When a sufficient number of lots are sold to satisfy the amount of the execution and costs of sale, the marshal shall stop the sale.

"(4) SALE OF PERSONAL PROPERTY.—

"(A) Personal property levied on shall be offered for sale on the premises where it is located at the time of levy, or at the courthouse of the county, parish or city wherein it is located, or at some other place if, owing to the nature of the property, it is more convenient to exhibit it to purchasers at such place. Personal property susceptible of being exhibited shall not be sold unless it is present and subject to the view of those attending the sale, except shares of stock in corporations, and in cases, when by reason of the type or nature of the property, it is impractical to exhibit it, or where the debtor has merely an interest without the right to the exclusive possession, in which case the interest of the debtor may be sold and transferred without the presence of the property.

"(B) Notice of the time and place of the sales of personal property shall be given by posting notice thereof for 10 days successively immediately prior to the day of sale at the courthouse of any county, parish, or city, and at the place where the sale is to be made, and by mailing a copy by registered or certified mail to the judgment debtor at his last known address, or by personal delivery.

"(5) POSTPONEMENT OF SALE.—The United States marshal may postpone an execution sale from time to time continuing the posting of notice and/or publication of the notice until the date to which the sale is postponed, and appending, at the foot of such notice of each successive postponement the following:

"The above sale is postponed until the _____ day of _____, 19___, at _____ o'clock ___ .M., _____, United States Marshal for the District of _____, by _____, Deputy, dated _____.

"(6) BIDDING REQUIREMENTS; LIABILITY OF BIDDER; RESALE.—

"(A) The United States marshal may require of any bidder at any sale a cash deposit of as much as 20 percent of the sale price before the bid is received.

"(B) The cash deposit of any successful bidder at an execution sale shall be forfeited to the United States if he fails to comply with the terms of the sale; in addition, he shall be liable to the United States for all losses incurred by the United States at a subsequent sale of the same property. The liability for losses shall be limited to the difference between the amount of the deposit which was forfeited and the amount accepted by the United States as the highest bid by the defaulting bidder at the defaulted sale plus the costs of the defaulted sale. This liability shall be reduced by the amount the United States realizes from the subsequent sale, if any.

"(7) RESALE OF PROPERTY.—When the terms of the sale are not complied with by the bidder, the United States marshal shall proceed to sell the property again on the same day, if there is sufficient time; but if not, he shall readvertise and sell the property.

"(8) TRANSFER OF TITLE AFTER SALE.—

"(A) When the sale has been made and its terms complied with, the United States marshal shall execute and deliver any and all documents necessary to transfer ownership to the purchaser, without warranty, all the rights, titles, interest, and claims that the judgment debtor had in the property sold to the purchaser.

"(B) If the purchaser dies before execution and delivery of the documents needed to transfer ownership, the United States marshal shall execute and deliver them to the estate of the purchaser, and it shall have the same effect as if accomplished during the lifetime of the purchaser.

"(9) PURCHASER CONSIDERED INNOCENT PURCHASER WITHOUT NOTICE.—The purchaser of property sold under execution is considered to be an innocent purchaser without notice if the purchaser would have been considered an innocent purchaser without notice had the sale been made voluntarily and in person by the defendant.

"(10) NO RIGHT OF REDEMPTION.—The judgment debtor shall not be entitled to redeem the property after the execution sale.

"(11) DISTRIBUTION OF SALE PROCEEDS.—

"(A) The United States marshal shall first deliver to the judgment debtor, or his agent or attorney, such amounts to which he is entitled from the sale of partially exempt property as set forth in subchapter E of this chapter.

"(B) The United States marshal shall retain from the proceeds of a sale of property an amount equal to the reasonable expenses incurred in making the levy and keeping and maintaining the property.

"(C) The United States marshal shall deliver the balance of the money collected on execution to the counsel for the United States at the earliest opportunity.

"(D) If more money is received from the sale of the property than is sufficient to satisfy the executions held by the United States marshal, he shall pay forthwith the surplus to the judgment debtor or his agent or attorney.

"(h) REPLEVY.—(1) Any personal property taken in execution may be returned to the defendant by the United States marshal upon the delivery by the defendant to him of a bond or upon satisfaction of the judgment and any costs incurred in connection with scheduling the sale prior to the execution sale, payable to the United States, with two or more good and sufficient sureties, to be approved by the United States marshal, conditioned upon the delivery of the property to the United States marshal at the time and place named in the bond, to be sold according to law, or for the payment to the United States marshal of a fair value thereof, which shall be stated in the bond.

"(2) Where property has been replevied, as provided above, the judgment debtor may sell or dispose of the property paying the United States marshal the stipulated value thereof.

"(3) In the case of the non-delivery of the property according to the terms of the delivery bond, and non-payment of the value thereof, the United States marshal shall forthwith endorse the bond 'Forfeited' and return it to the clerk of the court from which the execution issued; whereupon, if the judgment remains unsatisfied in whole or in part, the clerk shall issue execution against the principal judgment debtor and the sureties on the bond for the amount due, not exceeding the stipulated value of the property, upon which execution no delivery bond shall be taken, which instruction shall be endorsed by the clerk on the execution.

"(i) DEATH OF JUDGMENT DEBTOR.—The death of the judgment debtor after a writ of execution is issued stays the execution proceedings, but any lien acquired by levy of the writ must be recognized and enforced by the court having jurisdiction over the estate of the deceased. The execution lien may be enforced against the executor, administrator, or personal representative of the estate of the deceased; or if there be none, against the heirs or devisees of the property of the deceased receiving same, but only to the extent of the value of the property coming to them.

"(j) WHEN EXECUTION NOT SATISFIED.—When the property levied upon does not sell for enough to satisfy the execution, the United States marshal shall proceed on the same writ of execution as to other property of the judgment debtor.

"(k) RETURN ON EXECUTION.—(1) The United States marshal shall make a written return on each writ of execution to the court from which the writ was issued and deliver a copy to counsel for the United States who requested the writ. It shall be returnable 90 days from the date of issuance unless counsel for the United States has specified an earlier date. The return shall be filed by the clerk of the court from which the writ was issued.

"(2) The United States marshal shall state concisely what was done in pursuance of the requirements of the writ.

"(3) The return shall be made forthwith if satisfied by the collection of the money, or if ordered by counsel for the United States, which order shall be noted on the return.

"§ 3305. Installment payment order

"Where it is shown that the judgment debtor is receiving or will receive money from any source or is attempting to impede the United States by rendering services without adequate compensation, upon motion of the United States and notice to the judgment debtor, the court may, if appropriate, order that the judgment debtor make specified installment payments to the United States. Notice of the motion shall be served on the judgment debtor in the same manner as a summons or by registered or certified mail, return receipt requested. In fixing the amount of the payments, the court shall take into consideration the reasonable requirements of the judgment debtor, any payments required to be made by the judgment debtor or deducted from the money he would otherwise receive in satisfaction of other judgments, the amount due on the judgment, and the amount being or to be received, or, if the judgment debtor is attempting to impede the United States by rendering services without adequate compensation, the reasonable value of the services rendered.

"Upon motion of the United States, and upon a showing that the debtor's financial circumstances have changed or that assets not previously disclosed by the debtor have been discovered, the court may increase the amount of payments or alter their frequency or require full payment.

"§ 3306. Garnishment

"(a) GENERAL.—A court may issue writs of garnishment, either prejudgment or postjudgment against the property of a debtor which is in the possession, custody or control of a third person in order to satisfy a judgment against the debtor; co-owned property shall be subject to garnishment to the same extent as it is under the law of the States in which it is located. The United States may request and a court shall issue simultaneous separate writs of garnishment to several garnishees. All writs of garnishment issued pursuant to these provisions shall be continuing and shall terminate only as provided herein.

"(b) WRIT.—

"(1) GENERAL REQUIREMENTS.—The United States shall include in its application for a writ of garnishment, the following:

"(A) any matters required by section 3104 when seeking prejudgment garnishment;

"(B) the debtor's name, social security number, if known, and the debtor's last known address;

"(C) the nature and amount of the debt alleged to be owed and that demand on the debtor for payment of the debt has been made, but the debtor has not paid the amount due. A money judgment must be alleged for postjudgment garnishment; and

"(D) that the garnishee is believed to be indebted to the debtor or have possession of property of the debtor.

"(2) PROPER GARNISHEE FOR PARTICULAR PROPERTY.—

"(A) Where property consists of a right to or share in the stock of an association or corporation, or interests or profits therein, for which a certificate of stock or other negotiable instrument is not outstanding, the corporation, or the president or treasurer of the association, shall be the garnishee.

"(B) Where property consists of a right to or interest in a decedent's estate or any other property or fund held or controlled by a personal representative or fiduciary, the personal representative or fiduciary shall be the garnishee.

"(C) Where property consists of an interest in a partnership, any partner other than the debtor, shall be the garnishee on behalf of the partnership.

"(D) Where property or a debt is evidenced by a negotiable instrument for the payment of money, a negotiable document of title or a certificate of stock of an association or corporation, the instrument, document or certificate shall be treated as property capable of delivery and the person holding it shall be the garnishee; except that in the case of a security which is transferable in the manner set forth in State law, the firm or corporation which carries on its books an account in the name of the debtor in which is reflected such security, shall be the garnishee; Provided, however, That if such security has been pledged, the pledgee shall be the garnishee.

"(c) ISSUANCE OF WRIT.—

"(1) CLERK'S REVIEW.—The clerk or the court shall review the application for postjudgment writs of garnishment and if it meets the requirements set forth herein, shall issue an appropriate writ. The clerk shall issue prejudgment writs of garnishment as authorized by the court.

"(2) FORM OF WRIT.—

"(A) GENERAL PROVISIONS.—The writ shall state—

"(i) The nature and amount of the debt. If interest is accruing, the rate of accrual thereafter shall be stated. If a judgment is involved, the amount of any costs included in the judgment should be stated.

"(ii) The name and address of the garnishee.

"(iii) The name and address of counsel for the United States.

"(iv) The last known mailing address of the debtor.

"(v) That the garnishee shall answer the writ within 10 days of service of the writ.

"(B) EARNINGS GARNISHMENT.—The United States may apply for garnishment of the nonexempt disposable earnings of a natural person. The writ for the garnishment of earnings shall direct the garnishee to withhold and retain the nonexempt earnings for which the garnishee is indebted to the debtor at the time of receipt of the writ and may thereafter become indebted to the debtor pending further order of the court.

"(C) GARNISHMENT OF OTHER PROPERTY.—As to all non-earnings property of a debtor who is a natural person and all property of other debtors in the possession, custody and control of the garnishee at the time the writ is received by the garnishee and anytime thereafter, the writ shall direct the garnishee to retain possession, custody and control of and not to transfer or return the property pending further order of the court.

"(D) SERVICE OF WRIT.—The United States may serve the garnishee with a copy of the writ by first class mail or by delivery by the United States marshal as provided by rule 4 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The United States shall, at the same time, serve the debtor with a copy of the writ by first class mail to the debtor's last known address; counsel for the United States shall certify to the court that this service was made. The writ of garnishment shall be accompanied by instructions explaining the requirement that the garnishee submit a written answer to the writ of garnishment and instructions to the debtor for objecting to the answer of the garnishee and for obtaining a hearing on the objections.

"(E) ANSWER OF THE GARNISHEE.—In its written answer to the writ of garnishment, the garnishee shall state under oath whether it is indebted to the debtor or has custody, control or possession of the debtor's property; a description of the indebtedness or property; whether the indebtedness or property is subject to any prior garnishments or levies and a description of any such claim; and whether the indebtedness or property is subject to any exemptions from garnishment. In addition, if the writ of garnishment is against the earnings of the debtor, the garnishee shall state whether the debtor was employed at the time the writ was received, and, if so, how much was owed at the time; and whether the garnishee anticipates owing earnings to the debtor in the future, and, if so, the amount and whether the pay period will be weekly or another specified period. In all cases, the garnishee shall file the original answer with the court issuing the writ and serve a copy on the debtor and counsel for the United States. Any garnishee, including a corporation, may file an answer without the representation of an attorney.

"(F) OBJECTIONS TO ANSWER.—Within 20 days after receipt of the answer, the debtor and the United States may file a written objection to the answer and request a hearing on the objection. The party objecting must state the grounds for the objection and bears the burden of proving them. A copy of the objection and request for hearing shall be served on the garnishee and the other party. The court shall set a hearing within 10 days after the date the request was received by the court, or as soon thereafter as is practicable, and give notice of the date to all parties.

"(G) GARNISHEE'S FAILURE TO ANSWER OR PAY.—If a garnishee fails to answer or pay within the time specified, the United States may petition the court for an order requiring the garnishee to appear before the court to answer the writ or pay by the appearance date. If the garnishee fails to appear or does appear and fails to show good cause why he failed to comply with the garnishment writ, the court shall enter judgment against the garnishee for the full amount of the past debt owed by the debtor. The court shall award reasonable attorney's fees to the United States and against the garnishee if the writ has not been answered within the time specified therein and a petition requiring the garnishee to appear was filed as provided in this section. Failure to answer or pay within the time specified in the writ may also be punished as a contempt of the court.

"(H) DISPOSITION ORDER.—After the garnishee files its answer and if no hearing is required, the court shall promptly enter an order directing the garnishee as to the disposition of the debtor's property. If a hearing is required, the order shall be entered within 5 days of the hearing, or as soon thereafter as is practicable.

"(I) PRIORITIES.—Court orders and garnishments for the support of a person shall have priority over a writ of garnishment issued pursuant to these provisions. As to any other garnishment or levy, a garnishment issued pursuant to these provisions shall have priority over those which are later in time and shall be satisfied in the order in which the writs are served upon the garnishee.

"(J) ACCOUNTING.—The debtor or garnishee may request an accounting on a garnishment within 10 days after the garnishment terminates. The United States shall give a written accounting to the debtor and garnishee of all earnings and property it receives under a writ of garnishment within 20 days after it receives the request of the debtor or garnishee. Within 10 days after the accounting is received, the debtor or garnishee may file a written objection to the accounting and a request for hearing. The party objecting must state grounds for the objection. The court shall set a hearing on the objection within 10 days after the court receives the request for a hearing, or as soon thereafter as is practicable.

"(K) DISCHARGE OF GARNISHEE'S OBLIGATION.—A garnishee shall be discharged as set forth in section 3311 of this subchapter.

"(L) TERMINATION OF GARNISHMENT.—A garnishment proceeding hereunder can be terminated by—

"(i) the court quashing the writ of garnishment;

"(ii) exhaustion of earnings or property in the possession, custody or control of the garnishee, unless the garnishee reinstates or reemploys the debtor within 90 days of dismissal or resignation; or

"(iii) satisfaction of the debtor's obligation to the United States.

"§ 3307. Modification or protective order; supervision of enforcement

"Within the provisions of this chapter, the court may at any time on its own initiative or the motion of any interested person, and upon such notice as it may require, make an order denying, limiting, conditioning, regulating, extending or modifying the use of any enforcement procedure.

"§ 3308. Power of court to punish for contempt

"A court shall have power to punish a civil or criminal contempt committed with respect to an enforcement procedure or order under this chapter.

"§ 3309. Arrest of judgment debtor

"Upon motion of the judgment creditor without notice, where it is shown by affidavit or otherwise that the judgment debtor is about to depart from the jurisdiction of the United States, or keeps himself concealed therein with intent to hinder, delay or defraud the judgment creditor, and that there is reason to believe that the judgment debtor has in his possession or custody nonexempt property in which he has an interest, the court may issue a warrant directed to the United States marshal to arrest the judgment debtor forthwith and bring him before the court. The United States marshal shall serve upon the judgment debtor a copy of the warrant and supporting documents at the time of arrest. When the judgment debtor is brought before the court, the court may order that he give a bond or undertaking in a sum to be fixed by the court, that he will appear before the court for examination and that he will obey the terms of a restraining notice contained in the order.

"§ 3310. Discharge

"A person who pursuant to an execution or order pays or delivers to the United States, a United States marshal or receiver, money or other personal property in which a judgment debtor has or will have an interest, or so pays a debt he owes the judgment debtor, is discharged from his obligation to the judgment debtor to the extent of the payment or delivery.

"3401. Exempt property.
"3402. Limitation on exempt property.

"SUBCHAPTER E—EXEMPT PROPERTY

"§ 3401. Exempt property

"Except as provided under section 3402, the following property of natural persons shall be exempted from the enforcement procedures under the provisions of this chapter as to debts owed the United States—

"(a) the debtor's aggregate interest, not to exceed $7,500 in value in real property or personal property that the debtor or a dependent of the debtor uses as a residence, in a cooperative that owns property that the debtor uses as a residence, or in a burial plot for the debtor or a dependent of the debtor;

"(b) the debtor's interest, not to exceed $1,200 in value, in one motor vehicle;

"(c) the debtor's interest, not to exceed $200 in value in any particular item or $4,000 in aggregate value, in household furnishings, household goods, wearing apparel, appliances, books, animals, crops, or musical instruments, that are held primarily for the personal, family or household use of the debtor or a dependent of the debtor;

"(d) the debtor's aggregate interest, not to exceed $500 in value, in jewelry held primarily for the personal, family or household use of the debtor or a dependent of the debtor;

"(e) the debtor's aggregate interest in any property, not to exceed in value $400 plus up to $3,750 of any unused amount of the exemption provided under subsection (a) of this subsection;

"(f) any unmatured life insurance contract owned by the debtor, other than a credit life insurance contract;

"(g) the debtor's aggregate interest, not to exceed in value $4,000 less any amount of property of the estate transferred in the manner specified in section 542(d) of title 11, in any accrued dividend or interest under, or loan value of, any unmatured life insurance contract owned by the debtor under which the insured is the debtor or an individual of whom the debtor is a dependent;

"(h) the debtor's aggregate interest, not to exceed $750 in value in any implements, professional books or tools of the trade of the debtor or the trade of a dependent of the debtor;

"(i) professionally prescribed health aids for the debtor or a dependent of the debtor;

"(j) the debtor's right to receive—

"(1) a social security benefit, unemployment compensation, or a local public assistance benefit;

"(2) a veterans' benefit;

"(3) a disability, illness including Medicaid and Medicare, or unemployment benefit, and Aid to Families With Dependent Children benefits;

"(4) alimony, child and spousal support or separate maintenance paid or received, to the extent reasonably necessary for the support of the debtor and any dependent of the debtor;

"(5) a payment under a stock bonus, pension, profit-sharing, annuity, or similar plan or contract on account of illness, disability, death, age, or length of service, to the extent reasonably necessary for the support of the debtor and any dependent of the debtor, unless—

"(A) such plan or contract was established by or under the auspices of an insider that employed the debtor at the time the debtor's rights under such plan or contract arose;

"(B) such payment is on account of age or length of service; and

"(C) such plan or contract does not qualify under section 401(a), 403(a), 403(b), 408, or 409 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (26 U.S.C. 401(a), 403(a), 403(b), 408, or 409).

"(k) the debtor's right to receive, or property that is traceable to—

"(1) an award under a crime victim's reparation law;

"(2) a payment on account of the wrongful death of an individual of whom the debtor was a dependent, to the extent reasonably necessary for the support of the debtor and any dependent of the debtor;

"(3) a payment under a life insurance contract that insured the life of an individual of whom the debtor was a dependent on the date of such individual's death, to the extent reasonably necessary for the support of the debtor and any dependent of the debtor;

"(4) a payment, not to exceed $7,500, on account of personal bodily injury, not including pain and suffering or compensation for actual pecuniary loss, of the debtor or an individual of whom the debtor is a dependent; or

"(5) a payment in compensation of loss of future earnings of the debtor or an individual of whom the debtor is or was a dependent, to the extent reasonably necessary for the support of the debtor and any dependent of the debtor.

"§ 3402. Limitations on exempt property

"(a) Property upon which a judgment debtor has voluntarily granted a lien, shall not be exempt to the extent of the balance due on the debt secured thereby.

"(b) If, within 90 days prior to judgment or thereafter, the debtor has transferred non-exempt property and as a result acquires, improves or increases in value exempt property, his interest shall not be exempt to the extent of the increased value.

"(c) The United States may require the judgment debtor to file a statement with regard to each claimed exemption; the original shall be filed with the court in which the enforcement proceeding is pending, and a copy served upon counsel for the United States. The statement shall be under oath and shall describe each item of property for which exemption is claimed, the value and the basis for such valuation, and the nature of the judgment debtor's ownership interest.

"(d) The United States, by application to the court where an enforcement proceeding is pending, may request a hearing on the applicability of any exemption claimed by the judgment debtor. The court shall determine whether the judgment debtor is entitled to the exemption claimed and the value of the property with respect to which the exemption is claimed; unless the court finds that it is reasonably evident that the exemption applies, the judgment debtor shall bear the burden of going forward with evidence and of persuasion.

"(e) Assertion of an exemption shall not prevent seizure and sale of the property to which such exemption applies. However, where an exemption has been validly and properly asserted, the sale proceeds for that item of property must be applied first to satisfy the dollar value of the exemption and then to the balance of the judgment. Any excess remaining after payment of judgment shall be paid to the judgment debtor.

"SUBCHAPTER F—FRAUDULENT TRANSFERS

"§ 3501. Definitions

"As used in this subchapter—

"(a) 'Affiliate' means—

"(1) a person who directly or indirectly owns, controls, or holds with power to vote, 20 percent or more of the outstanding voting securities of the debtor other than a person who holds the securities—

"(A) as a fiduciary or agent without sole discretionary power to vote the securities; or

"(B) solely to secure a debt, if the person has not exercised the power to vote;

"(2) a corporation 20 percent or more of whose voting securities are directly or indirectly owned, controlled, or held with power to vote, by the debtor or a person who directly or indirectly owns, controls, or holds, with power to vote, 20 percent or more of the outstanding voting securities of the debtor, other than the person who holds a securities—

"(A) as a fiduciary or agent without sole power to vote the securities;

"(B) solely to secure a debt, if the person has not in fact exercised the power to vote;

"(C) a person whose business is operated by the debtor under a lease or other agreement, or a person substantially all of whose assets are controlled by the debtor; or

"(D) a person who operates the debtor's business under a lease or other agreement or controls substantially all of the debtor's assets.

"(b) 'Asset' means property of a debtor, but does not include—

"(1) property to the extent it is encumbered by a valid lien; or

"(2) property to the extent it is exempt under subchapter E of this chapter.

"(c) 'Insider' includes—

"(1) if the debtor is an individual—

"(A) a relative of the debtor or of a general partner of the debtor;

"(B) a partnership in which the debtor is a general partner;

"(C) a general partner in a partnership described in subsection (c)(1)(B); or

"(D) a corporation of which the debtor is a director, officer, or person in control.

"(2) if the debtor is a corporation—

"(A) a director of the debtor;

"(B) an officer of the debtor;

"(C) a person in control of the debtor;

"(D) a partnership in which the debtor is a general partner;

"(E) a general partner in a partnership described in subsection (c)(2)(D); or

"(F) a relative of a general partner, director, officer, or person in control of the debtor.

"(3) if the debtor is a partnership—

"(A) a general partner in the debtor;

"(B) a relative of a general partner in, a general partner of, or a person in control of the debtor;

"(C) another partnership in which the debtor is a general partner;

"(D) a general partner in a partnership described in subsection (c)(3)(C); or

"(E) a person in control of the debtor.

"(4) an affiliate, or an insider of an affiliate as if the affiliate were the debtor; and

"(5) a managing agent of the debtor.

"(d) 'Lien' means a charge against or an interest in property to secure payment of a debt or performance of an obligation, and includes a security interest created by agreement, a judicial lien obtained by legal or equitable process or proceeding, a common law lien, or a statutory lien.

"(e) 'Relative' means an individual related by consanguinity within the third degree as determined by the common law, a spouse, or an individual related to a spouse within the third degree as so determined, and includes an individual in an adoptive relationship within the third degree.

"(f) 'Transfer' means every mode, direct or indirect, absolute or conditional, voluntary or involuntary, of disposing of or parting with an asset or an interest in an asset, and includes payment of money, release, lease, and creation of a lien or other encumbrance.

"(g) 'Valid lien' means a lien that is effective against the holder of a judicial lien subsequently obtained by legal or equitable process or proceedings.

"§ 3502. Insolvency

"(a) A debtor is insolvent if the sum of the debtor's debts is greater than all of the debtor's assets at a fair valuation.

"(b) A debtor who is generally not paying his debts as they become due is presumed to be insolvent.

"(c) A partnership is insolvent under subsection (a) if the sum of the partnership's debts is greater than the aggregate, at a fair valuation, of all of the partnership's assets and the sum of the excess of the value of each general partner's non-partnership assets over the partner's non-partnership debts.

"(d) Assets under this section do not include property that has been transferred, concealed, or removed with intent to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors or that has been transferred in a manner making the transfer voidable under this subchapter.

"(e) Debts under this section do not include an obligation to the extent it is secured by a valid lien on property of the debtor not included as an asset.

"§ 3503. Value

"(a) Value is given for a transfer or an obligation if, in exchange for the transfer or obligation, property is transferred or an antecedent debt is secured or satisfied, but value does not include an unperformed promise made otherwise than in the ordinary course of the promisor's business to furnish support to the debtor or another person.

"(b) For the purposes of sections 3504(a)(2) and 3507, a person gives a reasonably equivalent value if the person acquires an interest of the debtor in an asset pursuant to a regularly conducted, non-collusive foreclosure sale or execution of a power of sale for the acquisition or disposition of the interest of the debtor upon default under a mortgage, deed of trust, or security agreement.

"(c) A transfer is made for present value if the exchange between the debtor and the transferee is intended by them to be contemporaneous and is in fact substantially contemporaneous.

"§ 3504. Transfer fraudulent as to the United States on present and future claims

"(a) A transfer made or obligation incurred by a debtor is fraudulent as to the United States, whether its claim arose before or after the transfer was made or the obligation was incurred, if the debtor made the transfer or incurred the obligation—

"(1) with actual intent to hinder, delay, or defraud the United States or any other creditor of the debtor; or

"(2) without receiving a reasonably equivalent value in exchange for the transfer or obligation, and the debtor—

"(A) was engaged or was about to engage in a business or a transaction for which the remaining assets of the debtor were unreasonably small in relation to the business or transaction; or

"(B) intended to incur, or believed or reasonably should have believed that he would incur, debts beyond his ability to pay as they became due.

"(b) In determining actual intent under subsection (a)(1), consideration may be given, among other factors, to whether—

"(1) the transfer or obligation was to an insider;

"(2) the debtor retained possession or control of the property transferred after the transfer;

"(3) the transfer or obligation was disclosed or concealed;

"(4) before the transfer was made or obligation was incurred, the debtor had been sued or threatened with suit;

"(5) the transfer was of substantially all of the debtor's assets;

"(6) the debtor absconded;

"(7) the debtor removed or concealed assets;

"(8) the value of the consideration received by the debtor was reasonably equivalent to the value of the asset transferred or the amount of the obligation incurred;

"(9) the debtor was insolvent or became insolvent shortly after the transfer was made or the obligation was incurred;

"(10) the transfer occurred shortly before or shortly after a substantial debt was incurred; and

"(11) the debtor transferred the essential assets of the business to a lienor who transferred the assets to an insider of the debtor.

"§ 3505. Transfer fraudulent as to the United States on a present claim

"(a) A transfer made or obligation incurred by a debtor is fraudulent as to the United States on its claims which arose before the transfer was made or the obligation was incurred if the debtor made the transfer or incurred the obligation without receiving a reasonably equivalent value in exchange for the transfer or obligation and the debtor was insolvent at the time or the debtor became insolvent as a result of the transfer or obligation.

"(b) A transfer made by a debtor is fraudulent as to the United States on its claim which arose before the transfer was made if the transfer was made to an insider for an antecedent debt, the debtor was insolvent at the time, and the insider had reasonable cause to believe that the debtor was insolvent.

"§ 3506. When transfer is made or obligation is incurred

"For the purposes of this subchapter—

"(a) a transfer is made—

"(1) with respect to an asset that is real property, other than a fixture, but including the interest of a seller or purchaser under a contract for the sale of the asset, when the transfer is so far perfected that a good-faith purchaser of the asset from the debtor against whom applicable law permits the transfer to be perfected cannot acquire an interest in the asset that is superior to the interest of the transferee; and

"(2) with respect to an asset that is not real property or that is a fixture, when the transfer is so far perfected that the United States on a simple contract cannot acquire a judicial lien otherwise than under this subchapter that is superior to the interest of the transferee.

"(b) If applicable law permits the transfer to be perfected as approved in subsection (a) and the transfer is not so perfected before the commencement of an action for relief under this subchapter, the transfer is deemed made immediately before the commencement of the action.

"(c) If applicable law does not permit the transfer to be perfected as provided in subsection (a), the transfer is made when it becomes effective between the debtor and the transferee.

"(d) A transfer is not made until the debtor has acquired rights in the asset transferred.

"(e) An obligation is incurred—

"(1) if oral, when it becomes effective between the parties; or

"(2) if evidenced by a writing, when the writing was executed by the obligor is delivered to or for the benefit of the obligee.

"§ 3507. Remedies of the United States

"(a) In an action for relief against a transfer or obligation under this subchapter, the United States, subject to the limitations in section 3508, may obtain, subject to applicable principles of equity and in accordance with the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure—

"(1) avoidance of the transfer or obligation to the extent necessary to satisfy the claim of the United States;

"(2) an attachment or other remedy against the asset transferred or other property of the transferee in accordance with the procedure described by this chapter.

"(b) If the United States has obtained a judgment on a claim against the debtor, if the court so orders, it may levy execution on the asset transferred or its proceeds.

"§ 3508. Defenses, liability and protection of transferee

"(a) A transfer or obligation is not voidable under section 3504(a) against a person who took in good faith and for a reasonably equivalent value or against any subsequent transferee or obligee.

"(b) Except as otherwise provided in this section, to the extent a transfer is voidable in an action by the United States under section 3507(a)(1), it may recover judgment for the value of the asset transferred, as adjusted under subsection (c), or the amount necessary to satisfy its claim, whichever is less. The judgment may be entered against—

"(1) the first transferee of the asset or the person for whose benefit the transfer was made; or

"(2) any subsequent transferee other than a good faith transferee who took for value or from any subsequent transferee.

"(c) If the judgment under subsection (b) is based upon the value of the asset transferred, the judgment must be for an amount equal to the value of the asset at the time of the transfer, subject to adjustment as the equities may require.

"(d) Notwithstanding voidability of a transfer or an obligation under this subchapter, a good-faith transferee or obligee is entitled, to the extent of the value given the debtor for the transfer or obligation, to—

"(1) a lien on or a right to retain any interest in the asset transferred;

"(2) enforcement of any obligation incurred; or

"(3) a reduction in the amount of the liability on the judgment.

"(e) A transfer is not voidable under section 3504(a)(2) or section 3505 if the transfer results from—

"(1) termination of a lease upon default by the debtor when the termination is pursuant to the lease and applicable law; or

"(2) enforcement of a security interest in compliance with article 9 of the Uniform Commercial Code or its equivalent in effect in the jurisdiction where the property is located.

"(f) A transfer is not voidable under section 3505(b)—

"(1) to the extent the insider gave new value to or for the benefit of the debtor after the transfer was made unless the new value was secured by a valid lien;

"(2) if made in the ordinary course of business or financial affairs of the debtor and the insider, or

"(3) if made pursuant to a good-faith effort to rehabilitate the debtor and the transfer secured present value given for that purpose, as well as an antecedent debt of the debtor.

"§ 3509. Supplementary provision

"Unless displaced by the provisions of this subchapter, the principles of law and equity, including the law merchant and the law relating to principal and agent, fraud, misrepresentation, duress, coercion, mistake, insolvency, or other validating or invalidating cause, supplement its provisions.

"SUBCHAPTER G—PARTITION

"SUBCHAPTER G—PARTITION

"§ 3601. Action by United States for partition

"(a) The United States, as co-owner or claimant of real or personal property, or an interest therein, may compel a partition of the property among the co-owners and tenants.

"(b) The district court shall have original jurisdiction of any civil action brought by the United States for the partition of property. The action for partition shall be filed in the judicial district in which the property, or a part thereof, is located. An action in a State court in which the United States is a defendant and in which the United States seeks partition may be removed to the district court.

"(c) The United States shall file a complaint stating—

"(1) the name and residence, if known, of each co-owner or claimant to such property;

"(2) the share of interest, if known, of each coowner or claimant in such property;

"(3) a description of the property sought to be partitioned; and

"(4) the estimated value of the property for which partition is sought.

"§ 3602. Service of process in partition action

"(a) Personal service of summonses and complaints and other process shall be made in accordance with rules 4 (c) and (d) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure upon a defendant who resides within the United States or its territories or insular possessions and whose residence is known.

"(b) Upon the filing of a certificate by counsel for the United States stating that it is believed that a defendant cannot be personally served, because after diligent inquiry within the State in which the complaint is filed his place of residence cannot be ascertained by the United States or, if ascertained, that it is beyond the territorial limits of personal service as provided in rules 4 (c) and (d) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, service of Notice of Summons and Complaint shall be made on that defendant by publication in a newspaper published in the county where the property is located, or if there is no such newspaper, then in a newspaper having a general circulation in the State where the property is located, once a week for 3 successive weeks. Prior to the last publication, a copy of the notice shall also be mailed to a defendant who cannot be personally served as provided in this rule but whose place of residence is then known. Unknown owners may be served by publication in like manner by a notice addressed to 'Unknown Others.' Service by publication is complete upon the date of the last publication. Proof of publication and mailing shall be made by certificate of counsel for the United States, to which shall be attached a printed copy of the published notice with the name and dates of the newspaper marked thereon.

"§ 3603. Trial; commissioner; decree of partition

"(a) All questions of law or equity affecting the title of the property which may arise, and the determination of the share or interest of each of the co-owners or claimants shall be tried by the court without a jury.

"(b) The court shall determine whether the property, or any part thereof, is susceptible of partition. If the court determines that the whole, or any part of the property is susceptible of partition, then the court shall enter a decree directing the partition of the property which is held to be susceptible of partition, describing it and specifying the share or interest to which each party is entitled. The court shall then appoint three or more competent and disinterested persons as commissioners to make the partition in accordance with the court's decree, the majority of the commissioners may act.

"(c) The court may appoint a surveyor to assist the commissioners in making a partition of real estate. The commissioners may cause the real estate to be surveyed and partitioned into several tracts or parcels.

"(d) The court may appoint an appraiser or appraisers to value the property and file an appraisal report with the court and the commissioners, as the court directs.

"(e) The commissioners shall divide the property into as many shares as there are persons entitled thereto, as determined by the court, having due regard in the division of the property to the situation, quantity, and advantage of each share, so that the shares may be equal in value, as nearly as may be, in the proportion to the respective shares or interests of the parties entitled thereto.

"(f) The commissioners shall report in writing to the court; and the report shall be determined by a majority of the commissioners and the contents shall be governed by the provisions of rules 53(e) (1) and (2) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The report shall also contain the following—

"(1) The several tracts, units, or parcels into which the property was divided (describing each particularly);

"(2) the number of shares and the estimated value of each share;

"(3) the allotment of each share; and

"(4) field notes and maps as to each estate, as may be necessary.

"The findings and reports of the commissioners shall have the effect, and be dealt with by the court in accordance with the practice prescribed in rule 53(e)(2).

"(g) The decree of the court confirming the report of commissioners in a partition of property gives a recipient of an interest in the property a title equivalent to a conveyance of the interest by warranty deed as in the case of real property or by bill of sale as to personal property, from the other parties in the action.

"(h) All conditions, restrictive covenants, and encumbrances against the property that applied to the property prior to the partition shall remain against the property as partitioned unless those restrictions, covenants and encumbrances have been included and are subject to the partition action.

"§ 3604. Partition by sale

"Should the court determine that a fair and equitable division of the property, or any part thereof, cannot be made, the court shall order a sale of that part which is incapable of partition, which sale shall be for cash, or upon such other terms as the court may direct, and shall be made as provided by title 28, United States Code, chapter 127, or through a receiver, as the court so orders. The proceeds of such sale shall be paid into the court and partitioned among the persons and parties entitled thereto according to their respective interests.

"§ 3605. Costs

"Costs shall be taxed against each party to whom a share has been allotted in proportion to the value of such share.

"SUBCHAPTER H—FORECLOSURE OF SECURITY INTERESTS

"Sec.
"3701. United States foreclosures governed by Federal law.

"SUBCHAPTER H—FORECLOSURE OF SECURITY INTERESTS

"§ 3701. United States foreclosures governed by Federal law

"Unless the documents specifically adopt State law, any action by the United States to foreclose security interests in real property shall be governed by the Federal statutes and applicable regulations, provisions set forth in the transaction documents and by Federal common law where there is no governing statute, applicable regulation or provision, and not by the State law where the real property is located. This shall include, but not be limited to, questions regarding redemption rights and deficiency judgments.

"§ 3702. Deficiency rights on federally guaranteed or insured loans

"Unless the documents specifically adopt State law, the right of the United States to collect a deficiency following the foreclosure of a loan guaranteed or insured by the United States or any agency thereof shall be governed by Federal statutes, applicable regulations, and the provisions set forth in the transaction documents. The rights of the United States under this section shall apply notwithstanding the provisions of any State law and without regard to the method used by the loan holder to foreclose the loan.".

TITLE II—AMENDMENTS TO OTHER PROVISIONS OF LAW

SEC. 201. Section 505 of title 11, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following subsection:

"(d) Payments of taxes under this title to a governmental unit may be applied by the governmental unit in a manner that preserves alternative sources of collection, if any.".

SEC. 202. Section 523(a) of title 11, United States Code, is amended as follows:

(a) by deleting the word "or" at the end of section 523(a)(9); and

(b) by deleting "." at the end of section 523(a)(10) and adding "; and" in lieu thereof; and

Mr. KENNEDY (for himself, Mr. HATCH, Mr. WILSON, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. KOHL, and Mr. DODD) proposed an amendment to the bill S. 1711, supra, as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following new title:

TITLE —TREATMENT, PREVENTION AND EDUCATION

SEC. 01. GRANTS FOR TRAINING OF DRUG TREATMENT PROFESSIONALS.

Title V of the Public Health Service Act is amended by inserting after section 508 (42 U.S.C. 290aa-6) the following new section:

"SEC. 5083. GRANTS FOR TRAINING OF DRUG TREATMENT PROFESSIONALS.

"(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary shall establish a grant program to make grants to eligible institutions to enable such institutions to provide training services to increase the supply of drug treatment professionals, including professionals trained to work with adolescents, and professionals trained to work with community prevention activities.

"(b) ELIGIBLE INSTITUTIONS.—Institutions eligible to receive a grant under this section shall include medical schools, schools of osteopathy, schools of nursing, schools of public health, schools of chiropractic services, schools of social work, and other appropriate educational institutions that submit an application in accordance with subsection (c).

"(c) APPLICATION.—To be eligible to receive a grant under this section, an eligible institution shall submit an application to the Secretary at such time, in such manner, and containing such information as the Secretary may by regulation require.

"(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—

"(1) FISCAL YEAR 1990.—The Secretary shall use amounts appropriated under section 408 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, to carry out this section in fiscal year 1990.

"(2) SUBSEQUENT FISCAL YEARS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to make grants under this section in each of the fiscal years 1991 and 1992, such sums as may be necessary.".

SEC. 02. NATIONAL RESOURCE AND INFORMATION CENTER.

Part A of title V of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 290aa et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 509H. NATIONAL RESOURCE AND INFORMATION CENTER.

"(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Secretary, acting through the Administrator of the Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Administration, shall use amounts made available under subsection (d) to make a grant to an institution of the type described in subsection (b) for the establishment of a National Resource and Information Center for Perinatal Addiction.

"(b) TYPE OF INSTITUTION.—The grant under subsection (a) shall be awarded, after a competitive search, to a private nonprofit institution that has an extensive background and experience in performing research on maternal substance abuse and in disseminating such information to professionals, policymakers, the general public and the media, as well as experience in providing educational services to maternal substance abusers and their exposed infants.

"(c) DUTIES.—The Center established under subsection (a) shall—

"(1) coordinate and disseminate research on maternal substance abuse, treatment options for such women and infants of such women, and prevention strategies;

"(2) develop and distribute training and educational information and materials concerning maternal substance abuse;

"(3) act as a clearinghouse for information on treatment programs for pregnant women who are addicted to illegal substances;

"(4) develop and manage a national toll free hotline to provide information and referrals;

"(5) provide policy analysis and program evaluation to the Secretary of Health and Human Services; and

"(6) provide any other services designed to carry out the purposes of this subsection.

"(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this paragraph, $2,500,000 for fiscal year 1990, and such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 1991.".

SEC. 03. GRANTS FOR SUBSTANCE ABUSE TREATMENT FOR PREGNANT AND POST-PARTUM WOMEN.

Part A of title V of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 290aa et seq.) (as amended by section —03) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 5091. GRANTS FOR SUBSTANCE ABUSE TREATMENT FOR PREGNANT AND POST-PARTUM WOMEN.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, acting through the Administrator of the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration, shall, subject to amounts available in appropriation acts, make grants to entities to provide assistance to outpatient and residential substance abuse treatment programs relating to pregnant and post-partum women and their infants, that meet the requirements of subsection (b).

"(b) REQUIREMENTS.—

"(1) DISTRIBUTION.—In making grants under subsection (a), the Administrator shall ensure that grants are reasonably distributed among projects that provide outpatient and residential treatment.

"(2) SERVICES.—An entity shall not be eligible for a grant under subsection (a) unless such entity provides the Administrator with an assurance that such entity will use assistance provided under such grant to provide, arrange for the provision of, or refer individuals to, services that shall include—

"(A) intervention services for pregnant and post-partum women, including—

"(i) substance abuse and addiction treatment services;

"(ii) support services (such as child care and transportation services);

"(iii) education and skill building services (such as parenting and job seeking skill services);

"(iv) integration and coordination of substance abuse treatment services with prenatal or post-partum health care services;

"(v) innovative methods of outreach to identify and recruit target populations for services early in the pregnancy of individuals of such populations;

"(vi) medical screening procedures of pregnant women for past and present substance use and abuse; and

"(vii) after care services;

"(B) interventions where infants are at risk, including—

"(i) direct intervention, treatment, or rehabilitation of infants, which may include other siblings, to reduce or prevent the impact of maternal substance abuse on such children; and

"(ii) supportive services for biologic or foster parents of infants affected by maternal substance abuse;

"(C) service delivery strategies that may include—

"(i) strategies for the coordination, for purposes of identification or service delivery, of family violence and homeless shelter programs, programs under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act, and section 17 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966, crisis pregnancy centers programs, public housing programs, and prison programs, with other likely points of access for high risk women;

"(ii) strategies concerning the involvement of significant others (such as male partners of pregnant women) as direct intervention targets or strategies to aid in the outreach and service delivery processes for women;

"(iii) strategies for co-locating multiple facilities to facilitate the delivery of services; and

"(iv) innovative strategies (such as case management) to ensure the coordinated utilization of generally unrelated service systems; and

"(D) other services necessary to improve pregnancy outcomes, reduce substance abuse among women of childbearing age, and increase the stability of the family home environment.

"(c) APPLICATION.—The Administrator shall not make a grant under subsection (a) unless—

"(1) an application for the grant is submitted to the Secretary;

"(2) with respect to carrying out the purpose for which the grant is to be made, the application provides assurances of compliance satisfactory to the Secretary;

"(3) the application otherwise is in such form, is made in such manner, and contains such agreements, assurances, and information as the Administrator determines to be necessary to carry out this section; and

"(4) the application contains an assurance that the applicant will provide funds, other than Federal funds, in an amount that is not less than 10 percent of the amount of the grant under subsection (a).

"(d) CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to permit the Secretary to discriminate in the awarding of grants under subsection (a) against applicants that propose or provide residential or outpatient rehabilitation services under applicable requirements of State law, including applicants that provide services to substance abusing pregnant and post-partum women that receive treatment by order of a court or other appropriate public agency, so long as all such applications include measures that encourage substance abusing pregnant and post-partum women to seek prenatal care and rehabilitation.

"(f) There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section, $50,000,000 in fiscal year 1990, and such sums as may be necessary in fiscal year 1991.".

SEC. 04. EMERGENCY PROTECTIVE CHILD SERVICES GRANTS.

"(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act (42 U.S.C. 5101) is amended by adding after section 8 the following new section:

"SEC. 8A. EMERGENCY PROTECTIVE CHILD SERVICES GRANTS.

"(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—Subject to the availability of appropriations, the Secretary shall establish a grant program to make grants to eligible entities to enable such entities to provide services to children whose parents are substance abusers.

"(b) ELIGIBLE ENTITIES.—Entities eligible to receive a grant under this section shall be State or local agencies that are responsible for administering protective child services or child abuse intervention services. Such agencies shall include those agencies responsible for administering foster care, child welfare, child protective services, and child abuse intervention programs.

"(c) APPLICATION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—To be eligible to receive a grant under this section, an entity shall submit an application to the Secretary at such time, in such manner, and containing such information as the Secretary may by regulation require.

"(2) ASSURANCE OF USE.—An application submitted under paragraph (1) shall—

"(A) contain an assurance that the applicant operates in a geographic area where substance abuse has placed substantial strains on social service and law enforcement agencies and has resulted in substantial increases in the need for services that cannot be met without funds available under this section;

"(B) identify the responsible agency or agencies that will be involved in the use of funds provided under this section;

"(C) contain a description of the emergency situation with regard to children of substance abusers who need services of the type described in this section;

"(D) contain a plan for improving the delivery of such services to such children;

"(E) contain assurances that such services will be provided in a comprehensive multidisciplinary and coordinated manner; and

"(F) contain any additional information as the Secretary may reasonably require.

"(d) USE OF FUNDS.—Funds received by an entity under this section part shall be used to improve the delivery of services to children whose parents are substance abusers. Such services may include—

"(1) the hiring of additional personnel by the entity to reduce caseloads;

"(2) the provision of additional training for personnel to improve their ability to provide emergency child protective services related to substance abuse by the parents of such children;

"(3) the provision of expanded services to deal with family crises created by substance abuse;

"(4) the recruitment of additional foster care families;

"(5) the recruitment of additional adoptive families; and

"(6) the establishment or improvement of coordination between the agency administering the grant and—

"(A) child protection and welfare organizations;

"(B) hospitals and health care providers;

"(C) public health and mental health professionals;

"(D) judicial and law enforcement officers;

"(E) child advocates;

"(F) public educational institutions;

"(G) community-based organizations that serve substance abusing parents, including pregnant and post-partum females and their infants;

"(H) public housing officials;

"(I) providers of shelter to abused and homeless females and families and

"(J) parents and representatives of parent groups.

"(e) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to make grants under this section, $40,000,000 in fiscal year 1990, and such sums as may be necessary in each subsequent fiscal year.".

(b) CHILD ABUSE GRANTS.—

(1) FINDINGS.—Section 402(A) of the Joint Resolution entitled "A Joint Resolution making continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1985, and for other purposes", (approved October 12, 1984, Public Law 98-473, 98 Stat. 2198, 42 U.S.C. 5116d) is amended—

(A) by inserting after paragraph (3), the following new paragraph:

"(4) parental substance abuse places children at great risk of abuse and neglect;"; and

(B) by redesignating paragraphs (4), (5), (6), and (7) as paragraphs (5), (6), (7), and (8) respectively.

KENNEDY AMENDMENT NO. 934

Mr. KENNEDY proposed an amendment to the bill S. 1711, supra, as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following new title:

TITLE —TREATMENT, PREVENTION AND EDUCATION

SEC. 01. USE OF ADAMHA BLOCK GRANT FOR SUBSTANCE ABUSE TREATMENT.

(a) PAYMENTS.—Section 1914(a)(2) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300x-2(a)(2)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The Secretary may waive the provisions of this paragraph regarding the obligation of funds if—

"(A) the State requests such a waiver; and

"(B) the Secretary determines that the requirement is not practicable or would be a serious obstacle to a long term program of the State that expands treatment opportunities.".

(b) USE OF ALLOTMENTS.—Section 1915 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 300x-3)) is amended—

(1) in subsection (b)—

(A) by inserting after the comma in paragraph (1), the following: "except that funds may be used to pay for inpatient hospital drug treatment services pursuant to a contractual arrangement with a hospital if—

"(A) needed residential treatment services could not otherwise be provided; and

"(B) the rates paid for such services do not exceed 125 percent of the cost of the rates typically required for comparable residential services."; and

(B) by inserting after the fifth sentence in the matter following paragraph (B), the following new sentence: "The Secretary may waive or reduce the matching rate requirement of the preceding sentence if the State requests such a waiver and the Secretary determines that a failure to grant such a request would result in a reduction in the resources that would otherwise be used to provide direct treatment services and that are essential to implementation of the State drug abuse plan.";

(2) In subsection (c)(1)—

(A) by inserting "including social and health services necessary to improve treatment outcomes," after "drug abuse in subparagraph (A),";

(B) by striking out "and" at the end of subparagraph (B);

(C) by striking out the period and inserting in lieu thereof "; and" in subparagraph (C); and

(D) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(D) to provide counseling to family members of drug abusers, including such family members in group and family counseling service settings for the treatment of drug abusers."; and

(B) in subsection (d), by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "Expenses incurred for the training of individuals as required under this subpart shall not be included in determining the costs of administering funds made available under section 1914.".

(c) APPLICATION AND DESCRIPTION OF ACTIVITIES.—Section 1916 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 300x-4) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a), by striking out "subsection (c)" and inserting in lieu thereof "subsections (c), (d), and (h)", and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(h)(1) The chief executive officer of a State shall, as part of the application required by subsection (a), prepare and submit to the Secretary (in accordance with such form as the Secretary shall provide) a State plan that describes how a portion of the payments received by the State under section 1914 will be used for providing substance abuse treatment.

"(2) The State plan prepared under paragraph (1) shall—

"(A) provide for the designation of a single State agency to be responsible for the formulation and implementation of the Statewide drug treatment plan;

"(B) provide for the targeting of funds towards areas of the greatest need in the State, using criteria to be established by the Secretary and such additional criteria as the State may establish, to determine such areas of greatest need that shall include criteria focusing on—

"(i) the current unmet treatment needs in the State, including both the inpatient, outpatient, and long and short term drug treatment service needs of defined populations and availability of essential ancillary services;

"(ii) the incidence of deliveries of infants who are adversely affected by the maternal use of drugs;

"(iii) the incidence of drug-related criminal activities; and

"(iv) the incidence of communicable diseases transmitted by drug abuse;

"(C) establish performance criteria to be met by treatment facilities that desire to receive assistance from the State pursuant to the State plan, that shall include—

"(i) the periodic testing of patients to determine the patients compliance with treatment regimens and the establishment of clinically appropriate policies for dealing with patience who fail such tests;

"(ii) a requirement that the testing conducted under clause (i) not be required to be more frequent than is necessary to achieve treatment objectives;

"(iii) controls on the possible diversion of drugs intended for use in the treatment programs of the facility;

"(iv) the provision of outpatient aftercare for those individuals completing residential treatment, either directly or through arrangements with other individuals or entities, for patients who have ended a course of treatment provided by the facility, that shall include periodic appointments with the patient to monitor the patient's progress and provide support services or additional treatment as needed, and, for those individuals completing outpatient treatment, periodic contacts, to the extent feasible, to monitor the individual's progress and provide the individual with, or refer the individual for, additional services or treatment as needed;

"(v) the coordination and referral of patients to social, health, and employment services in order to assist patients in need of counseling, psychiatric or medical treatment, or job training services to function in society and remain drug free;

"(vi) the provision of employment, educational or social services, directly or by referral or arrangement, by facilities that serve a clientele for whom such services are essential to improve treatment outcomes;

"(vii) the retention of patients in treatment until such treatment is appropriately completed, taking into account the characteristics of patients that may make retention more or less difficult and any such other performance-based measures of quality programming as may be appropriate; and

"(viii) policies to maintain a drug-free workplace;

"(D) establish a mechanism to monitor the compliance of the facility with the criteria in subparagraph (C);

"(E) establish mechanisms to assure an adequate number of treatment options, appropriately sited;

"(F) provide for a program of training and retraining of employees of publicly funded treatment facilities to assure that such employees remain informed about the most effective diagnostic and treatment techniques;

"(G) provide for a referral method in each appropriate area of the State that shall assure that each individual requesting treatment is appropriately assessed and referred to the most appropriate treatment facility, and that a currrent list of unfilled treatment slots is available to assist in such referrals;

"(H) increase, if necessary, the availability of specialized services necessary to meet the needs of female and minority drug abusers;

"(I) provide for the establishment of a program stopgap assistance for individuals who apply for treatment but who must wait for the availability of treatment opportunities that shall include—

"(i) treatment ready education and counseling concerning drug abuse; and

"(ii) the referral to, or provision of, other necessary health and social services that may include primary health care, nonmedical education, and vocational training services; and

"(J) provide for the establishment of a program of outreach and treatment for pregnant women who use drugs and their affected newborns.

"(3) The Secretary may waive any or all of the requirements of this subsection on the written request of a State, if the State implements an alternative treatment plan that fulfills the objectives of this subsection in a manner consistent with the requirements of this subsection.

"(4)(A) The Secretary shall establish minimum standards for each area required to be covered by the State plan prepared under this subsection.

"(B) Beginning with fiscal year 1991, no grant shall be awarded to a State for the drug abuse portion of its grant under section 1912A if such State has not met the minimum standards established under subparagraph (A), except that with respect to the performance criteria for treatment facilities described in paragraph (2)(E), the State plan shall provide a reasonable time for treatment programs to meet such performance criteria requirements and shall establish a program to assist in achieving such compliance.

"(C) The Secretary shall monitor the compliance of the State with the plan and minimum standards submitted under this subsection.

"(D) If a State fails to meet such minimum standards, the Secretary shall suspend the making of payments with funds for drug abuse under the State's allotment under section 1912A, except that the Secretary may waive such suspension if the State submits a plan of correction and corrects any violations of such minimum standards within a reasonable period of time, as determined by the Secretary.

"(E)(i) Not later than 3 months after the date of enactment of this subsection, the Secretary shall publish for comment proposed standards developed under this paragraph.

"(ii) Not later than 6 months after the date of enactment of this subsection, the Secretary shall publish final standards.

"(iii) In developing standards under this paragraph, the Secretary shall consult as much as practicable with States, directors of treatment programs that receive public assistance, and drug treatment experts.

"(iv) Standards published under clause (ii) may be revised by the Secretary as the Secretary considers appropriate.

"(v) No minimum standard in an area included in the State plan shall be developed or enforced if the Secretary determines that requiring compliance with such standard would be impractical or that there is an insufficient consensus of expert knowledge or opinion to support such a minimum standard. In cases in which there is no such sufficient consensus, the Secretary shall cause the development of a sufficient consensus of such knowledge to be a high research priority.

"(F) The Secretary shall require standardized data collection from each State that shall, at a minimum, permit the monitoring of State compliance with the minimum standards.

"(G) The Secretary shall develop and promulgate standards for training and licensure of drug treatment personnel.".

SEC. 04. COMPREHENSIVE COMMUNITY SUBSTANCE ABUSE PREVENTION PROGRAMS

"(a) FINDINGS AND PURPOSE.—

"(1) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—

(A) Preventing substance abuse is the key to reducing the demand for illegal drugs and stopping the drug epidemic;

(B) substance abuse prevention activities have been seriously ignored and underfunded;

(C) successful prevention efforts require the involvement of all segments of the community including those in leadership positions and other concerned individuals and organizations on the grassroots level;

(D) many communities lack the tools, resources, and knowledge to mount an effective and comprehensive substance abuse prevention program; and

(E) the Federal Government should be a partner with local and State governments and community organizations in an effort to prevent substance abuse.

(2) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of this section to assist communities in planning, developing, and implementing long-term comprehensive substance abuse prevention strategies and programs—

(A) by developing communicative and cooperative relationships between various organizations, agencies, businesses, clergy, schools, parents, youth, and interested citizens regarding substance abuse prevention activities; and

(B) by assisting communities in training individuals in methods of planning, developing, and implementing substance abuse prevention and intervention programs and activities.

(b) COMMUNITY PARTNERSHIPS.—Part A of title V of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 290aa et seq.) as is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"SEC. 509H. COMMUNITY COALITIONS ON SUBSTANCE ABUSE.

"(a) DEFINITION.—As used in this section, the term 'eligible coalition' means an association, consisting of at least seven organizations, agencies, and individuals that are concerned about preventing substance abuse, that shall include—

"(1) public and private organizations and agencies that represent law enforcement, schools, health and social service agencies, community-based organizations, and substance abuse prevention specialists; and

"(2) at least three representatives of the clergy, academia, business, parents, youth, the media, civic and fraternal groups, or other nongovernmental interested parties.

"(b) GRANT PROGRAM.—The Secretary, acting through the Director of the Office, shall make grants to eligible coalitions in order to—

"(1) plan a comprehensive long-term program for substance abuse prevention;

"(2) implement such substance abuse prevention program, including the development of materials, public awareness campaigns, and community events;

"(3) develop a detailed assessment of existing substance abuse prevention programs and activities to determine community resources and to identify major gaps and barriers in such programs and activities;

"(4) identify and solicit funding sources to enable such programs and activities to become self-sustaining;

"(5) develop and implement a consensus regarding the priorities of a community concerning substance abuse;

"(6) provide outreach prevention services to target populations; and

"(7) coordinate substance abuse services and activities, including establishing referral linkages, between prevention activities in the schools and communities and substance abuse treatment programs.

"(c) COMMUNITY PARTICIPATION.—In developing and implementing a substance abuse prevention program, a coalition receiving funds under paragraph (1) shall—

"(1) emphasize and encourage substantial voluntary participation in the community, especially among individuals involved with youth such as teachers, coaches, parents, and clergy; and

"(2) emphasize and encourage the involvement of businesses, civic groups, and other community organizations and members.

"(d) APPLICATION.—An eligible coalition shall submit an application to the Secretary in order to receive a grant under this section. Such application shall—

"(1) describe and, to the extent possible, document the nature and extent of the substance abuse problem including any identifiable target groups;

"(2) describe the activities and services needing financial assistance;

"(3) describe the substance abuse prevention plan;

"(4) identify participating agencies, organizations, and individuals;

"(5) identify the agency, organization, or individual that has responsibility for leading the coalition, and provide assurances that such agency, organization or individual has previous substance abuse prevention experience;

"(6) describe a mechanism to evaluate the success of the coalition in developing and carrying out the substance abuse prevention plan referred to in subsection (b)(5); and

"(7) contain such additional information and assurances as the Secretary may prescribe.

"(e) PRIORITY.—In awarding grants under this section, the Secretary shall give priority to a community that—

"(1) provides evidence of significant substance abuse;

"(2) proposes a comprehensive and multifaceted approach to preventing substance abuse;

Mr. GRAHAM (for himself, Mr. WILSON, and Mr. DECONCINI) proposed an amendment to the bill S. 1711, supra, as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill, insert the following:

SEC. . INSURANCE OF DRUG WAR BONDS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subchapter I of Chapter 31 of title 31, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"S. 3114. Drug war bonds

"(a) The Secretary of the Treasury shall—

"(1) issue drug war bonds of the United States Government, provided, however, the amount of the issue in any fiscal year shall not exceed that amount appropriated in that fiscal year for the purpose contained in subsection (e)(4) of this section, and

"(2) buy, redeem, and make refunds of such bonds under section 3111 of this title.

"(b)(1) Drug war bonds may be issued under this section on an interest-bearing basis, on a discount basis, or on an interest-bearing and discount basis.

"(2) The Secretary of the Treasury may—

"(A) fix the investment yield for drug war bonds issued under this section, and

"(B) change the investment yield on any outstanding drug war bond, except that the yield on a bond for the period held may not be decreased below the minimum yield for the period guaranteed on the date on which the bond is issued.

"(3) Drug war bonds issued under this section shall mature not more than 20 years after the date of issue.

"(4)(A) Except as otherwise provided in this paragraph, the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe the denominations in which drug war bonds are issued under this section.

"(B)(i) In prescribing under subparagraph (A) the denominations in which drug war bonds are issued under this section, the Secretary of the Treasury shall ensure that a small denomination, of not greater than a $25 maturity value, be available for issuance in order to enable children and small investors to purchase drug war bonds.

"(ii) In order to compensate for the additional administrative costs of issuing drug war bonds under this section in a small denomination that does not exceed a $25 maturity value, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to fix an investment yield for such small-denomination drug war bonds that is lower than the investment yield on other denominations of drug war bonds.

"(5) The Secretary of the Treasury shall issue stamps, or may provide other means, that evidence payment toward the purchase of a drug war bond issued under this section in order to encourage and facilitate the accumulation of funds for the purchase of drug war bonds.

"(c) Except as otherwise provided in section, the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, with respect to drug war bonds under this section—

"(1) the form and amount of an issue,

"(2) the way in which the bonds will be issued,

"(3) the conditions (including restrictions on transfer) to which the bonds will be subject.

"(4) conditions governing redemption of the bonds,

"(5) the sales price of the bonds, and

"(6) a way to evidence payments for, or on account of, the bonds.

"(d) The Secretary of the Treasury may authorize any financial institution which meets the requirements of section 3105(d) to make payments to redeem drug war bonds issued under this section.

"(e)(1) There is hereby established within the Treasury of the United States a trust fund to be known as the Anti-Drug Abuse Trust Fund (hereinafter in this subsection referred to as the 'Trust Fund'), consisting of such amounts as may be transferred to the Trust Fund under paragraph (2).

"(2)(A) The Secretary of the Treasury shall transfer to the Trust Fund out of the general fund of the Treasury of the United States amounts determined by the Secretary of the Treasury to be equivalent to the amounts received into such general fund that are attributable to the proceeds from drug war bonds issued under this section.

"(B) The amounts which are required to be transferred under subparagraph (A) shall be transferred at least monthly from the general fund of the Treasury of the United States to the Trust Fund on the basis of estimates made by the Secretary of the Treasury of the amounts referred to in subparagraph (A) that are received into the Treasury. Proper adjustments shall be made in the amounts subsequently transferred to the extent prior estimates were in excess of, or less than, the amounts required to be transferred.

"(3) The Secretary of the Treasury shall be the trustee of the Trust Fund and shall submit an annual report to the Congress on—

"(A) the financial condition and the results of the operations of the Trust Fund during the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year in which such report is submitted, and

"(B) the expected condition and operations of the Trust Fund during the fiscal year in which such report is submitted and during each of the 5 fiscal years succeeding such fiscal year.

The report shall be printed as a House document of the session of the Congress to which the report is made.

"(4) Funds in the Trust Fund shall only be available, as provided in appropriation Acts, for expenditures that are authorized—

(A) by the provisions of,

(B) by amendments made to, or

(C) by amendments made by, the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988.

"(f) The Secretary of the Treasury shall provide notice to the public through appropriate media that the purchase of drug war bonds will assist in implementing anti-drug abuse provisions of law.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) The table of sections for subchapter I of chapter 31 of title 31, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"3114. Issuance of drug war bonds.".

(2) Section 3108 of title 31, United States Code, is amended by striking out "and 3105-3107" and inserting in lieu thereof ", 3105-3107 and 3114".

On page 171, between lines 6 and 7, insert the following:

SEC. 322. EDUCATIONAL ASSISTANCE FOR FLIGHT TRAINING.

(a) THE MONTGOMERY GI BILL ACTIVE DUTY PROGRAM.—(1) Section 1434 is amended—

(A) by redesignating subsection (d) as subsection (e); and

(B) by inserting after subsection (c) the following new subsection:

"(d)(1) The Secretary may approve the pursuit of flight training (in addition to a course of flight training that may be approved under section 1673(b) of this title) by an individual entitled to basic educational assistance under this chapter if—

"(A) such training is generally accepted as necessary for the attainment of a recognized vocational objective in the field of aviation;

"(B) the individual possesses a valid private pilot's license and meets the medical requirements necessary for a commercial pilot's license; and

"(C) the flight school courses meet Federal Aviation Administration standards for such courses and are approved by the Federal Aviation Administration and the State approving agency.

"(2) This subjection shall not apply to a course of flight training that commences on or after October 1, 1994.".

(2) Section 1432 is amended by inserting after subsection (c) the following new subsection:

"(d)(1) Notwithstanding subsection (a) of this section, each individual who is pursuing a program of education consisting exclusively of flight training approved as meeting the requirements of section 1434(d) of this title shall be paid an educational assistance allowance under this chapter in the amount equal to 60 percent of the established charges for tuition and fees (other than tuition and fees charged for or attributable to solo flying hours required for instrument and commercial ratings) which similarly circumstanced non-veterans enrolled in the same flight course are required to pay.

"(2) No educational assistance allowance may be paid under this chapter to an individual for any month during which such individual is pursuing a program of education consisting exclusively of flight training until the Secretary has received from that individual and the institution providing such training a certification of the flight training received by the individual during that month and the tuition and other fees charged for that training.

"(3) The number of months of entitlement charged in the case of any individual for a program of education described in paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be equal to the number (including any fraction) determined by dividing the total amount of educational assistance paid such individual for such program by the monthly rate of educational assistance which, except for paragraph (1) of this subsection, such individual would otherwise be paid under subsection (a)(1), (b)(1), or (c) of section 1415 of this title, as the case may be.".

(b) THE MONTGOMERY GI BILL SELECTED RESERVE PROGRAM.—(1) Section 2136 of title 10, United States Code, is amended by adding the following new subsection:

"(c)(1) The Secretary of Veterans Affairs may approve the pursuit of flight training (in addition to a course of flight training that may be approved under section 1673(b) of title 38) by an individual entitled to educational assistance under this chapter if—

"(A) such training is generally accepted as necessary for the attainment of a recognized vocational objective in the field of aviation;

"(B) the individual possesses a valid private pilot's license and meets the medical requirements necessary for a commercial pilot's license; and

"(C) the flight schoo! courses meet Federal Aviation Administration standards for such courses and are approved by the Federal Aviation Administration and the State approving agency.

"(2) This subsection shall not apply to a course of flight training that commences on or after October 1, 1994.".

(2) Section 2131 of such title is amended—

(A) in subsection (b), by striking out "Each" and inserting in lieu thereof "Except as provided in subsection (d), each"; and

(B) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(d)(1) Each individual who is pursuing a program of education consisting exclusively of flight training approved as meeting the requirements of section 2136(c) of this title shall be paid an educational assistance allowance under this chapter in the amount equal to 60 percent of the established charges for tuition and fees (other than tuition and fees charged for or attributable to solo flying hours required for instrument and commercial ratings) which similarly circumstanced non-veterans enrolled in the same flight course are required to pay.

"(2) No educational assistance allowance may be paid under this chapter to an individual for any month during which such individual is pursuing a program of education consisting exclusively of flight training until the Secretary has received from that individual and the institution providing such training a certification of the flight training received by the individual during that month and the tuition and other fees charged for that training.

"(3) The period of entitlement of an individual pursuing a program of education described in paragraph (1) shall be charged with one month for each $140 which is paid to that individual as an educational assistance allowance for such program.".

(c) EVALUATION OF PROVIDING ASSISTANCE FOR FLIGHT TRAINING.—(1)(A) The Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall conduct an evaluation of paying educational assistance for flight training under chapter 30 of title 38, United States Code, and chapter 106 of title 10, United States Code.

(B) The evaluation required by subparagraph (A) shall be designed to determine the effectiveness of the provision of educational assistance referred to in such subparagraph in preparing the recipients of such assistance for recognized vocational objectives in the field of aviation.

(2) Not later than January 31, 1994, the Secretary shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report on the evaluation required by paragraph (1). Such report shall include:

(A) Information, separately as to payments made under chapter 30 of title 38, United States Code, and payments under chapter 106 of title 10, United States Code, regarding—

(i) the number of recipients paid educational assistance allowances for flight training;

(ii) the amount of such assistance;

(iii) the amount paid by the recipients for such training;

(iv) the vocational objective of the participants; and

(v) the extent to which the training (I) assists the participants in achieving employment in the field of aviation, or (II) was used only or primarily for recreational or avocational purposes.

(B) Any recommendations for legislation that the Secretary considers appropriate to include in the report.

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsections (a) and (b) shall take effect on September 30, 1990.

On page 182, line 20, insert "and" after the semicolon.

On page 182, strike out the semicolon on line 22 and all that follows through page 183, line 14, and insert in lieu thereof a period.

On page 189, line 12, strike out all after "duty" and insert in lieu thereof "before the period at the end."

On page 189, between lines 12 and 13, insert the following:

SEC. 410. EXTENSION OF AUTHORITY FOR RECIPROCITY IN APPROVAL OF HOUSING SUBDIVISIONS AMONG FEDERAL AGENCIES.

Section 535 of the Housing Act of 1949 (42 U.S.C. 1490o) is amended—

(1) in subsection (b), by striking out "the expiration of the 1-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of the Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Assistance Amendments Act of 1988" and inserting in lieu thereof "180 days after the date on which the report required by subsection (c) is received by Congress"; and

(2) in subsection (c), by striking out "Before the expiration of the period referred to in subsection (b)," and inserting in lieu thereof "Not later than November 6, 1989".

(c) AUTHORITY TO ADMINISTER OATHS.—Section 4054 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(d) Judges of the Court shall have the authority to administer oaths.".

(d) AUTHORITY TO COMPEL ACTIONS UNREASONABLY DELAYED.—Section 4061(a)(2) is amended by inserting "or unreasonably delayed" after "withheld".

SEC. 706. EXPANSION OF SELECTION COMMISSIONS.

Section 3 of the Department of Veterans Affairs Act (Public Law 100-527; 102 Stat. 2635) is amended—

(1) in subsection (b)(2)(B)—

(A) by striking out "Two" in clause (ii) and inserting in lieu thereof "Four"; and

(B) by adding at the end the following new clause:

"(vii) One person, selected by the Secretary in the Secretary's discretion, from among persons in categories described in clauses (i), (ii), (iii), and (vi)."; and

(2) in subsection (c)(2)(B)—

(A) by striking out "Two" in clause (ii) and inserting in lieu thereof "Four"; and

(B) by adding at the end the following new clause:

"(vii) One person, selected by the Secretary at the Secretary's discretion, from among persons in categories described in clauses (i), (ii), (iii), and (vi).".

On page 37, immediately below the item relating to section 224 insert the following:

Sec. 225. Recovery of the cost of Department of Veterans Affairs health care and services from third parties.

Sec. 226. Dwight D. Eisenhower Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center, Leavenworth, Kansas.

On page 38, immediately below the item relating to section 321 insert the following:

Sec. 322. Educational assistance for flight training.

On page 38, immediately below the item relating to section 409, insert the following:

Sec. 410. Extension of authority for reciprocity in approval of housing subdivisions among Federal agencies.

Sec. 706. Expansion of selection commissions.

DASCHLE (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 948

Mr. BIDEN (for Mr. DASCHLE, for himself, Mr. KERRY, and Mr. CRANSTON) proposed an amendment to the bill S. 13, supra, as follows:

At the end of the bill, insert the following:

TITLE VIII—VETERAN'S AGENT ORANGE EXPOSURE AND VIETNAM SERVICE BENEFITS

SEC. 801. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Veteran's Agent Orange Exposure and Vietnam Service Benefits Act of 1989".

SEC. 802. INTERIM PERIOD FOR AWARD OF BENEFITS FOR VIETNAM VETERANS WITH NON-HODGKIN'S LYMPHOMA AND CERTAIN SARCOMAS.

(a) PRESUMPTIVE DISABILITY AND DEATH BENEFITS.—(1) In the case of a veteran—

(A) who served in the active military, naval, or air service in Vietnam during the Vietnam era, and

(B) who has—

(i) non-Hodgkin's lymphoma, or the Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall, except as provided in subsection (b), pay a monthly disability benefit to the veteran in accordance with this section for any disability resulting from that disease.

(ii) a soft-tissue sarcoma.

(2) If a veteran referred to in paragraph (1) dies from a disease referred to in clause (B) of such paragraph, the Secretary shall pay a monthly death benefit to the survivors of the veteran in accordance with this section.

(b) EXCEPTIONS.—Benefits may not be paid in the case of a veteran under this section with respect to a disease referred to in subsection (a)(1)(B) if—

(1) there is affirmative evidence that such disease was not incurred by that veteran during active military, naval, or air service in Vietnam during the Vietnam era; or

(2) there is affirmative evidence to establish that, between the date of that veteran's most recent departure from Vietnam during such service and the onset of such disease, the veteran suffered an intercurrent injury or disease recognized as a cause of such disease referred to in subsection (a)(1)(B).

(c) DISABILITY BENEFIT.—A disability benefit payable to a veteran under this section for a disability resulting from a disease referred to in subsection (a)(1)(B) shall be paid at the rate at which compensation would be payable under chapter 11 of title 38, United States Code, to that veteran for such disability if the disability were determined to be service-connected.

(d) DEATH BENEFIT.—A death benefit is payable under this section to the survivors of a deceased veteran who, if the cause of the veteran's death had been a service-connected or compensable disability, would be entitled to dependency and indemnity compensation under chapter 13 of that title.

(2) The amount of the death benefit payable to a survivor of a deceased veteran under this section shall be the rate that would be applicable to such survivor under such chapter 13 if the veteran's death had been the result of a service-connected or compensable disability.

(e) NONDUPLICATION OF BENEFITS.—A benefit may not be paid under this section with respect to a disability or death of a veteran resulting from a disease referred to in subsection (a)(1)(B) for any month for which compensation is payable to that veteran for that disability under chapter 11 of title 38, United States Code, or for which dependency and indemnity compensation is payable for that death under chapter 13 of such title.

(f) TREATMENT OF DISABILITY OR DEATH AS SERVICE-CONNECTED EXCEPT FOR COMPENSATION PURPOSES.—A disability or death from a disease referred to in subsection (a)(1)(B) not otherwise considered service-connected for purposes of laws administered by the Department of Veterans Affairs shall be treated for purposes of all laws of the United States (other than the provisions of chapter 11 (other than sections 357, 358, and 361) of title 38, United States Code, and chapter 13 of such title) as if such disability or death were service-connected. The receipt of a disability benefit under this section shall be treated for purposes of all laws of the United States as if such benefit were disability compensation under chapter 11 of such title. The receipt of a death benefit under this section shall be treated for purposes of all laws of the United States as if such benefit were dependency and indemnity compensation under chapter 13 of such title.

(g) AWARD OF BENEFITS.—Section 3010(g) of title 38, United States Code, shall apply to the award of benefits under this section.

(h) EXPIRATION OF INTERIM BENEFITS.—(1) No benefit may be paid or service provided by virtue of this section for any period beginning after April 15, 1992.

(2) If a joint resolution described in paragraph (3) (relating to the extension of authority to pay benefits under this section or the making of such authority permanent) is introduced in either House of Congress after January 1, 1992, congressional action on such joint resolution shall, subject to paragraph (8), be subject to the rules set out in this subsection.

(3) For purposes of paragraph (2), the term "joint resolution" means only a joint resolution—

(A) which does not have a preamble;

(B) the matter after the resolving clause of which is—

(i) as follows: "That section 802(h)(1) of the Veterans' Agent Orange Exposure and Vietnam Service Benefits Act of 1989 is amended by striking out 'April 15, 1992' and inserting in lieu thereof ' '.", the blank space being filled with a date; or

(ii) as follows: "That paragraph (1) of section 802(h) of the Veterans' Agent Orange Exposure and Vietnam Service Benefits Act of 1989 is repealed"; and

(C) the title of which is—

(i) as follows: "A joint resolution extending the authority to pay certain benefits relating to military service in Vietnam"; or

(ii) as follows: "A joint resolution making permanent the authority to pay certain benefits relating to military service in Vietnam".

(4) A resolution described in paragraph (3) introduced in the House of Representatives shall be referred to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs of the House of Representatives. A resolution described in paragraph (3) introduced in the Senate shall be referred to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate.

(5) If the committee to which a resolution described in paragraph (3) is referred has not reported such resolution (or identical resolution) within the 60-day period beginning on the date on which such resolution is introduced, such committee shall be discharged from further consideration of such resolution as of the day after the last day of such period, and such resolution shall be placed on the appropriate calendar of the House involved.

(6)(A) On or after the third day after the date on which the committee to which such a resolution is referred has reported, or has been discharged (under paragraph (5)) from further consideration of, such a resolution, it is in order (even though a previous motion to the same effect has been disagreed to) for any Member of the respective House to move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution (but only on the day after the calendar day on which Member announces to the House concerned the Member's intention to do so). All points of order against the resolution (and against consideration of the resolution) are waived. The motion is highly privileged in the House of Representatives and is privileged in the Senate and is not debatable. The motion is not subject to amendment, or to a motion to postpone, or to a motion to proceed to the consideration of other business. A motion to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to shall not be in order. If a motion to proceed to the consideration of the resolution is agreed to, the respective House shall immediately proceed to consideration of the joint resolution without intervening motion, order, or other business, and the resolution shall remain the unfinished business of the respective House until disposed of.

(B) Debate on the resolution and on all debatable motions and appeals in connection therewith shall be limited to not more than 10 hours, which shall be divided equally between those favoring and those opposing the resolution. An amendment to the resolution is not in order. A motion further to limit debate is in order and not debatable. A motion to postpone, or a motion to proceed to the consideration of other business, or a motion to recommit the resolution is not in order. A motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution is agreed to or disagreed to is not in order.

(C) Immediately following the conclusion of the debate on a resolution described in paragraph (3) and a single quorum call at the conclusion of the debate if requested in accordance with the rules of the appropriate House, the vote on final passage of the resolution shall occur.

(D) Appeals from the decisions of the Chair relating to the application of the rules of the Senate or the House of Representatives, as the case may be, to the procedure relating to a resolution described in paragraph (3) shall be decided without debate.

(7)(A) If, before the passage by one House of a resolution of that House described in paragraph (3), that House receives from the other House a resolution described in paragraph (3), then the procedures specified in this paragraph shall apply.

(B) The resolution of the other House shall not be referred to a committee and may not be considered in the House receiving it except in the case of final passage as provided in subparagraph (C)(ii).

(C) With respect to a resolution described in paragraph (3) of the House receiving the resolution—

(i) the procedure in that House shall be the same as if no resolution had been received from the other House; but

(ii) the vote on final passage shall be on the resolution of the other House.

(D) Upon disposition of the resolution received from the other House, it shall no longer be in order to consider the resolution that originated in the receiving House.

(8) This subsection is enacted by Congress—

(A) as an exercise of the rulemaking power of the Senate and the House of Representatives, respectively, and as such it is deemed a part of the rules of each House, respectively, but applicable only with respect to the procedure to be followed in that House in the case of a resolution described in paragraph (3), and it supersedes other rules only to the extent that it is inconsistent with such rules; and

(B) with full recognition of the constitutional right of either House to change the rules (so far as relating to the procedure of that House) at any time, in the same manner, and to the same extent as in the case of any other rule of that House.

(i) NOTIFICATION OF THE PROVISIONS OF THIS SECTION.—(1) The Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall take all reasonable actions—

(A) to publicize the provisions of this section, not later than 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act; and

(B) to provide actual notice of the provisions of this section, not later than 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act—

(i) to each person described in subsection (a) who, before the date specified in subsection (k), has filed any claim for benefits under programs administered by the Department of Veterans Affairs on the basis of a disease referred to in subsection (a)(1)(B); and

(ii) in the case of a veteran who dies after filing such a claim but before the provisions of this section are publicized, to the surviving spouse, children, and parents of such veteran, if any.

(2) The Secretary shall enclose with at least three distributions of benefits payment checks to each veteran or other person receiving benefits under this section a notice that the authority to pay benefits under this section is temporary. Each notice shall contain the date of the expiration of such authority. The first notice shall be enclosed with the first payment of such benefits to a veteran. The last notice shall be enclosed with the last payment of such benefits. At least one notice shall be enclosed with a payment distributed in approximately the middle of the estimated period during which the authority is to be in effect.

(j) DEFINITIONS.—For the purposes of this section—

(1) the term "veteran" has the meaning given such term in sections 101(2) and 401 of title 38, United States Code; and

(2) the terms "child" and "parents" have the meanings given such terms in paragraphs (4) and (5), respectively, of section 101 of such title.

(k) EFFECTIVE DATE.—This section, other than subsection (i), shall take effect on October 1, 1989. Benefits shall be paid in accordance with this section for periods beginning on or after such date, but no benefit may be paid for any period before such date by reason of the enactment of this section.

SEC. 803. PRESUMPTION OF SERVICE CONNECTION FOR CHLORACNE.

Section 312 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(d) For the purposes of section 310 of this title, and subject to the provisions of section 313 of this title, in the case of a veteran who, during active military, naval, or air service, served in Vietnam during the Vietnam era, the disease of chloracne shall be considered to have been incurred in or aggravated by such service in Vietnam, notwithstanding there is no record of evidence of such disease during the period of such service in Vietnam, if such disease or another acneform disease consistent with chloracne became manifest to a 10 percent degree of disability or more within one year after the last date on which that veteran performed such service in Vietnam.".

SEC. 804. PRESUMPTION OF SERVICE CONNECTION FOR DISEASES ASSOCIATED WITH EFFECTS OF EXPOSURE TO CERTAIN HERBICIDE AGENTS.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) It is in the public interest to provide for an independent nonprofit scientific organization which has appropriate expertise and is not connected to the Department of Veterans Affairs to review and evaluate the available scientific evidence regarding associations between diseases and exposure to dioxin and other chemical compounds in herbicides and to make judgments on the degree and probability of such associations, because there is no uniform body of scientific literature on such issues.

(2) The standard of proof required for a scientific conclusion of causation is higher than the standard of proof required for justification of a presumption, for purposes of veterans disability compensation laws, that an adverse health effect is connected, based on sound medical and scientific evidence, to active service in the Armed Forces of the United States.

(b) IN GENERAL.—(1) Subchapter II of chapter 11 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by inserting after section 312 the following new section.

"§312A. Presumption of service connection for diseases associated with effects of exposure to certain herbicide agents

"(a) IN GENERAL.—(1) For the purposes of section 310 of this title, and subject to section 313 of this title, in the case of a Vietnam veteran who, during Vietnam service, was exposed to an herbicide agent containing dioxin or 2,4-dichlorophenoxyacetic acid or to any other herbicide agent, each disease (if any) listed in regulations prescribed by the Secretary in accordance with this section and identified in such regulations as having positive association with the biological effects of exposure to such herbicide agent shall be considered to have been incurred in or aggravated by such service, notwithstanding that there is no record of evidence of such disease during the period of such service.

"(2) For the purposes of this subsection, a veteran who performed Vietnam service and has a disease referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be presumed to have been exposed during such service to an herbicide agent containing dioxin or 2,4-dichlorophenoxyacetic acid, and may be presumed to have been exposed during such service to any other chemical compound in an herbicide agent, unless there is affirmative evidence to establish conclusively that the veteran was not exposed to any such agent during such service.

"(3) The Secretary may extend the applicability of paragraph (1) of this subsection to the case of any veteran who, during the performance of active military, naval, or air service outside Vietnam, was exposed to an agent of the same type as the herbicide agent referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"(b) DISEASES TO BE PRESCRIBED IN REGULATIONS.—(1) Whenever the Secretary determines pursuant to this section that there is positive association between any disease and the biological effects of exposure to an herbicide agent in Vietnam, the Secretary shall prescribe regulations listing each disease having such positive association. In the case of each disease listed in the regulations, the Secretary shall identify the herbicide agent that causes the biological effects with which the disease has positive association. After the Secretary prescribes regulations pursuant to this paragraph, the Secretary shall periodically revise such regulations, as appropriate, to reflect determinations periodically made pursuant to paragraph (2) of this subsection.

"(2) The Secretary shall periodically (not less often than biennially)—

"(A) determine whether any disease not listed in regulations under this section has positive association with such effects; and

"(B) determined whether any disease listed in such regulations does not have positive association with such effects.

"(3) The Secretary shall make determinations for the purpose of this subsection on the basis of reports received by the Secretary from a contract scientific organization pursuant to this section and all other relevant scientific evidence, information, or analyses available to the Secretary at the time of the determinations.

"(c) UTILIZATION OF CONTRACT SCIENTIFIC ORGANIZATION.—In prescribing and revising regulations for the purposes of subsection (b), the Secretary shall obtain, by contract, the determinations and estimates of a contract scientific organization as provided in this section.

"(d) REQUIRED ACTIVITIES OF CONTRACT SCIENTIFIC ORGANIZATIONS.—(1) Each contract entered into under subsection (c) of this section shall provide for a contract scientific organization—

"(A) to determine, in the case of each herbicide agent—

"(i) which disease (if any) have positive association with the biological effects of exposure to such agent, including specifically effects involving porphyrin synthesis, nervous system function, immune function, reproduction, and birth defects, and psychological and psychiatric effects;

"(ii) which diseases (if any) have limited positive association with such biological effects;

"(iii) which diseases (if any) have insubstantial association with such biological effects; and

"(iv) to the extent practicable, the biological basis for the positive, limited positive, and insubstantial associations of diseases referred to in subclauses (i), (ii), and (iii) of this clause with such biological effects; and

"(B) to estimate the extent of the association between each such disease and such biological effects using methods as quantitative and as objective as the relevant available data permit.

"(2) The contract scientific organization shall specifically determine whether there is positive, limited positive, or insubstantial association between the biological effects referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection and the following diseases;

"(A) Non-Hodgkins lymphoma.

"(B) Each soft-tissue sarcoma.

"(C) Lung cancer.

"(D) Each other cancer.

"(e) REQUIRED PROVISIONS FOR FIRST CONTRACT.—(1) The first contract entered into under subsection (c) of this section shall provide for the contract scientific organization—

"(A) to conduct as comprehensive a survey and evaluation as is practicable of the completed and ongoing scientific studies of, and other scentific evidence or information regarding, the effects that herbicide agents have on humans or other animals that have been exposed to such agents, including an evaulation of the CDC Selected Cancers Study report; and

"(B) make its determinations and estimates on the basis of the results of such survey and evaluation.

"(2) The contract scientific organization shall conduct the survey and evaluation referred to in paragraph (1)(A) of this subsection through a panel composed of recognized experts in toxicology, medicine, epidemiology, statistics, biochemistry, and related fields. The conduct of such survey shall be subject to appropriate peer review.

"(f) REQUIRED CONTRACT PROVISIONS RELATING TO PERIODIC DETERMINATIONS OF THE SECRETARY.—A contract entered into under subsection (c) of this section in connection with the Secretary's periodic determinations under subsection (b)(2) of this section shall require a contract scientific organization—

"(1) to conduct as comprehensive a survey and evaluation as is practicable of the scientific studies, evidence, and information referred to in subsection (e)(1)(A) of this section that have become available since the last such survey and evaluation under this section; and

"(2) make its determinations and estimates on the basis of the results of such survey and evaluation and all other surveys and evaluations conducted for the purposes of this section.

"(g) REPORTS OF CONTRACT SCIENTIFIC ORGANIZATIONS.—(1) Each contract scientific organization making determinations and estimates under this section shall transmit to the Secretary and the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives a written report regarding its determinations and estimates.

"(2) Each report shall contain—

"(A) the name of each disease (if any) determined to have positive association with the biological effects of exposure to an herbicide agent in Vietnam and the identity of such agent;

"(B) the name of each disease (if any) determined to have limited positive association with the biological effects of exposure to an herbicide agent in Vietnam and the identity of such agent;

"(C) the name of each disease (if any) determined to have insubstantial association with the biological effects of exposure to an herbicide agent in Vietnam and the identity of such agent; and

"(D) with respect to each disease named pursuant to clasues (A), (B), and (C) of this paragraph—

"(i) a discussion of the biological basis for the association;

"(ii) the contract scientific organization's estimate of the statistical significance of the association;

"(iii) the contract scientific organization's estimate of the relative risk for such disease in veterans who, during Vietnam service, were exposed to an herbicide agent; and

"(iv) the probability that the estimates referred to in subclauses (ii) and (iii) are correct.

"(3) Estimates and probabilities are not required under clauses (ii), (iii), and (iv) of paragraph (2)(D) of this subsection when the available data do not permit meaningful estimates and probabilities.

"(4)(A) If a contract scientific organization determines that a disease has positive association with the biological effects of exposure to an herbicide agent used in Vietnam, such organization shall determine whether there is a reasonable basis for concluding that a Vietnam veteran with the highest level of exposure to that herbicide agent in Vietnam was exposed to such agent under the circumstances necessary for such biological effects.

"(B) If a contract scientific organization determines that there is no such reasonable basis, the organization shall state that determination in a report under this subsection and include in such report—

"(i) a description of the evidence that supports such determination;

"(ii) a description of the evidence (if any) that supports alternative conclusions; and

"(iii) a full discussion of the organization's reasons for such determination, including a discussion of the reasons for the organization's determination that the evidence referred to in clause (i) of this subparagraph outweighs the evidence (if any) referred to in clause (ii) of this subparagraph.

"(C) A determination with respect to reasonable basis is not required under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph when the available data do not permit a meaningful determination.

"(5) The first report under this subsection shall be transmitted to the Secretary and the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives on or before the later of (A) the date 60 days after the date on which the contract scientific organization obtains a copy of the CDC Selected Cancers Study report, or (B) the date one year after the date of the enactment of the Veterans' Agent Orange Exposure and Vietnam Service Benefits Act of 1989.

"(h) ACTIONS OF THE SECRETARY AFTER RECEIVING THE FIRST REPORT.—(1) Not later than 60 days after the date on which the Secretary receives the first report under subsection (g) of this section, the Secretary shall—

"(A) for the purpose of subsection (b)(1) of this section—

"(i) determines in accordance with subsection (b)(3) of this section whether there is positive association between any disease and the biological effects of exposure to an herbicide agent in Vietnam; and

"(ii) if so, issue proposed regulations listing each such disease and specifying such agent;

"(B) transmit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report containing the scientific basis for including each disease listed in such proposed regulations, and

"(C) if any disease listed in the first report under subsection (g) of this subsection as having positive association is not listed in such proposed regulations—

"(i) include in the report to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs the scientific basis for not including that disease in the proposed regulations; and

"(ii) publish in the Federal Register a notice that such disease is not listed in the proposed regulations despite the report under subsection (g) and include in such notice a discussion of such scientific basis.

"(2) Not later than 60 days after the date on which the Secretary issues any proposed regulations pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection, the Secretary shall issue final regulations under subsection (b). Such regulations shall be effective on the date of issuance.

"(i) ACTIONS OF THE SECRETARY AFTER RECEIVING A PERIODIC REPORT.—(1) Upon receiving a contract scientific organization's report after a periodic survey and evaluation conducted for the purpose of subsection (b)(2) of this section, the Secretary shall—

"(A) determine in accordance with subsection (b)(3) of this section whether—

"(i) any disease named in such report not listed in regulations under subsection (b) of this section has positive association with the biological effects of exposure to an herbicide agent in Vietnam; and

"(ii) any disease listed in such regulations does not have positive association with such effects; and

"(B) promptly transmit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report containing the Secretary's determinations under clause (A) of this paragraph and the scientific bases for such determinations.

"(2)(A) Not later than 60 days after transmitting a report to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs under paragraph (1)(B) of this subsection, the Secretary shall prescribe or revise regulations, as the case may be, pursuant to subsection (b) of this section as may be necessary to reflect the Secretary's determinations included in that report. The regulations or revisions of regulations, as the case may be, shall take effect 30 days after the date on which the Secretary issues the proposed regulations or revisions, as the case may be.

"(B) If any disease listed in a periodic report under subsection (g) of this section as having positive association is not listed in such regulations or revisions of regulations, as the case may be, the Secretary shall, not later than 60 days after transmitting a report under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph, publish in the Federal Register a notice that such disease is not listed in the proposed regulations despite such report and include in such notice a discussion of the scientific basis for not including that disease in such regulations or revisions.

"(j) EFFECT OF REMOVAL OF DISEASE FROM REGULATIONS.—Whenever a disease is removed from regulations pursuant to paragraph (2) of subsection (i) of this section as a result of a determination under paragraph (1)(A)(ii) of such subsection—

"(1) any veteran who was awarded compensation for such disease on the basis of the presumption provided in subsection (a) of this section before the effective date of the removal shall continue to be entitled to receive compensation on such basis; and

"(2) any survivor of a veteran who was awarded dependency and indemnity compensation for the death of a veteran resulting from such disease on the basis of such presumption shall continue to be entitled to receive dependency and indemnity compensation on such basis.

"(k) LIMITATION ON CONTRACT AUTHORITY.—The contract authority provided in this section shall be effective for a fiscal year to such extent or in such amount as is provided for in an appropriation Act.

"(l) TERMINATION OF EFFECTIVENESS OF THIS SECTION.—(1) Subsections (b) through (i) and (k) of this section shall cease to be effective 10 years after the first day of the fiscal year in which a contract scientific organization transmits to the Secretary the first report under subsection (g) of this section.

"(2) Paragraph (1) shall not affect the continued effectiveness of—

"(A) subsection (a) of this section and the regulations referred to in such subsection; and

"(B) subsection (j) of this section.

"(m) DEFINITIONS.—For the purposes of this section—

"(1) the term 'Vietnam veteran' means a veteran who performed Vietnam service;

"(2) the term 'Vietnam service' means active military, naval, or air service in Vietnam during the Vietnam era;

"(3) the term 'herbicide agent' means an agent in an herbicide used in support of United States and allied military operations in Vietnam during the Vietnam era;

"(4) the term 'biological effect', with respect to exposure to an herbicide agent, means—

"(A) each known biological effect of such exposure on humans, including those biological effects resulting from relevant host and environmental factors; and

"(B) each biological effect of such exposure on humans that it is reasonable to infer on the basis of the known biological effects of such exposure on appropriate animal models;

"(5) the term 'positive', with respect to association between a disease and the biological effects of exposure to an herbicide agent in Vietnam, means that the credible evidence for the association is equal to or outweighs the credible evidence against the association;

"(6) the term 'limited positive', with respect to association between a disease and the biological effects of exposure to an herbicide agent in Vietnam, means that the credible evidence against the association outweighs the credible evidence for the association but that there is substantial credible evidence for the association;

"(7) the term 'insubstantial', with respect to association between a disease and the biological effects of exposure to an herbicide agent in Vietnam, means that there is some credible evidence for the association but the evidence is not substantial;

"(8) the term 'relative risk', with respect to a report of a contract scientific organization for the purposes of subsection (g) of this section, shall have the meaning determined by such organization and specified in such report;

"(9) the term 'contract scientific organization', with respect to a contract under this section, means—

"(A) the National Academy of Sciences; or

"(B) in the event that the Secretary determines that the National Academy of Sciences is unwilling to enter into such contract, any other appropriate private nonprofit scientific organization which has appropriate expertise and has no connection with the Department of Veterans Affairs and which the Secretary identifies to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives in a written notification received by such committees at least 90 days before the date on which such contract is entered into;

"(10) the term 'soft-tissue sarcoma' means any sarcoma other than osteosarcoma, condrosarcoma, Kaposi's sarcoma, and mesothelioma; and

"(11) the term 'CDC Selected Cancers Study report' means the report submitted to Congress by the Secretary of Veterans Affairs that contains the final results of the Selected Cancers Study conducted by the Centers for Disease Control pursuant to section 307 of the Veterans Health Programs Extension and Improvement Act of 1979 (Public Law 96-151; 38 U.S.C. 219 note).".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 312 the following new item:

"312A. Presumption of service connection for diseases associated with effects of exposure to certain herbicide agents.".

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 313 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by inserting "or 312A" after "section 312" each place it appears.

(d) INTERIM REGULATIONS.—If the authority to pay benefits under section 802 of this Act expires before the Secretary of Veterans Affairs issues final regulations under section 312A(h) of title 38, United States Code (as added by subsection (b)), the Secretary shall issue emergency regulations, effective upon issuance, providing for the payment of disability compensation under chapter 11 of such title to each veteran or survivor who receives benefits under section 802 of this Act for a disease listed in regulations (if any) proposed by the Secretary under section 312A(h)(1)(A) of such title (as added by subsection (b)). Payment of such disability compensation shall be effective on the date of the expiration of the authority under section 802 of this Act. The Secretary shall pay disability compensation to such a veteran pursuant to this paragraph without requiring such veteran to submit an application in addition to the application submitted for benefits under section 802 of this Act.

(e) SPECIAL EFFECTIVE DATE FOR AWARDS OF DISABILITY COMPENSATION.—If the Secretary of Veterans Affairs issues final regulations under subsection (h)(2) of section 312A of title 38, United States Code (as added by subsection (b)), after April 15, 1993, any award of disability compensation under chapter 11 of such title (in the case of a claim received by the Secretary before the effective date of such final regulations) on the basis of a presumption provided in subsection (a) of such section 312A shall be effective on the later of April 16, 1993, or the date determined under section 3010 of such title. However, benefits may not be paid to any person under chapter 11 of such title pursuant to this subsection for any period for which benefits are paid to such person under such chapter pursuant to subsection (d).

SEC. 805. RESULTS OF EXAMINATIONS AND TREATMENT OF VETERANS FOR DISABILITIES RELATED TO EXPOSURE TO CERTAIN HERBICIDES OR TO SERVICE IN VIETNAM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall compile and analyze, on a continuing basis, all clinical data that (1) is obtained by the Department of Veterans Affairs in connection with examinations and treatment furnished to veterans by the Department after November 3, 1981, by reason of eligibility provided in section 610(e)(1)(A) of title 38, United States Code, and (2) is likely to be scientifically useful in determining the association, if any, between the disabilities of veterans referred to in such section and exposure to dioxin or any other toxic substance referred to in such section or between such disabilities and active military, naval, or air service in Vietnam during the Vietnam era.

(b) ANNUAL REPORT.—The Secretary shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives an annual report containing—

(1) the information compiled in accordance with subsection (a);

(2) the Secretary's analysis of such information;

(3) a discussion of the types and incidences of disabilities identified by the Department of Veterans Affairs in the case of veterans referred to in subsection (a);

(4) the Secretary's explanation for the incidence of such disabilities;

(5) other explanations for the incidence of such disabilities considered reasonable by the Secretary;

(6) the Secretary's views on the scientific validity of drawing conclusions from the incidence of such disabilities, as evidenced by the data compiled under subsection (a), about any association between such disabilities and exposure to dioxin or any other toxic substance referred to in section 610(e)(1)(A) of title 38, United States Code, or between such disabilities and active military, naval, or air service, in Vietnam during the Vietnam era; and

(7) the evaluation of such report submitted by the Director of the Office of Technology Assessment pursuant to subsection (c)(2).

(c) CONSULTATION WITH OTA.—(1) The Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall consult with the Director of the Office of Technology Assessment before compiling and analyzing any information under this section and shall submit each annual report required by subsection (b) to the Director before submitting such report to the committees referred to in such subsection.

(2) The Director of the Office of Technology assessment shall review each annual report submitted under paragraph (1) and transmit to the Secretary of Veterans Affairs the Director's evaluation of the content of the report.

(d) FIRST REPORT.—The first report under subsection (b) shall be submitted one year after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 806. TISSUE ARCHIVING SYSTEM.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF SYSTEM.—For the purpose of facilitating future scientific research on the effects of exposure of veterans to dioxin and other toxic agents in herbicides used in support of United States and allied military operations in Vietnam during the Vietnam era, the Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall establish and maintain a system for the collection and storage of voluntarily contributed samples of blood and tissue of veterans who performed active military, naval, or air service in Vietnam during the Vietnam era. The system may be administered by the Department of Veterans Affairs or under a contract awarded by the Secretary, whichever is more cost-effective.

(b) SECURITY OF SPECIMENS.—The Secretary shall ensure that the tissue is collected and stored under physically secure conditions and that the tissue is maintained in a condition that is useful for research referred to in subsection (a).

(c) AUTHORIZED USE OF SPECIMENS.—The Secretary may make blood and tissue available from the system for research referred to in subsection (a) in a manner consistent with the privacy rights and interests of the blood and tissue donors.

(d) LIMITATIONS ON ACCEPTANCE OF SAMPLES.—The Secretary may prescribe such limitations on the acceptance and storage of blood and tissue samples as the Secretary considers appropriate consistent with the purpose specified in the first sentence of subsection (a).

(e) CONSULTATION REQUIREMENTS.—(1) To the extent provided under any agreement entered into by the Secretary and the National Academy of Sciences, the Secretary shall consult with the National Academy of Sciences regarding the establishment and maintenance of the tissue archiving system under this section, including any limitation to be prescribed under subsection (d).

(2) In the event that the National Academy of Sciences does not enter into an agreement for consultation under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall consult with the Director of the Office of Technology Assessment on the establishment and maintenance of the tissue archiving system under this section, including any limitation to be prescribed under subsection (d).

(f) CONTRACT AUTHORITY SUBJECT TO APPROPRIATION.—The contract authority provided in this section shall be effective for a fiscal year to such extent or in such amount as is provided for in an appropriation Act.

SEC. 807. SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH FEASIBILITY STUDIES PROGRAM.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM.—The Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall establish a program to provide for the conduct of studies of the feasibility of conducting additional scientific research on—

(1) health hazards resulting from exposure to dioxin;

(2) health hazards resulting from exposure to other toxic agents in herbicides used in support of United States and allied military operations in Vietnam during the Vietnam era; and

(3) health hazards resulting from active military, naval, or air service in Vietnam during the Vietnam era.

(b) PROGRAM REQUIREMENTS.—(1) Under the program established pursuant to subsection (a), the Secretary shall, pursuant to criteria prescribed pursuant to paragraph (2), award contracts or furnish financial assistance to non-Government entities for the conduct of studies referred to in subsection (a).

(2) The Secretary shall prescribe criteria for (A) the selection of entities to be awarded contracts or to receive financial assistance under the program, and (B) the approval of studies to be conducted under such contracts or with such financial assistance.

(c) REPORT.—The Secretary shall promptly report the results of studies conducted under the program to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

(d) CONSULTATION WITH THE NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.—To the extent provided under any agreement entered into by the Secretary and the National Academy of Sciences (1) the Secretary shall consult with the National Academy of Sciences regarding the establishment and administration of the program under subsection (a), and (2) the National Academy of Sciences shall review the studies conducted under contracts awarded pursuant to the program and the studies conducted with financial assistance furnished pursuant to the program. The agreement shall require the National Academy of Sciences to submit to the Secretary and the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives any recommendations that the National Academy of Sciences considers appropriate regarding any studies reviewed under the agreement.

(e) AUTHORITY SUBJECT TO APPROPRIATION.—The authorities to enter into contracts and to furnish financial assistance provided in this section shall be effective for a fiscal year to such extent or in such amount as is provided for in an appropriation Act.

SEC. 808. OUTREACH SERVICES.

Section 1204(a) of the Veterans' Benefits Improvement Act of 1988 (division B of Public Law 100-687; 102 Stat. 4125) is amended—

(1) in clause (1), by striking out ", as such information on health risks becomes known";

(2) by redesignating clauses (1) and (2) as clauses (A) and (B), respectively;

(3) by inserting "(1)" after "PROGRAM.—"; and

(4) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(2) The Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall annually furnish updated information on health risks described in paragraph (1)(A) to veterans referred to in paragraph (1).".

SEC. 809. REPORT RELATING TO RESEARCH ON TREATMENTS FOR EXPOSURE TO DIOXIN AND OTHER TOXIC AGENTS.

Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report containing a discussion of the research being conducted to identify and develop treatments for physiological absorption of dioxin and other toxic agents similar to the toxic agents in herbicides used in support of United States and allied operations in Vietnam during the Vietnam era, including research relating to exposure to dioxin and other toxic agents outside Vietnam.

SEC. 810. EXTENSION OF HEALTH-CARE ELIGIBILITY BASED ON AGENT ORANGE OR IONIZING RADIATION EXPOSURE.

Section 610(e)(3) of title 38, United States Code, is amended by striking out "September 30, 1990" and inserting in lieu thereof "December 31, 1993".

SEC. 811. RANCH HAND STUDY AMENDMENTS.

Section 1205 of the Veterans' Benefits Improvement Act of 1988 (division B of Public Law 100-687; 102 Stat. 4126) is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsections (c) and (d) as subsections (d) and (e), respectively;

(2) by inserting after subsection (b), the following new subsection (c):

"(c) ADVISORY RELATIONSHIP.—The Advisory Committee may consult directly with and provide information and recommendations directly to the Department of the Air Force scientists conducting the Ranch Hand Study, and such scientists may consult directly with and provide information and recommendations directly to the Advisory Committee. No officer or employee of the Federal Government may intervene in or impair direct communication between the Advisory Committee and such scientists under this section except as may be necessary to prevent an inappropriate disclosure of classified information."; and

(3) in subsection (d), as redesignated by clause (1)—

(A) by adding at the end of paragraph (1) the following: "The schedule shall provide for the preparation and submission of annual reports and a final report."; and

(B) in paragraph (4), by inserting "in" after "report referred to".

SEC. 812. DEFINITIONS.

In this title—

(1) the terms "veteran", "service-connected", "active military, naval, or air service", and "Vietnam era" shall have the meanings given those terms in paragraphs (2), (16), (24), and (29), respectively, of section 101 of title 38, United States Code;

(2) the term "disability" refers to a disability within the meaning of chapter 11 of such title; and

(3) the term "soft-tissue sarcoma" means any sarcoma other than osteosarcoma, condrosarcoma, Kaposi's sarcoma, and mesothelioma.

SEC. 813. EFFECTIVE DATE.

Except as provided as in section 802(k), this title and the amendments made by this title shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

TITLE VIII—VETERANS' AGENT ORANGE EXPOSURE AND VIETNAM SERVICE BENEFITS

Sec. 801. Short title.
Sec. 802. Interim period for award of benefits for Vietnam veterans with non-Hodgkin's lymphoma and certain sarcomas.
Sec. 803. Presumption of service connection for chloracne.
Sec. 804. Presumption of service connection for diseases associated with effects of exposure to certain herbicide agents.
Sec. 805. Results of examinations and treatment of veterans for disabilities related to exposure to certain herbicides or to service in Vietnam.
Sec. 806. Tissue archiving system.
Sec. 807. Scientific research feasibility studies program.
Sec. 808. Outreach services.
Sec. 809. Report relating to research on treatments for exposure to dioxin and other toxic agents.
Sec. 810. Extension of health-care eligibility based on agent orange or ionizing radiation exposure.
Sec. 811. Ranch hand study amendments.
Sec. 812. Definitions.
Sec. 813. Effective date.

NOTICES OF HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

(Change of time for hearing.)

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I would like to announce for the Senate and the public that the hearing before the full Committee on Energy and Natural Resources on October 5, 1989, concerning the Department of Energy's efforts to improve the operations and management of its atomic energy defense activities and Senate bills S. 972 and S. 1304 originally scheduled to begin at 9:30 a.m. will now begin at 9:15 a.m.

The hearing will take place in room SD-366 of the Dirksen Senate Office Building in Washington, DC. The second day of hearings will remain as originally scheduled—October 19, 1989, at 9:30 a.m. in room SD-366.

For further information, please contact Mary Louise Wagner or Teri Curtin at (202) 224-7569.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I would like to announce that the Select Committee on Indian Affairs will be holding a hearing on Thursday, October 19, 1989, beginning at 2 p.m., in 485 Russell Senate Office Building on S. 1289, the National Indian Forest and Woodland Enhancement Act.

Those wishing additional information should contact the Select Committee on Indian Affairs at 224-2251.

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEES TO MEET

COMMITTEE ON ARMED SERVICES

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Armed Services be authorized to meet on Tuesday, October 3, 1989, at 11 a.m. in executive session to discuss conference issues.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON FINANCE

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Finance be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on October 3, 1989, at 2:30 p.m., to consider legislation providing for budget reconciliation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Environmental Protection, Committee on Environment and Public Works, be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Tuesday, October 3, beginning at 9:30 a.m., to conduct a hearing to hear testimony regarding pending amendments to the Clean Air Act concerning acid deposition legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE, NUTRITION, AND FORESTRY

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry, be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate at 2:30 p.m. on Tuesday, October 3, 1989, to hold a hearing on pending nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUBCOMMITTEE ON SECURITIES

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Securities of the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs be allowed to meet during the session of the Senate, Tuesday, October 3, 1989, at 9:30 a.m., to conduct hearings on the impact of institution investors on corporate governance, takeovers, and the capital markets.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Tuesday, October 3, 1989, at 2 p.m., to hold a hearing on the nomination of Gene McNary to be Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Tuesday, October 3, 1989, at 10 a.m., to hold a hearing on controlling the supply side of drugs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Foreign Relations be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Tuesday, October 3, at 9:30 a.m., to hold hearings on United States policy options toward South Africa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENTAL AFFAIRS

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Governmental Affairs be authorized to meet on Tuesday, October 3 at 9:30 a.m., for a hearing on the subject: Inspector General Act implementation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

PROPOSED LICENSE FEES FOR AMATEUR RADIO OPERATORS

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I have recently learned that the Commerce Committee has chosen to meet its reconciliation responsibilities, in part, by imposing unprecedented fees on our amateur radio operators. It is ironic that this proposal comes at a time when we have been able to witness the achievements of the amateur radio operators so prominently in our daily headlines.

During some of the darkest hours of Hurricane Hugo, as it ripped through the Virgin Islands, the world relied on the abilities and commitment of our amateur radio operators to pick up the only bits of news available about the extent of the damage and the condition of the islands. For much of the critical time immediately after the hurricane, we were dependent upon what we learned from our amateur radio operators. And at that time, any information we could get was absolutely priceless. I ask to have placed in the RECORD a copy of the article that appeared in the Washington Post on this subject.

[From the Washington Post, Sept. 19, 1989]

HAM RADIOS AT HUGO-TRACKING HUB—OPERATORS ARE ONLY LINK BETWEEN FLORIDA CENTER, STRICKEN AREAS

(By Michael York)

CORAL GABLES, FL, Sept. 18.—Thomas M. Middleton, wearing headphones, is staring at two amateur-radio transceivers and scribbling on a legal pad. Looking over his shoulder, one can see phrases such as "99 percent homeless . . . total destruction . . . 4 bodies in the street."

Middleton, 67, a volunteer, is the only link between the National Hurricane Center here and Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands and other islands that have lost electricity and telephone service as Hurricane Hugo thunders through the Caribbean.

"These ham operators broadcast as long as they can with their regular systems until the storm gets close," Middleton said. "Then they take down their elaborate antennas and disconnect their generators. Mostly, they're using a crude piece of wire for an antenna and are running off of a car battery."

To an untrained ear, only noise is heard on 14.325 megahertz, the 20-meter-band frequency dedicated to emergency broadcasts. But Middleton, who earned his radio license in 1938, can distinguish voices describing near total devastation.

"You probably can't make out much more than a word here and there," said Middleton, who lives in Miami. "It's just a lot of squeals and crackles. But, if you really listen, you can hear what they're saying.

"It's strange, but you don't hear any sense of crisis in the voices, even in the most desperate reports. It's a lot like the last words from those pilots who crashed in Sioux City, Iowa, in July. Everyone's very calm, almost matter of fact," he said.

Sometimes, Middleton said, the transmissions are too weak to hear. But the vagaries of ham radio allow other operators, often much farther from the Caribbean than is Middleton, to rely the messages. Since Hugo churned into Guadeloupe Saturday, amateur radio operators in Texas, Ohio and California have helped to relay messages.

Last year, when Hurricane Gilbert wrecked much of Jamaica, a ham operator in Australia served as a relay.

"It's all in the weird way that radio-wave propagation works," Middleton said. "These signals don't go in a straight line. They can go anywhere."

The National Hurricane Center is part of the Commerce Department's National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration and is located in an office building outside Miami. The only clue that something unusual might be here is the bulbous radar dome on the roof.

The center is arranged around a 45-inch, high-resolution television set that shows the most recent satellite picture of the storm. Directly in front of the screen, center director Bob Sheets faces a bank of television cameras and gives nonstop interviews.

The television networks, which draw lots to determine who goes first, queupe up for live interviews with Sheets at the beginning of each newscast. Since Friday, Hugo has been the lead story in television news broadcasts.

Behind Sheets, a squad of employees answers calls from across the country. Incoming lines have been jammed for two days, but one radio station has figured out a sure way of getting through, center specialist John Bevin said.

"They just tell the operator it's an emergency," he said. "They say there is a killer storm."

Amateur radio operators, or "hams" as they are commonly called, are dedicated individuals who play a valuable role for our Nation in public safety, disaster relief, and emergency communications for national defense, among other services. Although ham operations are primarily a hobby, in times of need amateur radio operators are transformed into a corps of highly trained public service communicators, who willingly work long hours as volunteers during disasters. And, the amateur radio operators provide these services at no personal profit. In fact, they use equipment that they have purchased themselves.

In Michigan, alone, we have more than 14,000 radio amateurs whose volunteer efforts have assisted the State of Michigan in emergency and disaster relief efforts, including the 1987 Detroit Metropolitan Airport disaster.

Last year we passed legislation that required Government agencies to take into account "the valuable contributions made by amateur radio operators when considering actions affecting the amateur radio service." Yet in the past year the amateur radio community has had to face several setbacks.

On August 17, 1989, the Federal Communications Commission [FCC] released a memorandum opinion and order reaffirming their action of August 4, 1988, reallocating the 220–222 MHz radio frequency band on an exclusive basis to the land mobile service despite the strong opposition and pleas of the amateur radio community. The amateurs had objected strongly to prohibiting their use of this frequency, since they had used these bands for some of their emergency assistance. Now they face this proposed budget reconciliation provision which would impose new license fees upon them.

The proposed budget reconciliation of the Commerce Committee provides for approximately $43 million in additional revenues to the FCC to cover the FCC's administrative costs; $3.78 million of this amount would come from fees charged to amateur radio operators.

The proposal would assess a $35 charge for an amateur license under the following categories: New license—per application; modification of license—per application; renewal of license—per application; reciprocal permit for alien amateur license; renewal or modification of amateur club, RACES, or military recreation station license; and special temporary authority—initial, modifications, extensions.

Additionally, another category is proposed with an assessment of $105 for a request for a waiver, either routine or nonroutine.

Included in the list of fees is an assessment against a group called RACES. This stands for Radio Amateur Civil Emergency Services. RACES stations are licensed to local and State government entities and are very important for our Nations emergency communications. Also in this same category are fees to be assessed against amateur clubs and military recreation stations. These include clubs that are in our Nation's schools so our children can learn the importance of how to work on amateur radio equipment and participate in worthwhile volunteer work. Our military recreation stations also provide the very important public service of keeping our military forces in touch with those back home.

At the present time amateur radio operators are exempt from license fees as are other nonprofit organizations. The Commerce Committee has not included in their proposed fee schedule other nonprofit organizations such as special emergency and public safety groups and public broadcasters. The reason for their exclusion is, in part, their important public service role. Mr. President, our amateur radio operators also provide an important public service, and we should not treat them any differently than we do other nonprofit, service organizations.

In addition, Mr. President, I have been informed that the amateur radio operator community has already been assuming much of their own administrative burdens. For example, the amateurs already administer, on a voluntary basis, license examinations at no cost to the FCC. From 1983 to the present, it is estimated that the amateur radio operators have saved the FCC $1 million a year by performing this function.

And finally, I should add that these proposed fees are for the purpose of reimbursing the FCC for the actual costs it incurs in processing these various licenses. Yet, the FCC has admitted that the true costs for these licensing responsibilities may be as little as 35 cents in some cases.

Mr. President, I hope to be able to offer an amendment, when we take up the reconciliation bill that will address these unfair fees on our amateur radio operators. I invite any interested colleagues to join me in this effort.●

PRAISE FOR THE WEIZMANN INSTITUTE

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, a recent issue of the Near East Report carried an article about the Weizmann Institute in Israel. Next month the Weizmann Institute will celebrate its 40th anniversary, and those associated with the Institute have much to be proud of. It is simply one of the finest scientific research establishments in the world.

I commend the article to the attention of my colleagues, and I ask that the article entitled "The Wondrous Weizmann Institute" be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

[From the Near East Report, Aug. 28, 1989]

THE WONDROUS WEIZMANN INSTITUTE

Thanks to the Weizmann Institute, Israel is on the cutting edge of scientific discovery in cancer research and heart disease, physics, energy production, math and computer sciences. The Institute, which celebrates its 40th anniversary in November, is located in Rehovot, near Tel Aviv. Most of Weizmann's funding comes from an Israeli government stipend and international fundraising, but WI also receives about a million dollars a year in competitive National Institute of Health research contracts. U.S. tax dollars also support other science projects.

The Institute is held in very high esteem at NIH. Working together with NIH researchers, Weizmann scientists played a "very prominent" part in discovering the genetic defect that causes Down's Syndrome, according to health institute program officer Robert Eiss. This finding, Eiss told NER, could ultimately result in the development of a genetic therapy that could prevent this incurable disease.

PROGRESS IN AIDS FIGHT

Weizmann scientists were part of a recent international research effort that helped provide critical new information about cell structure and function. Without this data "it would have been impossible to develop current tests for the AIDS virus" or conduct critical genetic studies of the disease, Eiss says. Weizmann's work, he stresses, is "aiding the development of anti-viral drugs and potential vaccines against AIDS."

Researchers at NIH and Weizmann are working together in an attempt to create a vaccine for crippling diseases such as rheumatoid arthritis, says Eiss. WI also played a prominent role in cancer research explaining "how healthy cells become cancerous ones" he adds. According to Eiss, vision research being conducted at Weizmann will "over the long haul improve our ability to prevent blindness."

And there's much more. Institute biologists are studying changes in the brain and nervous system that make the elderly more susceptible to disease. They also are examining the reproductive system to devise new infertility treatments and birth control methods. Other scientists are working to produce drugs to provide coronary patients with better chances of recovery.

Researchers are working to create more potent anti-asthma medication. Animal studies are in progress with drugs that may one day be used to treat epilepsy, manic-depression, alcoholism and multiple sclerosis. Institute-developed drugs aiding kidney sufferers and elderly victims of bone diseases are on the market. A vaccine for bilharzia, one of the many parasitic diseases that kill and maim millions throughout the Third World, is being studied.

FEEDING THE HUNGRY

Weizmann scientists are helping to feed a hungry world by developing high-protein bread wheat varieties that will improve nutrition. WI researchers are also developing vegetable crops that are more resistant to herbicides. Weizmann-developed hybrid cucumbers are now grown throughout the Mediterranean region, including several Arab countries.

The Institute's new Center for Energy Research has embarked on numerous solar energy-related projects, including development of solar water heaters necessary for use with air-conditioning systems. WI's physics department is devising new ways to identify faults in aircraft wings. It is also investigating new ways to detect heat leaks from buildings.

Many firms operate in Kiryat Weizmann Industrial Park, located adjacent to the Rehovot campus. For 20 years, the Institute's Department of Plastics Research has been cooperating with Makhteshim Chemical Industries of Beersheba, a division of Koor Chemicals, one of Israel's industrial giants. Together with WI, Makhteshim is on the verge of opening up several new product lines, including a compound used to reduce the flammability of industrial materials.

One American-based high-tech company located in Kiryat Weizmann is Gelman Ltd., a subsidiary of Gelman Sciences of Ann Arbor, Mich. The firm, whose products include material for surgical gowns and disposable diapers, set up a research and development operation there nearly a decade ago. Gelman's Rehovot workforce has grown from four to 35, and the plant has started to produce material for the parent company. "We built the place from people we'd recruited . . . from the Weizmann Institute," the firm's vice president for advanced technology, Dr. Gerald Tanny, told NER. "The Weizmann Institute attracts high-grade people who are very hardworking and dedicated." Tanny said his company also benefited greatly by being able to use the adjacent campus library.

Weizmann's scientific staff is 1,800, including nearly 500 scientists-in-training, working toward master-of-science degrees or doctorates at WI's Feinberg Graduate School. Twenty-eight nations are represented in Weizmann's student body. These include approximately 30 Americans, and students from countries as diverse as Singapore, China, Mexico and Brazil. Last year, Weizmann's first Egyptian student received a Master's degree. The school is non-sectarian, and classes are conducted in English.●

ENTERPRISE ZONE PROGRAM

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I rise today to share with my colleagues a recent editorial that appeared in the Washington Post by Housing and Urban Development Secretary Jack Kemp. In this column, Secretary Kemp lauds an innovative program I have been advocating for almost a decade in this body—namely, the Enterprise Zone Program.

Eight years ago, then-Congressman Kemp and I introduced the first enterprise zone bill, and this year, I introduced an updated version of the measure once again. Although enterprise zone legislation of the type Secretary Kemp and I support has passed the Senate twice, it unfortunately has yet to become law.

This country is presently in a record-breaking economic recovery, jut there are still many who have not been a part of this growth. Now, more than ever, we need to strengthen the enterprise zone concept to target economic development assistance to depressed areas where jobs and the dreams of economic independence have been lost.

The 1987 Housing Act provided for the establishment of 100 enterprise zones eligible for special tax or financial advantages to encourage business development and job creation. But this Federal program lacks any direct Federal support. As a result, many States have moved forward with their own targeted enterprise zone programs. And as Secretary Kemp points out in his editorial, the verdict is in.

At last count, 36 States and the District of Columbia were utilizing enterprise zones, and those numbers are increasing. A recent survey by Business Facilities magazine estimated that enterprise zones had created 184,600 new jobs through 1988 while retaining 169,100 jobs.

Clearly, the strength of enterprise zone has been demonstrated. It is now time to graduate the program from trial run to full implementation. I look forward to addressing the issue as soon as possible in the Senate.

I ask that a copy of Secretary Kemp's column be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my statement.

The column follows:

[From the Washington Post, Sept. 17, 1989]

(By Jack Kemp)

LIGHTING CANDLES FROM HARLEM TO WATTS

The House Ways and Means Committee, including six Democrats, narrowly passed a tax bill that reduces the capital gains tax rate—a measure the Bush administration strongly supports. Yet the congressional tax writers ignored the opportunity to pass enterprise zones to help poor people in depressed urban and rural communities. Instead, the committee recommended a host of special tax provisions, including solar and geothermal tax credits, relief of tax on heavy industry and simplification of the corporate minimum tax. I believe the committee's priorities have been tragically misplaced by not giving poverty top billing on this nation's political agenda.

I hope this mistake will be rectified on the floor of Congress and that President Bush's enterprise zone bill, which is widely supported by both parties, will yet become part of this year's tax bill. With the 25th anniversary of the War on Poverty this year, it is absolutely crucial to reinvigorate this nation's anti-poverty agenda by passing an enterprise zone bill that in many ways has its roots in the goals, if not the methods, of anti-poverty thought of the early '60s.

Enterprise zones and the War on Poverty share a common philosophy of empowering poor people to help themselves. Unlike those today who say that the poor are condemned to a permanent underclass, Great Society thinkers believed that poor people had the resources and the vision to overcome poverty if the federal government empowered them politically.

Unfortunately, Lyndon Johnson's efforts relied too much on political action. Enterprise-zone advocates also believe that poverty is not inevitable but that poor people must become entrepreneurs, small business men and women, and risk-takers. While Chapter I of the struggle for equality focused on legal, civil and voting rights, Chapter II now should center on economic opportunity, jobs and access to income if freedom is to be made real for poor people and minorities.

While conceding our goals, skeptics have expressed three concerns about enterprise zones. First, the common wisdom has been that enterprise zones haven't worked at the state level. That's wrong. Since 1982, 37 states and the District of Columbia have enacted enterprise-zone programs. These state zones are demonstrating substantial success, despite the fact that they do not include powerful federal incentives. Surveys show that state zones have created approximately 184,600 new jobs, helped retain nearly 169,100 existing jobs and promoted more than $18.1 billion in new capital investment. For example, a July 1989 report prepared for the New Jersey Department of Commerce, Energy and Economic Development estimated that New Jersey's program added so much new economic activity and jobs to poverty areas that every dollar in tax incentive actually raised between $1.90 and $5.20 in new state tax revenue.

A second concern has been that enterprise zones presume that reducing federal tax and regulatory barriers would be enough to revive communities. Again, this is not true. Enterprise zones have always been considered one element in an overall empowerment strategy, which also should include evicting drug abusers from low-income housing, encouraging resident management and spreading home-ownership opportunities in public housing. Enterprise zones will give states and cities the incentive to offer their own comprehensive anti-poverty and anti-crime initiatives, since the 50 federal zones will be designated, in major part, on the strength of state and local efforts.

A third charge is that enterprise zones naively ask too much of poor people. It is argued that big businesses should be lured into depressed areas or at least that incentives should be designed to keep existing businesses from dying.

We disagree. The thriving urban underground economy—not just drug sales but everything from bartered plumbing and house painting to informal day care—demonstrates that these areas are rich in entrepreneurial potential. Waves of largely poor and unskilled immigrants also tell us that those in poverty can become producers, entrepreneurs and taxpayers, if their services are properly rewarded rather than blocked by government red tape, regulation and high taxation. As one who has championed lower capital gains taxes, I believe that eliminating this tax in depressed communities can help "percolate" a whole new generation of small business entrepreneurs. Small businesses must be the focus of enterprise zones because they generate two-thirds of all net new private-sector jobs and practically all new jobs in the Northeast.

Perhaps the potential of enterprise zones is best understood by describing one. Imagine making the Kenilworth-Parkside public housing project here in the District an enterprise zone. Resident leader Kimi Gray and the co-op residents already manage their housing project. They began a "College Here We Come" program and kicked out the drug pushers. But can you picture the accelerated progress if Kenilworth residents had access to new business seed capital because we eliminated the capital gains tax in the zone and allowed outside investors a dramatic tax incentive for investment in EZ enterprises? Imagine the new work incentives if residents were given a tax credit to reduce or eliminate their federal tax burden as they left welfare for a new job. The D.C. government might also help by relaxing zoning, licensing and building code regulations, targeting the area for a magnet school and even abolishing some regressive local taxes. Can you envision the positive effect on that community and the model it would present to the rest of the nation as Southeast Washington began to revive and prosper?

We must light thousands of candles like that in areas of poverty around the country from Harlem to Watts and from Overtown to Motown. Tempered by the failures of the past and aware of the limits of government, I remain confident that this nation is ready, once again, to dare to believe that poverty can be eliminated, this time by unleashing the enormous potential of entrepreneurial capitalism through enterprise zones in poverty-stricken areas across America.●

IN RECOGNITION OF MENTAL ILLNESS AWARENESS WEEK

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, today marks the beginning of "Mental Illness Awareness Week." Since 1984, this designation has been used as an important educational tool. Throughout this week, people will be made aware of the seriousness of mental illness, and the progress in developing education about the realities of this disease. I agree with the headline from last year's awareness campaign: "Mental illness is curable. But public apathy must be cured first."

This week is cause to reflect on the seriousness of the issue. One out of four families was affected by mental illness. One out of 5 adults, 29.4 million Americans, are directly afflicted. When children 17 and under are included, the number increases to 35 million suffering with the disease. That's more than cancer, lung, and heart disease combined.

These statistics are staggering. However, while we reflect on the magnitude of the problem we want to celebrate positive programs that are in place and working. One such initiative is that of the Advertising Council and the American Mental Health Fund.

Together, they recognized that despite the prevalence of mental illness the public knows very little about it or its warning signs. Further, the stigma associated with the disease and the professional treatment available inhibits the overwhelming majority of its victims from seeking help.

The Ad Council, a nonprofit organization of corporate leaders and communication executives, has applied their expertise to such national social issues as mental illness, drug use, AIDS, child abuse, and drunk driving. They are responsible for using their special talents to help publicize and achieve the goals and objectives of the American Mental Health Fund. They have worked to develop a multimedia, national advertising campaign that will dispel the myths and destroy the stigma of mental illness. Their message has been that mental illness is a legitimate disease with biological components and, most importantly, that professional treatment is available.

This happened through an extensive system of voluntarism that deserves recognition. Specifically, Warwick, Baker & Fiore, Inc. donated their advertising services, AT&T Communications volunteered their advertising expertise, and the media freely gave of their time and space—nearly $30 million in 1988 in television, radio, print, and transit.

The American Mental Health Fund, which is supported entirely by private donations, is in its 6th successful year of raising the public's awareness on mental illness and its stigma. Through educational programs, research grants, literature publications, and many other programs, the fund has pursued every opportunity to raise consciousness and create support for the mentally ill.

I applaud the Advertising Council and the American Mental Health Fund for their work. Many times there is a tendency, as a society, to blame the conditions of mental illness on those suffering, as if the illness were a matter of free choice. We have a tendency to harbor unconscious prejudices and negative attitudes toward the victims of mental illness. Groups such as these work to remind us that this discrimination is wrong and that, together, through proper research, we can find causes and appropriate treatments for mental illness.●

COST OF DEFENSE DEPARTMENT REPORTS

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, for more than a year I have spoken before my colleagues on the subject of congressional micromanagement of the Defense Department. I have pointed out that in our efforts to oversee the Pentagon, the Congress has imposed some 1,500 separate laws or regulations dealing with procurement, for example, and that, rather astonishingly, more than 100 committees and subcommittees have responsibility for overseeing some part of the Defense Department's operations.

One of my particular concerns has been the phenomenal, virtually unregulated growth in the number of reports that Congress mandates from the Defense Department. To illustrate, in 1970 we required a mere 36 reports. This year, in comparison, we required 661—a 1,836-percent increase since 1970.

And I can't say we are receiving good value for our money, not when those 661 reports take an astounding 370 man-years to produce at an estimated cost to the taxpayer of $6 million. Not when one report alone cost nearly $2 million to prepare. And certainly not when the average cost of a report was $54,000, an amount almost twice the average family's income.

As part of my effort to have the Congress focus on the issue of Defense reports, I offered in August an amendment to the Department of Defense authorization bill. My amendment, the Defense Reports Reduction Act, would terminate all current Defense Department reporting requirements as of January 1, 1991, and set down guidelines for future reports, which could be requested only on a case-by-case basis. I withdrew the amendment because of the agreement that had been reached on limiting amendments.

However, I still feel now as I felt then—that we simply must restrain ourselves when it comes to mandating reports from the Defense Department.

Mr. President, I'm glad to see that my concerns about this problem are beginning to be met and that we are taking the first, small steps to making Congress a part of the solution and not a part of the problem as it has been for so long.

This year's report from the Senate Appropriations Committee accompanying the fiscal year 1990 Department of Defense appropriations bill includes a new provision, detailed in section 9089, requiring the Pentagon to print the full cost entailed in the production of reports and publications. Section 9089 goes on to state that Secretary of Defense Cheney's initiative to display the full cost of preparing reports should be expanded to include all Defense reports, not only those prepared at the request of the Congress.

I applaud both the Appropriations Committee for its inclusion of this section as well as the Secretary for his initiative. I hope that he will comply with the report's expanded request for information. I believe that after we have the requested cost information in hand, we in the Congress will be in an enhanced position to take positive actions to see to it that the American taxpayers get true value for their money when we mandate reports from the Defense Department.●

MARTIN E. SEGAL

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, 50 years ago, on October 15 to be exact, a young man began a business in New York City. In itself, this event was not remarkable. Certainly many other businesses were begun by young men in New York City in 1939. However, this young man—through creativity, hard work, intelligence and farsightedness—began a business that has flourished and become one of the leading companies in its field. This young man is Martin E. Segal, founder and chairman of the Martin E. Segal Co., now one of the top 10 employee benefit and actuarial consulting firms in our Nation.

Martin Segal is in many ways the quintessential American achiever, one who arrived in the United States from his birthplace, Vitebak, Russia. His very successful company has been instrumental in the advocacy, design, and implementation of innovative benefit practices.

But, aside from his business acumen, he has also become one of the foremost champions of the arts. Martin Segal is currently chairman of the board of directors of the New York International Festival of the Arts and chairman emeritus of Lincoln Center for the Performing Arts. He is also a trustee of the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton and a member of the board of directors of some of New York's and the Nation's most important cultural organizations.

He has received honorary degrees from the City University of New York, Long Island University, the Mannes College of Music, New York University, and Pratt Institute and countless awards and honors for his service to the arts. This year alone, he received the Presidential Citation of the National Federation of Music Clubs, the Public Spirit Award of the Creative Arts Rehabilitation Center, and the New York State Governor's Art Award presented to him by Gov. Mario Cuomo.

Marty's other accomplishments are quite numerous, but one has to mention his having been founding president of the Film Society of Lincoln Center, of which he is now president emeritus, and the first chairman of the Commission for Cultural Affairs of the City of New York.

Mr. President, I am sure that my colleagues join me in sending great congratulations to this distinguished New Yorker, Martin E. Segal, on the 50th anniversary of the founding of the Martin E. Segal Co.●

APPOINTMENT BY THE VICE PRESIDENT

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President of the Senate be authorized to appoint a committee on the part of the Senate to join with a like committee on the part of the House of Representatives to escort His Excellency Carlos Salinas de Gortari, President of the United Mexican States, into the House Chamber for the joint meeting to be held tomorrow, Wednesday, October 4, 1989.

(3) in paragraph (4) (as redesignated by paragraph (2)), by striking "1988" and inserting "1991".

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. SIMPSON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

EXPORT ADMINISTRATION AUTHORIZATION

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 281, S. 1705, a bill to reauthorize the Export Administration for fiscal year 1990.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1705) to amend section 18 of the Export Administration Act of 1979 to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1990, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Banking Committee be discharged from further consideration of the House companion (H.R. 2653) an act authorizing appropriations for fiscal year 1990 to carry out the Export Administration Act of 1979; that all after the enacting clause be stricken, the text of S. 1705 be substituted in lieu thereof, the bill be read a third time and passed and the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (H.R. 2653), as amended, was passed.

BILL INDEFINITELY POSTPONED—S. 1705

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that S. 1705 be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

URGING THE NOBEL COMMISSION TO CONSIDER AWARDING NOBEL PRIZE RECOGNITION FOR ACHIEVEMENTS IN PRESERVATION OF THE WORLD ENVIRONMENT

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator GORE and others, I send a resolution to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 190) to urge the Nobel Commission to consider awarding Nobel Prize recognition for achievements in preservation of the world environment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 190) was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, and the preamble, are as folllows:

S. RES. 190

Whereas the world's environmental problems are no longer confined within the borders of a single nation, but affect the citizens of all nations;

Whereas the world must act in the next decade to ward off a grave and growing danger to the global ecological system that sustains life as we know it;

Whereas the science of global environmental studies is expanding dramatically both in academic stature and in political importance;

Whereas the findings of environmental scientists in areas such as stratospheric ozone depletion, the greenhouse effect, deforestation, and acid rain are already leading to a profound change in public consciousness and in the agendas of all governments;

Whereas the work of these outstanding individuals shuold be recognized on a global scale, not only to reward their accomplishments, but to increase worldwide awareness of the environmental peril and underscore the urgency of environmental protection; and

Whereas humankind's pursuit of progress in the sciences, literature, economics, and world peace will falter if we do not also work to save the planet on which we live: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States urges the Nobel Commission to consider awarding Nobel Prize recognition for achievements in preservation of the world environment. Such a prize would recognize outstanding individuals who have made signal contributions to our awareness of and responsibility for the environment.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SIMPSON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

ACTION ON SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 162 VITIATED AND INDEFINITELY POSTPONED

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that passage of Senate Joint Resolution 162 be vitiated and that Senate Joint Resolution 162 be indefinitely postponed.

REFERRAL OF A BILL—S. 1324

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, on behalf of Senators BOREN and COHEN, I ask unanimous consent that S. 1324, the Intelligence Authorization Act, originally reported from the Intelligence Committee, be referred to the Intelligence Committee for additional action that the committee may wish to take with respect to that legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

BILL HELD AT THE DESK—HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 412

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that House Joint Resolution 412, a joint resolution dealing with Federal flood insurance and crime insurance to be held at the desk until the close of business Friday, October 6.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

VETERANS BENEFITS AND HEALTH CARE ACT

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 234, S. 13, the veterans compensation and health benefits bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 13) to amend title 38, United States Code, to increase the rates of disability compensation and dependency and indemnity compensation for veterans and survivors, to increase the allowances paid to disabled veterans pursuing rehabilitation programs to the dependents and survivors of certain disabled veterans pursuing programs of education, and to improve various programs of benefits and health-care services for veterans; and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, with an amendment to strike all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 2. REFERENCE TO TITLE 38, UNITED STATES CODE.

Except as otherwise expressly provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title 38, United States Code.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

Section 101 is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(33) The term 'Secretary' means the Secretary of Veterans Affairs (except when the context indicates otherwise).".

TITLE I—COMPENSATION AND PENSION

SEC. 101. DISABILITY COMPENSATION AND DEPENDENCY AND INDEMNITY COMPENSATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—(1)(A) The Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall, as provided in paragraph (2), increase, effective December 1, 1989 (except as provided in subparagraph (B)), the rates of and limitations on Department of Veterans Affairs disability compensation and dependency and indemnity compensation.

(B) The Secretary shall make effective August 1, 1990, the increase in the rate in section 314(k) of title 38, United States Code, that as of September 1, 1989, was $63.

(2)(A) In the case of each of the rates and limitations in sections 314, 315(1), 362, 411, 413, and 414 of title 38, United States Code, the Secretary shall increase such rates and limitations, as in effect on November 30, 1989, by the same percentage that benefit amounts payable under title II of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 401 et seq.) are increased effective December 1, 1989, as a result of a determination under section 215(i) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 415(i)).

(B) In the computation of increased rates and limitations pursuant to subparagraph (A)—

(i) except in the case of rates of disability compensation for a disability rated at 20 percent or below, amounts of $0.50 or more shall be rounded to the next higher dollar amount and amounts of less than $0.50 shall be rounded to the next lower dollar amount; and

(ii) in the case of rates of disability compensation for a disability rated at 20 percent or below, amounts of less than $1.00 shall be rounded to the next lower dollar amount.

(c) PUBLICATION REQUIREMENT.—At the same time as the matters specified in section 215(i)(2)(D) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 415(i)(2)(D)) are required to be published by reason of a determination made under section 215(i) of such Act during fiscal year 1990, the Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register the rates and limitations being increased under this section and the rates and limitations as so increased.

SEC. 102. EXPANSION OF CLOTHING ALLOWANCE.

Section 362 is amended—

(1) by striking out "Administrator" the first two places it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "Secretary"; and

(2) by striking out all after "each veteran" and inserting in lieu thereof "who, because of disability which is compensable under this chapter—

"(1) wears or uses a prosthetic or orthopedic appliance (including a wheelchair) which the Secretary determines tends to wear out or tear the clothing of such veteran; or

"(2) uses medication which (A) has been prescribed for a service-connected skin condition, and (B) the Secretary determines stains or otherwise damages such veteran's clothing.".

SEC. 103. PENSION LIMITATIONS FOR HOSPITALIZED VETERANS.

(a) AMOUNT OF LIMITATION.—Section 3203(a)(1) is amended by striking out "$60" each place it appears in subparagraphs (A) and (C) and inserting in lieu thereof "$105".

(b) EXTENSION OF PERIOD FOR PAYMENT OF FULL PENSION TO HOSPITALIZED VETERANS.—Section 3203(a)(1) is amended—

(1) by striking out subparagraph (B) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(B) Except as provided in subparagraphs (D) and (E) of this paragraph, where any veteran having neither spouse nor child is being furnished hospital or nursing home care by the Department of Veterans Affairs, no pension in excess of $105 per month shall be paid to or for the veteran for any period after—

"(i) in the case of a veteran being furnished hospital care, the end of the eighth calendar month following the month of admission for such care; and

"(ii) in the case of a veteran being furnished nursing home care, the end of the third calendar month following the month of admission for such care.";

(2) in the first sentence of subparagraph (D), by striking out "the last day of the third month referred to in such subparagraph" and inserting in lieu thereof "the last day of the period for which the veteran's pension is not reduced under such subparagraph"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(E) The Secretary may extend the period during which the pension of a veteran referred to in subparagraph (B)(i) of this paragraph is not reduced under such subparagraph if the Secretary determines that the veteran is likely to be discharged from the hospital within the period for which the extension is granted or within a reasonably short period after the expiration of such extended period. No extension may be granted under this subparagraph for a period exceeding two months. Successive extensions may be granted, but the total period of all extensions granted a veteran under this subparagraph in connection with one hospitalization may not exceed four months.".

(c) LIMITATIONS ON ESTATES OF INCOMPETENT INSTITUTIONALIZED VETERANS RECEIVING PENSION.—Section 3203(b)(1)(A) is amended—

(1) by striking out "$1,500" and inserting in lieu thereof "$6,000"; and

(2) by striking out "$500" and inserting in lieu thereof "$2,000".

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsections (a), (b), and (c) shall take effect with respect to veterans who are being furnished hospital care by the Department of Veterans Affairs on or after (1) the first day of the first month that begins after the date of the enactment of this Act, or (2) October 1, 1989, whichever is later.

TITLE II—HEALTH CARE

PART A—MENTAL HEALTH

SEC. 201. CARE FOR COMBAT-THEATER VETERANS WITH SERVICE-RELATED POST-TRAUMATIC STRESS DISORDER.

(a) REQUIREMENT TO FURNISH CARE AND SERVICES.—(1) Section 602 is amended—

(A) by inserting "(a)" before "For"; and

(B) by adding at the end the following new subsections:

"(b)(1) Any veteran—

"(A) who, as determined by the Chief Benefits Director of the Department of Veterans Affairs in accordance with paragraph (2) of this subsection, served on active duty in a theater of combat operations (as defined by the Secretary) during World War I, World War II, the Korean conflict, or the Vietnam era or in any other area during a period in which hostilities (as defined in subsection (c) of this section) occurred in such area, and

"(B) whom a mental health professional designated by the Chief Medical Director has diagnosed, following an examination of such veteran by such professional, to be suffering from post-traumatic stress disorder related to such service, shall be furnished care and services for such disorder pursuant to sections 610(a)(1)(A) and 612(a)(1)(A) of this title even though such disorder has not been determined to be service-connected.

"(2) In the case of a veteran who is diagnosed as suffering from post-traumatic stress disorder, a determination of whether the veteran satisfies the service requirement related to such disorder set out in paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be made by the most expeditious means practicable.

"(c) For the purposes of subsection (b) of this section, the term 'hostilities' means an armed conflict in which members of the Armed Forces are subjected to danger comparable to the danger to which members of the Armed Forces have been subjected in combat with enemy armed forces during a period of war, as determined by the Secretary in consultation with the Secretary of Defense.".

"§ 602. Special provisions relating to mental illness disabilities".

(B) The item relating to such section in the table of sections at the beginning of chapter 17 is amended to read as follows:

"602. Special provisions relating to mental illness disabilities.".

(b) TIMELINESS OF EVALUATION AND VERIFICATION OF STATUS.—Section 612A is amended—

(1) in subsection (h)—

(A) by striking out "Administrator" and "Veterans' Administration" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "Secretary" and "Department", respectively; and

(B) in paragraph (5), by striking out "the Secretary considers" and inserting in lieu thereof "such Secretary considers";

(2) by redesignating subsection (i) as subsection (j) and, in such subsection, by striking out "Veterans' Administration" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "Department"; and

(3) by inserting after subsection (h) the following new subsection (i):

"(i) Whenever a veteran is referred by a center to a Department general health-care facility for a determination regarding such veteran's eligibility for care and services under section 602(b) of this title, the veteran shall be evaluated for diagnostic purposes within 7 days after the date on which the referral is made.".

SEC. 202. ELIGIBILITY FOR SERVICES AT VET CENTERS.

Subsection (a) of section 612A is amended—

(1) by inserting "(1)" after "(a)"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(2)(A) Upon the request of any veteran who served on active duty in a theater of combat operations (as defined by the Secretary) during World War I, World War II, or the Korean conflict or in any other area during a period in which hostilities (as defined in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph) occurred in such area, the Secretary may furnish counseling to such veteran in order to assist the veteran to overcome any psychological problems associated with such service. The counseling shall include a general mental and psychological assessment to ascertain whether the veteran has mental or psychological problems associated with such service.

"(B) For the purposes of subparagraph (A) of this paragraph, the term 'hostilities' means an armed conflict in which members of the Armed Forces are subjected to danger comparable to the danger to which members of the Armed Forces have been subjected in combat with enemy armed forces during a period of war, as determined by the Secretary in consultation with the Secretary of Defense.".

SEC. 203. COMMUNITY-BASED RESIDENTIAL CARE FOR HOMELESS AND CERTAIN OTHER CHRONICALLY MENTALLY ILL VETERANS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—(1) Chapter 17 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"§ 620C. Community-based residential care for homeless and other chronically mentally ill veterans.

"(a)(1) The Secretary shall conduct a program to furnish care and treatment and rehabilitative services (directly or by contract) in halfway houses, therapeutic communities, psychiatric residential treatment centers, and other community-based treatment facilities to homeless veterans suffering from chronic mental illness disabilities who are eligible for care under section 610(a)(1) of this title.

"(2) As part of the program, the Secretary may also provide such care and treatment and rehabilitative services to—

"(A) veterans with service-connected chronic mental illness disabilities;

"(B) veterans described in section 612(a)(1)(B) of this title who have chronic mental illness disabilities; and

"(C) veterans being furnished hospital or nursing home care by the Secretary for chronic mental illness disabilities.

"(b) Before furnishing care and treatment and rehabilitative services by contract under subsection (a)(1) of this section to a veteran through a facility described in such subsection, the Secretary shall approve (in accordance with criteria which the Secretary shall prescribe) the quality and effectiveness of the program operated by such facility for the purpose for which the veteran is to be furnished such care and services.

"(c) The Secretary may provide in-kind assistance (through the services of Department of Veterans Affairs employees and the sharing of other Department resources) to a non-Department facility described in subsection (a)(1) of this section that is furnishing care and services to veterans under this section. Any such in-kind assistance shall be provided under a contract between the Department and such facility. The Secretary may provide such assistance only for use solely in the furnishing of appropriate care and services under this subsection and only if, under such contract, the Department receives reimbursement for the full cost of such assistance, including the cost of services and supplies and normal depreciation and amortization of equipment. Such reimbursement may be made by reduction in the charges to the United States or by payment to the United States. Any funds received through such reimbursement shall be credited to funds allotted to the Department facility that provided the assistance.

"(d) The Secretary may not furnish care and treatment and rehabilitative services under subsection (a) of this section after September 30, 1992.

"(e) Not later than February 1, 1992, the Secretary shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives a report on the experience of the Department under this section and the recommendation of the Secretary (together with the reasons for such recommendation) as to whether the program should be continued.

"(f) The authority of the Secretary to enter into contracts under this section shall be effective for any fiscal year only to such extent or in such amounts as are provided in appropriation Acts.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 620B the following new item:

"620C. Community-based residential care for homeless and other chronically mentally ill veterans.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 801(c) of the Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Assistance Amendments Act of 1988 (Public Law 100-628; 102 Stat. 3257) is amended by striking out "section 115 of the Veterans Benefits and Services Act of 1988 (Public Law 100-322; 102 Stat. 501)" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 620C of title 38, United States Code,".

SEC. 204. MENTAL ILLNESS RESEARCH, EDUCATION, AND CLINICAL CENTERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 4101 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(g)(1) The purposes of this subsection are (A) to improve and expand the capability of Department of Veterans Affairs health-care facilities to respond with the most effective and appropriate services possible to the needs of veterans suffering from mental illness, especially from service-related conditions, and (B) to advance scientific knowledge regarding mental illness, especially service-related conditions, and regarding such needs and the methods of meeting them by facilitating higher quality care for eligible veterans suffering from mental illness, especially from service-related conditions, through research, the education and training of health personnel in the provision of health care to such veterans, and the development of improved models of clinical services for eligible veterans suffering from mental illness.

"(2)(A) In order to carry out the purposes of this subsection, the Secretary, upon the recommendation of the Chief Medical Director and pursuant to the provisions of this subsection, shall designate not more than five health-care facilities of the Department of Veterans Affairs (at least one of which shall be designated before July 1, 1990) as the locations for centers of mental illness research, education, and clinical activities and (subject to the appropriation of sufficient funds for such purpose) shall establish and operate such centers at such locations in accordance with this subsection.

"(B) In designating facilities as the locations for centers under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph, the Secretary, upon the recommendation of the Chief Medical Director, shall ensure appropriate geographic distribution of such facilities.

"(C) The Secretary may not designate any health-care facility as a location for a center under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph unless the Secretary, upon the recommendation of the Chief Medical Director, determines that the facility has (or may reasonably be anticipated to develop)—

"(i) with an accredited medical school which provides education and training in psychiatry and with which such facility is affiliated, an arrangement under which residents receive education and training in psychiatry through regular rotation through such center so as to provide such residents with training in the diagnosis and treatment of mental illness;

"(ii) with an accredited graduate school of psychology which provides education and training in clinical or counseling psychology or both and with which the facility is affiliated, an arrangement under which students receive education and training in clinical or counseling psychology or both through regular rotation through such center so as to provide such students with training in the diagnosis and treatment of mental illness;

"(iii) an arrangement under which nursing, social work, or other allied health personnel receive training and education in mental health care through regular rotation through such facility;

"(iv) the ability to attract the participation of scientists who are capable of ingenuity and creativity in research into the causes, treatment, and prevention of mental illness and into models for furnishing care and treatment to veterans suffering from mental illness;

"(v) a policymaking advisory committee composed of appropriate mental health care and research representatives of the facility and of the affiliated school or schools to advise the directors of such facility and such center on policy matters pertaining to the activities of such center during the period of the operation of such center; and

"(vi) the capability to conduct effectively evaluations of the activities of such center.

"(3) There are authorized to be appropriated for the basic support of the research and education and training activities of the centers established pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection $3,125,000 for fiscal year 1990 and $6,250,000 for each of the next three fiscal years. The Chief Medical Director shall allocate to such centers from other funds appropriated generally for the Department of Veterans Affairs medical care account and medical and prosthetics research account such amounts as the Chief Medical Director determines appropriate.

"(4) Activities of clinical and scientific investigation at each center shall be eligible to compete for the award of funding from amounts appropriated for the Department of Veterans Affairs medical and prosthetics research account and shall receive priority in the award of funding from such account insofar as funds are awarded to projects for mental illness.

"(5) The Chief Medical Director shall ensure that research activities carried out through such centers include an appropriate emphasis on the psychosocial dimension of mental illness and on models for furnishing care and treatment to veterans suffering from mental illness.

"(6) The Chief Medical Director shall ensure that useful information produced by the research, education and training, and clinical activities of such centers is disseminated throughout the Veterans Health Services and Research Administration through the development of programs of continuing medical and related education provided through regional medical education centers under subchapter II of chapter 73 of this title and other means.

"(7) The official within the Central Office of the Veterans Health Services and Research Administration responsible for mental health and behavioral sciences matters shall be responsible for the supervision of the operation of the centers established pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection.".

(b) REPORTS.—Not later than February 1 of each of 1991, 1992, and 1993, the Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives a report on the experience during the prior fiscal year under the centers established pursuant to the amendment made by subsection (a). Each such report shall contain—

(1) descriptions of (A) activities carried out at each center and the funding provided for such activities, (B) the advances made at each center in research, education and training, and clinical activities, and (C) the efforts to disseminate throughout the Veterans Health Services and Research Administration useful information produced by such activities; and

(2) the Secretary's evaluations of the effectiveness of the centers in fulfilling the purposes of subsection (g) of section 4101 of title 38, United States Code, as added by subsection (a).

SEC. 205. SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON POST-TRAUMATIC STRESS DISORDER.

(a) EVALUATION OF STUDY OF POSTWAR PSYCHOLOGICAL PROBLEMS OF VIETNAM VETERANS.—(1) Not later than January 1, 1990, the Special Committee on Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Special Committee") established pursuant to section 110(b)(1) of the Veterans' Health Care Act of 1984 (Public Law 98-528; 98 Stat. 2691) shall submit concurrently to the Secretary of Veterans Affairs and the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Committees") a report setting forth the Special Committee's evaluation of the results of the study required by section 102 of the Veterans' Health Care Amendments of 1983 (Public Law 98-160; 97 Stat. 994). Such report shall include the Special Committee's—

(A) overall evaluation of the conduct, validity, and meaning of the study;

(B) assessment of the capability of the Department of Veterans Affairs to meet the need for diagnosing and treating veterans for post-traumatic stress disorder and for other psychological problems in readjusting to civilian life, as estimated in the results of such study;

(C) evaluation of the Secretary's report on the study; and

(D) recommendations for any further or follow-up research on the matters addressed in the study.

(2) Not later than 30 days after receiving the Special Committee's report under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall submit to the Committees any comments concerning the report that the Secretary considers appropriate.

(b) UPDATES OF REPORTS UNDER SECTION 110(c) OF PUBLIC LAW 98-528.—(1) Not later than February 1 of each of 1991 and 1992, the Special Committee shall concurrently submit to the Secretary and the Committees a report containing information updating the reports submitted to the Secretary under section 110(e) of the Veterans' Health Care Act of 1984 (Public Law 98-528; 98 Stat. 2693), together with any additional information the Special Committee considers appropriate regarding the overall efforts of the Department of Veterans Affairs to meet the needs of veterans with post-traumatic stress disorder and other psychological problems in readjusting to civilian life.

(2) Not later than 60 days after receiving each of the Special Committee's reports under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall submit to the Committees any comments concerning the report that the Secretary considers appropriate.

SEC. 206. STUDY OF AND RESEARCH ON DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS OUTREACH SERVICES AND HEALTH-CARE SERVICES FOR CERTAIN VIETNAM VETERANS SUFFERING FROM POST-TRAUMATIC STRESS DISORDER.

(a) STUDY REQUIREMENT.—(1) The National Center on Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder established pursuant to section 110(c) of the Veterans' Health Care Act of 1984 (Public Law 98-528; 98 Stat. 2691) shall provide for a study of the extent to which, and the degree of effectiveness with which, the Department of Veterans Affairs carries out outreach, and furnishes treatment, to Vietnam veterans who (A) are Asian Americans, American Indians, Native Hawaiians, other Native-American Pacific Islanders (including American-Samoan Natives), Alaska Natives, black, or Hispanic Americans, and (B) suffer from post-traumatic stress disorder or other psychological problems in adjusting to civilian life.

(2) The Center shall provide for the conduct of research as necessary to determine the effectiveness of the outreach and treatment described in paragraph (1) and to develop more effective outreach activities and treatment methodologies and programs.

(b) REPORT.—(1) Not later than October 1, 1991, the Center shall submit to the Secretary of Veterans Affairs and to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives a report containing the results of the study required by subsection (a) and the Center's findings and recommendations on the most effective methods for providing outreach and treatment to Vietnam veterans described in subsection (a)(1).

(2) Not later than 60 days after receiving such report, the Secretary shall transmit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives a copy of the report together with any comments and recommendations concerning the report that the Secretary considers appropriate.

(c) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) The term "Alaska Native" has the meaning given the term "Native" in section 3(b) of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (43 U.S.C. 1602(b)).

(2) The term "Native Hawaiian" has the meaning given that term in section 813(3) of the Native American Programs Act of 1974 (42 U.S.C. 2992c(3)).

SEC. 207. FUNDING FOR POST-TRAUMATIC STRESS DISORDER PROGRAMS.

In the documents providing detailed information on the budget for the Department of Veterans Affairs that the Secretary of Veterans Affairs submits to the Congress in conjunction with the President's budget submission for fiscal year 1991 and for fiscal year 1992 pursuant to section 1105 of title 31, United States Code, the Secretary shall identify the amounts in the appropriations requests for Department accounts that are estimated to be obligated for—

(1) the payment of compensation to veterans for disabilities resulting from post-traumatic stress disorder (hereinafter in this section referred to as "PTSD") that is service-connected;

(2) the treatment of veterans by or at the expense of the Department for PTSD related to their active-duty service, including specific designation of funds for the treatment of PTSD—

(A) in PTSD programs designated pursuant to section 110(a)(1) of Public Law 98-528;

(B) in inpatient psychiatric programs and outpatient mental health programs other than such designated PTSD programs;

(C) in readjustment counseling programs pursuant to section 612A of title 38, United States Code; and

(D) under contract through non-Department sources furnishing (i) readjustment counseling services pursuant to section 612A(e) of such title, (ii) mental health services pursuant to such section 612A(e), or (iii) mental health services pursuant to other authority, and described in the first annual report submitted pursuant to section 110(e)(1) of Public Law 98-528 as having been proposed by the Special Committee on Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder;

(3) education, training, and research at—

(A) the National Center on Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder established under section 110(c) of Public Law 98-528;

(B) any centers of mental illness research, education, and clinical activities that may be established at Department medical centers; and

(C) other Department research facilities; and

(4) the operation of the National Center on Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder.

PART B—GENERAL HEALTH

SEC. 211. SERVICES TO OVERCOME SERVICE-CONNECTED DISABILITIES AFFECTING PROCREATION.

(a) DEFINITION OF "MEDICAL SERVICES".—Clause (A) of section 601(6) is amended to read as follows:

"(A)(i) surgical services, (ii) services to achieve pregnancy in a veteran or a veteran's spouse when such services are necessary to overcome a service-connected disability impairing a veteran's procreative ability (but only if such services are furnished by contract, except for services which the Chief Medical Director determines that Department of Veterans Affairs facilities are fully capable of furnishing in a cost-effective manner), (iii) dental services and appliances as described in sections 610 and 612 of this title, (iv) optometric and podiatric services, (v) (in the case of a person otherwise receiving care or services under this chapter) preventive health-care services as defined in section 662 of this title, (vi) (except under the conditions described in section 612(f)(1)(A)(i) of this title) wheelchairs, artificial limbs, trusses and similar appliances, special clothing made necessary by the wearing of prosthetic appliances, and such other supplies or services as the Secretary determines to be reasonable and necessary, and (vii) travel and incidental expenses pursuant to the provisions of section 111 of this title; and".

(b) ADVISORY COMMITTEE.—The Chief Medical Director of the Department of Veterans Affairs shall appoint an advisory committee to advise the Chief Medical Director on the exercise of authority to furnish services described in subclause (ii) of section 601(6)(A) of title 38, United States Code, as added by subsection (a). Section 14 of the Federal Advisory Committee Act (5 U.S.C. App.) shall not apply to the advisory committee appointed under this subsection.

SEC. 212. COMPENSATED WORK THERAPY AND THERAPEUTIC RESIDENCE PILOT PROGRAM.

(a) AUTHORIZED SOURCES FOR PROVISION OF THERAPEUTIC WORK.—Section 618(b)(1) is amended by striking out "contractual arrangements with private industry or other sources outside the Veterans' Administration" and inserting in lieu thereof "a contract or other arrangement with any appropriate source (whether or not an element of the Department of Veterans Affairs or of any other Federal entity)".

(b) USE OF REVOLVING FUND.—The first sentence of section 618(c)(1) is amended by inserting before the period at the end "(including defraying the costs of travel and related expenses necessary to train and educate employees in the administration of services under such subsection)".

(c) PILOT PROGRAM.—(1) Subchapter II of chapter 17 is amended by inserting after section 618 the following new section:

"§ 618A. Compensated work therapy and therapeutic residence pilot program

"(a) During fiscal years 1990-1994, the Secretary shall conduct a compensated work therapy and therapeutic residence pilot program. The pilot program shall have two components as follows:

"(1) A component, under subsection (b) of this section, which provides for contracting with nonprofit corporations to furnish compensated work therapy in conjunction with the operation of therapeutic residences.

"(2) A component, under subsection (c) of this section, which provides for the direct operation of therapeutic residences in conjunction with the furnishing of compensated work therapy.

"(b)(1) Under the pilot program, the Secretary shall encourage and participate in the establishment of nonprofit corporations for the purpose of contracting with such nonprofit corporations to conduct compensated work therapy programs under the pilot program at not less than ten and not more than fifteen Department of Veterans Affairs medical centers operating such programs.

"(2) The Secretary may enter into a contract with a nonprofit corporation under the pilot program only if the corporation provides assurances satisfactory to the Secretary that it will operate a therapeutic residence for eligible veterans in conjunction with an existing compensated work therapy program at a medical center. The contract may remain in effect only as long as the corporation operates the therapeutic residence for eligible veterans in connection with the pilot program.

"(3) A contract with a nonprofit corporation under this subsection may provide for the Secretary to furnish the corporation (with or without consideration) in-kind services, including—

"(A) technical and clinical advice;

"(B) supervision of the activities of compensated work therapy participants in the rehabilitation of any property for use as a therapeutic residence under the contract and for possible later sale as a private residence; and

"(C) minor maintenance of and minor repairs to such a therapeutic residence.

"(4)(A) In order to assist a nonprofit corporation to purchase or lease any real property for the purpose of operating a therapeutic residence under the pilot program or to operate such a residence, the Secretary may lend the corporation up to the maximum amounts specified in subparagraphs (C) and (D), respectively, of this paragraph.

"(B) Loans authorized by this paragraph shall be paid out of sums in the fund.

"(C) The amount of a loan under this paragraph for the purchase or lease of real property may not exceed—

"(i) in the case of a purchase of real property for such use, the amount equal to 25 percent of the purchase price; or

"(ii) in the case of a lease of real property for such use, the amount of the rent for one year.

"(D) The amount of a loan under this paragraph for the operation of a therapeutic residence may not exceed an amount equal to the estimated amount, as approved by the Secretary, necessary for the operation of the residence for a period of six months.

"(E) A loan made to a nonprofit corporation under this paragraph—

"(i) shall be payable on demand;

"(ii) shall not bear interest for the first five years;

"(iii) after the first five years, shall bear a rate of interest specified by the Secretary, in consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury; and

"(iv) shall be subordinate to any mortgage loan entered into for purchase of the residence.

"(5) In the case of each nonprofit corporation to which a loan is made under paragraph (4) of this subsection for the purchase of real property, the pilot program contract with such corporation shall include a provision that requires the corporation—

"(A) to sell the real property if the corporation does not operate or ceases to operate a therapeutic residence on that property;

"(B) to pay the fund the sum of the unpaid balance of the loan and the amount equal to 50 percent of the excess, if any, of the sale price over the total amount paid by the corporation for the purchase and improvement of such real property; and

"(C) to use the proceeds of the sale of the property to pay the obligations imposed by clause (B) of this paragraph.

"(6)(A) The Secretary shall deposit in escrow any sums to be loaned to a nonprofit corporation under paragraph (4) of this subsection until the corporation demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Secretary that at least 25 percent of the net annual operating expenses of the corporation will be paid out of funds obtained from sources other than the Department of Veterans Affairs or will be satisfied by in-kind services obtained from such sources, or both. For the purpose of this subparagraph, the term 'net annual operating expenses' means the amount equal to the excess of the estimated amount of the annual expenses of operating the therapeutic residence or therapeutic residences to be acquired or operated with such escrow sums over the estimated annual rental income from eligible veterans residing in such residence or residences.

"(B) If, in the case of a corporation for which any amount is held in escrow pursuant to subparagraph (A) of this paragraph in connection with a contract awarded under the pilot program, the corporation fails to meet the requirements of such subparagraph within 18 months after the award of that contract, the corporation shall forfeit all rights to the amount so held in escrow, the escrow shall be terminated, and that amount shall be credited to the fund.

"(7)(A) Subject to subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, the Secretary shall transfer to the Veterans Health Services and Research Administration not less than 10 residences acquired by the Department of Veterans Affairs in the administration of chapter 37 of this title.

"(B) Each property so transferred under this paragraph—

"(i) shall be located in an area suitable for meeting the need of the Department for a therapeutic residence under the pilot program; and

"(ii) shall be leased, in accordance with subparagraph (C) of this paragraph, to a nonprofit corporation for operation as a therapeutic residence under the pilot program.

"(C) A lease of property under this paragraph—

"(i) shall provide for a lease period of not less than one and not more than three years and may include one or more options for renewal at the option of both parties for up to three additional years;

"(ii) shall require that the property be operated as a therapeutic residence during the lease period;

"(iii) shall require that the residents of the therapeutic residence pay to the nonprofit corporation such reasonable rent as the Secretary shall prescribe;

"(iv) shall require the lessee to pay to the medical center benefiting from the operation of such therapeutic residence 60 percent of the rent received each month during the lease period from eligible veterans residing in a therapeutic residence on such property;

"(v) shall provide for return of the property to the Secretary upon termination of the lease; and

"(vi) shall include such other terms and conditions, consistent with this subsection, as the Secretary considers appropriate for protection of the interests of the United States.

"(8) The director of a medical center shall hold the sums received pursuant to paragraph (8)(C)(iii) of this subsection until such sums are transferred pursuant to this paragraph. The Secretary shall periodically transfer such sums to the appropriate loan guaranty fund. The Secretary, in consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe regulations to carry out this paragraph.

"(9) In the case of a nonprofit corporation that, on September 30, 1989, is conducting a compensated work therapy program pursuant to a contract awarded by the Department of Veterans Affairs, the operations of such corporation not covered by a contract awarded under the pilot program shall not be affected by the provisions of this subsection.

"(10) In-kind services furnished to a nonprofit corporation by the Department of Veterans Affairs under the pilot program shall be considered as part of a pass-through account under the Department's resource allocation methodology and any other methodology used by the Department to allocate resources to its health-care facilities.

"(11)(A) Any nonprofit corporation established to operate a therapeutic residence or therapeutic residences under the pilot program shall be established in accordance with the nonprofit corporation laws of the State or States in which the therapeutic residence or residences are to be operated and shall, to the extent not inconsistent with any Federal law, be subject to the laws of such State or States, as the case may be.

"(B) A nonprofit corporation participating in the pilot program shall be established solely for the purpose of conducting one or more compensated work therapy programs and operating therapeutic residences in conjunction with such programs.

"(C) Except as otherwise provided in this paragraph or under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, a nonprofit corporation participating in the pilot program, and its directors and employees, shall be required to comply only with those Federal laws, regulations, and executive orders and directives which apply generally to private nonprofit corporations.

"(D) The board of directors of each nonprofit corporation participating in the pilot program shall include employees of the Department, but the total number of such employees on the board must be less than one-half of the total number of directors. An employee of the Department of Veterans Affairs directly responsible for the conduct of compensated work therapy programs at the medical center benefiting from the operation of a therapeutic residence by the corporation shall be a member of the board.

"(E) A nonprofit corporation participating in the pilot program may—

"(i) accept gifts and grants from, and enter into contracts with, individuals and public and private entities solely to carry out the purpose specified in subparagraph (B) of this subsection;

"(ii) employ such employees as it considers necessary for such purpose and fix the compensation of such employees; and

"(iii) in the discretion of the corporation board of directors, transfer gifts and grants accepted under clause (i) of this subparagraph to the fund.

"(F) The records of a nonprofit corporation participating in the pilot program shall be available to the Secretary.

"(G) For the purposes of sections 4(a)(1) and 6(a)(1) of the Inspector General Act of 1978, the programs and operations of such a nonprofit corporation shall be considered to be programs and operations of the Department with respect to which the Inspector General of the Department has responsibilities under such Act.

"(H) Such a nonprofit corporation shall be considered an agency for the purposes of section 716 of title 31 (relating to availability of information and inspection of records by the Comptroller General).

"(I) Each such nonprofit corporation shall submit to the Secretary an annual report providing a detailed statement of its operations, activities, and accomplishments during that year. The corporation shall obtain a report of independent auditors concerning the receipts and expenditures of funds by the corporation during that year and shall include that report in the corporation's report to the Secretary for that year.

"(J) Each member of the board of directors of a nonprofit corporation participating in the pilot program, each employee of such a corporation, and each employee of the Department involved in the functions of the corporation during any year—

"(i) shall, with respect to such functions, be subject to Federal laws and regulations applicable to Federal employees with respect to conflicts of interest in the performance of official functions; and

"(ii) shall, with respect to such functions, submit to the Secretary an annual statement signed by the director or employee certifying that the director or employee is aware of, and has complied with, such laws and regulations in the same manner as is required of Federal employees.

"(K) The Secretary shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives an annual report on the number and locations of nonprofit corporations participating in the pilot program and the amount loaned and the value of in-kind services furnished by the Secretary to each such corporation under the pilot program.

"(c)(1) Under the pilot program, the Secretary, in connection with the conduct of compensated work therapy programs at not less than ten and not more than fifteen Department of Veterans Affairs medical centers, shall operate residences as therapeutic residences for the furnishing of transitional housing solely for veterans who are furnished compensated work therapy pursuant to section 618(b) of this title.

"(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary may use such procurement procedures for the purchase, lease, or other acquisition of residential housing for purposes of this subsection as the Secretary considers appropriate to expedite the opening and operation of therapeutic residences and to protect the interests of the United States.

"(3) A therapeutic residence may be operated for veterans described in paragraph (1) of this subsection under the following conditions:

"(A) That only veterans described in such paragraph and a house manager reside in such residence.

"(B) That each resident, other than the house manager, pay the Department rent for the period or periods of residence in such residence.

"(C) That, in the establishment and operation of such therapeutic residence in a community, the Secretary consult with appropriate representatives of such community and comply with zoning requirements, building permit requirements, and similar requirements applicable to other real property used for similar purposes in such community.

"(D) That the residence meet the State and community fire and safety requirements applicable to other real property used for similar purposes in the community in which the therapeutic residence is located.

"(4)(A) The Secretary may provide for free room and subsistence for a house manager in addition to or instead of payment of a fee for the house manager's services.

"(B) The total amount of the compensation paid and otherwise provided for a house manager (taking into consideration the value of any free room and subsistence under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph) may not be less than the equivalent of the total amount that would be payable to the house manager for the house manager's services if the house manager were paid the hourly minimum wage under section 6(a) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (29 U.S.C. 206(a)).

"(5) The Secretary may operate as a therapeutic residence under this subsection—

"(A) any suitable residential property (i) acquired by the Secretary as the result of a default on a loan made, guaranteed, or insured under chapter 37 of this title, or (ii) purchased for the pilot program; and

"(B) any other suitable residential property purchased, leased, or otherwise acquired by the Secretary.

"(6) In the case of the purchase of any property referred to in paragraph (5)(A) of this subsection, the Secretary shall transfer from unobligated amounts in the fund to the appropriate loan guaranty fund the amount equal to the amount that the Secretary would charge for the sale of such property to a nonprofit organization or a State pursuant to section 9 of Public Law 100-198 (101 Stat. 1320).

"(7) Subject to the authority, direction, and control of the Secretary, the Chief Medical Director shall be responsible for the management, maintenance, and disposition of property acquired for the purpose of this subsection.

"(8) The Secretary shall prescribe—

"(A) a procedure for establishing reasonable rental rates for persons residing in therapeutic residences; and

"(B) appropriate limits on the period for which such persons may reside in therapeutic residences.

"(9) The Secretary may dispose of any property acquired for the purpose of carrying out this subsection when such property is no longer used for such purpose. The proceeds of disposition of such property shall be credited to the fund.

"(d)(1) There is authorized to be appropriated to the fund for the purposes of carrying out this section, a total of $5,000,000 for fiscal years 1990 through 1994.

"(2) To the extent that less than $5,000,000 is appropriated pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection, the Secretary may transfer to the fund, from unobligated amounts in the General Post fund of the Department of Veterans Affairs medical center that will contract for the operation of or operate a therapeutic residence under this section, such amounts as the Secretary determines are necessary, in addition to any amounts so appropriated, to carry out this section.

"(e)(1) Not later than February 1, 1994, the Secretary shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives a report on the experience under the pilot program.

"(2) The report shall include—

"(A) the Secretary's assessment of the effects that transfers of housing to Veterans Health Services and Research Administration under the pilot program have on the Loan Guaranty Revolving Fund established under section 1824(a) of this title and the Home Loan Guaranty Fund established under section 1824A(a) of this title; and

"(B) such recommendations as the Secretary considers appropriate.

"(f) For the purposes of this section—

"(1) the term 'appropriate loan guaranty fund' means (i) in the case of a lease or purchase of a property that had secured a loan that was guaranteed, insured, or made under chapter 37 of this title and was closed or assumed after September 30, 1989, the Home Loan Guaranty Fund established by section 1824A(a) of this title, or (ii) in the case of any other property, the Loan Guaranty Revolving Fund established under section 1824(a) of this title;

"(2) the term 'eligible veteran' means a veteran eligible to receive therapeutic and rehabilitative services under this section;

"(3) the term 'existing compensated work therapy program' means a compensated work therapy program that is being conducted under section 618(b) of this title by a Department of Veterans Affairs medical center on the date of the enactment of the Veterans Benefits and Health Care Act of 1989;

"(4) the term 'fund' means the Special Therapeutic and Rehabilitation Activities Fund established by section 618(c)(1) of this title;

"(5) the term 'nonprofit corporation' means a corporation recognized as an entity the income of which is exempt from taxation under section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986; and

"(6) the term 'therapeutic residence' means a residential facility in which eligible veterans may reside while participating in a compensated work therapy program conducted pursuant to section 618 of this title and includes real property associated with such facility.

"(g) The authority of the Secretary to enter into contracts under this section shall be effective for any fiscal year only to such extent or in such amounts as are provided in appropriation Acts.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 618 the following new item:

"618A. Compensated work therapy and therapeutic residence pilot program.".

(d) NONPROFIT CORPORATIONS FOR VETERANS COMPENSATED WORK THERAPY PROGRAMS.—(1) Chapter 73 is amended by adding at the end the following new subchapter:

"§ 4171. Authority to establish; status

"(a) The Secretary may authorize the establishment of one or more nonprofit corporations to provide a flexible funding mechanism for the conduct of Department compensated work therapy programs for veterans (including homeless veterans) in such community or communities as the Secretary may designate. Except as otherwise required in this subchapter or under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, any such corporation, and its directors and employees, shall be required to comply only with those Federal laws, regulations, and executive orders and directives which apply generally to private nonprofit corporations.

"(b) Any corporation established under this subchapter shall be established solely to facilitate the conduct of compensated work therapy programs for veterans.

"(c) If, by the end of the three-year period beginning on the date of the establishment of a corporation under this subchapter, the corporation is not recognized as an entity the income of which is exempt from taxation under section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, the Secretary shall dissolve the corporation.

"§ 4172. Funds received by corporations

"(a) Except for sums used as provided in subsection (b) of this section, funds received by a corporation established under this subchapter for the conduct of compensated work therapy programs shall be transferred to the Special Therapeutic and Rehabilitation Activities Fund established under section 618(c) of this title and shall be administered by the Secretary for conducting such programs.

"(b)(1) Subject to paragraph (2) of this subsection, the corporation may use funds referred to in subsection (a) of this section to defray the administrative and fundraising expenses of the corporation.

"(2) Expenditures of the corporation shall be approved in advance in accordance with procedures prescribed by the Secretary.

"§ 4173. Board of directors; executive director

"(a) The Secretary shall provide for the appointment of a board of directors for each corporation established under this subchapter. The board shall include—

"(1) an officer or employee of the Department who—

"(A) is in a field office of the Department in or near the community or communities for which the corporation is established; and

"(B) is involved in the administration of section 618 of this title; and

"(2) representatives of the community or communities for which the corporation is established who are not officers or employees of the Federal Government.

"(b) Each such corporation shall have an executive director who shall be appointed by the board of directors with the concurrence of the Secretary. The executive director of a corporation shall be responsible for the operations of the corporation and shall have such specific duties and responsibilities as the board may prescribe.

"§ 4174. General powers

"A corporation established under this subchapter may—

"(1) accept gifts and grants from, and enter into contracts with, individuals and public and private entities solely for the purpose of facilitating the conduct of compensated work therapy programs;

"(2) employ personnel to carry out such purpose; and

"(3) fix the compensation of such personnel.

"§ 4175. Applicable State law

"Any corporation established under this subchapter shall be established in accordance with the nonprofit corporation laws of the State or States in which the community or communities for which the corporation is established are located and shall, to the extent not inconsistent with any Federal law, be subject to the laws of such State or States, as the case may be.

"§ 4176. Accountability and oversight

"(a)(1)(A) The records of a corporation established under this subchapter shall be available to the Secretary.

"(B) For the purposes of sections 4(a)(1) and 6(a)(1) of the Inspector General Act of 1978, the programs and operations of such a corporation shall be considered to be programs and operations of the Department with respect to which the Inspector General of the Department has responsibilities under such Act.

"(2) Such a corporation shall be considered an agency for the purposes of section 716 of title 31 (relating to availability of information and inspection of records by the Comptroller General).

"(b) Each such corporation shall submit to the Secretary an annual report providing a detailed statement of its operations, activities, and accomplishments during that year. The corporation shall obtain a report of independent auditors concerning the receipts and expenditures of funds by the corporation during that year and shall include that report in the corporation's report to the Secretary for that year.

"(c) Each member of the board of directors of a corporation established under this subchapter, each employee of such a corporation, and each employee of the Department who is involved in the functions of the corporation during any year—

"(1) shall be subject to Federal laws and regulations applicable to Federal employees with respect to conflicts of interest in the performance of official functions; and

"(2) shall submit to the Secretary an annual statement signed by the director or employee certifying that the director or employee is aware of, and has complied with, such laws and regulations in the same manner as is required of Federal employees.

"(d) The Secretary shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives an annual report on the number and location of corporations established and the amount of the contributions made to each such corporation.

"§ 4177. Report to Congress

"Not later than February 1, 1992, the Secretary shall submit to Congress a report on the experience through the end of fiscal year 1991 under this subchapter. The report shall include such recommendations as the Secretary considers appropriate.

"§ 4178. Expiration of authority

"No corporation may be established under this subchapter after September 30, 1992.

"§ 4179. Definition

"For the purposes of this section, the term 'compensated work therapy program' means any program of therapeutic and rehabilitative activities conducted under section 618 of this title.".

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by adding at the end the following:

"4171. Authority to establish; status.
"4172. Funds received by corporations.
"4173. Board of directors; executive director.
"4174. General powers.
"4175. Applicable State law.
"4176. Accountability and oversight.
"4177. Report to Congress.
"4178. Expiration of authority.
"4179. Definition.".

(e) AVAILABILITY OF THE SPECIAL THERAPEUTIC AND REHABILITATION ACTIVITIES FUND FOR CERTAIN ACTIVITIES.—Section 618(c), as amended by subsection (b), is further amended—

(1) in paragraph (1), by inserting "and for the purpose of carrying out section 618A(c) of this title" before the period at the end of the first sentence; and

(2) in paragraph (2)—

(A) by inserting "and all funds received by the Department as rent under section 618A(c) of this title," in the first sentence after "paragraph (2) of such subsection,"; and

(B) by adding at the end the following: "The Secretary may also distribute out of unobligated amounts in the fund such amounts as may be necessary for the acquisition, management, maintenance, and disposition of real property for the purpose of carrying out section 618A of this title."

(f) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 618(b) is amended by striking out "therapeutic work" both places it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "compensated work therapy".

SEC. 213. PILOT PROGRAM: NONINSTITUTIONAL ALTERNATIVES TO NURSING HOME CARE.

(a) AUTHORITY TO PROVIDE FOR NONINSTITUTIONAL CARE.—(1) Subchapter II of chapter 17, as amended by section 203(a), is further amended by adding at the end (after the section added by section 203(a)) the following new section:

"§ 620D. Noninstitutional alternatives to nursing home care; pilot program

"(a) During the four-year period beginning on October 1, 1989, the Secretary shall conduct a pilot program for the furnishing of medical, rehabilitative, and health-related services in noninstitutional settings for veterans who—

"(1) are eligible under this chapter for, and are in need of, nursing home care; and

"(2)(A) are in receipt of or in need of nursing home care primarily for the treatment of a service-connected disability; or

"(B) have a service-connected disability rated at 50 percent or more.

"(b)(1) Under the pilot program conducted pursuant to subsection (a), the Secretary shall (A) furnish appropriate health-related services solely through contracts with appropriate public and private agencies that provide such services, and (B) in the case of each veteran furnished services under the pilot program, appoint a Department of Veterans Affairs health-care employee to furnish case management services.

"(2) For the purposes of paragraph (1) of this subsection, 'case management' includes the coordination and facilitation of all services furnished to a veteran by the Department of Veterans Affairs, either directly or through contract, including, but not limited to, screening, assessment of needs, planning, referral (including referral for services to be furnished by the Department, either directly or through a contract, or by an entity other than the Department) monitoring, reassessment, and followup.

"(c) The Secretary may provide in-kind assistance (through the services of Department of Veterans Affairs employees and the sharing of other Department resources) to a facility furnishing services to veterans under subsection (b)(1)(A) of this section. Any such in-kind assistance shall be provided under a contract between the Department and the facility concerned. The Secretary may provide such assistance only for use solely in the furnishing of appropriate services under this section and only if, under such contract, the Department receives reimbursement for the full cost of such assistance, including the cost of services and supplies and normal depreciation and amortization of equipment. Such reimbursement may be made by reduction in the charges to the United States or by payment to the United States. Any funds received through such reimbursement shall be credited to funds allotted to the Department facility that provided the assistance.

"(d) The total cost of providing services or in-kind assistance in the case of any veteran in any fiscal year under the pilot program may not exceed 65 percent of the cost that would have been incurred by the Department during such fiscal year if the veteran had been furnished, instead, nursing home care under section 610 of this title in that fiscal year.

"(e) The authority of the Secretary to enter into contracts under this section shall be effective for any fiscal year only to such extent or in such amounts as are provided in appropriation Acts.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 17 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 620C the following new item:

"620D. Noninstitutional alternatives to nursing home care; pilot program.".

(b) REPORT.—Not later than February 1, 1993, the Secretary shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives a report setting forth the Secretary's evaluation, findings, and conclusions regarding the conduct, through September 30, 1992, of the pilot program required by section 620C of title 38, United States Code (as added by subsection (a)), and the results of the furnishing of care under such pilot program for the participating veterans. The report shall include a description of the conduct of the pilot program (including a description of the veterans furnished services and of the services furnished under the pilot program), and any plans for administrative action, and any recommendations for legislation, that the Secretary considers appropriate to include in the report.

SEC. 214. PREVENTIVE MEDICINE.

(a) EXTENSION OF PILOT PROGRAM.—Paragraph (1) of section 663(a) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) In order to carry out the purpose of this subchapter, the Secretary, through fiscal year 1994—

"(A) shall furnish annually at least two preventive health-care services that the Secretary determines to be feasible and appropriate to any veteran being furnished care or services under section 610(a)(1) or 612(a)(1) or (2) of this title; and

"(B) shall implement annually at each Department of Veterans Affairs health-care facility a major preventive health-care and health-promotion initiative for such veterans.".

(b) LIMIT ON EXPENDITURES.—Section 663(c) is amended—

(1) by striking out "or" after "1983,"; and

(2) by striking out the period at the end and inserting in lieu thereof ", more than $16,000,000 in fiscal year 1990, more than $17,000,000 in fiscal year 1991, more than $18,000,000 in fiscal year 1992, more than $19,000,000 in fiscal year 1993, or more than $20,000,000 in fiscal year 1994.".

(c) DIRECTOR OF PREVENTIVE HEALTH-CARE AND HEALTH-PROMOTION PROGRAMS.—Section 663 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(d)(1) The Chief Medical Director shall designate an official in the Veterans Health Services and Research Administration to act as the Director of Preventive Health-Care and Health-Promotion Programs.

"(2) The Director of Preventive Health-Care and Health-Promotion Programs shall prepare guidance regarding and be responsible for coordinating and evaluating, and advising the Chief Medical Director on, all activities carried out under this subchapter.".

(d) REPORTS.—Section 664 is amended to read as follows:

"(a) The Secretary shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives—

"(1) not later than February 1, 1992, an interim report on the experience under the program provided for by this subchapter; and

"(2) not later than February 1, 1994, a final report on the experience under the program.

"(b) Each report submitted pursuant to subsection (a) of this section shall include, with respect to the experience under the program through September 30 of the year preceding the deadline for submission of such report specified in subsection (a) of this section—

"(1) a description of the types of services that have been furnished pursuant to section 663(a)(1)(A) and the number of veterans who received such services;

"(2) a description of the preventive health-care and health-promotion initiatives that were implemented pursuant to section 663(a)(1)(B) of this title and the number of veterans who have been served through such initiatives;

"(3) a description of the types of preventive health-care services that have been furnished pursuant to sections 610, 612, and 601(6) of this title and the number of veterans who received such services;

"(4) a description of activities conducted pursuant to section 663(a)(2) of this title;

"(5) an assessment of the results of the program; and

"(6) any plans for administrative action, and any recommendations for legislation, that the Secretary considers appropriate.".

(e) CONFORMING AND CLARIFYING AMENDMENTS.—(1) Section 661(1) is amended by striking out ", including veterans with service-connected disabilities rated at 50 per centum or more and veterans being furnished care or services involving a service-connected disability under this chapter,".

(2) Clauses (1) and (2) of section 662 are amended to read as follows:

"(1) periodic medical and dental examinations (including screenings for high blood pressure, glaucoma, colorectal cancer, and cholesterol);

"(2) patient health education (including education about nutrition, stress management, physical fitness, and smoking cessation);".

SEC. 215. EXTENSION OF AUTHORITY TO FURNISH RESPITE CARE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 620B(c) is amended by striking out "1989" and inserting in lieu thereof "1991".

(b) EXTENSION OF DEADLINE FOR REPORT.—Section 201(b)(2) of the Veterans' Benefits Improvement and Health-Care Authorization Act of 1986 (Public Law 99-576; 100 Stat. 3254; 38 U.S.C. 620B note) is amended by striking out "1989" and inserting in lieu thereof "1990".

SEC. 216. PILOT PROGRAM FOR FURNISHING ASSISTIVE ANIMALS TO CERTAIN VETERANS.

(a) REQUIREMENT FOR PILOT PROGRAM.—During fiscal years 1990, 1991, 1992, and 1993, the Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall conduct a pilot program under which the Secretary—

(1) shall—

(A) furnish assistive monkeys to quadriplegic veterans who have service-connected disabilities rated 50 percent or more; and

(B) facilitate the furnishing of assistive monkeys to other quadriplegic veterans; and

(2) may—

(A) furnish service dogs to quadriplegic veterans who have service-connected disabilities rated 50 percent or more; and

(B) facilitate the furnishing of service dogs to other quadriplegic veterans.

(b) SELECTION OF VETERAN-PARTICIPANTS.—(1) In determining whether to furnish an assistive animal to a veteran, or to facilitate the furnishing of an assistive animal to a veteran, under the pilot program, the Secretary shall (A) consider the extent to which the veteran needs and can benefit from the assistance of the animal, and (B) provide a preference for veterans who have service-connected quadriplegia.

(2) The Secretary shall approve a veteran for participation in the pilot program only upon the Secretary's determination that the veteran is well-suited for—

(A) carrying out the responsibilities involved in the care of the animal; and

(B) effectively using the animal for assistance in performing the veteran's daily living tasks.

(c) ADMINISTRATIVE MATTERS.—(1) The Secretary is authorized to enter into contracts for the furnishing of assistive monkeys under subsection (a)(1). Under such contracts the Secretary may make advance payments for the furnishing of the monkeys before receipt of the monkeys and may either reimburse the provider of such monkeys for the costs of training the monkeys or, subject to such terms and conditions as the Secretary determines necessary to protect the interests of the Government, make advance payments for such costs before the costs are incurred.

(2) Ownership of an assistive animal furnished to a veteran under the pilot program shall be determined in accordance with a contract between the provider of the animal and the veteran.

(3) The Secretary shall provide for the protection of the welfare of assistive animals furnished veterans under the pilot program.

(d) EVALUATION AND REPORT.—(1) The Secretary shall evaluate the conduct of the pilot program, the nature and extent of the benefit to veterans furnished assistive monkeys or service dogs under the program (including any benefits related to employment), the costs and cost-effectiveness of furnishing such monkeys or dogs to quadriplegic veterans, and the effects of such program on the recruitment and retention of paid primary caregivers for veterans receiving monkeys or dogs and on the morale of unpaid primary caregivers for such veterans.

(2) Not later than February 1, 1993, the Secretary shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives a report on the experience under the pilot program. The report shall contain—

(A) the results of the evaluation carried out under paragraph (1), including descriptions of the procedures and criteria used to select veterans to receive assistive monkeys or service dogs, the nature and extent of the benefit that the veterans received from the assistance of such monkeys or dogs, and the amounts and types of costs incurred by the Department of Veterans Affairs in the conduct of the program;

(B) the Secretary's views on the relationship between the furnishing of an assistive monkey or service dog to a veteran and the payment to a veteran of (i) an aid and attendance allowance under section 314(r) of title 38, United States Code, or (ii) an annual rate of pension under section 521 of such title based on the veteran's need of regular aid and attendance; and

(C) any recommendations that the Secretary considers appropriate regarding whether the pilot program should be continued or whether the authority to furnish assistive monkeys or service dogs, or both, to quadriplegic veterans should be made permanent.

(e) DEFINITIONS.—For the purposes of this section—

(1) the terms "veteran" and "service-connected" have the meanings given those terms in paragraphs (2) and (16), respectively, of section 101 of title 38, United States Code;

(2) the terms "assistive monkey" and "service dog" mean a monkey or dog, respectively, that is specially trained to assist in the performance of daily living tasks for quadriplegic individuals; and

(3) the term "assistive animal" means an assistive monkey or a service dog.

SEC. 217. SIGNAL DOGS FOR CERTAIN DISABLED VETERANS.

(a) AUTHORITY TO PROVIDE SIGNAL DOGS.—Section 614 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(c)(1) The Secretary may provide signal dogs to veterans who have service-connected hearing impairments and are in need of the assistance of such dogs and may pay travel and incidental expenses, under the terms and conditions set forth in section 111 of this title, for travel to and from their homes that are incurred in becoming adjusted to such signal dogs.

"(2) For the purposes of this subsection, the term 'signal dog' means a dog specially trained to provide hearing assistance to deaf persons.".

(b) TECHNICAL CORRECTIONS.—Section 614(b) is amended by striking out "(under the terms and conditions set forth in section 111 of this title) to and from their homes and" and inserting in lieu thereof ", under the terms and conditions set forth in section 111 of this title, for travel to and from their homes that are".

Not later than January 15, 1990, the Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives a report containing—

(1) the Secretary's evaluation of the reasons for the backlog that occurred in the procurement of prosthetic appliances in fiscal year 1989, and for the failure to furnish prosthetic appliances in accordance with the priority established in section 612(i) of title 38, United States Code; and

(2) a description of the actions that the Secretary has taken and plans to take to prevent a recurrence of—

(A) the failure to furnish prosthetic appliances in accordance with such priority, including a schedule for any such planned actions; and

(B) the accumulation of a significant backlog in the procurement of prosthetic appliances.

SEC. 220. OUTPATIENT DENTAL CARE.

Section 612(b) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1)—

(A) by striking out "or" at the end of clause (F);

(B) by striking out the period at the end of clause (G) and inserting in lieu thereof "; or"; and

(C) by adding at the end the following new clause:

"(H) for which the furnishing of such services, treatment, or appliances is medically necessary in preparation for hospital admission."; and

(2) in paragraph (3), by striking out "$500" and inserting in lieu thereof "$1,000".

SEC. 221. REIMBURSEMENT FOR EMERGENCY CARE OF VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION PARTICIPANTS.

Section 628(a)(2)(D) is amended by striking out "found to be" and all that follows through "rehabilitation training and" and inserting in lieu thereof "(i) a participant in a vocational rehabilitation program (as defined in section 1501(9) of this title), and (ii)".

(a) EXPANSION OF PURPOSE.—Section 5051 is amended by striking out "hospitals" both places it appears in the first sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "health-care facilities".

(b) EXPANSION OF AUTHORITY.—Section 5053 is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)—

(A) by striking out "hospitals" the first place it appears and all that follows through "community" and inserting in lieu thereof "health-care facilities and other health-care facilities (including organ banks, blood banks, or similar institutions), research centers, or medical schools"; and

(B) by striking out the last sentence; and

(2) in subsection (b)—

(A) in the first sentence, by striking out "charge" and all that follows and inserting in lieu thereof "methodology that provides appropriate flexibility to the heads of the facilities concerned to establish an appropriate reimbursement rate after taking into account local conditions and needs and the actual costs to the providing facility of the resource involved."; and

(B) in the second sentence, by inserting before the period at the end "and to funds that have been allotted to the facility that furnished the resource involved".

SEC. 224. DEVELOPMENT OF RECOMMENDED LEGISLATION FOR THE ELIMINATION OF INCONSISTENCIES IN CERTAIN VETERANS BENEFITS LAWS.

(a) REQUIREMENT TO ESTABLISH TASK FORCE.—The Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall establish a task force to recommend policies and legislation for the elimination of inconsistencies among provisions of law relating to veterans' eligibility for certain health-care benefits.

(b) COMPOSITION OF TASK FORCE.—The task force shall be composed of the following:

(1) Employees of the Department of Veterans Affairs involved in the administration of programs affected by the inconsistencies in law referred to in subsection (a).

(2) Representatives of organizations concerned with the administration of such programs, as determined by the Secretary.

(c) RESPONSIBILITIES OF TASK FORCE.—The task force shall—

(1) identify inconsistencies among sections 601(6), 612, 614, 617, and 619 of title 38, United States Code, and the implementation of such sections;

(2) after consultation with appropriate representatives of veterans, develop policy recommendations and legislative proposals for the elimination of any such inconsistencies; and

(3) not later than the date specified by the Secretary, submit to the Secretary a report containing (A) descriptions of the inconsistencies identified by the task force, (B) the policies and legislative proposals recommended by the task force for the elimination of such inconsistencies, and (C) the reasons for each such recommendation.

(d) ACTION BY THE SECRETARY.—The Secretary shall review the report submitted by the task force and either approve the recommendations for legislation contained in the report [disapprove such recommendations and either?] prepare alternative legislative proposals that the Secretary considers appropriate for the elimination of the inconsistencies identified by the task force or decline to recommend any alternative legislative proposals.

(e) SUBMISSION OF RECOMMENDATIONS TO CONGRESS.—Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives—

(1) the report submitted to the Secretary by the task force; and

(2) a report containing—

(A) any legislation recommended by the Secretary for the elimination of the inconsistencies identified by the task force;

(B) an analysis of any legislation recommended by the Secretary; and

(C) the reasons for any differences between any legislation recommended by the Secretary and the legislation recommended by the task force.

PART C—HEALTH-CARE PERSONNEL

SEC. 250. SHORT TITLE.

This part may be cited as the "Veterans Health-Care Personnel Act of 1989".

SEC. 251. PAY RATES FOR NURSES AND OTHER HEALTH-CARE PROFESSIONALS IN CERTAIN POSITIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—(1) Chapter 73 is amended by inserting after section 4107 the following new section:

"§ 4107A. Competitive pay rates for certain nurse and other health-care professional positions

"(a)(1) It is the purpose of this section to ensure, by a means providing maximum flexibility to directors of Department of Veterans Affairs health-care facilities, that the rates of basic pay for health-care professional positions described in paragraph (2) of this subsection in each such facility (including the rates of basic pay of personnel employed in such positions on a part-time basis) are sufficient for such health-care facility to be competitive, on the basis of pay and other employee benefits, with non-Department health-care facilities in the recruitment and retention of qualified personnel for such positions.

"(2) The health-care professional positions referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection are registered nurse positions, registered nurse anesthetist positions, certified registered nurse anesthetist positions, and the positions for such other health-care professionals referred to in clauses (1) and (3) of section 4104 of this title as the Secretary may determine upon the recommendation of the Chief Medical Director.

"(b) The Secretary shall ensure that, for pay periods beginning on or after July 1, 1990, the rates of basic pay for covered positions in the Department are established in accordance with this section instead of section 4107(b)(1) of this title.

"(c)(1) Not later than June 1, 1990, the director of each Department health-care facility shall, with respect to the covered positions in each category of covered positions—

"(A) conduct a survey in accordance with this subsection; and

"(B) on the basis of such survey, establish the rates of basic pay in each pay grade provided for such positions in accordance with this section as necessary to carry out the purpose of this section.

"(2) The rates of basic pay established pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection shall become effective beginning with the first pay period that begins on or after July 1, 1990.

"(3) Not later than December 1 of each year after 1989, the director of each Department health-care facility shall, with respect to the covered positions in each category of covered positions—

"(A) conduct a survey in accordance with this subsection; and

"(B) on the basis of such survey—

"(i) determine whether it is necessary to adjust the rates of basic pay for such covered positions at such facility in order to carry out the purpose of this section; and

"(ii) effective with the first pay period that begins on or after January 1 of the next year, adjust the rates of basic pay in each pay grade provided for such positions in accordance with this section as necessary to carry out such purpose.

"(4)(A) In the case of the covered positions in each category of covered positions in a Department health-care facility, the director of that facility shall survey the entry-level compensation established for the corresponding health-care professional positions in comparable non-Department health-care facilities within the same labor market area as that Department health-care facility. The Secretary shall specify in regulations the criteria for determining the number of comparable non-Department health-care facilities to be included in the survey.

"(B) If the number of non-Department health-care facilities comparable to a Department health-care facility in the same labor market area is less than the number determined in accordance with the criteria specified pursuant to subparagraph (A) of this paragraph or is less than the director of that Department health-care facility considers necessary in order to produce a valid comparison, such director shall, in the case of the covered positions referred to in such subparagraph, survey—

"(i) the entry-level compensation established for the corresponding health-care professional positions in such comparable non-Department health-care facilities as are located within that labor market area; and

"(ii) the entry-level compensation established for the corresponding health-care professional positions in other non-Department health-care facilities within that labor market area.

"(C) For the purposes of this paragraph, a non-Department health-care facility is comparable to a Department health-care facility if the director of the Department health-care facility determines, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary, that the non-Department health care facility (i) is in direct competition with the Department health-care facility for the recruitment and retention of personnel qualified for employment in covered positions, and (ii) has other characteristics that are comparable to the characteristics of a Department health-care facility.

"(5)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, the director of a Department health-care facility shall ensure that an appropriate cost-of-living adjustment is provided for in adjustments of rates of pay that are made for years following 1990 pursuant to a survey under this subsection.

"(B) The director of a Department health-care facility may waive, in whole or in part, with respect to any rate of basic pay for a covered position the cost-of-living component of any adjustment for any year in which the cost-of-living adjustment is not necessary, in whole or in part (as the case may be), in order for that rate of pay to be competitive.

"(d)(1) If the director of a Department health-care facility determines in any year that, because of an insufficiency in the number of non-Department health-care facilities or non-Department covered positions, a survey under subsection (c) of this section would not provide a valid comparison with respect to the covered positions in the director's facility, the director shall establish or adjust the rates of basic pay for the covered positions in the director's facility as provided in this subsection instead of subsection (c) of this section.

"(2) Not later than 90 days before the date on which the director of a Department health-care facility establishes or adjusts rates of basic pay pursuant to paragraph (1) of this subsection, the director shall—

"(A) identify a labor market area that is similar to the labor market area of such facility and includes a Department health-care facility; and

"(B) notify the Chief Medical Director of the labor market identified pursuant to clause (A) of this paragraph.

"(3) The director of a health-care facility referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection shall prescribe the same rates of basic pay for the covered positions in the director's facility as are prescribed for the same covered positions in the Department health-care facility located in the identified labor market area unless the selection of that labor market area for the purpose of this subsection is disapproved by the Chief Medical Director in accordance with paragraph (5) of this subsection.

"(4) If the Chief Medical Director disapproves (in accordance with paragraph (5) of this subsection) the selection of a labor market area by the director of a health-care facility for the purpose of this subsection, the director of that facility shall prescribe the same rates of basic pay for the covered positions in that facility as are prescribed for the Department health-care facility in a labor market area which the Chief Medical Director shall designate. The Chief Medical Director may designate any labor market area that the Chief Medical Director determines to be similar to the labor market area of the director's health-care facility.

"(5) Not later than 60 days after receiving a notification from the director of a Department health-care facility under paragraph (2)(B) of this subsection, the Chief Medical Director shall—

"(A) approve the selection of the labor market area identified in the notification; or

"(B) disapprove the selection of that labor market area, designate another labor market area determined by the Chief Medical Director to be similar to the labor market area of the director's health-care facility, and notify that facility director of that designation.

"(6) In order for a labor market area to be determined similar to the labor market area of a Department health-care facility for the purposes of this subsection, both labor market areas must be similar in size, demographic characteristics, and labor market characteristics.

"(e)(1) When the director of a Department health-care facility establishes or adjusts the rates of basic pay for a grade for any category of positions at such facility in order to carry out the purpose of this section, the director shall specify the minimum rate of basic pay for such grade and, subject to paragraph (3) of this subsection, increase or reduce the other rates of basic pay for such grade to amounts that bear the same relationship to the specified minimum rate of basic pay and to each other as the rates of basic pay within such grade bear to each other before the increase or reduction, as the case may be.

"(2) The minimum rate of basic pay prescribed for a grade for the positions in any category of covered positions in a Department health-care facility on the basis of a survey conducted under subsection (c) of this section shall be sufficient for the pay and other employee benefits of the health-care professionals employed in such positions in such grade to be competitive with the entry-level compensation (but may not exceed the highest rate of entry-level pay established) for the corresponding health-care professional positions in non-Department health-care facilities in the same labor market area, as ascertained by the director of such facility in such survey.

"(3)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (C) of this paragraph, the maximum rate of basic pay for any grade designated by the Secretary, upon the recommendation of the Chief Medical Director, as the entry-level grade for any category of covered positions may not exceed the maximum rate of basic pay established for grade 13 of the General Schedule under section 5332 of title 5.

"(B) The maximum rate of basic pay for any grade other than an entry-level grade for any category of covered positions may not exceed the maximum rate of basic pay established for a position in level V of the Executive Schedule under section 5316 of title 5.

"(C) The limitation prescribed by subparagraph (A) of this paragraph shall not apply to the entry-level grade for any category of covered positions if the positions have been designated by the Chief Medical Director as supervisory or managerial positions. The maximum rate prescribed by subparagraph (B) of this paragraph shall apply to such entry-level grade.

"(4) Whenever a grade is added to the schedule of grades for covered positions in any category of covered positions or a step within grade is added to a grade in such schedule, the director of a Department health-care facility shall establish the rates of basic pay for that grade or the rate of pay for that step, as the case may be, in the same manner as the rates of pay are established and adjusted under the other provisions of this subsection. The rates of basic pay for the additional grade shall bear the same relationship to the minimum rate of basic pay specified for such grade and to each other as the rates of basic pay within each other grade in such schedule bear to each other. The rate of pay for an additional step within grade shall bear the same relationship to the other rates of basic pay within such grade as such other rates bear to each other.

"(f) An employee who is paid a rate of basic pay established under this section and who is transferred (voluntarily or otherwise) from a covered position in one Department health-care facility to a covered position in another Department health-care facility shall be paid the rate of basic pay in effect for the covered position at the health-care facility to which the employee is transferred for the same grade and the same step within that grade as was applicable to that employee immediately before the transfer, if the Chief Medical Director determines that the duties of the position to which the employee is transferred are at least comparable to the duties of the position from which the employee was transferred.

"(g)(1) Rates of basic pay may be increased or reduced under this section.

"(2) A reduced rate of basic pay established for a covered position under this subsection shall not apply to an employee serving in such position at a Department health-care facility on the day before the effective date of the reduced rate. That employee shall continue to be paid at a rate of basic pay not less than the rate of basic pay applicable to that employee on such day for as long as the employee continues to serve in such position at such facility.

"(h)(1) In developing the criteria for the conduct of surveys under subsection (c) for application by all Department health-care facilities, the Secretary shall consult with representatives of each labor organization accorded exclusive recognition under chapter 71 of title 5 for a unit that includes employees whose rates of pay are to be established on the basis of such surveys.

"(2) In the case of employees in covered positions in a unit in a particular Department health-care facility with respect to which a labor organization is accorded exclusive recognition under chapter 71 of title 5, the director of the health-care facility shall consult with the representatives of such labor organization on—

"(A) the criteria developed by the director of that health-care facility for the conduct of surveys under subsection (c);

"(B) the director's plans for the collection of data in conducting surveys; and

"(C) the determinations regarding specific rates of basic pay.

"(i) The establishment and adjustment of rates of basic pay under this section for covered positions does not limit the authority of the Secretary to pay bonuses under section 4120 of this title to employees appointed to such positions.

"(j)(1) Not later than March 1 of each year, the Secretary shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives a report regarding the exercise of the authority provided in this section for the immediately preceding calendar year.

"(2) The report shall contain an assessment of the effects of the exercise of such authority on the ability of the Department to recruit and retain qualified health-care professionals for covered positions. The Secretary shall include in the report recommendations for such additional legislation to facilitate the recruitment and retention of qualified health-care professionals for such positions as the Secretary considers necessary or appropriate.

"(3) If the authority provided in this section was exercised for the year covered by the report only to adjust the rates of basic pay for nurse positions, the report shall also contain the reasons that rates of basic pay were not adjusted for other health-care professional positions under such authority for such year and any plans for adjusting the rates of basic pay for other health-care professional positions under such authority.

"(k)(1) The Secretary, upon the recommendation of the Chief Medical Director, shall prescribe regulations setting forth criteria and procedures to carry out this section. Such regulations shall provide maximum flexibility for the director of each Department health-care facility. Documentation requirements in such regulations shall be minimal.

"(2) If the Secretary fails to prescribe final regulations under this subsection before April 1, 1990, the Secretary shall, not later than such date, prescribe interim final regulations for the purposes of this subsection. Such regulations shall be effective upon issuance and shall remain in effect until the effective date of final regulations issued for the purposes of this subsection.

"(3) If neither final regulations nor interim final regulations are prescribed under this subsection before April 1, 1990, the director of each Department health-care facility shall, nevertheless, make determinations and establish and adjust rates of basic pay under this section with respect to covered positions in such facility for 1990 and subsequent years. In the case of any determination or other action which is subject to criteria or procedures to be prescribed in such regulations, the director of each such facility shall apply such criteria and follow such procedures as the director considers appropriate and consistent with this section. Each such director shall apply the final regulations when issued.

"(l) Information collected in surveys conducted under this section are not subject to disclosure under section 552 of title 5.

"(m) For the purposes of this subsection—

"(1) the term 'covered position' means a position referred to in subsection (a)(1) of this section;

"(2) the term 'health-care facility' means a hospital or an independent outpatient clinic;

"(3) the term 'entry-level compensation', with respect to corresponding health-care professional positions in non-Department health-care facilities, means—

"(A) the minimum rate of pay established for professionals in such positions who have education, training, and experience equivalent or similar to the education, training, and experience required for health-care professionals employed in the same category of Department covered positions; and

"(B) the other pecuniary employment benefits, if any, provided for the non-Department health-care professionals paid such minimum rate of pay; and

"(4) the term 'corresponding', with respect to health-care professional positions in non-Department health-care facilities, means those positions for which the education, training, and experience requirements are equivalent or similar to the education, training, and experience requirements for health-care professional positions in Department health-care facilities.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 4107 the following new item:

"4107A. Competitive pay rates for certain nurse and other health-care professional positions.".

(b) RELATIONSHIP OF PAY RATES TO ADDITIONAL PAY.—Section 4107(e)(1) is amended by striking out "in subsection (b)(1) of this section".

(c) GRADES FOR NURSE PAY SCHEDULE.—(1) Section 4107(b)(1) is amended by striking out the items under the heading "NURSE SCHEDULE" and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Three or more grades, as prescribed by the Chief Medical Director pursuant to paragraph (3) of this subsection.".

(2) Section 4107(b) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(3) The Chief Medical Director shall prescribe the number of grades and the number of steps within grades for nurse positions.".

(d) INTERIM COMPETITIVE PAY RATES.—(1) The director of each Department of Veterans Affairs health-care facility located in a rural area—

(A) shall, not later than December 1, 1989, conduct a survey consistent with the provisions of section 4107A(c) of title 38, United States Code (as added by subsection (a)); and

(B) pursuant to the authority provided in section 4107(g) of such title (as amended by section 255)—

(i) shall decide, not later than January 1, 1990, on the basis of the survey referred to in clause (A), whether to adjust, on a local basis, the rates of basic pay for nurses employed by the Department of Veterans Affairs; and

(ii) if deciding to adjust such rates on a local basis, shall adjust such rates effective for pay periods beginning after January 1, 1990, and before July 1, 1990.

(2) In conducting the survey referred to in paragraph (1), the director of a health-care facility located in a rural area shall include in such survey the rates of pay paid to nurses who reside in such area, who are employed in a health-care facility located outside such area, and who commute to work from such area to such health-care facility, if the director determines that the number of nurses who commute to work outside the area adversely affects the ability to employ nurses in the health-care facility of the director.

(3) For the purposes of this subsection—

(A) the term "health-care facility" has the meaning given such term in section 4107A(l) of title 38, United States Code (as added by subsection (a)); and

(B) the term "rural area" means a geographic area that the Secretary determines, upon the recommendation of the Chief Medical Director, to be a rural area.

(e) FIRST REPORT.—The first report under section 4107A(j) of title 38, United States Code (as added by subsection (a)), shall be submitted not later than March 1, 1991.

SEC. 252. EMPLOYMENT OF PERSONNEL TRAINED BY THE DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS.

Section 4106 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(h)(1) Notwithstanding subchapter I of chapter 33 of title 5, the Secretary, upon the recommendation of the Chief Medical Director, may appoint in the competitive service under such title any individual who—

"(A) has been awarded a degree or certificate in a health-care profession or occupation by an accredited institution;

"(B) has been appointed by the Secretary to participate in a clinical education program conducted by an educational institution affiliated with the Department health-care facility; and

"(C) within one year before that individual's appointment in the competitive service, has successfully completed such clinical education program.

"(2) In making appointments to the competitive service under this subsection, the Secretary shall apply the principles of preference for the hiring of veterans and other persons established in subchapter I of chapter 33 of title 5.".

SEC. 253. DIRECTOR PAY.

Section 4107(b)(2) is amended by inserting "or is a physician or dentist serving in a comparable position in the central office of the Veterans Health Services and Research Administration" before the period at the end of the first sentence.

SEC. 254. OVERTIME RATES OF PAY FOR CERTAIN NURSES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 4107(e)(5) is amended by striking out the first sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "A nurse who performs officially ordered or approved hours of service in excess of forty hours in an administrative workweek, or in excess of eight hours in a day, shall receive overtime pay for each hour of such additional service. The rate of overtime pay for such nurse shall be one and one-half times such nurse's hourly rate of basic pay.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect with respect to overtime service performed on or after October 1, 1989.

SEC. 255. ADDITIONAL PAY FOR HEAD NURSES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 4107(e) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(11) A nurse shall be paid additional pay equal to 6 percent of the nurse's hourly rate of basic pay for each hour of service performed as a head nurse. The preceding sentence shall not apply to a nurse who is assigned to perform service as a head nurse for a period of less than 30 consecutive days.".

(b) RELATIONSHIP TO BASIC PAY.—Paragraph (1) of section 4107(e) is amended by inserting "and paragraph (11)" after "(8)".

(c) COMPUTATION OF HOURLY RATE OF PAY.—Paragraph (6) of section 4107(e) is amended by striking out "or (5)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(5), or (11)".

(d) RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER ADDITIONAL PAY.—Paragraph (7) of section 4107(e) is amended by striking out "or (5)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(5), or (11)".

(e) ADDITIONAL PAY AS HEAD NURSE TO BE COUNTED FOR CERTAIN BENEFITS.—Paragraph (9) of section 4107(e) is amended by inserting ", other than pay under paragraph (11) of this subsection," after "this subsection".

(f) TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.—Paragraph (9) of section 4107(e) is further amended by inserting "84," after "83,".

(g) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsections (a) through (d) shall take effect with respect to service performed as a head nurse on or after October 1, 1989.

SEC. 256. PAY ENHANCEMENTS FOR CERTAIN HEALTH-CARE PERSONNEL.

Section 4107(f) is amended by striking out "or occupational therapists," and inserting in lieu thereof "occupational therapists, or any other health-care personnel furnishing direct care to patients or providing services incident to the furnishing of direct care to patients,".

SEC. 257. SPECIAL RATES CAP AND APPROVAL.

(a) INCREASE IN LIMITATION.—Section 4107(g)(3) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(A)" after "(3)";

(2) by inserting "by two times" after "exceed" the first place it appears; and

(3) by inserting at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(B) Whenever the amount of an increase under paragraph (1) of this subsection results in a rate of basic pay for a position being equal to or greater than the amount that is 94 percent of the maximum amount permitted under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph, the Secretary shall promptly notify the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives of the increase and the amount thereof.".

(b) APPROVAL OF SPECIAL RATES OF PAY.—Section 4107(g)(4) is amended—

(1) in the first sentence, by striking out "ninety" and inserting in lieu thereof "45"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new sentence: "If, prior to such effective date, the President approves such increase, the Secretary may advance the effective date to any date not earlier than the date of the President's approval.".

SEC. 258. ELIMINATION OF REDUCTION IN RETIRED OR RETAINER PAY.

Section 4107(i) is amended by striking out "which result" and all that follows and inserting in lieu thereof "which—

"(1) result from a severe shortage of well-qualified candidates in (A) physician positions, (B) positions of health-care professionals involved in providing direct patient care, or (C) positions of personnel involved in providing services incident to direct patient care; and

"(2) cannot otherwise be readily met.".

SEC. 259. AWARDS FOR RECERTIFICATION.

Section 4107 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(k)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) of this subsection, the Secretary shall pay each nurse who is recertified in the specialty in which the nurse is employed a lump-sum payment equal to 1 percent of the annual salary of the nurse (as of the time the nurse is recertified). The Secretary shall make such payment when the nurse is recertified.

"(2) A payment may not be paid to a recertified nurse under this subsection if the performance rating for such nurse for the latest rating period ending before the date of the recertification is less than satisfactory.

"(3) A special payment under this subsection shall not be considered as basic pay for the purposes of any provision of law referred to in section 4107(e)(9) of this title.".

SEC. 260. COVERAGE OF VETERANS HEALTH SERVICES AND RESEARCH ADMINISTRATION PERSONNEL BY FEDERAL EMPLOYEES' COLLECTIVE BARGAINING PROCEDURES.

Section 4108 is amended—

(1) by striking out "Administrator" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "Secretary";

(2) by striking out "Veterans' Administration" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "Department of Veterans Affairs";

(3) by striking out "Department of Medicine and Surgery" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "Veterans Health Services and Research Administration";

(4) in subsection (a), by inserting "except as provided in subsection (e) of this section," after "Notwithstanding any law, Executive order, or regulation,";

(5) in subsection (c)(2), by striking out "non-Veterans' Administration" and inserting in lieu thereof "non-Department of Veterans Affairs";

(6) in subsection (d), by inserting "except as provided in subsection (e) of this section," after "Notwithstanding any other provision of law,"; and

(7) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(e) The provisions of chapter 71 of title 5 shall apply to the exercise of the Secretary's authority under this section except with respect to—

"(1) the prohibitions set out in paragraphs (1) through (6) of subsection (a) of this section; and

"(2) the matters covered by section 4110 of this title.".

SEC. 261. DISCIPLINARY ACTIONS AND GRIEVANCES.

(1) by striking out subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(a)(1) The Chief Medical Director, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, shall from time to time appoint disciplinary boards to determine, upon notice and fair hearing, the charges in any disciplinary action brought against a person employed in a position listed in paragraph (1) of section 4104 of this title (hereafter in this section referred to as the 'respondent') on the basis of the performance or conduct of the respondent during employment with the Department of Veterans Affairs.

"(2) A disciplinary board appointed in the case of any respondent shall consist of not less than three nor more than five employees of the Veterans Health Services and Research Administration who are senior in grade to the respondent. The majority of the members of such board shall be employed in the same category of position as the respondent.

"(3) The Chief Medical Director may delegate the performance of the function of appointing a disciplinary board to an employee of the Veterans Health Services and Research Administration who is not involved in deciding whether to file charges to be determined by the board and who is not subordinate to any official involved in making such decision.";

(2) in subsection (b), by striking out "Administrator" and inserting in lieu thereof "Secretary";

(3) in subsection (d)—

(A) in the first sentence, by striking out "Administrator" and all that follows and inserting in lieu thereof "Secretary that the proposed disciplinary action be sustained or modified within limitations prescribed by the Secretary.";

(B) in the second, third, and fourth sentences, by striking out "Administrator" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "Secretary";

(4) in subsection (e), by striking out "Administrator" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "Secretary"; and

(5) by adding at the end the following:

"(f)(1) A disciplinary board is not required in the case of a disciplinary action if the proposed action is suspension for 14 days or less, reassignment without a reduction in basic pay, reduction in rank without a reduction in basic pay, reprimand, or admonishment.

"(2) An employee against whom a disciplinary action described in paragraph (1) of this subsection is proposed to be taken shall be entitled to—

"(A) an advance written notice stating the specific reasons for the proposed action;

"(B) a reasonable time to answer orally and in writing and to furnish affidavits and other documentary evidence in support of the answer;

"(C) representation by an attorney or other spokesperson; and

"(D) a written decision and the specific reasons for the decision at the earliest practicable date.

"(3) Disciplinary actions described in paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be subject to review under either the provisions of section 4110A of this title (in the case of employees appointed under authority of this title who are members of a unit determined appropriate under section 7112 of title 5) or an agency review procedure to be established by the Secretary (in the case of such employees who are not members of such a unit). Any such agency review procedure established by the Secretary shall include—

"(A) an informal review of the decision on the disciplinary action by an official of a higher level than the official who made the decision;

"(B) a prompt decision by such higher level official and a right to formal review by an impartial examiner within the Department of Veterans Affairs;

"(C) a prompt report of the findings and recommendations by the impartial examiner; and

"(D) a prompt review of the examiner's findings and recommendations, together with any comments by the employee and the Department on such findings and recommendations, by an official of a higher level than the official who conducted the review pursuant to clause (A) of this paragraph.".

(b) GRIEVANCES.—(1) Subchapter I of chapter 73 is amended by inserting after section 4110 the following new section:

"§ 4110A. Grievances and certain disciplinary reviews

"(a)(1) The Secretary shall authorize review of Department of Veterans Affairs actions on the following matters under procedures established by collective bargaining in accordance with the provisions of chapter 71 of title 5:

"(A) Grievances of employees appointed under authority of this title who are members of a unit determined appropriate under section 7112 of title 5.

"(B) Subject to paragraph (2) of this subsection, disciplinary actions described in subsection 4110(f)(1) of this title involving such employees.

"(2) In the case of a review of a disciplinary action involving any question of clinical competence, as determined by either party, any person selected to serve as an arbitrator in such case under procedures established as provided in paragraph (1) of this subsection must be qualified as an arbitrator and must also be (A) qualified as a physician, dentist, or nurse, or (B) otherwise qualified, by specialized experience or training or both, in examining and adjudicating health-care issues.

"(b) For the purpose of resolving grievances of supervisors and employees appointed under authority of this chapter who are not members of a unit determined appropriate under section 7112 of title 5, the Secretary shall authorize review of action of the Department on such grievances pursuant to a Department review procedure established by the Secretary under section 4110(f)(3) of this title.".

"4110A. Grievances and certain disciplinary reviews.".

SEC. 268. PAYMENT OF PHYSICIANS' AND DENTISTS' SPECIAL PAY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other law and except as provided in subsection (b), effective with respect to pay periods beginning on or after April 1, 1990, the Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall pay the maximum amounts of special pay and incentive special pay authorized for physicians and dentists in section 4118 of title 38, United States Code, for such pay periods taking into account in the case of each physician and dentist the conditions specified in such section for determining the maximum amount applicable to such physician or dentist, as the case may be.

(b) EXCEPTION.—The Secretary is not required to pay the maximum amounts referred to in subsection (a) to physicians and dentists serving in any geographic area or in any specialty in which the Chief Medical Director has determined there is no significant recruitment and retention problem.

SEC. 269. PILOT PROGRAM OF PAY AND PERSONNEL MANAGEMENT PRACTICES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Chief Medical Director of the Department of Veterans Affairs shall conduct a pilot program at not less than five Department medical centers or independent outpatient clinics during calendar years 1990, 1991, and 1992, in order to determine—

(1) the effects of pay and personnel management practices of the Veterans Health Services and Research Administration on the ability of the Department to recruit and retain persons qualified to provide direct patient-care services or services incident to direct patient-care services in Department health-care facilities as employees in employee position categories in which the Department is experiencing recruitment and retention problems;

(2) whether it is desirable to establish programs which foster interdisciplinary professional collaboration and collegial relationships between physicians, registered nurses, and other employees providing direct patient care, and what effects such programs would have on the ability of the Department to recruit and retain registered nurses;

(3) whether it is desirable to create new alternatives for utilizing the skills and knowledge of registered nurses and other health-care professionals in furnishing direct patient care and services incident to the furnishing of such care, and what effects such alternatives would have on (A) the ability of the Department to recruit and retain persons qualified to provide such care and services, and (B) the cost of providing such care and services; and

(4) whether increasing the pay differential for evening and night shifts will attract adequate numbers of qualified workers for such shifts and result in more permanent day-shift assignments.

(b) CONDUCT OF PILOT PROGRAM.—In conducting the pilot program under subsection (a), the Chief Medical Director shall—

(1) at not less than one site, establish a collaborative practice committee involving physicians, nurses, and, as appropriate, other direct health-care personnel;

(2) at not less than one site, significantly increase the pay differential for evening and night service; and

(3) at not less than three sites, implement new alternatives for utilizing the skills and knowledge of registered nurses and other health-care professionals in furnishing direct patient care and services incident to the furnishing of such care.

(c) REPORTS.—(1)(A) Not later than May 1, 1991, the Chief Medical Director shall submit to the Secretary of Veterans Affairs a report on the experience under the pilot program during the first 12 months such program is conducted. The report shall contain—

(i) the Chief Medical Director's evaluation of the effect of each management practice undertaken in the pilot program on the ability of the Department of Veterans Affairs to recruit and retain health-care employees;

(ii) information on the cost factors associated with each such management practice;

(iii) an evaluation of the functioning and productivity of the employees involved in or affected in any substantial way by such practices;

(iv) a discussion of any effects on the quality and timeliness of care provided to veterans; and

(v) any planned administrative actions and any recommendations for legislation or administrative action that the Chief Medical Director considers appropriate to include in the report on the basis of the results of such pilot program.

(B) Not later than 60 days after receiving the report under subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall submit a copy of the report, together with any comments on the report and any recommendations for legislation that the Secretary considers appropriate, to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives.

(2)(A) Not later than May 1, 1993, the Chief Medical Director shall submit to the Secretary a final report on the pilot program required by subsection (a). In such report the Chief Medical Director shall—

(i) update all information contained in the report submitted pursuant to paragraph (1)(A) of this subsection;

(ii) make a final assessment of the pilot program based on the experience under the program during the 36 months for which the program was conducted; and

(iii) make any recommendations for legislation or administrative action that the Chief Medical Director considers appropriate.

(B) Not later than 60 days after receiving the report under subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives a copy of the report together with—

(i) any comments on the report that the Secretary considers appropriate;

(ii) the Secretary's final assessment of the pilot program based on the experience under the program during the 36 months for which the program was conducted; and

(iii) any recommendations for legislation that the Secretary considers appropriate.

SEC. 270. RATES OF PAY FOR CERTAIN PSYCHOLOGISTS.

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of Veterans Affairs, not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, shall utilize the authority provided in section 4107(g) of title 38, United States Code, to increase the rates of pay for clinical or counseling psychologists who hold diplomas as diplomates in psychology from an accredited authority recognized by the Secretary unless the Chief Medical Director of the Department of Veterans Affairs determines that such psychologists are not needed to furnish appropriate quality of psychological services for veterans. The amount by which such rate of pay shall be increased shall be the amount determined by the Secretary, upon the recommendation of the Chief Medical Director, to be necessary to make the pay for such psychologists competitive with the pay of psychologists with the same qualifications and credentials serving in non-Department of Veterans Affairs capacities comparable to the Department capacities in which the Department psychologists are serving.

(b) ELIGIBILITY.—(1) Section 2014(a)(1) is amended by striking out "qualified disabled veterans and veterans of the Vietnam era" and inserting in lieu thereof "certain disabled veterans, certain veterans of the Vietnam era, and veterans of the post-Vietnam era who are qualified for such employment and advancement".

(2) Subsection (b) of section 2014 is amended—

(A) in paragraph (1)—

(i) by striking out "veterans of the Vietnam era" and inserting in lieu thereof "veterans referred to in paragraph (2)"; and

(ii) by striking out clause (B) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(B) a veteran referred to in paragraph (2) shall be eligible for a readjustment appointment during the four-year period beginning on the date of the veteran's latest discharge or other separation from active duty;";

(iii) by inserting "referred to in paragraph (2)" in clause (C) after "a veteran of the Vietnam era";

(iv) by striking out "and" at the end of clause (C);

(v) by striking out the period at the end of clause (D) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

(vi) by adding at the end the following new clause:

"(E) a veteran may not receive, after the date of the enactment of this clause, more than one readjustment appointment pursuant to this subsection."; and

(B) by inserting after paragraph (1) the following new paragraph (2):

"(2) This subsection applies to—

"(A) a veteran of the Vietnam era who—

"(i) is a disabled veteran; or

"(ii) during such era, served on active duty in the Vietnam theater of operations, as defined by the Secretary;

"(B) a veteran who has a service-connected disability rated at 30 percent or more; and

"(C) a veteran who served on active duty after the Vietnam era.".

(b) TRANSITION PROVISION.—If the eligibility of a veteran for an appointment pursuant to paragraph (1) of section 2014(b) of title 38, United States Code, would expire by reason of the provisions of clause (B) of such paragraph, as amended by subsection (a)), then, notwithstanding such clause, that veteran shall continue to be eligible for such an appointment until January 1, 1992.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—(1) Except as provided in paragraphs (2) and (3), the amendments made by subsection (a) shall take effect on January 1, 1990.

(2) Clause (E) of section 2014(b)(1) of title 38, United States Code (as added by subsection (a)), shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(3)(A) A veteran who has a service-connected disability rated at 30 percent or more or who served on active duty after the Vietnam era shall be eligible for appointments pursuant to section 2014(b)(1) of title 38, United States Code, on and after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(B) For the purposes of subparagraph (A)—

(i) the term "veteran" shall have the meaning referred to in section 2014(f) of title 38, United States Code; and

(ii) the terms "active duty" and "Vietnam era" shall have the meanings given such terms in section 101 (21) and (29), respectively, of title 38, United States Code.

SEC. 309. PILOT PROGRAM TO FURNISH EMPLOYMENT AND TRAINING INFORMATION AND SERVICES TO MEMBERS OF THE ARMED FORCES SEPARATING FROM THE ARMED FORCES.

(a) REQUIREMENT FOR PROGRAM.—During the three-year period beginning on October 1, 1989, the Secretary of Labor shall conduct a pilot program to furnish employment and training information and services to members of the Armed Forces within 180 days before such members are separated from the Armed Forces.

(b) AREAS TO BE COVERED BY THE PROGRAM.—The Secretary shall conduct the pilot program in not more than five geographically dispersed States in which the Secretary determines that employment and training services to eligible veterans will not be unduly limited by the provision of such services to members of the Armed Forces under the pilot program.

(c) UTILIZATION OF SPECIFIC PERSONNEL.—The Secretary shall utilize disabled veterans' outreach program specialists or local veterans' employment representatives to the maximum extent feasible to furnish employment and training information and services under the pilot program.

(d) REPORT.—Not later than February 1, 1992, the Secretary shall transmit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives a report on the experience under the pilot program.

(1) in subsection (a)(2), by striking out "and prepayment"; and

(2) in subsection (b)(3)(A), by inserting "30," before "32".

TITLE IV—HOME LOAN

SEC. 400. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Veterans Home Loan Guaranty Restructuring and Solvency Act of 1989".

SEC. 401. ESTABLISHMENT OF HOME LOAN GUARANTY FUND.

(a) NEW FUND.—(1) Chapter 37 is amended by inserting after section 1824 the following new section:

"§ 1824A. Home Loan Guaranty Fund

"(a) There is hereby established in the Treasury of the United States a revolving fund known as the Home Loan Guaranty Fund (hereinafter referred to as the 'Guaranty Fund').

"(b) The Guaranty Fund shall be available to the Secretary for all operations (other than administrative expenses) carried out with respect to (1) housing loans guaranteed or insured under this chapter which are made after September 30, 1989, and (2) loans to which section 1814 of this title applies and which are assumed after such date.

"(c)(1) All fees collected under sections 1803(a)(3)(A) and 1829 of this title after September 30, 1989, shall be credited to the Guaranty Fund.

"(2) There shall also be credited to the Guaranty Fund—

"(A) for each housing loan guaranteed or insured under this chapter after September 30, 1989, an amount equal to 0.25 percent of the original amount of such loan for each of the three fiscal years beginning with the fiscal year in which such loan is guaranteed or insured (except in the case of a loan guaranteed or insured during fiscal year 1990, for which such amount shall be credited for each of the three fiscal years beginning with fiscal year 1991);

"(B) all collections of principal and interest and the proceeds from the use of property held, or from the sale of property disposed of, with respect to loans to which subsection (b) of this section applies;

"(C) amounts required to be credited under section 1829(c) of this section; and

"(D) all income from the investments described in subsection (d) of this section.

"(d)(1) The Secretary of the Treasury shall invest the portion of the Guaranty Fund that is not required to meet current payments made from the Guaranty Fund, as determined by the Secretary of Veterans Affairs, in obligations of the United States or in obligations guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States.

"(2) In making investments under paragraph (1) of this subsection, the Secretary of the Treasury shall select obligations having maturities suitable to the needs of the Guaranty Fund, as determined by the Secretary of Veterans Affairs, and bearing interest at suitable rates, as determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration current market yields on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States of comparable maturities.".

(2) The table of sections of subchapter III of chapter 37 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 1824 the following new item:

"1824A. Home Loan Guaranty Fund.".

(b) ANNUAL SUBMISSION OF INFORMATION ON THE LOAN GUARANTY REVOLVING FUND AND THE HOME LOAN GUARANTY FUND.—(1) Subchapter III of chapter 37 is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"§ 1834. Annual Submission of Information on the Loan Guaranty Revolving Fund and the Home Loan Guaranty Fund

"(a) In the documents providing detailed information on the budget for the Department of Veterans Affairs that the Secretary of Veterans Affairs submits to the Congress in conjunction with the President's budget submission for each fiscal year pursuant to section 1105 of title 31, United States Code, the Secretary shall include—

"(1) a thorough description of the operations of the Loan Guaranty Revolving Fund and the Home Loan Guaranty Fund during the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year in which such budget is submitted; and

"(2) the needs of such funds, if any, for appropriations in—

"(A) the fiscal year in which the budget is submitted; and

"(B) the fiscal year for which the budget is submitted.

"(b) The matters submitted under subsection (a) of this section shall include, with respect to each fund referred to in subsection (a), the following:

"(1) Information and financial data on the operations of the fund during the fiscal year before the fiscal year in which such matters are submitted and estimated financial data and related information on the operation of the fund for—

"(A) the fiscal year of the submission; and

"(B) the fiscal year following the fiscal year of the submission.

"(2) Estimates of the amount of revenues derived by the fund in the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year of the submission, in the fiscal year of the submission, and in the fiscal year following the fiscal year of the submission from each of the following sources:

"(A) Fees collected under sections 1803(a)(3)(A) and 1829 of this title for each category of loan guaranteed, insured, or made under this chapter.

"(B) Federal Government contributions made under section 1824A(c)(2)(A) of this title.

"(C) Federal Government payments under section 1829(c) of this title.

"(D) Investment income.

"(E) Sales of foreclosed properties.

"(F) Loan asset sales.

"(G) Each additional source of revenue.

"(3) Information, for each fiscal year referred to in paragraph (2) of this subsection, regarding the types of dispositions made of defaults on loans guaranteed, insured, or made under this chapter, including the cost to the fund, and the numbers, of such types of dispositions.".

(2) The table of sections of subchapter III of chapter 37 is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 1833 the following new item:

"1834. Annual Submission of Information on the Loan Guaranty Revolving Fund and the Home Loan Guaranty Fund.".

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Section 1824 is amended—

(1) in subsection (b), by inserting "and the operations carried out in connection with the Home Loan Guaranty Fund established by section 1824A" before the period at the end of the first sentence; and

(2) in subsection (c)—

(A) by inserting "before October 1, 1989" after "title" in clause (2); and

(B) by inserting "with respect to housing loans guaranteed or insured under this chapter before October 1, 1989" after "chapter" in clause (3).

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsections (a) and (c) shall take effect on October 1, 1989, and shall apply with respect to loans closed or assumed on or after that date.

SEC. 402. LOAN FEE.

"§ 1829. Loan fee

"(a)(1) Except as provided in subsection (c), a fee shall be collected from each veteran obtaining a housing loan guaranteed or insured under this chapter, and from each person obtaining a loan under section 1833(a) of this title, and no such loan may be guaranteed, made, or insured under this chapter until the fee payable under this section has been remitted to the Secretary.

"(2) The amount of such fee shall be 1.25 percent of the total loan amount, except that—

"(A) in the case of a loan made under section 1833(a) of this title, the amount of such fee shall be one percent of the total loan amount;

"(B) in the case of a guaranteed or insured loan for a purchase (except for a purchase referred to in section 1812(a) of this title), or for construction, with respect to which the veteran has made a downpayment of not less than 5 percent of the total purchase price or construction cost, the amount of such fee shall be 0.75 percent of the total loan amount;

"(C) in the case of a guaranteed or insured loan for a purchase (except for a purchase referred to in section 1812(a) of this title), or for construction, with respect to which the veteran has made a downpayment of not less than 10 percent of the total purchase price or construction cost, the amount of such fee shall be 0.25 percent of the total loan amount; and

"(D) in the case of a guaranteed or insured loan for a purchase referred to in section 1812(a) of this title with respect to which the veteran has made a downpayment of not less than 10 percent of the total purchase price, the amount of such fee shall be 0.75 percent of the total loan amount.

"(3) The amount of the fee may be included in the loan and paid from the proceeds thereof.

"(b) Except as provided in subsection (c) of this section, a fee shall be collected from a person assuming a loan to which section 1814 of this title applies. The amount of the fee shall be equal to 0.75 percent of the balance of the loan on the date of the transfer of the property.

"(c)(1) A fee may not be collected under this section from a veteran who is receiving compensation (or who but for the receipt of retirement pay would be entitled to receive compensation) or from a surviving spouse of any veteran (including a person who died in the active military, naval, or air service) who died from a service-connected disability. There shall be credited to the Home Loan Guaranty Fund, on behalf of such veteran or surviving spouse (in addition to the amount required to be credited to such fund under section 1824A(c)(2)(A) of this title), the amount equal to the fee that, except for this subsection, would be collected from such veteran or surviving spouse.

"(2) Credits to the Home Loan Guaranty Fund under paragraph (1) of this subsection with respect to loans, guaranteed, insured, or made under this chapter during fiscal year 1990 shall be made in October 1990.

"(d)(1) Subject to paragraphs (2) and (3) of this subsection, the Secretary may increase each fee percentage specified in subsections (a) and (b) of this section, or each such fee percentage as previously increased under this paragraph, if the Secretary determines, on the basis of economic projections and analyses, that the Home Loan Guaranty Fund would, except for such increase, be unable to pay the valid claims of holders of defaulted loans during the first 24 months that such increase is to be in effect. In exercising the authority under this paragraph, the Secretary shall increase all such fee percentages by multiplying each such fee percentage by the same factor.

"(2) An increased percentage prescribed by the Secretary under paragraph (1) of this subsection for a fee required to be collected under subsection (a) or (b) of this section may not exceed the percentage determined by multiplying the percentage specified for such fee in that subsection by 1.2.

"(3) The Secretary may not in any fiscal year increase fee percentages under paragraph (1) of this subsection unless the Secretary first submits to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives a report containing the Secretary's determination to increase the fee percentages, the factor by which the fee percentages are to be increased, and the economic projections and analyses on which the Secretary bases such determination. Any such report shall be submitted not later than the day on which the President, pursuant to section 1105 of title 31, submits to the Congress the budget for the fiscal year in which the increase is proposed to take effect. On the same day that the Secretary submits the report to the committees, the Secretary shall submit a copy of the report to the Director of the Congressional Budget Office.

"(4) Not later than 30 days after the Secretary submits the report to the committees, the Director of the Congressional Budget Office shall transmit to the committees the Director's views on the Secretary's report.

"(e)(1) Subject to paragraphs (2), (3), and (4) of this subsection, the Secretary may reduce each fee percentage increased under paragraph (1) of this subsection if the Secretary determines, on the basis of economic projections and analyses, that the Home Loan Guaranty Fund will, despite such reduction, be able to pay the valid claims of holders of defaulted loans during the first 24 months that the reduced fee percentage is to be in effect.

"(2) In exercising the authority under paragraph (1) of this subsection, the Secretary shall reduce all such fee percentages by multiplying each such fee percentage by the same factor.

"(3) The percentage for a particular fee may not be reduced below the percentage specified for that fee in subsection (a)(2) of this section.

"(4) At least 30 days before reducing fee percentages under this subsection, the Secretary shall provide the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives with notice of the proposed reduction, a copy of the Secretary's determination under paragraph (1) of this subsection, and the economic projections and analyses on which the Secretary bases such determination.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall take effect on October 1, 1989, and shall apply with respect to loans closed or assumed on or after that date.

SEC. 403. INDEMNIFICATION OF VETERAN AFTER DEFAULT.

(a) EXCEPTIONS FROM LIABILITY.—Section 1803 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(e) Any individual who pays a fee under section 1829 of this title, or is exempted under section 1829(c) from paying such fee, after September 30, 1989, with respect to a housing loan (other than a loan made under section 1833(a) of this title) shall have no liability to the Secretary with respect to the loan for any loss resulting from any default of such individual except in the case of (1) fraud, misrepresentation, or bad faith by the individual in obtaining the loan or approval of an assumption of the loan or in connection with the loan default, or (2) a default or liquidation resulting from circumstances within the individual's control.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The last sentence of section 1832(a)(1) is amended by striking out "If" and inserting in lieu thereof "Except as provided in section 1803(e) of this title, if".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the amendments made by this section shall take effect on October 1, 1989, and shall apply with respect to loans closed or assumed on or after that date.

(2) Clause (2) of section 1803(e) of title 38, United States Code (as added by subsection (a)), shall take effect on the date on which the Secretary of Veterans Affairs issues final regulations to implement such subsection.

SEC. 404. SALE OF VENDEE LOANS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1833(a)(3) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (A), by striking out "1989" and inserting in lieu thereof "1990";

(2) in subparagraph (B), by striking out "1989" and inserting in lieu thereof "1990";

(3) in subparagraph (C), by striking out "1989" and inserting in lieu thereof "1990"; and

(4) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(D) Notwithstanding the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 and the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974, all amounts received from the sale of such loans shall be credited without any reduction, for the fiscal year in which the amount is received, as offsetting collections of the Loan Guaranty Revolving Fund (established by section 1824 of this title) or the Home Loan Guaranty Fund (established by section 1824A of this title), for which a fee was collected (or from which a fee was exempted from being collected) at the time the loan was originally guaranteed. The total amount credited to the Loan Guaranty Revolving Fund or the Home Loan Guaranty Fund for a fiscal year shall offset outlays attributed to such Fund, as the case may be, during such fiscal year.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect on October 1, 1989.

SEC. 405. COMPUTATION OF ENTITLEMENT AMOUNT.

(a) OPTIONAL INCREASED ENTITLEMENT.—Section 1803(a) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1)(B), by striking out "The" and inserting in lieu thereof "Except in the case of an election pursuant to paragraph (3)(A) of this subsection, the"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(3)(A) Subject to subparagraphs (B) and (C) of this paragraph, the maximum amount of guaranty entitlement available to a veteran for purposes specified in clauses (1), (2), (3), and (6) of section 1810(a) of this title may, upon the election of the veteran, be increased by not more than $5,000 in connection with a specific loan. The Secretary shall collect from that veteran a fee equal to 0.1 percent of the total loan amount for each $1,000 (and fraction of $1,000) by which the veteran elects to increase that maximum amount.

"(B) The total amount of the guaranty entitlement available to a veteran in connection with a loan for a purchase or construction may not be increased pursuant to subparagraph (A) of this paragraph by an amount which would cause the sum of the guaranty and any downpayment to exceed 25 percent of the price of the purchase or construction.

"(C) The Secretary may waive the limitation in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph in the case of a loan for the purchase or construction of housing whenever the Secretary determines, in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary, that the housing is being purchased or constructed in a housing market area for which it is the general practice of lenders, in the case of loans to be guaranteed under this chapter, to require the payment of points in, or to discount the loans by, such large amounts as to make it unlikely that a veteran could obtain such a loan for the purchase or construction of housing in such market area.

"(D) The amount of the fee imposed by subparagraph (A) of this paragraph may be included in the loan and paid from the proceeds thereof.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE AND APPLICABILITY.—The amendments made by subsection (a) shall take effect on October 1, 1989, and shall apply with respect to loans guaranteed or insured under chapter 37 of title 38, United States Code, after September 30, 1989.

SEC. 406. PROCEDURES ON DEFAULT.

(a) NOTIFICATION REQUIREMENT.—Section 1832(a) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(5) When a default has occurred in the payment of any loan made, guaranteed, or insured under this chapter and the holder of the obligation has refused a tender of a payment of a significant portion of an amount payable under the terms of the loan, the Secretary may require the holder of the obligation to notify the Secretary as soon as such tendered payment has been refused. The Secretary may require that any such notification include a statement of the circumstances of the default, the amount tendered, the amount of the indebtedness on the date of the tender, the reasons for the holder's refusal, and such other information as the Secretary determines is necessary in order to service defaulted loans.".

(b) COMPUTATION OF NET VALUE.—Section 1832(c)(1)(C) is amended by—

(1) striking out "(i)";

(2) striking out "(ii)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(i)"; and

(3) inserting "(other than the cost of borrowing funds to acquire the property), and minus (ii) 50 percent of the cost to the Government of borrowing the amount equal to the excess, if any, of the total indebtedness over the amount guaranteed under this chapter" before the period at the end.

(c) POSTPONEMENT OF EXPIRATION DATE.—Paragraph (11) of section 1832(c) is amended by striking out "October 1, 1989" and inserting in lieu thereof "October 1, 1991.".

SEC. 407. REFINANCING LOANS.

(a) REPEAL OF LIMITATION ON AMOUNT OF REFINANCING LOAN.—Section 1810 is amended by striking out subsection (h).

(b) CONDITIONS FOR GUARANTEEING OR MAKING A REFINANCING LOAN.—Subsection (b) of section 1810 is amended—

(1) in paragraph (5), by inserting "except in the case of a loan described in clause (7) or (8) of this subsection," after "(5);

(2) by striking out "and," at the end of paragraph (5);

(3) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (6) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon; and

(4) by adding at the end the following new paragraphs:

"(7) in the case of a loan (other than a loan made for a purpose specified in subsection (a)(8)) that is made to refinance a construction loan, an installment land sales contract, or a loan assumed by the veteran and that provides for a lower interest rate than the loan being refinanced, the amount of the loan to be guaranteed or made does not exceed the lesser of—

"(A) the reasonable value of the dwelling or farm residence securing the loan, as determined pursuant to section 1831 of this title; or

"(B) the sum of the outstanding balance on the loan to be refinanced and the closing costs (including discounts) actually paid by the veteran, as specified by the Secretary in regulations; and

"(8) in the case of a loan to refinance a loan other than a loan or installment sales contract described in clause (7), the amount of the loan to be guaranteed or made does not exceed 90 percent of the reasonable value of the dwelling or farm residence securing the loan, as determined pursuant to section 1831 of this title.".

SEC. 408. WAIVER OF INDEBTEDNESS.

Section 3102 is amended—

(1) in subsection (a), by adding at the end the following: "The Secretary shall include in the notification a statement of the debtor's right to submit an application for a waiver under this subsection and a description of the procedures for submitting the application."; and

(2) in subsection (b)—

(A) by striking out "101 and 1801" and inserting in lieu thereof, "101, 1801, and 1802(a)(2)(C)(ii) of this title"; and

(B) by adding at the end the following: "An application for relief under this subsection must be made within one year after the date on which the Secretary notifies the debtor of the indebtedness. The Secretary shall include in the notification a statement of the debtor's right to submit an application for a waiver under this subsection and a description of the procedures for submitting the application.".

SEC. 409. CLARIFYING CORRECTION REGARDING ENTITLEMENT.

Section 1802(a)(2)(C) is amended—

(1) by striking out "Each veteran," and inserting in lieu thereof "Each person";

(2) in clause (i), by inserting "is a veteran who" after "(i)"; and

(3) in clause (ii), by inserting "without regard to whether such person has been discharged or released from active duty" [before the period at the end?].

TITLE V—MEMORIAL AFFAIRS

SEC. 501. REIMBURSEMENT FOR COST OF CEMETERY HEADSTONE OR MARKER.

Subsection (d) of section 906 of title 38, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking out "actual costs incurred by or on behalf of such person in acquiring" in the first sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "cost of acquiring";

(2) by inserting after the first sentence the following: "The cost referred to in the preceding sentence is the cost actually incurred by or on behalf of such person or the cost prepaid by the deceased individual, as the case may be."; and

(3) by striking out "the preceding sentence" and inserting in lieu thereof "this subsection".

SEC. 502. CREMATED REMAINS IN ARLINGTON NATIONAL CEMETERY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 24 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"§ 1010. Burial of cremated remains in Arlington National Cemetery

"The Secretary of the Army shall designate an area of appropriate size within Arlington National Cemetery for the unmarked interment of the ashes of persons eligible for interment in Arlington National Cemetery whose remains were cremated and shall prescribe regulations for such interments. The area selected by the Secretary shall be an area that is not suitable for the burial of casketed remains.".

"1010. Burial of cremated remains in Arlington National Cemetery.".

SEC. 503. NEW ARIZONA NATIONAL CEMETERY.

(a) APPOINTMENT OF EMPLOYEES.—The Secretary of Veterans Affairs may, without regard to laws relating to appointments in the competitive service, employ in a position in the Department of Veterans Affairs in connection with the administration of the Arizona Veterans Memorial Cemetery transferred to the Department pursuant to section 346 of the Veterans' Benefits and Services Act of 1988 (Public Law 100-322; 102 Stat. 541) any person who (1) was employed by the State of Arizona in connection with the administration of such cemetery on the day before the date of the transfer, and (2) meets the criteria and qualifications established by the Secretary for employment in such position.

(b) OPERATING BUDGET PLAN.—(1) For each of fiscal years 1989, 1990, and 1991, the Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall prepare an operating budget plan for the administration of the Arizona Veterans Memorial Cemetery referred to in subsection (a).

(2) The operating budget plan for a fiscal year shall include the anticipated sources of funds for such fiscal year, the Secretary's estimate of any budget deficit (taking into consideration the operating needs of the cemetery for such fiscal year and the limitations and requirements in section 346(f) of the Veterans' Benefits and Services Act of 1988), and the Secretary's estimate of the workload for such fiscal year.

(3) The Secretary shall transmit the budget operating plan for a fiscal year to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives—

(A) in the case of fiscal year 1989, not later than 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act;

(B) in the case of fiscal year 1990, not later than October 1, 1989; and

(C) in the case of fiscal year 1991, not later than February 1, 1990.

TITLE VI—MINORITY AFFAIRS

SEC. 601. ASSIGNMENT OF MINORITY ISSUES TO AN ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF VETERANS AFFAIRS.

(a) POSITION AND FUNCTIONS OF ASSISTANT SECRETARY.—Section 4 of the Department of Veterans Affairs Act (Public Law 100-527; 102 Stat. 2638) is amended by adding at the end of subsection (b) the following new paragraph:

"(11) The review and assessment of the effects of policies, regulations, and programs and other activities of the Department on minority veterans and the coordination and monitoring of policies facilitating access of such veterans to services and benefits provided under laws administered by the Department.".

(b) "MINORITY VETERANS" DEFINED.—Section 4 of such Act is further amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(g) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section:

"(1) The term 'minority veterans' means veterans who are—

"(A) black individuals;

"(B) Native Americans;

"(C) Hispanic-Americans;

SEC. 602. REESTABLISHMENT OF THE ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON NATIVE AMERICAN VETERANS.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—Effective October 1, 1989, the Advisory Committee on Native-American Veterans established by section 19032 of the Veterans' Health-Care Amendments of 1986 (title XIX of Public Law 99-272; 100 Stat. 388) is reestablished.

(b) INCORPORATION OF PROVISIONS OF PRIOR LAW.—Subsections (b) through (e) and (g) of section 19032 of the Veterans' Health-Care Amendments of 1986 shall apply to the Advisory Committee on Native-American Veterans reestablished by subsection (a).

(c) REPORTS.—(1) Not later than March 31, 1990, and March 31, 1991, the Committee shall submit to the Secretary of Veterans Affairs a report containing the findings and any recommendations of the Committee regarding the matters described in section 19032(b) of the Veterans' Health-Care Amendments of 1986, and the matters described in section 603 of this Act, that were examined and evaluated by the Committee during the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year in which the report is submitted.

(2) Not later than 60 days after receiving each such report, the Secretary shall transmit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives a copy of the report, together with any comments and recommendations concerning the report that the Secretary considers appropriate.

(d) TERMINATION.—The Committee shall terminate 90 days after the date on which the second report is transmitted by the Committee pursuant to subsection (c).

SEC. 603. STUDY OF HOME LOANS TO NATIVE-AMERICAN VETERANS.

(a) STUDY REQUIRED.—The Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall conduct a study to determine the following:

(1) The extent to which veterans who are Native Americans living on Native-American trust lands participate in the Department of Veterans Affairs home loan guaranty program under chapter 37 of title 38, United States Code.

(2) Whether the level of participation of such veterans in such program is lower than the level of participation of all veterans and, if so the reasons for the lower level of participation, including any reasons relating to the structure of the home loan guaranty program, cultural factors, and attitudinal factors.

(3) What, if any, legislative, regulatory, and administrative actions are necessary to improve the access of the veterans referred to in paragraph (1) to benefits under chapter 37 of title 38, United States Code.

(4) Whether it would be desirable, feasible, and equitable to utilize the direct home loan authority under section 1811 of title 38, United States Code, to promote increased home ownership among such veterans.

(b) CONSIDERATIONS.—In conducting the study, the Secretary shall consider—

(1) the concerns and recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Native-American Veterans contained in the reports submitted by that committee pursuant to section 19032(f) of the Veterans' Health-Care Amendments of 1986 (title XIX of Public Law 99-272; 100 Stat. 388); and

(2) the experience of the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Department of Housing and Urban Development in developing and carrying out programs designed to meet the home financing needs of Native Americans.

(c) REPORT.—Not later than March 1, 1990, the Secretary shall transmit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives a report on the results of the study conducted under subsection (a).

(d) DEFINITIONS.—For the purposes of this section—

(1) the term "Native-American trust land" means any land that—

(A) is held in trust by the United States for Native Americans;

(B) is subject to restrictions on alienation imposed by the United States on Indian lands;

(C) is owned by a Regional Corporation or a village corporation, as such terms are defined in section 3(b) of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (43 U.S.C. 1602(b)); or

(D) is on any island in the Pacific Ocean if such land is, by cultural tradition, communally-owned land, as determined by the Secretary of Veterans Affairs; and

(2) the term "Native American" means—

(A) an Indian, as defined in section 4(a) of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (25 U.S.C. 450b(a));

(B) a Native Hawaiian, as defined in section 8 of the Native Hawaiian Health Care Act of 1988 (Public Law 100-579; 102 Stat. 2921);

(C) an Alaska Native, within the meaning provided for the term "Native" in section 3(b) of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (43 U.S.C. 1602(b)); and

(D) a Pacific Islander, within the meaning of the Native American Programs Act of 1974 (42 U.S.C. 2991 et seq.).

TITLE VII—MISCELLANEOUS

SEC. 701. SECURITY SERVICES.

(a) SECURITY AND LAW ENFORCEMENT FUNCTIONS.—Section 218 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(f) The Secretary may not delegate the functional and technical supervision of the performance of security and law enforcement functions under this section to any official outside the Office of the Secretary.".

(b) REPORT ON SECURITY AND LAW ENFORCEMENT MATTERS.—Not later than 120 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives a report containing—

(1) the Secretary's plan for improving the training, recruitment, retention, and pay of security and law enforcement personnel of the Department of Veterans Affairs; and

(2) the Secretary's assessment of—

(A) the need, after considering potential alternatives, for establishing a policy on the issuance of weapons to such personnel assigned to medical centers of the Department located in high-crime areas and the use of weapons by such personnel;

(B) various options available to the Secretary for providing improved protection for such personnel assigned to medical centers referred to in subclause (A);

(C) various options available to the Secretary for providing improved protection for such personnel assigned to medical centers of the Department not located in high-crime areas;

(D) the adequacy of the number and deployment of security and law enforcement personnel at each of the Department medical centers.

SEC. 702. EXPANSION OF MULTIYEAR PROCUREMENT AUTHORITY TO INCLUDE NON-MEDICAL ITEMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 114 is amended—

(2) in subsection (a), by striking out "for use in Veterans' Administration health-care facilities";

(3) in subsection (b)(2)(A), by striking out "health-care"; and

(4) in subsection (e)—

(A) by striking out paragraph (2); and

(B) by redesignating paragraphs (3) and (4) as paragraphs (2) and (3), respectively.

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 1 is amended by striking out the item relating to section 114 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"114. Multiyear procurement.".

SEC. 703. NOTICE OF PROCEDURAL RIGHTS AND OTHER INFORMATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 71 of title 38, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"§ 4011. Notice of procedural rights and other information

"(a) In the case of a claim for benefits under laws administered by the Department of Veterans Affairs, the Secretary, as to proceedings other than proceedings before the Board, or the Chairman of the Board, as to proceedings before the Board, shall, at each procedural stage relating to the disposition of such a claim, beginning with the decision after an initial review or determination, and including the furnishing of a statement of the case and the making of a final decision by the Board, provide to the claimant and such claimant's authorized representative, if any, written notice of the procedural rights of the claimant and the rationale for the decision, including a summary of the evidence (or lack of evidence) supporting the decision.

"(b) The notice required by subsection (a) of this section shall be on such forms as the Secretary or the Chairman, respectively, shall prescribe and shall include, in easily understandable language, with respect to proceedings before the Department of Veterans Affairs the following:

"(1) Descriptions of all subsequent procedural stages provided for by statute, regulation, or Department of Veterans Affairs policy.

"(2) Descriptions of all rights of the claimant expressly provided for in or pursuant to this chapter, of the claimant's rights to a hearing, to reconsideration, to appeal, and to representation, and of any specific procedures necessary to obtain the various forms of review available for consideration of the claim.

"(3) In the case of an appeal to the Board, the opportunity for a hearing before a traveling section of the Board.

"(4) Such other information as the Secretary or the Chairman of the Board, respectively, as a matter of discretion, determines would be useful and practical to assist the claimant in obtaining full consideration of the claim.".

(b) The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 71 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"4011. Notice of procedural rights and other information.".

SEC. 704. USE OF INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE AND SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION DATA FOR INCOME VERIFICATION.

(a) DISCLOSURE OF RETURN INFORMATION.—Paragraph (7)(D) of section 6103(l) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of clause (vi);

(2) by striking out the period at the end of clause (vii) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and";

(3) by adding at the end the following new clause:

"(viii)(I) any needs-based pension provided under chapter 15 of title 38, United States Code, or any other law administered by the Department of Veterans Affairs;

"(II) parents' dependency and indemnity compensation provided under section 415 of title 38, United States Code;

"(III) health-care services furnished under sections 610(a) (1)(I) and (2)(A), 610(b), and 612(a)(2)(B) of title 38, United States Code; and

"(IV) compensation pursuant to a rating of total disability awarded by reason of inability to secure or follow a substantially gainful occupation as a result of a service-connected disability, or service-connected disabilities, not rated as total; except that, in such cases, only wage and self-employment information may be disclosed."; and

(4) by inserting before the period at the end of the heading "or to the Department of Veterans Affairs".

"§ 3117. Protection of benefit applicants and recipients from improper use of certain information

"(a)(1) In order to protect applicants for and recipients of the benefits and services described in paragraph (2) of this subsection from the improper use of information obtained from the Commissioner of Social Security or the Secretary of the Treasury under section 6103(l)(7)(D)(viii) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (26 U.S.C. 6103(l)(7)(D)(viii)), the Secretary may not terminate, deny, suspend, or reduce any such benefits or services of an individual until the Secretary has complied with the requirements in section 1137(c) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1320b-7(c)), and such requirements shall be fully applicable in the case of such benefits and services.

"(2) The benefits and services described in this paragraph are—

"(A) needs-based pension benefits provided under chapter 15 of this title or under any other law administered by the Department of Veterans Affairs;

"(B) parents' dependency and indemnity compensation provided under section 415 of this title;

"(C) health-care services furnished under sections 610(a) (1)(I) and (2)(A), 610(b), and 612(a)(2)(B) of this title; and

"(D) compensation pursuant to a rating of total disability awarded by reason of inability to secure or follow a substantially gainful occupation as a result of a service-connected disability, or service-connected disabilities, not rated as total.

"(b) In the case of compensation described in subsection (a)(2)(D) of this section, the Secretary may independently verify or otherwise act upon wage or self-employment data referred to in subsection (a) of this section only if the Secretary finds that the amount and duration of the earnings reported therein clearly indicate that the individual may no longer be qualified for a rating of total disability.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 3116 the following new item:

"3117. Protection of benefit applicants and recipients from improper use of certain information.".

(c) INITIAL NOTIFICATION OF INCOME VERIFICATION.—Not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act and prior to obtaining information from the Commissioner of Social Security or the Secretary of the Treasury under section 6103(l)(7)(D)(viii) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, the Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall notify applicants for and recipients of the benefits described in subsection (a)(2) (A), (B), and (D) of section 3117 of title 38, United States Code (as added by subsection (b)), that income information furnished by such applicants and recipients may be compared with information obtained from the Commissioner of Social Security or the Secretary of the Treasury under section 6103(l)(7)(D)(viii) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986. Thereafter, the Secretary shall notify all new applicants for such benefits and for services described under subsection (a)(2)(C) of such section 3117 that income information furnished by them may be so compared and shall periodically renotify all recipients of such benefits and services.

(d) PAYMENT OF ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS.—The costs incurred by the Secretary in obtaining, verifying, and using information disclosed pursuant to the amendments made by subsection (a) shall be paid for out of the Department of Veterans Affairs compensation and pension account, and amounts collected as a result of such actions shall be paid into such account.

SEC. 705. COURT OF VETERANS APPEALS.

(a) EXCLUSIVE JURISDICTION.—Notwithstanding section 402 of the Veterans' Judicial Review Act and section 4052(a) of title 38, United States Code, the jurisdiction of the Court of Veterans Appeals to review decisions of the Board of Veterans' Appeals with respect to a matter covered by sections 775 and 784 of such title or a matter arising under chapter 37 of such title shall not be exclusive in cases in which a notice of disagreement is filed under section 4004 of such title before the end of the 30-day period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) JUDICIAL PERSONNEL FINANCIAL DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS.—(1) Section 308 of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978 (28 U.S.C. App. 308) is amended—

(A) in clause (9), and inserting "United States Court of Veterans Appeals;" after "Appeals;"; and

(B) in clause (10)—

(i) by striking out "or" the first place it appears; and

(ii) by inserting a comma and "or of the United States Court of Veterans Appeals" after "Appeals".

(2) Not later than 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, each person who, on that date, is a judge of the United States Court of Veterans Appeals or a judicial employee of such court and each person who, before that date, has been nominated by the President to be a judge on such court shall file a report containing the information described in section 302(b) of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978 (28 U.S.C. App. 302(b)). Subsections (e), (f), and (g) of section 302 of such Act shall apply to the requirement in the preceding sentence.

AMENDMENT NO. 947

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, on behalf of Senators CRANSTON and MURKOWSKI, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN], for Mr. CRANSTON (for himself and Mr. MURKOWSKI), proposes an amendment numbered 947.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The text of the amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Amendments Submitted.")

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I rise in strong support for the committee amendment to S. 13, as reported and urge the Senate to also support it. I will not discuss each of the provisions of the amendment. However, I would like to express my thoughts on three of the provisions.

THIRD-PARTY REIMBURSEMENT

I am especially pleased that Senator CRANSTON, Senator GRAHAM, and I were able to reach an agreement to include in the amendment provisions to expand and improve VA's third-party reimbursement program. This issue was one of great contention and we worked very hard to reach this agreement. I thank Senators CRANSTON and GRAHAM for their assistance on this issue which was of utmost importance to me. As my colleagues will note from reviewing the additional views of Senator CRANSTON as well as those of Senators SIMPSON, THURMOND, and myself this is certainly a difficult issue. Let me briefly explain the agreement.

First, the amendment would provide VA with the authority to bill health insurers for the cost of care provided to service-connected veterans rated at 20 percent or less for the treatment of non-service-connected disabilities. Although my bill—S. 573—would have provided such an authority for all service-connected veterans, I am pleased that we could begin the process by permitting such reimbursement for only certain service-connected veterans. This compromise proposal, which was also proposed by the administration as described in the fiscal year 1990 budget request, is an important first step in this area. Although I have not decided to immediately propose next year to expand the program to other service-connected veterans, I do not preclude that possibility. This proposal should save the Government over $20 million annually. I am pleased that the committee had the courage to support legislation which saves the Government—and thus the taxpayer—money at a time when such savings are not required of us.

Second, this bill would require the VA Secretary, to the extent feasible, to contract with the private sector for the recovery and collections of third-party reimbursements for the care of non-service-connected disabilities. Such contracts shall provide that the payment of fees to the contractor would be determined by the Secretary and shall be solely out of amounts recovered or collected by the contractor. Under current law and practice, VA employees carry out the billing and collections process. We believe that the private sector—who will have different incentives and expertise—may be a more effective collector. The amendment requires VA to submit reports so that the Congress can determine if that is indeed the case. I have requested a GAO study on VA's third-party reimbursement program. The results are expected sometime before the end of the year. I look forward to reviewing GAO's findings and recommendations in order to explore additional ways to make the program function more effectively.

PILOT TRAINING

Mr. President, I am pleased the committee amendment includes a proposal by our colleague from South Dakota which would allow veterans eligible for benefits under the Montgomery GI bill to use those benefits for a program of instruction leading to the ojective of professional pilot.

I commend the Senator from South Dakota for his commitment to providing veterans with the widest possible range of educational opportunities. I also commend him for his willingness to modify his original proposal so as to reduce the vulnerability of the program to abuse. This modification enables me to join in cosponsoring the provision. By limiting VA reimbursement to actual dual instruction and excluding solo practice and cross-country flights we will be excluding from VA reimbursement those flights least amenable to verification of the instructional nature of the flight. This change will help protect the integrity of this critical veterans' educational program.

NAMING OF THE LEAVENWORTH VA

I appaud the outstanding work of the Senators from Kansas, Senators KASSEBAUM and DOLE, on proposing that the committee include in this amendment a provision to name the VA medical center in Leavenworth, KS, in honor of Dwight D. Eisenhower. On July 25, 1989, Senator KASSEBAUM introduced S. 1404 which would have provided for the naming of this VA facility after President Eisenhower. I am pleased that the proposed naming meets all the criteria stipulated in the Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee rules. That is, it has the support of the Kansas congressional delegation and the veterans' service organizations. Next year will commemorate the 100th anniversary of President Eisenhower's birth. I am pleased that during the year in which we celebrate this outstanding American's birth, that a VA facility will be named in his honor. I thank the Kansas Senators for this thoughtful amendment.

I urge the adoption of the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 947) was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMPSON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 948

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, on behalf of Senators DASCHLE, KERRY, and CRANSTON, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN], for Mr. DASCHLE (for himself, Mr. KERRY, and Mr. CRANSTON), proposes an amendment numbered 948.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, on August 3, 1989, the Senate passed S. 1153, the Veteran's Agent Orange and Vietnam Service Benefits Act of 1989, after defeating a motion to table the bill by a vote of 92 to 8. Ninety-two Members of the Senate have expressed their will to bring victims of agent orange the relief they deserve—relief that is long overdue.

That relief comes in the form of a very modest proposal to deliever interim disability benefits to Vietnam veterans suffering from non-Hodgkin's lymphoma and soft-tissue sacoma, and to establish an independent, apolitical mechanism to identify any disabilities with a positive association to exposure to agent orange or Vietnam service. In other words, we propose to establish, for the first time, a system under which veterans have a fighting chance to learn the truth about their health and to be duly compensated for their service-connected disabilities.

Ninety-two senators supported this proposal, which, frankly, does not go as far as I would like. So why is it not law? Because an extremely small minority of people have been successful in their efforts to prevent House action on this legislation. They have made it clear that they have no intention of allowing this issue to be debated on the House floor. This can only be because they know what I and most of the rest of us know—if there were a vote on the House floor on this amendment today, it would pass overwhelmingly.

People constantly ask me, "Why would anyone who cares about veterans want to block this?" I am hardpressed to give them an answer.

Some have said that veterans should just hold on and wait a little longer. Well, Mr. President, that answer just isn't good enough. I've watched veterans die, and I've watched veterans listen while bureaucrats and politicians tell them they're demanding too much when they ask for the same recognition that other service-connected veterans receive. I've watched them endure a decade of Government ineptitude, delays, and insults. Veterans have been patient, but the time for patience is over. We have an obligation to do what little we can to right our past wrong while there's still time.

I do not need to take lot of time on the floor. Every senator here knows how hard I have been fighting to bring simple justice to agent orange victims. Some are tired of hearing me talk about this issue. I can understand that, as I am tired of talking about it myself. I can tell you that I hope I do not find myself standing here in a few months talking about it again. But I will if I have to. And if you think we're tired of this issue, just ask a Vietnam veteran how he or she feels about it.

I hope the inclusion of my amendment in S. 13 will send a strong message to those in the House who want to avoid this issue: I and many other senators are determined to enact this legislation, and we will be back, talking about agent orange, as often as necessary. Because it is the right thing to do.

Vietnam veterans did their job. It's time that we do ours.

Finally, Mr. President, I want to recognize Senator KERRY for his work on this legislation. It has been a long, difficult road, and we have taken every step of it together. I also want to thank Senator CRANSTON, the chairman of the Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee, whose work has been critical to the effort to bring both S. 1153 and this amendment to the floor. I look forward to working with both Senators KERRY and CRANSTON, as well as the many House and Senate supporters of agent orange benefits, to ensure that this amendment is included in the final version of the veterans' compensation legislation and signed into law at the earliest possible date.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 948) was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SIMPSON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, as the chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, I am delighted to urge unanimous approval of the pending measure, S. 13, the proposed Veterans' Benefits and Health Care Act of 1989 as reported by the committee on September 14 and as modified by an amendment to be offered by our committee's ranking minority member, Mr. MURKOWSKI, and myself which I will describe in more detail later in my statement and by an amendment that will be offered by Senators DASCHLE, KERRY, and myself to add the text of S. 1153, the proposed Veterans' Agent Orange Exposure and Vietnam Service Benefits Act of 1989, as passed by the Senate on August 2.

Mr. President, the measure as it comes before the Senate today—which I will refer to as the committee bill—is derived from a number of bills which are described in detail in the committee's report accompanying this measure, Senate Report No. 101-126. This is a very comprehensive legislative initiative with approximately 90 substantive provisions covering a wide range of subjects, including provisions providing for the following: Cost-of-living adjustments [COLA's] for compensation and related service-connected benefits; improvements in services to and benefits for certain disabled veterans; major new initiatives to improve VA's ability to recruit and retain health care personnel; improvements in VA's Home Loan Program to enhance that program's value to veterans while maintaining program solvency and reducing dependency on appropriated funds; implementation of certain recommendations made by the Commission on Veterans' Education Policy to make the benefits under, and administration of, the various GI bill educational assistance programs more uniform; enhancements in various VA mental health care programs, including programs to assist veterans suffering from posttraumatic stress disorder [PTSD] and to expand mental health research; new VA disciplinary and grievance procedures for title 38 health care personnel; noninstitutional care alternatives; procreative services; enhancement of VA's capacity to verify income eligibility for various programs and thus reduce overpayments and make large cost savings beginning in fiscal year 1991; and improvements in VA efforts to provide benefits and services to minority veterans.

Mr. President, because the various provisions in the very extensive committee bill are described in detail in the committee's report, I will at this time just set forth a summary of the provisions and then discuss some selected provisions that I want to highlight. I refer my colleagues and all others with an interest in this bill to the committee report for more complete information on it.

SUMMARY OF PROVISIONS

Mr. President, S. 13 as reported has seven titles: Compensation and Pensions; Health Care; Education and Employment; Home Loan; Memorial Affairs; Minority Affairs; and Miscellaneous, as follows:

TITLE I—COMPENSATION AND PENSIONS

Mr. President, title I contains freestanding provisions and amendments to title 38 that would:

First, require the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to increase, effective December 1, 1989, the rates and limitations for compensation generally paid to veterans with service-connected disabilities and the rates of dependency and indemnity compensation [DIC] paid to certain service-connected disabled veterans' survivors by the same percentage—estimated at this time by the Congressional Budget Office to be 5.2 percent—as that which will be provided to Social Security recipients and VA pension beneficiaries effective on that same date, with the increased rates rounded down to the nearest dollar for those with 10- and 20-percent disability ratings and rounded to the nearest dollar for those with ratings of 30 percent and higher.

The basic increase would apply to: First, basic compensation rates for service-connected disabled veterans and the rates payable for certain severe disabilities; second, the allowances for spouses, children, and dependent parents paid to service-connected disabled veterans rated 30-percent or more disabled; third, the annual clothing allowance paid to veterans whose compensable disability requires the use of a prosthetic or orthopedic appliance, including a wheelchair, that tends to tear or wear out clothing; and, fourth, the DIC rates paid to the following: Surviving spouses of veterans whose deaths were service-connected, surviving spouses for dependent children and surviving spouses who are so disabled as to be in need of aid and attendance or to be permanently housebound, and the children of veterans whose deaths were service-connected where no surviving spouse is entitled to DIC, the child is age 18 through 22 and attending an approved educational institution, or the child is age 18 or over and became permanently incapable of self-support prior to reaching age 18.

Second, require the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to increase, effective August 1, 1990, the rate of compensation for the statutory award, known as the "k" award, given to service-connected disabled veterans—in addition to other disability compensation provided under section 314 of title 38—for certain anatomical and functional losses caused by service in the military.

Third, expand the clothing allowance to include cases in which a medication prescribed for a veteran's service-connected skin condition stains or otherwise damages the veteran's clothing.

Fourth, provide that monthly VA pension payments to veterans who are being furnished hospital care by VA and have no spouse or dependent children would be reduced when the veteran has been hospitalized for 8 months—rather than the current 3 months—with the Secretary authorized to extend that period if VA's Chief Medical Director determines that the veteran is likely to be released from the hospital in a reasonable period of time.

Fifth, raise from $60 to $105 the limit on monthly pension payments for veterans being furnished institutional care.

Sixth, increase from $1,500 to $6,000 the maximum value of the estate of an incompetent veteran who has no dependents and is being furnished institutional care at Government expense that is allowed before VA suspends the veteran's compensation or pension benefits; and increase from $500 to $2,000 the amount to which the veteran's estate must be reduced before suspended compensation or pension payments are resumed.

TITLE II—HEALTH CARE

Mr. President, part A of title II includes amendments to chapters 17 and 73 of title 38 that would:

First, require VA (1) to provide treatment for posttraumatic stress disorder [PTSD] once (a) a diagnosis of the PTSD related to the veteran's service in a combat theater has been made by a mental health professional designated by the Chief Medical Director, and (b) the veteran's combat theater service has been verified, with verification required by the most rapid means possible; and (2) to accomplish an evaluation of a veteran within 7 days after the referral of the veteran to a VA medical center by a Vet center.

Second, authorize VA to expand eligibility, currently provided to only Vietnam-era veterans, for readjustment counseling and followup mental health care to include veterans of service in theaters of operations of any prior periods of war and veterans of service in areas in which United States personnel were subjected to danger from armed conflict comparable to that of battle with an enemy during a priod of war.

Third, remove the pilot program designation of VA's homeless chronically mentally ill program; extend the program for 3 years; and expand eligibility to include chronically mentally ill veterans with service-connected disabilities rated at 50 percent or more.

Fourth (1) require the Secretary to designate not more than five health care facilities as the locations for centers of mental illness research, education, and clinical activities [MIRECC's], with at least one to be designated by July 1, 1990; (2) provide that, to qualify for designation, a facility must maintain arrangements with an accredited medical school, graduate school of psychology, or nursing, social work, or other allied health personnel school, under which residents or students would regularly rotate through the VA facility; and (3) authorize the appropriation of $3.125 million in fiscal year 1990 and $6.25 million for each of fiscal years 1991, 1992, and 1993 for MIRECC's.

Fifth, extend for 3 years the reporting requirements of VA's Special Committee on PTSD and require the reports to be submitted concurrently to VA and the congressional Committees on Veterans' Affairs.

Sixth, require the National Center on PTSD to provide for a study of the extent to which, and the degree of effectiveness with which, VA reaches out to, and furnishes treatment to, Vietnam veterans who are Asian Americans, native Americans, native Hawaiians, other native-American Pacific islanders, Alaska Natives, black, or Hispanic Americans, and who suffer from PTSD or other psychological problems in adjusting to civilian life.

Seventh, require VA to specify in its fiscal year 1991 and fiscal year 1992 budget documents the type and amount of resources that are proposed to be spent in the coming fiscal year on PTSD-related activities.

PART B—GENERAL HEALTH

Part B of title II includes amendments to chapters 17 and 81 of title 38 that would:

First, require VA (1) to furnish services to a service-connected disabled veteran or the spouse of such a veteran to achieve pregnancy in cases in which the veteran's service-connected disability impairs procreative ability; (2) to establish an interdisciplinary task force to advise the CMD on the implementation of this provision; and (3) to furnish these services on a fee-care basis unless Va is able to provide them.

Second, authorize VA compensation work therapy [CWT] programs to contract with elements of VA, as well as other private or governmental sources, to provide for the work involved.

Third, authorize the use of funds from the Special Therapeutic and Rehabilitation Activities Fund [STRAF], which is used for the operation of CWT programs, to defray the costs of travel and related expenses necessary to train and educate VA employees to administer CWT programs.

Fourth, require VA to conduct a 5-year, two-part CWT and therapeutic residence [TR] pilot program at not more the 25 VA health care facilities, under which VA would be required (1) at not less than 10 nor more than 15 of these sites, to promote and participate in the establishment of nonprofit corporations with which VA would contract to run CWT programs as long as the nonprofit runs a TR, and (2) directly to acquire and operate TR's for veterans participating in CWT programs at not less than 10 nor more than 15 of these sites.

(A) As to VA's contracting with nonprofit corporations for the operation of a CWT program in conjunction with a TR, provide for the following:

(i) Authorize VA to make demand-note loans to the nonprofit corporation in the amounts of (a) either 25 percent of the purchase price or the total of 1 year's rent in the case where the property is to be leased and, (b) the estimated cost of operating the TR for 6 months. Such loans would not bear interest for the first 5 years, and thereafter would bear a rate of interest specified by the Secretary, in consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury. Unobligated funds in the STRAF would be authorized to be used for the loans. Make the security for the note subordinate to any purchase-money mortgage; and require that, if the corporation sells the residence, the proceeds of the sale be used to repay the unpaid balance of the loan and to pay VA 50 percent of any profit realized from the sale.

(ii) Require VA to deposit the loan in an escrow account and permit the funds to be disbursed to the corporation only upon its demonstrating to VA's satisfaction that at least 25 percent of its annual operating expenses for running the TR—over and above the expenses anticipated to be paid from VA patients's rental payments—would be paid from non-VA sources, either in cash or in-kind services.

(iii) Authorize VA to provide in-kind services—including technical and clinical expertise, building-rehabilitation supervision, and minor maintenance and repairs to the residence—to the corporation; and provide that services would be considered as pass through expenses and, accordingly, would not be subject to adjustment by VA's resource allocation methodology or any other methodology VA uses in allocating funding to its health care facilities.

(iv) Require the corporation, when it ceases to operate the TR, to return to the STRAF out of the proceeds from the sale of the property any loan amount it owes to VA plus 50 percent of any profits from the sale.

(v) Direct the Secretary to transfer to the Veterans Health Services and Research Administration [VHS&RA] not less than 10 properties acquired by VA as a result of defaults on loans under its home loan guaranty program, for VHS&RA to lease to nonprofit corporations, which have CWT contracts and agree to use the properties as TR's, for terms of 1 to 3 years, with renewal options permissible for up to another 3 years; require the corpration to pay to the VA health care facility 60 percent of the rent collected from veteran residents, for subsequent transfer by VA into the appropriate loan guaranty program revolving fund; and require the corpration, upon termination of the lease, to return the property to the Secretary for disposition in accordance with loan guaranty program procedures.

(vi) Direct that any existing nonprofit corporation carrying out a CWT program be grandfathered in its CWT operations without regard to the provisions in the bill.

(vii) Provide for the structure of the CWT/TR nonprofit corporations to be similar to that of the research nonprofit corporations, which are currently authorized in subchapter VI of chapter 73 of title 38, in terms of their general powers, the structure of their boards of directors—but with VA employees limited to being a minority of board members—the applicability of State law, accountability, oversight, and authority to accept gifts or grants.

(viii) Provide that the pilot program may be conducted through nonprofit corporations only at VA health care facilities that have existing CWT programs.

(B) As to VA's direct operation of TR's:

(i) Require VA to allow only veterans participating in VA CWT programs and a house manager to reside in a TR and to prescribe limits on the length of time a veteran may reside in a TR; charge each resident, other than the house manager, rent in a reasonable amount to be determined through procedures prescribed by the Secretary, with the rent to be deposited into the STRAF: consult with appropriate representatives of the community and comply with zoning, building permit, and similar requirements applicable to other real property used for similar purposes in the community; meet State and local requirements relating to fire and safety standards; provide adequate Federal supervision of the residents at the TR's; be responsible, through the CMD, subject to the direction and control of the Secretary, for the management, maintenance, and disposition of the properties acquired; and ensure that the proceeds, if any, resulting from the disposal of a TR, are credited to the STRAF.

(ii) Permit VA to provide house managers with free room and subsistence in addition to or instead of other compensation and require that the manager's total compensation be no less than any applicable minimum wage rate.

(iii) Authorize the Secretary to purchase for use as TR's properties acquired by VA as a result of defaults on loans made under VA's home loan guaranty program; and require that, as payment for each such property, STRAF funds equal to the amount that would have been charged for the property if it had been sold for use as a homeless shelter under section 9 of Public Law 100-198 be transferred to the appropriate loan guaranty revolving fund.

(iv) Authorize VA to form nonprofit corporations to act solely as a funding mechanism with power to accept gifts and grants and transfer those funds to STRAF.

(C) Authorize the appropriation to the STRAF for the purposes of carrying out the CWT/TR pilot program of $5 million.

(D) To the extent that less than $5 million is appropriated for this purpose, authorize the Secretary to transfer to the STRAF from unobligated funds in the General Post Fund of the VA medical facility hosting a CWT/

TR program such amounts as the Secretary determines are necessary to carry out the CWT/TR pilot program.

(E) Require VA to submit, not later than February 1, 1994, to the congressional Committees on Veterans' Affairs a report on the experience under the pilot program, including an evaluation of the impact of the loan guaranty program foreclosed property transfers to VHS&RA on VA's home loan guaranty program.

Fifth, require that (1) VA conduct a 4-year pilot program, with a report due after 3 years, for the purposes of furnishing health, rehabilitative, and, by contract with non-VA entities, health-related services in noninstitutional settings; (2) participation in the program be limited to veterans who are eligible for and otherwise in need of nursing home care and are either (a) receiving or needing that care primarily for the treatment of a service-connected disability, or (b) have service-connected disabilities rated at 50 percent or more; (3) VA case managers be used to coordinate and facilitate services contracted for with public and private agencies; and (4) the total cost of the program during each fiscal year be limited to not more than 65 percent of the total cost that would have been incurred in furnishing the veterans involved with nursing home care instead.

Sixth (1) extend until September 30, 1994, the requirement for the Secretary to conduct a pilot program of preventive health care services; (2) expand the categories of veterans to whom VA is required to furnish such services to include all veterans who are entitled to receive the care they are receiving; (3) require that those veterans annually be offered a minimum of two preventive health care services when they are othewise receiving care; (4) require that each VA health care facility annually implement a major preventive health care and health promotion initiative; (5) expressly provide that the permissible scope of preventive health care services under the pilot program includes stress management, smoking cessation, physical fitness, and screening for high blood pressure, glaucoma, colorectal cancer, and cholesterol; (6) require the Secretary to submit reports on the experience under the pilot program; (7) limit pilot program expenditures to $16 million in fiscal year 1990, $17 million in fiscal year 1991, $18 million in fiscal year 1992, $19 million in fiscal year 1993, and $20 million in fiscal year 1994; and (8) require the CMD to designate a Director of Preventive Health and Health Promotional Programs.

Seventh, extend for 2 years, through September 30, 1991, VA's authority to furnish respite care to certain chronically ill veterans and for 1 year, to February 1, 1990, the due date for an evaluative report on the program to the House and Senate Veterans' Affairs Committees.

Eighth, require VA to conduct a 4-year pilot program under which VA would be required, as to assistive monkeys, and authorized, as to service dogs, to furnish to quadriplegic veterans who have service-connected disabilities rated 50 percent or more and to facilitate the furnishing of these assistive animals to other quadriplegic veterans.

Ninth, authorize VA (1) to provide signal dogs to veterans who have service-connected hearing impairments and are in need of assistance of such a dog, and (2) to pay a veteran's expenses for necessary travel in connection with the veteran becoming adjusted to the dog.

Tenth, extend for 3 years, through September 30, 1992, the authorization of such appropriations as are necessary for State Veterans' Home construction grants.

Eleventh, require the Secretary to submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report by January 15, 1990, containing (1) an evaluation of the reasons for the accumulation of the backlog in VA's provision of prosthetic appliances that grew to $10.6 million in fiscal year 1989 and for the failure to observe, in connection with the provision of prosthetic appliances, the statutory priorities established for the treatment of many of the veterans involved; and (2) a description of the actions that the Secretary has taken, and is planning to take, to prevent such a recurrence of the accumulation of such a significant backlog and of failure to observe such priorities.

Twelfth, authorize the furnishing of outpatient dental services when medically necessary in preparation for hospital admission and increase from $500 to $1,000 the amount which a fee-basis dentist may be reimbursed for prior to obtaining a VA second examination.

Thirteenth, provide specific authority to the Secretary to reimburse a service-disabled veteran in a VA vocational rehabilitation program for certain emergency hospital or medical services if the veteran could not reasonably obtain those services through VA or another Federal health care facility.

Fourteenth, repeal the Secretary's authority to provide free tobacco products to veterans receiving hospital or domiciliary care.

Fifteenth, revise VA's authority to enter into agreements for sharing scarce medical resources so as to (1) expand the categories of facilities with which VA may enter into sharing agreements to include all health care facilities; (2) delete the requirement that reimbursement rates cover full costs and substitute a standard providing for flexibility after costs are taken into account; and (3) provide that payments for the use of VA resources be returned to the VA facility involved.

Sixteenth, require VA to establish a task force—including representatives of VA offices with responsibility for the benefits involved and appropriate representatives of concerned organizations—to recommend policies and legislation for the elimination of inconsistencies among provisions relating to the eligibility for medical devices and certain other rehabilitative health care benefits.

PART C. HEALTH CARE PERSONNEL

Part C of title II, entitled Veterans Health-Care Personnel Act of 1989, includes a freestanding provision and amendments to chapters 73, 76, and 82 of the title that would:

First (1) require the Secretary to take steps to establish and maintain, for full- and part-time registered nurses [RN's], registered nurse anesthetists [RNS's], and certified registered nurse anesthetists [CRNA's], levels of pay which are competitive which are competitive with but do not exceed the pay of employers which offer similar employment and compete in the same labor market area for qualified employees; and (2) authorize the Secretary to establish and maintain levels of competitive pay for employees covered by title 38 for pay purposes only—the so-called hybrid category, which includes certain psychologists, respiratory therapists, licensed physical therapists, licensed practical or vocational nurses, pharmacists, and occupational therapists. The steps involved in establishing and maintaining such levels of pay would be as follows:

(a) individual VA facility directors would be required to perform an annual survey of comparable health care facilities in the same labor market area, no later than June 1, 1990—thereafter December 1 of each year—to determine the entry level salaires for RN's, RNA's, CRNA's, and, as determined by the Secretary, personnel in title 5/title 38 hybrid personnel categories, taking into consideration both educational preparation and years of experience;

(b) if the findings of a survey demonstrate that wages paid in the community are such that VA is no longer competitive in its efforts to recruit and retain qualified employees in one or more of the positions surveyed, step 1 of the appropriate entry pay grade would be adjusted to provide with, but not exceeding, the wage rate in the labor market area surveyed for that occupation, and additional steps within each grade and other higher, related grades would be increased correspondingly, so as to maintain the same occupational relationships between steps and grades, other than entry grades determined by the survey, as currently exists;

(c) if the findings of the survey demonstrate that wages paid in the community are competitive with but do not exceed those paid by VA, no further adjustment would be required;

(d) when making the determination as to what, if any, pay adjustment would be made, the VA facility director would pass along to the employees the annual Federal civilian personnel COLA unless the director makes an affirmative finding that doing so is unnecessary for recruitment and retention purposes;

(e) in determining competitive salaries, items such as premium pay, other additional pay, and the value of other benefits such as payment of insurance premiums—both in VA and non-VA facilities—would be taken into consideration;

(f) in no instances would the rate of an incumbent employee's pay be decreased as a result of lower salaries identified in the community through the survey process although the salary scale would be adjusted downward if such a salary trend occurs in the relevant labor market area;

(g) pay increases resulting from the labor market area survey would become effective at the beginning of the first pay period on or after July 1, 1990—thereafter at the beginning of the first pay period starting on or after January 1 of each year;

(h) in addition to other parameters which may be set forth in regulations, a comparable health care facility would be defined as one identified by the individual facility director to be in direct competition with VA for the same employees;

(i) if no comparable health care facilities exist within a given labor market area, the salaries of the same type of employees employed in other health care settings in the labor market area for whom the VA is competing would be utilized;

(j) if the number of comparable facilities and the number of corresponding employees within the labor market area is insufficient to produce a valid comparision a VA health care facility, approved by the CMD for this purpose, in a similar demographic and labor market area would be utilized as the comparison;

(k) in those facilities where RN's, CRNA's, or other affectd employees are covered by a collective bargaining agreement, union consultation would be required in connection with (i) the development of national survey criteria, (ii) the development of local survey criteria, (iii) the development of the local plan for data collection, and (iv) the decisions regarding specific salary determination;

(l) protection from disclosure of survey information would be provided pursuant to the Freedom of Information Act, section 552 of title 5;

(m) for any grade in the VA salary scale determined by the Secretary, upon the recommendation of the CMD, to be an entry level grade, the entry salary could not be increased to a level in excess of step 10 of grade 13 of the General Schedule; for those grades which are not entry level, the entry salary could not exceed the statutory cap for the Executive Schedule;

(n) unless a promotion, demotion, or change of assignment is involved, either voluntary or otherwise, employees transferring from one VA facility to another would retain their grade and step but would receive the applicable wage associated with such grade and step as determined for the receiving facility; and

(o) require the Secretary, not later than March 1 of each year—beginning with 1991—to submit to the congressional Committees on Veterans' Affairs a report containing a review of the implementation of this new authority and the effect of market rate adjustments on the ability of VA to recruit and retain health care professionals pursuant to this legislation, and any other legislation recommended to assist in recruitment and retention efforts.

Second, authorize the VA to hire, without regard to the civil service register process, VA-trained health care professionals—other than physicians, dentists, and nurses—during the first year after their graduation.

Third, authorize VA to use the Director grade for certain physicians and dentists assigned to Central Office if the position is comparable to the position of a medical center director.

Fourth, require VA to pay overtime to RN's, RNA's and CNRA's at the rate of 1½ times their hourly rates of basic pay.

Fifth, require the Secretary to provide a 6-percent pay differential to nurses appointed to head nurse positions, or assigned to such positions in excess of 30 days, and provide for this pay to be considered as basic pay for the purposes of determining other employment benefits.

Sixth, provide the Secretary with discretion to pay to health care personnel employed under title 5 or the title 5/title 38 "hybrid" appointment authorities who furnish direct care or services incident to direct care additional pay on the same basis as registered nurses.

Seventh, increase the cap on special salary rates so as to permit the rates to exceed by two times the difference between the minimum and maximum of the grade and require the Secretary to notify the Committees on Veterans' Affairs when a special salary rate becomes 94 (or more) percent of the maximum amount permitted.

Eighth, reduce from 90 to 45 days the period, after VA submission of a title 5 health care employees' special-pay rate, in which the President or the President's designee may disapprove the proposed rate and clarify that the proposed rate may be put into effect earlier if approval is given in a shorter period.

Ninth, expand the Secretary's authority to make an exception—currently limited to physicians—to the title 5 provisions reducing the amount of retirement or retainer pay of a uniformed services retiree employed by the Federal Government so as to include other VHS&RA employees where necessary to meet special or emergency VA employment needs which result from a severe shortage of well-qualified candidates.

Tenth, require the Secretary to award each nurse, upon recertification in a specialty, an amount equal to one percent of the nurse's annual basic rate of pay if the nurse is employed in the clinical specialty in which he or she is certified and if the most recent performance evaluation of the nurse was not less than satisfactory.

Eleventh, make the labor-management rights of Federal employees generally (under chapter 71 of title 5) applicable to the Secretary's authority under section 4108(a), to establish the hours and conditions of employment and leaves of absence of title 38 employees (except with respect to the prohibitions set out in paragraphs (1) through (6) of that section, which pertain to potential conflict-of-interest situations arising in the context of health care).

Twelfth (1) remove from the coverage of the provisions governing disciplinary actions against title 38 employees (section 4110 of title 38) certain lesser proposed penalties—specified as suspension for 14 days or less, reassignment or reduction in rank without a reduction in basic pay, reprimand, or admonishment; (2) provide that, in such cases, a title 38 employee would be entitled, in lieu of a section 4110 proceeding, to a process which would include (a) advance written notice setting forth the specific reasons for the proposed action, (b) a reasonable time to answer the notice, either in writing or orally, including time to furnish affidavits and other documentary evidence in support of the answer, (c) a chance to be represented by an attorney or some other representative, and (d) a written decision, including the reasons for the decision, at the earliest practicable time; (3) provide two methods by which title 38 employees could gain a review of a decision on such a specified lesser disciplinary matter or of a decision on a grievance: (a) for those title 38 employees who are not members of bargaining units, an agency review procedure established by the Secretary, and (b) for those employees who are members of such a unit, a negotiated grievance procedure which would include binding arbitration; and (4) provide that any agency review procedure established by the Secretary with respect to proposed disciplinary actions and grievance resolution regarding title 38 employees who are not covered by collective bargaining agreements would have to include (a) an informal review of the decision on the disciplinary action by a VA official of a higher level than the official who made the original decision and a prompt decision following that review, (b) a right to have the matter reviewed further by an impartial examiner from within VA who would have to submit a prompt report of findings and recommendations, and (c) a prompt review of those findings and recommendations, as well as any comments the employee or the Department or both wishes to make on the findings and recommendations, by a Department official at a higher level than the one who carried out the first informal review.

Thirteenth, require the Secretary to conduct, for 5 years, a leave-transfer program for medical emergencies of VA employees appointed pursuant to section 4108 of title 38 and authorize the Secretary to establish and conduct a leave-bank program for medical emergencies of those same employees.

Fourteenth, authorize extending, for a period not to exceed 2 years, the temporary full-time appointment of a nurse or a health-care professional appointed under the title 5/title 38 "hybrid" appointment authority, such as a licensed practical nurse, physical therapist, occupational therapist, or pharmacist, who has completed a full course of academic training and is awaiting licensure or certification.

Fifteenth, authorize extending, for a period not to exceed the length of an academic program, the temporary appointment of a student who is pursuing an academic degree in physcial therapy, occuptional therapy, pharmacy, or nursing.

Sixteenth, require (and authorize for other title 38 employees), effective September 1, 1990, that (1) cash awards analogous to those required by sections 5406 of title 5 be paid to title 38 supervisors and managers (including head nurses) who receive the highest proficiency rating possible, as determined under criteria promulgated by the Secretary; (2) such awards range from 2–10 percent of the employee's base annual salary but allow the award to be increased to up to 20 percent if the employee's performance is unusually outstanding; (3) the aggregated amount paid for such awards be limited in a manner identical to that provided in section 5406(c)(1) of title 5, which establishes the maximum total amount of cash awards as not more than 1.5 percent multiplied by the aggregate amount of basic pay payable to the covered employees in the agency and the minimum amount as not less than 1.15 percent multiplied by the aggregate amount of basic pay payable to covered employees in the agency; and (4) the Secretary establish a cash award program identical to the program under section 5407 of title 5 (which provides for amounts up to $10,000 or, for outstanding performance, up to $25,000) for title 38 supervisors and managers in grades comparable to General Schedule grades 13-15 who, by their suggestion, invention, superior accomplishment, or other personal effort, contribute significantly to the Federal Government.

Seventeenth, authorize the Secretary to establish and operate a dependent care assistance program for the care of dependents of VHS&RA employees that meets the requirements of section 129 of Internal Revenue Code.

Eighteenth, require the Secretary to ensure an equitable allocation of VA health professional scholarships to persons enrolled in their second year of a program leading to an associate degree in nursing.

Nineteenth (1) authorize the appropriation of $5 million for each of FYs 1990 and 1991 and $6 million for each of FYs 1992 and 1993 for VA to reinstitute a program of VA funding for the expansion or improvement of programs in post-secondary schools to educate health-care professionals; (2) provide for such funds to remain available until the end of the fifth fiscal year following the fiscal year for which they are appropriated; (3) require that the development of new health careers, interdisciplinary approaches, and career-advancement opportunities with this VA assistance occur in collaboration with professionals carrying out the duties involved; and (4) authorize VA to expend up to 10 percent of each year's appropriation under this section on VA programs designed to develop or initiate improved methods of education and training for health-care personnel.

Twentieth, require the Secretary to pay the maximum amount of special pay authorized for a VA physican or dentist without regard to the 1982 administratively-imposed offset unless the CMD determines, in the case of a particular individual or category, that it is unnecessary to do so in order to recruit or retain qualified physicians or dentists in a specific specialty or geographic area.

Twenty-first, require VA during calendar years 1990, 1991, and 1992 to conduct, and submit periodic reports on, a pilot program at not less than five VA medical facilities to determine the desirability of: (1) establishing programs which foster interdisciplinary professional collaboration and collegial relationships between physicians, RNs, and other personnel furnishing direct patient care; (2) creating new alternatives for utilizing the skills and knowledge of RNs and other health-care professionals in furnishing direct-patient care or services incident to direct patient care; and (3) increasing the pay differential for evening and night service.

Twenty-second, require the Secretary to increase rates of pay for VA psychologists who have board certification by using the "hybrid" title 5/title 38 appointment authority unless the Chief Medical Director certifies, within 90 days after the date of enactment, that an increase of board-certified psychologists is not necessary for VA to furnish the appropriate quality of psychological services to veterans.

TITLE III—EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Mr. President, title II, entitled the "Veterans Education and Employment Amendments of 1989", includes free-standing provisions and amendments to chapters 30, 31, 32, 34, 35, 36, and 41 of title 38 and chapter 106 of title 10 that would:

First, provide, effective January 1, 1990, a 9.5-percent COLA in the subsistence allowance paid to service-connected-disabled veterans participating in programs of rehabilitation under chapter 31 of title 38.

Second, provide, effective January 1, 1990, a 9.5-percent COLA in the educational assistance allowances paid to service-connected-disabled veterans' dependents and survivors pursuing training under chapter 35 of title 38.

Third, modify the pilot program of vocational evaulations and training for new recipients of VA needed-based non-service-connected-disability pension so as to (1) make participation in the program completely voluntarily by eliminating the requirement that veterans under age 50 who are awarded pension during the program period participate in an evaluation to determine whether achievement of a vocational goal is reasonably feasible, and (2) add a trial-work-period component under which the pension of a participant who obtains a job for which he or she was trained would not be terminated either by reason of having the capacity to engage in employment or by reason of earned income until the veteran has maintained that employment for 12 consecutive months.

Fourth, make permanent the program of independent living services for service-disabled veterans under chapter 31.

Fifth (1) as of August 1, 1990, require work-study payments to be based on the higher of the Federal minimum wage or the minimum wage of the particular State involved; (2) expand the work-study program to include individuals training under chapter 106 of title 10 (members of the Selected Reserve) and make activities related to the administration of chapter 106 at Department of Defense facilities a service which may be performed by chapter 106 participants under work study; and (3) make service-disabled veterans eligible for work-study benefits when pursuing training or attending school at a half-time or higher rate (a) under chapter 31 (vocational rehabilitation), or (b) if the veteran's service-connected disability is rated at 40 percent or more, under chapter 30 (Montgomery GI Bill (MGIB)), chapter 32 (Post-Vietnam Era Veterans' Educational Assistance Program—VEAP), or chapter 34 (Vietnam-era GI Bill) of title 38.

Sixth, as of August 1, 1990, expand eligibility for VA's work-study program to include service-connected disabled veterans' dependents and survivors pursuing education programs under chapter 35 of title 38.

Seventh, specify that "mitigating circumstances"—which excuse a veteran from repayment of part of the benefits received for a course from which the veteran withdrew—include difficulties beyond the control of the veteran in making or changing child-care arrangements.

Eighth, (1) extend the Veterans' Readjustment Appointment (VRA) authority termination date from December 31, 1989, to December 31, 1991, for Vietnam-era veterans who are service disabled or served in the Vietnam theater of operations; (2) expand eligibility during the extended period to include post-Vietnam-era veterans and all veterans with service-connected disabilities rated at 30 percent or more; (3) permit a veteran to receive a VRA only once after the date of enactment; and (4) limit the period during which an appointment may be made by requiring that the veteran receive an appointment by the later of (a) the end of the 4-year period from the date of separation from active duty, or (b) the 2-year period beginning on the date of enactment.

Ninth, authorize the Secretary of Labor, during FYs 1990–92, to conduct a pilot program of providing employment and training information services with the participation of Disabled Veterans' Outreach Program Specialists and Local Veterans' Employment Representatives to servicemembers within 6 months of their separation dates in not more than five nor less than ten geographically dispersed States in which the Secretary determines that services to veterans would not be unduly limited as a result of the pilot program, with a report on the program due on February 1, 1992.

Tenth, authorize the Secretary of Defense to broaden the secondary-school equivalency that is acceptable as a prerequisite for eligibility to participate in the MGIB by permitting the Secretary to determine what is an adequate equivalent.

Eleventh, prohibit individuals from receiving entitlement credit under both chapter 32 (VEAP) and chapter 106 (MGIB-Selected Reserve) based on the same period of service.

Twelfth, permit VA to accept a school's certification for renewal of an individual's educational benefits following termination for unsatisfactory conduct or progress.

Thirteenth, eliminate differences in attendance requirements ("absence reporting") which exist between "degree" and "nondegree" training.

Fourteenth, as of October 1, 1989, provide that funding for the development of a national training curriculum for State approving agency (SAA) employees may come from the amounts made available to the SAAs by the Secretary.

Fifteenth, provide VA with discretionary authority to require monthly self-certification verifying pursuit of training under any VA education program (currently in operation under the MGIB only) for both degree and non-degree training and for all rates of training, including training on less than a half-time basis.

Sixteenth, include service-disabled chapter 31 (vocational rehabilitation) participants in the count of those for whom VA pays fees to schools to defray the costs incurred by the schools in making reports and certifications to VA of the enrollment of VA-assisted students.

Seventeenth, simplify the formula for determining whether a student receiving VA-administered educational assistance is engaged in full-time study when pursuing a non-college-degree course at an institution of higher learning if the institution requires as part of the course one or more unit courses or subjects creditable toward a college degree.

Eighteenth, modify the criteria for determining the applicability of, and exceptions to, both the "two-year" and the "85–15" rules, which limit the types of courses for which GI Bill benefits may be paid, for certain courses provided under contract with the Defense Department so as to take into account individuals training under the MGIB Selected Reserve program.

Nineteenth, as of August 1, 1990, (1) repeal the existing limit on changes of eductional program which generally permits no more than two changes of program (except for changes necessitated by circumstances beyond the student's control); and (2) in the case of second and subsequent changes of program, permit VA approval only if (a) the veteran or person accepts educational or vocational counseling services referred to in section 1663 of this title; and (b) the Secretary determines, on the basis of the results of the educational or vocational counseling, that the change is suited to the veterans' or person's aptitudes, interests, and abilities.

Twentieth, provide that, if VA exercises the discretionary authority (proposed in section 316, discussed above) to require monthly self-certification, the effective date of an educational benefits adjustment based on a change of a student's course load or other change in aggregate training time would be the date of the change rather than the end of the month in which the change occurs.

Twenty-first, make various technical and clerical amendments to certain VA educational assistance programs.

TITLE IV—HOME LOAN

Mr. President, title IV contains free-standing provisions and amendments to title 38 that would:

First, establish a new revolving fund, the Home Loan Guaranty Fund (HGLF), to finance the loan guaranty program with respect to loans made after September 30, 1989.

Second, require the Federal Government to contribute 0.25 percent of the loan amount to the HGLF for the fiscal year in which the loan is guaranteed and for each of the next two years, except in the case of loans guaranteed in FY 1990 for which the initiation of the contribution would be delayed by one year.

Third, require the Secretary of the Treasury to invest in Government securities the surplus amounts in the new fund (section 401).

Fourth, require VA to include in its annual budget submission to Congress certain information about the current and future operations and financial status of the Loan Guaranty Revolving Fund (LGRF)—which would continue to supprt all loan guaranties made prior to October 1, 1989—and the new HGLF.

Fifth, generally increase the current loan fee from 1 percent to 1.25 percent but decrease it to 0.75 percent for veterans making a downpayment of 5 percent or more (10 percent or more for manufactured-home loans) and to 0.25 percent for downpayments of 10 percent or more on other than manufactured-home loans.

Sixth, continue the current 1-percent fee for vendee loans.

Seventh, increase the current 0.5-percent fee to 0.75 percent for assumed loans.

Eighth, continue the current exemption of disabled veterans and their surviving spouses from payment of the loan fee and require the Government to pay the fees for those borrowers (with such payments deferred until FY 1991 in the case of loans closed in FY 1990).

Ninth, authorize the Secretary, when necessary to maintain the solvency of the HGLF and upon providing advance notice to the congressional Committees on Veterans' Affairs, to raise all the fees uniformly to no more than 20 percent above the statutory levels and, if later warranted, to decrease the fees to no lower than the statutory levels.

Tenth, provide that veterans and assumptors who have paid (or are exempt from paying) the increased fees generally are exempted from liability to VA ("indemnified") in the event of foreclosure on a VA-guaranteed loan, except in cases of fraud, misrepresentation, or bad faith or, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, when the default is for reasons within the veteran's or assumptor's control.

Eleventh, extend for 1 year, to October 1, 1990, (1) the current expiring authority for VA to sell vendee loans either with or without recourse and (2) the requirement for VA to submit detailed reports on each such sale in a report to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs.

Twelfth, require that all amounts received from recourse and nonrecourse loan asset sales be credited, without reduction, as offsetting collections of the LGRF or the HGLF, depending on which fund received the fee for the loan involved.

Thirteenth, allow a veteran to acquire additional loan guaranty entitlement—up to $5,000—by paying a 0.1-percent fee for each additional $1,000 of entitlement or portion thereof.

Fourteenth, in cases where a veteran has acquired additional entitlement, provide that the total of the guaranty and any downpayment may not exceed 25 percent of the purchase price, unless the Secretary grants a waiver, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, in order to enable a veteran to use a VA-guaranteed loan in a market where lenders otherwise would charge so many points (which sellers must pay) that it is unlikely that the veteran could use his or her VA entitlement to acquire a home.

Fifteenth, authorize the Secretary to require, pursuant to regulations, that holders of VA-guaranteed or direct loans who refuse a borrower's tender of a "significant" portion of the debt due provide VA with notice of the refusal and provide certain other information about the tender.

Sixteenth, extend by two years, through FY 1991, the statutory formula (known as the "no-bid" formula) by which VA determines whether it will acquire at foreclosure the property securing a VA-guaranteed loan.

Seventeenth, prohibit VA, in determining the net value of a property for purposes of the no-bid formula, from considering the cost of borrowing the funds necessary to acquire the property, except to the extent of one-half of the amount by which the cost of borrowing that amount exceeds the cost of borrowing the amount necessary to pay the guaranty.

Eighteenth, expand the purposes for which a veteran may obtain a VA-guaranteed refinancing loan for up to the full value of the property to include refinancing a construction loan, replacing an installment land sales contract with a traditional deed and mortgage loan, and refinancing a non-VA loan with a VA-guaranteed loan having a lower interest rate.

Nineteenth, limit the time during which a veteran may apply to VA for waiver of a home-loan debt to 1 year after the date VA notified the debtor of the indebtedness.

Twentieth, require that VA debt notices both for home-loan debts and for non-home-loan debts inform the recipient of his or her right to apply for a waiver and how to apply.

Twenty-first, correct an error in existing law that inadvertently omitted service members on active duty from the definition of "veteran" for home-loan purposes.

TITLE V—MEMORIAL AFFAIRS

Mr. President, title V includes freestanding provisions and amendments to chapter 23 and 24 of title 38 that would:

First, permit payment of the VA headstone allowance to the estate of a deceased veteran who purchased a headstone prior to death.

Second, direct the Secretary of the Army to set aside for the unmarked interment of cremated remains an appropriate area in Arlington National Cemetery that is not suitable for the burial of casketed remains.

Third (1) authorize the Secretary, in connection with the operation of the National Memorial Cemetery in Arizona, to employ without regard to Civil Service requirements persons who were employed by the State of Arizona in the administration of the cemetery when it was transferred to VA pursuant to section 346 of the Veterans' Benefits and Services Act of 1988; and (2) require the Secretary to submit an operating budget plan for each of FYs 1989, 1990, and 1991, and, to submit such plans each year to the congressional Committees on Veterans' Affairs.

TITLE VI—MINORITY AFFAIRS

Mr. President, this title includes freestanding provisions and amendments to chapter 3 of title 38 and the Department of Veterans Affairs Act (Public Law 100-527) that would:

First, require the Secretary to assign to an Assistant Secretary responsibility for assessing the effects of VA policies and activities on minority veterans, including women veterans, and for coordinating and monitoring policies facilitating the access of such minority veterans to VA benefits and services.

Second, reestablish the Advisory Committee on Native American Veterans for an additional 2 years.

TITLE VII—MISCELLANEOUS

Mr. President, title VII contains free-standing provisions and amendments to chapter 61 of title 26, title 28 appendix, chapters 1, 2, 53, and 71 of title 38 which would:

First (1) specify that the Secretary may not delegate the functional and technical supervision of the performance of security and law enforcement functions within VA to any official outside the Office of the Secretary; (2) require the Secretary, within 120 days after enactment, to submit a report containing the Secretary's plan for improving the training, recruitment, retention, and pay of VA security personnel, as well as an assessment of (a) the need for establishing a policy on the issuance of weapons to security personnel assigned to medical centers located in high-crime areas and the use of weapons by such personnel, (b) the various options available to the Secretary for providing improved protection for security personnel assigned to medical centers in high-crime areas and those not located in high-crime areas, and (c) the adequacy of the number and deployment of security and law enforcement personnel at each VA medical center.

Second, expand VA's multiyear procurement authority to include the purchase of nonhealth-care supplies and services.

Third, require VA, at each stage of its claims-adjudication proceedings to provide the claimant and the claimant's representative, if any, clearly-written notice of the rationale for any decision relating to the claim and a detailed description of the subsequent procedural alternatives through which the claim might be pursued.

Fourth, amend paragraph (7) of section 6103(1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (26 U.S.C. 6103(1)(7)), relating to disclosures of certain third-party and self-employment tax information (from the Commissioner of Social Security or the Secretary of the Treasury) to Federal, State, and local agencies administering certain programs under the Social Security Act (essentially Supplemental Security Income, Aid to Families with Dependent Children, and Medicaid), the Food Stamp Act of 1977, or the unemployment compensation program for purposes of income verification, so as to require disclosure to the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) of (1) all such information for purposes of determining eligibility for VA needs-based pension programs under chapter 15 of title 38 or any other law administered by VA, needs-based parents' dependency and indemnity compensation provided under section 415 of title 38, and VA health-care services based on income status under sections 610(a)(1)(I) and (2)(A), 610(b), and 612(a)(2)(B) of title 38, and (2) only wage and self-employment information from such returns for purposes of determining eligibility for compensation paid, pursuant to section 4.16 of title 38, Code of Federal Regulations, at the total-disability-rating level based on an individual determination of unemployability.

Fifth, allow VA, in the case of compensation beneficiaries with total-disability ratings based on individual unemployability, to verify or otherwise act upon wage or self-employment data only if the Secretary finds that the amount and duration of the earnings reported therein clearly indicate that the individual may no longer be qualified for a rating of total disability.

Sixth, amend chapter 53 of title 38, relating to special provisions pertaining to VA benefit programs, to add a new section 3117 to prohibit the Secretary from using such tax information without first complying with the requirements of section 1137 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1320b-7) relating to independent verification of such data, notification to the individual concerned, and allowing the individual fair opportunity to contest Department findings based on such information.

Seventh, within 90 days after the date of enactment and before obtaining such return information, require VA to notify benefit recipients and applicants that income reported to VA will be subject to verification against such return information, and to so notify all new applicants and periodically to renotify all recipients.

Eighth, provide that (1) VA's costs of establishing and operating the program under which the return information would be obtained, used, and verified would be paid for out of VA's compensation and pension account, and (2) amounts collected as a result of the program would be paid into that account.

Ninth, provide that the statute (section 4052(a) of title 38) giving the United States Court of Veterans Appeals exclusive jurisdiction over all matters decided by the Board of Veterans' Appeals (BVA) shall not apply as to BVA decisions involving VA insurance matters under sections 775 and 784 of title 38, or VA home loan guaranty matters under chapter 37 of title 38, when the notice of disagreement in the case is filed within 30 days after the effective date of the committee bill.

Tenth, amend the statute relating to financial disclosure by judicial personnel (section 301 et seq. of title 28 Appendix, United States Code) to add the United States Court of Veterans Appeals to the list of courts covered by that law.

COMPENSATION/DIC COLA

Section 101 of the committee bill would provide for a cost-of-living adjustment (COLA) in the rates of VA service-connected compensation and dependency and indemnity compensation (DIC), which the Congressional Budget Office (CBO) currently estimates to be 5.2 percent for fiscal year 1990. The COLA would generally be effective on December 1, 1989, but for the statutory (k) award the effective date would be August 1, 1990.

Mr. President, I believe that we must attach the highest priority to meeting the needs of the 2.2 million veterans with service-connected disabilities and the 365,000 survivors of those who have made the ultimate sacrifice. This is, and always has been, my number-one priority in veterans' affairs. Through the COLA, we can ensure that the value of their VA benefits is not eroded by inflation. For greater detail about this provision, I would refer my colleagues to pages 92-100 of the report accompanying the committee bill.

RECRUITMENT AND RETENTION OF SCARCE HEALTH-CARE PROFESSIONALS

Mr. President, the provisions in part B of title II of the committee bill are designed to assist VA to overcome problems of recruiting and retaining sufficient numbers of qualified health-care professionals—a problem which has intensified in recent years. Many of these provisions are the same or nearly the same as provisions which the Senate passed last October and on which we were unable to reach agreement with the House at the end of the 100th Congress.

A number of factors have contributed to VA's recruitment and retention problem, including inadequate salaries, increased demand for personnel, poor working conditions, and decreased enrollment in educational institutions which prepare health-care professionals. Because the services furnished to veteran-patients are largely a function of the quality of the personnel furnishing the services, we must do all that we can to enable VA to attract the "best and brightest" health-care personnel into the system.

To provide VA the tools to compete effectively in today's marketplace, the committee bill incorporates the provisions of S. 947, which I developed with Senator MITCHELL and others to provide many new approaches and authorities to deal with VA's personnel shortages. The principal provision—section 251—would require the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to establish and maintain, for full- and part-time registered nurses (RNs), registered nurse anesthetists (RNAs), and certified registered nurse anesthetists (CRNAs), and would authorize the Secretary to establish and maintain for other health-care employees covered by title 38 for pay purposes only (the so-called "hybrids"), levels of pay which are competitive with but do not exceed the pay of employers offering similar employment and competing in the same labor market area for qualified employees.

The major differences between the committee bill—which to avoid confusion I will refer to as providing for "competitive pay"—and the existing statutory authority to establish special rates in section 4107(g) of title 38 are: (1) special rates are discretionary while competitive pay for RNs, RNAs, and CRNAs would be mandatory; (2) competitive-pay salary ranges would generally be determined by the individual facility director while special rates are approved by VA Central Office; (3) competitive pay calls for salary ranges to be increased or decreased on an annual basis depending upon labor market area rates; and (4) in the instance of competitive pay, a pre-established time in December (June in the first year—1990) would be established for review and adjustment of pay grades rather than waiting for a problem to arise as is the case with special rates. Of course, in the intervening year between routine competitive pay reviews and adjustments, special rates could still be implemented as needed and could be implemented thereafter between the annual reviews as needed.

Competitive pay would end the pattern of VA's being continuously behind in its rates of pay. Because special rates must be approved by VA Central Office, there is a significant time-delay between the time when the need arises and is recognized and when the remedy is applied. Hence, VA is often behind again by the time special rates are implemented. Competitive pay provides an entirely new and innovative approach. The impetus for developing such a new approach was the disturbing situation in locations such as San Francisco, Los Angeles, New York City, and Boston, cities in which VA is constantly struggling to recruit and retain health-care professionals due to high costs of living and numerous health-care facilities competing for personnel from a limited pool.

As a result of testimony in connection with the committee's May 18 hearing, the competitive-pay measure as introduced was modified so that (1) when making the determination as to what, if any, pay adjustment would be made, the Federal COLA would be passed along unless the facility director makes an affirmative finding that it is unnecessary for recruitment and retention purposes to do so; (2) in those facilities where RNs, RNAs, CRNAs, or other affected employees are covered by a collective bargaining agreement, union consultation would be required when (a) survey criteria are developed nationally, (b) survey criteria are developed locally, (c) the local plan for data collection is developed, and (d) the decision is made regarding specific salary determinations; and (3) protection would be provided from disclosure of survey information pursuant to provisions in section 552(b) of title 5.

Many other provisions addressing recruitment and retention strategies are included in the committee bill, including items targeted at overtime pay for RNs, head nurse salaries, dependent care assistance, scholarships for Associate degree nursing students, cash awards for title 38 employees, and a variety of other matters. There is also a provision, derived from my bill, S. 1211, to provide VA doctors and dentists a pay raise, in most cases, of about $2,700 for full-time service.

The problems leading to health-personnel shortages are complex and the resulting approach used to resolve those problems must be multifaceted. This belief was our overriding guide when designing the provisions in the committee bill.

SERVICES TO OVERCOME SERVICE-CONNECTED DISABILITY AFFECTING PROCREATION

Mr. President, section 211 of the committee bill would (1) require VA to furnish services to a service-connected-disabled veteran or the spouse of such a veteran to achieve pregnancy when the veteran's service-connected disability impairs procreative ability; (2) establish an interdisciplinary task force to advise the Chief Medical Director on the implementation of this provision; and (3) require VA to furnish this service generally on a fee-basis. The latter two proposals were added to the provisions as introduced in order to help clarify VA's responsibilities in this new area of services.

This new statutory directive is necessary because VA has maintained that it does not have the authority to furnish medical services for service-connected disabilities that impair the ability to have children. This came to light in the case of a woman who, while serving in the U.S. Air Force, developed pelvic inflammatory disease, which was misdiagnosed. The disease progressed, scarred her fallopian tubes, and left her sterile. Although she tried to convince VA to pay for in vitro fertilization (IVF)—which is the only procedure that offered her the possibility of having a child—VA chose to interpret its statutory authority very narrowly and refused to provide the procedure, claiming that it lacked the authority to furnish such services. I have tried, unsuccessfully, to change VA's narrow interpretation of its statutory authority.

Because of an unusual aspect of the case I just discussed, I was able to convince VA to reach a settlement with the woman, but generally the current situation is that, veterans who because of a service-connected disability are unable to have children are being denied access to services to enable them to reproduce and have a family—one of life's most basic and fundamental activities. The committee bill would end this patent unfairness.

POST-TRAUMATIC STRESS DISORDER PROVISIONS

The Research Triangle Institute (RTI) study recently revealed that 479,000 Vietnam veterans, of which nearly 40 percent have never been seen by, much less received treatment from, a mental-health professional, are currently suffering from PTSD and that in the past year almost 80 percent had not utilized any mental health services. These figures make totally clear that a tremendous unmet need continues to exist for PTSD treatment.

Additionally, a VA survey, conducted at my request, confirms reports received by the committee that veterans who need to be referred to VA medical centers from Vet Centers for evaluation and treatment of their PTSD are very often not getting any timely evaluation or treatment. The May survey results, reported in a July 11, 1989, letter from VA, indicated that 33 percent of those veterans who Vet Centers concluded should be referred to a VA medical center by a Vet Center did not receive timely evaluations and 45 percent did not gain access to care. The May survey results, reported in a July 11, 1989 letter from VA, indicated that 33 percent of those veterans who Vet Centers concluded should have been referred to a VA medical center for evaluations did not receive timely evaluations and that 45 percent of those veterans who were assessed by Vet Centers to require treatment at VA medical centers were not able to receive any care at the medical centers. This fracturing of care—making the effort at Vet Centers to outreach to veterans with PTSD, only to bring them into the system, and then turn them away—is inexcusable and cruel. It must stop.

So must the waiting lists at VA's 16 inpatient PTSD units—which stretch from weeks to over two years at American Lake in Washington State.

Section 201 of the committee bill, which is derived from section 201 of S. 13, would require VA (1) to provide treatment for PTSD on a priority-care basis once (a) a diagnosis of the disorder has been made by a mental-health professional designated by the Chief Medical Director, and (b) the veteran's service in a combat area is verified (with verification by the Veterans Benefits Administration by the most rapid means possible), without the need for a pretreatment adjudication on the issue of service-connection; and (2) to accomplish an evaluation of a veteran within 7 days after the referral of the veteran to a VAMC from a Vet Center. The combat-area-status and evaluation provisions have been added to the provision as introduced in response to hearing testimony and VA's recent survey data.

I believe this provision is essential in order to ensure that those veterans who served their country when called receive an answer from VA when they in turn call for help in their fight to overcome the effects of PTSD.

Our efforts to improve VA's PTSD treatment capacity have recently been successful in the appropriations arena. On September 28, the Senate passed the VA, HUD, and Independent Agencies FY 1990 Appropriations Act with a $6-million add-on for PTSD treatment that I had requested.

Another provision that addresses some of the issues raised by the RTI report is section 203 of the committee bill, derived from section 203 of S. 13 and S. 192, which would require VA's National Center on PTSD to study the outreach to and treatment of minority veterans and develop methods of improving those outreach and treatment activities. The RTI study demonstrated that the current prevalence of PTSD among minority groups studied is significantly higher (28 percent for Hispanics and 21 percent for blacks) than that among white males (15 percent). Rather than simply determining the prevalence of PTSD among minority groups not specifically studied by RTI, as this provision as introduced would have done, this provision now moves beyond the question of prevalence, to require VA to study how best to reach and treat minority veterans. Given the combined research, education, and treatment components of the National Center on PTSD, I believe it is particularly appropriate for the National Center to undertake this responsibility.

HOME LOAN GUARANTY IMPROVEMENTS

Mr. President, title IV of the committee bill contains important provisions designed to improve the VA home loan program to enhance its value to veterans, maintain its solvency, and reduce its dependence on taxpayers' funds—all without compromising basic program goals. These measures are, in large part, taken directly from S. 1158 which I introduced on June 9, 1989. The bill also incorporates some provisions of S. 898, a bill I introduced at the request of the administration on May 2, 1989. The changes and additions reflected in the committee bill resulted from testimony at the June 22, 1989, hearing on home loan guaranty legislation and from subsequent discussions about some concerns of the ranking minority member of the committee, Senator MURKOWSKI.

Mr. President, I note that the home loan provisions in the committee bill taken from S. 1158 are substantially similar to home loan legislation passed by the House on June 6, 1989. This legislation, H.R. 1415, as introduced in the House on March 15, 1989, by Representative HARLEY STAGGERS, who chairs the House Veterans' Affairs Subcommittee on Housing and Memorial Affairs; reported by the House Veterans' Affairs Committee on June 1, 1989; and passed by the full House on June 6, 1989. The House bill is derived directly from H.R. 5221, a bill authored by Representative MARCY KAPTUR in the 100th Congress and passed by the House late last year. I congratulate Representatives KAPTUR and STAGGERS, as well as the House committee, for their leadership in this matter.

Mr. President, I am pleased that the committee bill preserves all of the fundamental features of S. 1158 as introduced. The committee bill would create a new fund, known as the Home Loan Guaranty Fund, with significant differences from the current Loan Guaranty Revolving Fund. For example, the new fund would retain and invest any surplus collections for the benefit of the home loan program, rather than depositing that surplus into the general Treasury as current law requires. The administration has agreed that section 113(a)(6) of title 38 clearly would exempt the new fund from sequestration under the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Deficit Reduction Act.

The legislation also would raise the basic loan fee from 1 percent of the loan amount to 1.25 percent—but in return, generally release participants from liability to VA for guaranty payments VA makes when a lender forecloses on a home due to the borrower's default. The committee bill would reduce the basic fee significantly for 5- or 10-percent downpayments. Also, assumptors of a VA-guaranteed loan would pay a higher fee (0.75 percent) than under current law, but they also would be indemnified.

The bill would require the Government to contribute to the new fund over 3 years a total of 0.75 percent of the amount of each new loan. I believe this pay-as-you-go Government support is a great improvement over the current practice of relying on large, unplanned deficit appropriations each year. The committee bill would continue the practice in current law of exempting disabled veterans and surviving spouses from loan fees, but would recognize the actual costs of these borrowers' loans by requiring the Government to pay the fees on behalf of the exempted borrowers. Further, the legislation includes some flexibility for VA to adjust the fees within a limited range if the new fund faces imminent insolvency.

The committee bill would provide an opportunity for veterans to obtain some additional entitlement, for which they would pay an additional fee, that would allow those who live in high-cost real estate markets to take advantage of this important veterans' benefit.

In addition, the committee bill would allow VA to sell vendee loans with or without recourse during fiscal year 1990, but require the Office of Management and Budget to treat the proceeds from both types of sales the same for budget scorekeeping purposes.

Mr. President, following a default on a VA-guaranteed loan, VA applies a statutory formula to determine whether it will purchase that property at foreclosure. This calculation, known as the "no-bid" formula, compares the cost of paying the guaranty with the cost of purchasing and reselling the home, to determine which option would be most profitable for VA. Current law does not state specifically whether VA may consider the cost of borrowing funds in determining the net value of a home for purposes of determining whether it will bid on the property at foreclosure.

The committee bill would also allow VA to consider a limited portion of the Government's cost of funds in making its no-bid calculation. This is a very controversial issue, and I note that most who testified on this provision—including both VA and the Government National Mortgage Association—consider our provision a "reasonable compromise" on the issue that they can support.

Mr. President, I would like to highlight briefly some of the substantive changes to S. 1158 as introduced.

The committee bill modifies provisions in S. 1158 that would create a new Home Loan Guaranty Fund to require that VA's annual budget submission to Congress include certain pertinent projections, including information about default dispositions and about the current and future operations and financial status of both the current Loan Guaranty Revolving Fund and the new Home Loan Guaranty Fund. This annual report would help the committee evaluate the status of both funds and address problems as they arise, in order to help ensure that the program remains solvent through the 1990's—as CBO has estimated.

The committee bill also modifies the provision in S. 1158 that would allow the Secretary to increase the loan fees by also allowing decreases back to the statutory level when appropriate. This authority was added to ensure that fees do not remain unrealistically inflated if economic conditions change after the Secretary appropriately increased the fees.

Mr. President, the provision in S. 1158 denying indemnification to certain borrowers has been clarified in the committee bill. The provision as introduced would have denied indemnification when a default was due to circumstances "not beyond the individual's control." The committee bill changes the phrase to "within the individual's control" and would require the Secretary to prescribe regulations before using this basis for denying indemnification. These modifications are designed to minimize further the chance of misinterpretation or misapplication of this authority to deny indemnification.

S. 1158 as introduced would have allowed veterans the option to purchase up to $10,000 in additional entitlement. I believe that an option for this amount of additional entitlement is warranted to address certain high housing cost areas, but in an effort to reach an overall agreement on the loan-guaranty provisions with the committee's ranking minority member, my good friend, Senator MURKOWSKI, the committee bill would reduce the maximum additional entitlement to $5,000. The optional increased entitlement still would help veterans in high-cost real estate markets to use their VA home loan benefit. Under current industry practice, the committee bill would allow a veteran to obtain a $164,000 loan without a downpayment if the veteran acquired the maximum $5,000 additional entitlement by paying a 0.5-percent additional fee. This would be a beneficial increase over the current guaranty limits, which allow a no-downpayment loan of just $144,000.

Mr. President, to reach further agreement with the ranking minority member, the fee charged to those who assume VA loans would be increased under the committee bill from two-thirds of a percent in S. 1158 to 0.75 percent (compared to the current 0.5-percent fee) in order to extend the indemnification provisions to assumptors.

Mr. President, an important provision in S. 1158 that would have required lenders to notify VA when they refuse tender of a partial payment has been changed to authorize—rather than require—the Secretary to prescribe regulations requiring notice of a lender's refusal to accept tender of a "significant" portion of the debt due and "any other information about the tender." These modifications would allow the Secretary some flexibility to implement the notification requirement in the most efficient manner and to require other useful information, such as the amount refused and the amount of the delinquency at the time of the tender. I believe that this provision would allow VA's loan counselors to target their efforts at those individuals who are best able to avoid default, foreclosure, and ultimately the loss of their home.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Mr. President, title III of the committee bill would make a number of amendments to current GI bills and veterans' employment programs administered by VA and the Department of Labor, two of which I would like to make particular mention of today.

First, the committee bill would extend the Veterans' Readjustment

Appointment [VRA] authority termination date from December 31, 1989, to December 31, 1991, for Vietnam-era veterans who are service-disabled or who served in the Vietnam theater of operations; expand eligibility during this period to include post-Vietnam-era veterans and all veterans with service-connected disabilities rated at 30 percent or higher; provide for a one-time limit on use of the authority for any particular veteran after the date of enactment; and limit the period during which an appointment may be made by requiring that the veteran receive an appointment by the later of either the end of the 4-year period from the date of separation or the 2-year period beginning on the date of enactment.

As I explained in my January 25, 1989, statement upon introduction of S. 13, because of the continuing difficulties that service-disabled Vietnam-era veterans and Vietnam-era veterans who served in the Vietnam theater of operations are experiencing in the job market, I do not believe Congress should allow the VRA authority to expire for these groups. On the basis of that view, I initially proposed a 2-year VRA extension targeted specifically to disabled and theater veterans of the Vietnam era. In response to the 7.1-percent unemployment rate among post-Vietnam-era veterans ages 20 to 29, and because of the continuing employment problems confronting seriously disabled veterans of all wars, Senator MURKOWSKI and I have blended the approaches in section 113 of S. 13 and his bill, S. 1279, and developed the provision extending VRA eligibility on a time-limited basis to veterans in these groups as well and limiting a veteran to one use of a VRA appointment after the date of enactment.

Mr. President, the committee bill would also authorize the Secretary of Labor, during FYs 1990–1992, to conduct a pilot program under which Disabled Veterans' Outreach Program Specialists [DVOP's] and Local Veterans' Employment Representatives [LVER's] would participate in providing employment and training information services to members of the Armed Forces within 180 days before their separation from active duty. The program would involve not less than 5 nor more than 10 geographically dispersed States in which the Secretary of Labor determines that services to veterans would not be unduly limited as a result of the pilot program.

This provision is based on the interest shown by certain State employment security agencies, the Veterans' Employment and Training Service of the Department of Labor, and the military services, in providing assistance to separating service members—who are about to become veterans—and the general need for a more innovative approach to assisting in service members' transition from military life into meaningful civilian careers.

According to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the unemployment rate for veterans in the 20-to-29 age group—the category in which the majority of separating veterans fall—was 7.1 percent as of August 1, 1989. Moreover, it is widely anticipated that the Nation will confront a shortage in the supply of skilled workers in the civilian workforce in the late 1990's. These factors serve to justify increased emphasis on matching peacetime military job skills to private industry and public-sector needs.

Mr. President, the preseparation employment and training services pilot program in this provision is not without precedent, but in fact is modeled on a program which has for several years been contributing directly to improving employment prospects for service members making the transition from active duty to the civilian workforce. I am proud to cite, as a model for the pilot program in the committee bill, the State of California's "Career Awareness Program" [CAP] initiated over 10 years ago by the Rehabilitation Foundation of the California Department of the Disabled American Veterans [DAV] Foundation and the California Employment Development Department [EDD]. That program, first provided to separating service members at Lemoore, CA Naval Air Station in 1978, has expanded its services to 13 Navy, Marine Corps, Army, and Air Force bases in California.

Through 1988, 11,177 service members attended some 173 CAP classes prior to their separation from active-duty service. In 1989, about 9,000 service members will attend the CAP's 1-week preseparation classes, which address the following aspects: First, identification of individual skills and values; second, job sources and job analysis; third, résumé preparation and job interview techniques; fourth, veterans' and military benefits and procedures for applying for them; and fifth, opportunities in the Selected Reserve.

Based on preliminary analysis, the CAP program has proven to provide many benefits, including increased retention in active duty and reserve components, reduced unemployment costs associated with post-separation job referral and placement, higher starting salaries among CAP attendees as compared to non-CAP attendees, and reduced military retraining costs.

Various California community colleges have participated in this program by providing, under contract to the California EDD, instructors for various parts of the program. In addition, excellent cooperation has been provided by the four military services, particularly the Navy, in furnishing classroom facilities and informing military separatees and retirees of the procedures associated with registering for CAP.

Mr. President, I want to acknowledge several individuals for their significant contributions to the development and success of California's highly innovative CAP program. They include Glen M. Halsey, Assistant State Supervisor of Veterans' Programs, California EDD; Navy Comdr. John Halvorson, Military Liaison to the CAP Programs; Pat Ford, CAP Program Manager and his assistant, John Reece and lead DVOP, Joe Hollinshead; Stewart M. Roth, State Supervisor of Veterans' Programs, California EDD; and Mark Sanders, Deputy Director, Operations Branch, California EDD. In addition, the three California DAV National Service Officers—Bob Jordan in Los Angeles, Mike Warbois in San Diego, and Ken Warr in San Francisco—have lent invaluable financial and manpower support to the day-to-day operations of the CAP Program.

I also want to express today, Mr. President, my deep appreciation for the very fine work of the Commission on Veterans' Education Policy. The Commission's extensive and very constructive recommendations on improving the overall effectiveness of VA's administration of its educational assistance programs served as the basis for many of the provisions I introduced initially in S. 1092, the Veterans' Education Policy Improvements Act, all of which are included in the committee-reported S. 13 under consideration today.

I congratulate all the Commission members for their outstanding contributions and applaud particularly the very fine leadership of the chairperson, Janet D. Steiger, who is now Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission. I am also deeply grateful for the excellent work of Executive Director Babette V. Polzer, who served as a staff adviser to me for 12 years, and Commission members Bertie Rowland, a past president of the National Association of Veterans' Programs Administrators and a constituent of mine, Jack Wickes, who previously served as an associate counsel on the Veterans' Affairs Committee, and Oliver Meadows, Chairman of the Secretary's Advisory Committee on Education, who served with such great distinction for many years as staff director of the House Veterans' Affairs Committee. We owe a great debt of thanks to these and all the members of the Commission as we advance their fine efforts on behalf of the veterans, service members, and eligible persons pursuing fulfillment of educational and vocational goals through VA's educational assistance programs.

Finally, Mr. President, I wish to acknowledge the many career professionals in the Veterans Benefits Administration of the Department of Veterans Affairs for the excellent cooperation and valuable assistance they provided to the members of the Commission in the conduct of their work.

MINORITY AFFAIRS

Title VI of the committee bill contains a number of provisions, derived from legislation introduced by Senator MATSUNAGA—S. 564, S. 1145, and S. 1146—that are designed to improve VA's efforts to provide benefits and services to veterans who are members of minority groups. The first of these provisions would assign responsibility for coordinating and monitoring the provision of benefits and services to minority veterans to an Assistant Secretary of Veterans Affairs. This should result in needed, higher level attention being paid to the needs of minority veterans and to VA's efforts to respond to those needs. A second provision would reauthorize the Advisory Committee on Native-American Veterans through fiscal year 1991. A third provision in this title of the committee bill would require VA to carry out a study to determine the level of participation in VA home loan programs of certain minority veterans who live on trust or communally-owned land.

SECURITY SERVICES

Mr. President, section 701 of the committee bill would relocate organizationally VA's security force under the Office of the Secretary. I believe that this arrangement, while not altering the direct line of security force accountability at the medical center level, would give the security force program more resources, more visibility, and more top management attention than it has received in VHS&RA.

The need for a higher quality VA security force can be illustrated by the numerous incidents of vandalism, general disturbances, forced entries, assaults, and robberies at VA medical centers in fiscal year 1988. These offenses during that fiscal year resulted in almost $7.7 million in property loss and damage.

Despite this sizable dollar loss, the Veterans Health Services and Research Administration [VHS&RA] has been generally inattentive to making the changes needed in the security force program. This inattention can best be demonstrated by the lack of action by VHS&RA management after the fatal shooting of security force personnel at the Breckville, OH, and Bronx, NY, VA Medical Centers in 1986 and 1988, respectively. VHS&RA leadership was in a position to learn from each unfortunate situation and make needed changes to the security force program to preclude similar situations from occurring elsewhere. Yet it took no decisive actions. After the Brecksville, OH, shooting, VHS&RA was very much in a position to conclude that greater protection was very probably needed for all security force personnel working at the 78 VA medical centers which are located in high-crime areas.

However, rather than pursue a course of greater protection systemwide, VHS&RA has permitted individual medical centers to review independently and, possibly, deny local security force requests for protective equipment. After the Bronx, NY, shooting, VHS&RA managers should have been aware that allowing a security force officer to operate a walk-through metal detector alone was not only a violation of Departmental policy but was also a high-risk situation that may have contributed to the security force officer's death. Yet, regrettably, no attempt was made to survey VA medical centers nationwide regarding the need to follow the policy of having two officers operate walk-through metal detectors or to check to see whether or not individual centers were, in fact, following the policy. As a result, even today at the Bronx, NY, VAMC, a single officer is still often asked to operate the walk-through metal detector alone.

VA inaction regarding the use of protective vests by security personnel also demonstrates the inconsistency with which the security force program has been administered. According to VA-supplied information, 66 VAMC's have purchased protective vests for use by their security personnel. Of that number, 45 are located in high-crime areas while 21 are not. VA also indicated that at 8 VAMC's walk-through or portable metal detectors are used to interdict the introduction of dangerous weapons, but the centers have not purchased protective vests for their security personnel's use. VA further pointed out that one or more of the personnel were not wearing the vests at 33 (of the 66) VAMC's that have purchased protective vests for their security personnel.

This seemingly routine lack of attention and action by VHS&RA managers raises serious questions about their capability to manage the security force program properly. My views on this matter are set forth in detail in my Additional Views (on pages 480–490) in the committee report.

I believe that the realignment proposed in the committee bill, along with the requirement in the committee bill that the Secretary study and report to Congress on a number of vital security issues is the first step toward the resolution of VA security force problems that need immediate attention. I am pleased to say that I have discussed the approach in the committee bill with the Deputy Secretary of Veterans Affairs, Anthony J. Principi, and that, after further study of the situation and the extensive questions I submitted in connection with the committee's June 22 hearing, he is generally in accord with our approach.

CRANSTON/MURKOWSKI AMENDMENT

Now, Mr. President, on behalf of the committee, I am offering an amendment with Senator MURKOWSKI, that I will describe in a moment, to the bill as reported. This amendment incorporates amendments offered by me, by Senator MURKOWSKI, and by a number of other Senators whom I will indicate in describing each of the amendments.

SUMMARY OF AMENDMENT PROVISIONS

Mr. President, the committee amendment includes seven provisions which would:

First, require VA to contract to the maximum extent that the Secretary considers feasible, with private firms, on a commission basis, for the recovery from health insurers of the cost of VA-furnished care for nonservice-connected conditions for which such reimbursement is authorized (Cranston-Murkowski-Graham).

Second, expand VA's authority to recover from health insurers the reasonable cost of care furnished by VA after November 30, 1989, for nonservice-connected disabilities to include the cost of such nonservice-connected care in the cases of those whose service-connected disabilities are rated at 20 percent or less (Murkowski-Graham).

Third, require VA's Chief Medical Director, before providing any assistive monkeys, to have an independent evaluation conducted, after consultation with appropriate animal welfare organizations, of the treatment that the monkeys would receive during their training and placement under the pilot program (Cranston).

Fourth, provide for limited use of Montgomery GI Bill benefits for flight training (Daschle-Murkowski).

Fifth, extend, until 180 days after completion of a relevant, statutorily-required HUD study, the requirement (expiring on November 7, 1989) for FHA to accept a VA certificate of reasonable value for a home in a subdivision as an administrative approval of the entire subdivision (Cranston).

Sixth, delete, in order to avoid a possible Budget Act point of order and thus expedite consideration of the committee bill, the provision relating to the proceeds of VA home-loan-asset sales (Cranston-Murkowski).

Seventh, expand the memberships of VA Chief Medical Director and Chief Benefits Director search commissions to include two additional representatives of veterans and one at-large member (Cranston-Matsunaga-DeConcini - Rockefeller - Graham - Jeffords).

Eighth, name the Leavenworth, KS, VA Medical Center as the Eisenhower VA Medical Center (Kassebaum-Dole).

Ninth, make two technical amendments in the Public Law 100-687 provisions establishing the U.S. Court of Veterans Appeals, as requested by the Chief Judge of the Court (Cranston-Murkowski).

THIRD-PARTY INSURANCE COLLECTIONS

Mr. President, included in the amendment are provisions offered on behalf of myself and Senators MURKOWSKI and GRAHAM which would require: First, that contract services using one or more private vendors be used to the maximum extent feasible, as determined by the VA Secretary, to recover from a third party the costs incurred by VA when treating a veteran described in section 629(a)(2)(D) of title 38; second, that the vendor's fee be negotiated by VA and paid out of the collection proceeds and that any remaining proceeds be deposited in the Treasury; third, that the vendor be subject to all laws affecting VA regarding confidentiality of a veteran's medical record and health status; fourth, that there be no reduction in full-time equivalent employees assigned to any VA medical center [VAMC] as a result of entering into such a contract; and fifth, that VA submit a report 90 days after enactment and on each February 1 thereafter on the status of contracting out the collections process and the results achieved.

Also included, on behalf of Senators MURKOWSKI and GRAHAM, is an amendment that would require that: First, VA recover from the third-party insurer of any veteran who has a service-connected disability rated at 0-, 10-, or 20-percent, for the cost of care received beginning after November 30, 1989, in connection with a nonservice-connected condition; and second, that this measure not nullify any provision of a health-plan contract that was entered into before the date of enactment of this measure and is not modified or renewed on or after that date.

BACKGROUND

Mr. President, proposals relating to billing third-party insurers for care furnished to veterans began to appear in the 91st Congress. However, cost-recovery provisions were not enacted until 1981 in Public Law 97-72.

Because of my belief that billing third-party insurers for the cost of care furnished to veterans being treated for their nonservice-connected conditions would hurt rather than help VA's health-care system—it does nothing to reduce the overall cost of VA health care; in fact it increases the cost—I have long opposed such legislation. In addition to my concern about the overall impact of such proposals, I have raised questions about the increased administrative costs VA and insurance companies would incur as a result of such proposals, the reliability of VA's and OMB's collection estimates, the inflationary effect collections would have on health insurance premiums, and the legality of such recovery legislation.

Public Law 97-72 required VA to recover only the cost of care furnished to a veteran for a nonservice-connected disability that was incurred: First, incident to the veteran's employment and the disability was covered by worker's compensation; second, as a result of a motor vehicle accident which occurred in a State having "no-fault" automobile insurance; or third, as the result of a crime of personal violence that occurred in a State or area in which the victim is entitled to receive health care or services at the State's expense.

On April 7, 1985, Public Law 99-272, the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act [COBRA] of 1985, was enacted which contained a measure giving the United States the right to recover or collect from third-party insurers the reasonable cost of care provided by VA to nonservice-connected disabled veterans to the extent that the insurer would be liable to pay for the care if it has been furnished by a private facility. I expressed my concerns about this legislation at that time, and I refer my colleagues to S. Prt. 99-150, pages 69-71 for a detailed discussion of my views.

Generally, over the 4 years between enactment of Public Law 97-72 and the enactment of COBRA, my concerns had not changed: I continued to oppose any extension for much the same reasons. However, at the time COBRA was enacted, both the Senate and House Veterans' Affairs Committees were faced with very significant reconciliation instructions, and the fact that CBO estimated savings of $960 million over 3 years through the enactment of legislation providing for third-party recoveries made this an option our committees "simply could not refuse".

On January 30, 1987, VA published final regulations, retroactive to April 7, 1986, implementing Public Law 99-272. Because VA was operating a manual billing system, the cost of producing a bill for inpatient and outpatient care was the same, and the monetary return on inpatient collection activities was greater than outpatient activities. Thus, VA decided to concentrate billings in the area of inpatient care. VA has continued this practice; however, consideration is being given now to expanding billings to include outpatient care. Although VA has improved slightly its inpatient collection performance over the past 4 years, its record in this area is not impressive.

In fiscal year 1987, VA identified $97 million in receivables and collected $24 million—a 24.7-percent collection rate. In fiscal year 1988, VA identified $275 million in receivables and collected $105.5 million—a 38.4-percent collection rate. Through July of fiscal year 1989, VA has identified $270.5 million in receivables and collected $108 million—a 30-percent collection rate. For fiscal year 1990, OMB estimates that VA will collect $304 million compared to a VA estimate of $136 million. It should be noted that VA is in the process of changing the manner in which it reports accrued receivables. The figures I have just recited reflect 100 percent of that which VA has billed—gross receivables—and not the amount—which VA calls "net receivables"—that VA says can be expected to be collected based upon deductible amounts and copayments which the third-party, contract, is not obligated to pay. As an example, using VA's new method of calculating the success of its collection efforts, for fiscal year 1988, whereas gross receivables were $275 million, net receivables were $194 million. If VA's estimate of "net receivables" is used as the criterion against which the success of the collection program is measured, VA's fiscal year 1988 collection rate would improve—to 54 percent. For fiscal year 1989, through July, VA's new net receivables equal $162.6 million, increasing VA's collection rate from 39 percent to 66.4 percent.

There are no comparable private sector figures to compare with VA's experience.

Recently, because they believe that VA's billing and collections outcome needs improvement and because of the budget shortfall being experienced in VA health care, some VA medical center directors have suggested that their hospitals be permitted to retain all or part of what is collected so that personnel will have the incentive to do a better job. As advocates of this approach explain it, because the amounts collected from billing third-party insurers go directly to the Treasury and are not credited to VA, there is no motivation to ensure high collection performance.

In response to a January 26, 1989, question I asked in preparation for the committee's budget hearing about the impact of converting general fund receipts to reimbursements in medical care, VA stated that "In lieu of providing a known budget in advance for statutory programs, funding would be split between known and estimated levels, creating a continuous question as to the availability of funding in any month or year." VA went on to say that it "would not help solve our budget shortfall problems since there would be no net increase in funding." This view was further reinforced by VA's Chief Medical Director [CMD] in his April 12 statement to the House Veterans' Affairs Committee. at that hearing, he expressed the view that, if there were VA retention of third-party reimbursements, the administration's request for VA appropriations for a coming fiscal year would be reduced by OMB by the amount estimated to be collected.

On May 10, 1989, I wrote to various veteran service organizations and VA medical center directors expressing my concern about VA retaining third-party reimbursements. The responses I received were unanimous—VA would not gain by such a policy and might be hurt as a result of OMB overestimating VA collections and thus reducing VA's budget by a like amount. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of my letter and the respective organization responses be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, at the committee's May 18 hearing on various health-care matters, I discussed third-party reimbursement with Deputy VA Secretary Principi. VA's prepared testimony for that hearing proposed that 50 percent of collections be legitimately retained by VA. I explained that I would favor an approach that would give local hospitals an incentive to do a better job on third-party collections but that I was convinced OMB would reduce VA's budget request by more than VA would be able to collect. When I asked Deputy Secretary Principi what legitimately meant, he explained that legitimately "means there will be no offsets, that we will be allowed to retain those dollars." However, he also admitted that he had no assurances from OMB that VA would be allowed to retain these funds; he could only state that OMB had agreed to the words "legitimately retained." I urged Deputy Secretary Principi to get this definition of legitimately clarified.

During the period of time that retention of third-party reimbursements was being discussed, the President submitted his fiscal year 1990 budget request. That package noted that legislation would be proposed which would, among other items, authorize reimbursement from third-party health insurers for treatment of nonservice-connected disabilities of insured veterans who have "relatively minor" service-connected disabilities, defined by the administration as veterans with a 0-, 10-, or 20-percent disability rating. OMB estimated receipts from this proposal to be approximately $63 million. CBO estimated these receipts to be $26 million in fiscal year 1990, $31 in fiscal year 1991, $34 million in fiscal year 1992, $36 million in fiscal year 1993, and $40 million in fiscal year 1994. According to CBO, the major difference in the two estimates is that OMB assumes an unrealistic 100 percent collection rate and CBO assumes a 50 percent collection rate and CBO assumes that VA will bill only for inpatient care. To date, the administration has not transmitted such a legislative proposal.

On March 15, 1989, Senators MURKOWSKI, SIMPSON, and JEFFORDS introduced legislation, S. 573, which would provide for third-party reimbursement for the cost of health care and services furnished any service-connected disabled veteran by VA for a nonservice-connected disability. CBO estimated receipts from that proposal to be $52 million in fiscal year 1990, $63 million in fiscal year 1991, and $69 million in fiscal year 1992. This measure elicited no support from witnesses at the committee's May 18 hearing and was opposed by many witnesses. For example, the Disabled American Veterans stated that it was "adamantly opposed to this measure" and The American Legion concurred that it was "totally opposed to this provision". The Paralyzed Veterans of America and the Veterans of Foreign Wars also opposed enactment of S. 573, and the Vietnam Veterans of America did not support it.

At the committee's July 27, 1989, markup, neither legislation authorizing VA to retain receipts from third-party collections nor legislation providing for VA to bill the third-party insurers of veterans for nonservice-connected care was included in the legislation ordered reported by the Committee, S. 13. Senator MURKOWSKI did, however, offer an amendment to S. 13 which would have authorized VA to seek reimbursement from health-care insurance companies for the cost of health care which is furnished to any service-connected veteran for the treatment of a nonservice-connected disability. The amendment also would have provided for VA to retain one-half of the collections made for a period of 2 years. After extended debate, this amendment was tabled unanimously.

CONCERNS ABOUT RETENTION OF THIRD-PARTY RECEIPTS

I am strongly opposed to legislation that would allow VA to retain third-party payments. I understand why it may seem logical and fair, upon initial analysis, for VA itself to utilize the third-party payments in order to furnish care given in VA facilities. However, in practical and operational terms, the funds collected would not be a source of additional support for the VA health-care system. Rather, if VA were authorized to retain these funds, VA budget requests and appropriations would be reduced by an amount equal to the amount anticipated—and I stress anticipated—to be collected. I believe there is a substantial probability that the reductions would significantly exceed the actual amount collected.

If there were VA retention of third-party reimbursements, the administration's request for VA appropriations for a coming fiscal year would be reduced by OMB by the amount estimated to be collected. As noted earlier, this is not speculation; it is exactly what OMB has made clear to VA that it would do—in the CMD's April 12 House testimony. This would almost certainly result in VA being put in the position of trying to provide health-care services at the program level contemplated in its budget request, as possibly amended by the Congress, but having to do so with a reduced appropriations level. VA would thus be forced to depend on its ability to make the collections at the OMB-projected rate in order to make up the difference.

In addition, OMB consistently overestimates the amount of third-party reimbursements that can be collected. This legislation would give OMB the power to bring about a decrease in VA's overall medical care budget by projecting greater amounts of third-party collections than VA would actually receive. For example, as I have previously noted, the OMB estimate of third-party payments for fiscal year 1990 is $304 million while VA's own estimate of these payments is only $136 million. If VA were authorized to keep one-half of the money it collects, rather than depositing the entire amount in the Treasury, and it eventually collected only the amount it estimated, total VA funds available for health care for fiscal year 1990 would be decreased by $84 million. Such a result would aggravate an already very serious VA health-care budget situation.

Thus, although I have strongly advocated increased funding for VA health care, I continue to reject the desirability of VA's retaining third-party reimbursements. Ironically, this seemingly free money could, and I believe almost certainly would, hurt VA more than it would help. Hence, far from increasing VA medical care funding, any proposal to allow VA to retain collections would likely serve to decrease it, and there is no way that there can be any assurance that this would indeed not happen. In short, there is no free money.

BILLING THIRD-PARTY INSURERS OF SERVICE-CONNECTED DISABLED VETERANS

Mr. President, in response to Senator MURKOWSKI's proposal to collect third-party payments for the cost of medical care furnished to any service-connected veteran for the care of nonservice connected conditions, I expressed several concerns. First, in many cases it may be difficult to say with any certainty that the non-service-connected disability being treated is not a result of or associated with the veteran's service-connected injury or disease. This would be especially true of those veterans rated as having a 50-percent or more service-connected disability and likely to be true of those veterans rated as having a 30- or 40-percent service-connected disability.

We all know that psychological stress can create physical symptoms and disease. Ulcers, migraine headaches, and hypertension are examples of this phenomena. Additionally, psychological stress can create physical symptoms and disease. VA recognizes that vascular—heart and circulation—problems may be the result of limb amputations. These are the most obvious manifestations of the interdependencies occurring within us. I believe it is possible that we will eventually discover that a number of non-service-connected disabilities are closely related to service-connected illness or injuries.

Second, the cost of making the collections can be substantial for VA. Although VA currently bills third-party payers for the cost of some care, VA does not have the capability to collect successfully on a large scale unless it is provided additional staffing. Private-sector hospitals have large staffs which are responsible for sending out bills and following-up with delinquent payers. For VA to match that effort, personnel would have to be transferred from patient-care services or services which support direct-patient-care activities. The VA—and veterans—cannot afford such personnel reductions.

EXPANDING THE RECOVERY OF THIRD-PARTY PAYMENTS

Mr. President, as all of our colleagues are well aware, we are experiencing a Federal budget deficit of grave proportions. We must search for ways to reduce that deficit without adversely affecting the beneficial programs and services we have worked hard to develop. According to CBO estimates, receipts to the Treasury would increase by $26 million in fiscal year 1990, $31 million in fiscal year 1991, and $34 million in fiscal year 1992 if VA were to bill health insurers for non-service-connected care furnished to veterans with disability ratings of 0, 10, and 20 percent. Although I continue to have the same reservations I had in the early 1980's when Public Law 97-72 was enacted, I cannot ignore the contribution these funds would make to reducing that deficit. This provision will not result in veterans being denied services nor will it negatively affect the quality of health care provided. Additionally, with the requirement to utilize contracted services for collections and that the contractor's fee be a percentage of collections drawn from these receipts, as we propose in this amendment, VA's own costs should not increase significantly as a result of expanding collections to include certain service-connected veterans being treated for non-service-connected conditions and should decline somewhat as a result of contracting for collections already authorized.

EFFECTIVE DATE

In order to furnish VA and third-party insurers time to implement this measure, collections for the treatment of nonservice conditions of service-connected veterans would be delayed so as to include only that care provided after November 30, 1989. Also, because of my concern about the Federal Government intruding into private contractual relationships and "changing the rules" during a time a contract may be in force, this provision explicitly would not nullify any provision of health-plan contract which was entered into before the date of enactment of this measure and which is not modified or renewed on or after that date. This effective date provision is modeled closely after the effective date provision, in section 19013(b) of COBRA of 1985, accompanying the enactment of the original authority for VA to collect from third-party insurers.

CONTRACTING OF COLLECTION FUNCTIONS

As I have previously stated, I am very concerned about VA retaining any portion of the funds collected from third-party insurers. I remain convinced that VA would not benefit for such a practice and, in fact, would lose funding. On the other hand, I do believe that incentives are needed to encourage persons to perform at their highest potential. Recognizing that VA was not collecting at the highest rate possible, we determined that contracting out that service and providing the contractor an incentive to collect would be the most advantageous solution to the problem.

Collecting funds from health-care insurers entails more than just sending out a bill for services rendered. The first step is to determine which veterans should be approached about their insurance coverage. After that is accomplished it must be determined if the veteran actually has insurance, what services or programs would be paid for, and under what circumstances payment would be made. If special authorization is required, that special authorization must be obtained. If other utilization review parameters exist, it would be essential to know and understand those. Once a veteran from whom third-party payments can be collected is identified, the terms of her or his insurance coverage determined and adhered to, and, in the case of inpatient care, the veteran discharged, a bill can be generated.

It must be stressed that care furnished to veterans is not dependent upon these functions being performed or VA meeting any utilization review criteria established by the third-party payer. Section 629(e) of title 38 clearly states that "a veteran eligible for care or services under this chapter may not be denied such care or services by reason of this section," and that provision is not being altered in any way by this measure.

Mr. President, the collections process is a complex one. However, it can be made more difficult if a hospital is located in a metropolitan area where many different companies provide a wide variety of different insurance plans. In those circumstances the VAMC, or the vendor contracted with to do the collections, must become familiar with many requirements. This process may be simpler in a smaller community where there are only one or two major employers who utilize the services of one insurance provider. As a result of these differences and the differences in administrative practices of VA hospitals, our amendment would provide that VA can determine the extent to which contracted services should be used but must do so to the maximum extent feasible. In some instances it might be more beneficial and cost-effective to contract out the entire collection process while, in other instances, it might be better to contract out only the utilization review process or billing process.

Rather than requiring VA to pay a set fee to a vendor for services provided in the collections process, our amendment would require VA to negotiate that fee. Because both the extent to which services would be contracted out and the amount which is needed to provide an incentive for different vendors in differing areas of the country might vary, we did not believe that Congress should establish a prevailing contract rate. However, our intention is for VA to negotiate a rate which would provide an incentive to the vendor while leaving enough remaining after that fee is paid to increase the amount turned in to the Treasury. It cannot be forgotten that the sole purpose of collecting from the third-party insurers of veterans is to reduce the Federal deficit.

Our provision would also require that the vendor be subject to all laws affecting VA regarding confidentiality of a veteran's medical record and health-status. For example, section 4132 of title 38 provides that records of the identity, diagnosis, prognosis, or treatment of any patient with certain conditions may be disclosed only for specific purposes. Persons violating these laws would be subject to fines of from $5,000 to $20,000.

The committee has heard concerns from VA officials that, if collection services were contracted out, full-time equivalent employee [FTEE] positions would be reduced in medical administration services throughout the VA system. These concerns were based on the fact that the President's fiscal year 1990 budget justified certain savings—FTEE cuts—on the theory that the implementation of certain new computer support programs would reduce the number of people needed to handle the existing workload. However, that has not proven to be the case. As an example, a budget assumption made was that implementation of certain clinical computer programs would reduce the FTEE needed to perform certain tasks. Although that may prove to be the case, no allowance was made in the budget either for the needed additional FTEE to support the computer package or for the possibility that the clinical personnel relieved of one task by implementation of the computer programs could be productively reassigned to another function and thus should not be eliminated.

The fear exists that the same analogy will be drawn to the contracting out of third-party collections. At the time the third-party collection program was initiated, all VAMCs were provided at least one additional FTEE to perform the increased work. According to VA field officials, even if services are contracted for, one FTEE will continue to be needed, generally, to serve as a liaison with the contractor and respond to that contractor's needs. If the contractor is to be successful, VA assistance will be needed. Therefore, our amendment would require that there be no reduction in FTEE assigned to any VAMC as a result of entering into a contract for third-party collections.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, I believe the provisions of this amendment are a fair compromise considering the very difficult budgetary constraints under which we are laboring. As I previously indicated, services furnished to veterans are not to be affected by this new policy of recovering costs from the third-party insurers of certain service-connected veterans receiving care for their non-service-connected disabilities. Additionally, it is our clear intention that VA's medical care appropriation is not to be reduced as a result of contracting out the collections process in the way we propose. However, I plan to watch closely VA's implementation of these provisions, if they are enacted, in order to ensure that our Nation's veterans do receive the care to which they are entitled.

EVALUATION OF PRIVATE ASSISTIVE MONKEY PLACEMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. President, the committee amendment includes a provision I am offering relating to the proposed VA pilot program to aid quadriplegic veterans that is set forth in section 216 of the Committee bill.

Because I believe it necessary to ensure that animals used in any such VA program are properly treated, I developed this amendment, in conjunction with Senator MURKOWSKI, to require VA's Chief Medical Director, before any animals are placed with veterans under the pilot program, to provide for the conduct of an independent evaluation of the treatment of the assistive monkeys during their training by private organizations and thereafter during their activities as assistive animals. The Chief Medical Director would be required to ensure that the person or organization performing this evaluation consults with representatives of appropriate animal-welfare groups prior to carrying out the evaluation.

Currently, the only private organization providing assistive monkeys to disabled persons is Helping Hands, Inc., of Boston, MA.

Mr. President, I believe that assistive animals can add significantly to the quality of a disabled individual's life and that VA should be on the front-line of innovation with respect to the rehabilitation of and assistance for severely disabled veterans. For veterans with high-level quadriplegia who have lost the use of their legs and much or all of the use of their hands and arms, many of their most basic needs go unmet. Assistive monkeys can provide much needed state-of-the-art assistance as well as a large degree of independence.

Although several evaluations have favorably examined many such aspects of the Helping Hands program, none thus far have focused solely on the overall treatment and general welfare of the monkeys. I have received communications from many in California and elsewhere expressing concern about the treatment of the monkeys involved in the current program. I believe it is in the best interests of all concerned for such an independent evaluation to be carried out after receiving the prior input of appropriate animal-welfare groups.

ELIGIBLILITY FOR FLIGHT TRAINING UNDER THE MONTGOMERY GI BILL

Mr. President, a provision in the committee amendment which is offered on behalf of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. DASCHLE] and Senator MURKOWSKI would permit veterans and members of the Selected Reserve to pursue commercial pilot training at flight schools under the Montgomery GI bill.

More specifically, the amendment would amend sections 1432 and 1434 of title 38 and sections 2131 and 2136 of title 10, United States Code, so as to enable MGIB participants to pursue flight training in such schools—other than for tuition and fees charged for or attributable to solo flying hours required for instrument and commercial ratings—if such training is necessary for the vocational objectives in the field of aviation. The MGIB participants are already eligible for flight training under section 1673(b) when such training is pursued at an institution of higher learning for credit toward a standard college degree. Under the committee amendment, which would permit individuals to train at private flying schools, an individual would be required to possess a valid private pilot's license and meet the medical requirements necessary for pursuit of a commercial pilot's license. In addition, the flight school courses would be required to meet the Federal Aviation Administration standards and be approved by the FAA and State Approving Agency.

Benefits would be paid at the rate of 60 percent of the established charges for tuition and fees—other than tuition and fees charged for or attributable to solo flying hours required for instrument and commercial ratings—which similarly circumstanced nonveterans enrolled in the same flight courses are required to pay. Computation of MGIB educational entitlement would depend on the educational assistance program. In the case of an individual receiving training under chapter 30 of title 38, United States Code, the number of months of entitlement charged would be computed by dividing the total amount of educational assistance paid for flight training by the participant's normal monthly rate of educational assistance. A member of the Selected Reserve pursuing flight training under chapter 106 of title 10 would be charged 1 month of entitlement for each $140 paid to that individual.

The committee amendment would authorize flight training only for those individuals who begin their training during the 4 years beginning September 30, 1990, and ending September 30, 1994. It would also require the Secretary of Veterans' Affairs to submit to the Committees on Veterans' Affairs no later than January 31, 1994, an evaluation of the MGIB flight training program's effectiveness in preparing participants for recognized vocational objectives in the field of aviation.

This amendment is the same as one adopted a year ago as part of S. 2011 except for the provision which excludes from eligibility for reimbursement by VA the tuition and fees attributable to solo flying hours required for instrument and commercial ratings. That amendment was not acceptable to the House last year. We shall try again.

EXTENSION OF AUTHORITY FOR RECIPROCITY IN APPROVAL OF HOUSING SUBDIVISIONS AMONG FEDERAL AGENCIES

Mr. President, the committee amendment includes an amendment that I am offering to section 535 of the Housing Act of 1949 (42 U.S.C. 1490o) to require that the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development continue to consider the issuance of a VA certificate of reasonable value for one or more properties in a subdivision to be an administrative approval of the entire subdivision. The extension would remain in force until 180 days after the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development reports to Congress on the housing subdivision approval policies and practices of HUD, VA, and the Department of Agriculture [USDA], pursuant to current subsection (c) of section 535.

Mr. President, section 523 of Public Law 98-181, enacted in 1984, requires reciprocity among VA, HUD, and DOA in approving housing subdivisions. Approval of a subdivision by any of the Departments constitutes approval by both of the other Departments as well. This applies to VA-guaranteed loans, Federal Housing Administration loans, Farmers Home Administration [FmHA] loans, and other home loans administered by these Departments.

At the time of the enactment of Public Law 98-181, VA issued appraisals, known as certificates of reasonable value [CRV's], for homes in a subdivision only if VA had approved the subdivision as a whole. Thus, a single CRV was conclusive evidence to HUD or DOA that VA already had approved the entire subdivision and HUD or DOA was thus bound by VA's subdivision approval. VA eliminated its subdivision-approval process in 1984 and now issues CRV's for homes in a subdivision without first approving the entire subdivison.

HUD and DOA subdivision-approval processes have, however, remained in effect. HUD determined in 1988 that VA's elimination of subdivision approvals meant that the CRV no longer indicated approval of the entire subdivision. On that basis, HUD stopped accepting VA CRV's as subdivision approvals.

Section 1067 of Public Law 100-628, the McKinney Homeless Assistance Amendments Act of 1988, enacted on November 7, 1988, imposed a 1-year requirement on HUD to accept VA CRV's for one or more homes in a subdivision as administrative approval of the entire subdivision. It also required HUD to conduct a study, in consultation with VA and DOA, of housing subdivision approval policies and practices, focusing on the impact of environmental laws. The study was to include recommendations for statutory, regulatory, and administrative changes necessary to achieve true reciprocity in housing-subdivision approvals by the three Departments.

Mr. President, the requirement for HUD to accept VA CRV's as subdivision approvals will expire on November 7, 1988. That is also the deadline for HUD's required report to Congress on the three Departments' subdivision-approval process. My understanding is that that report is not yet complete and may not even have been begun. Our amendment would thus ensure that Congress has at least 6 months to consider, and possibly act on, the results of that report before the reciprocity requirement expires.

PROCEEDS OF VENDEE-LOAN ASSET SALES

Mr. President, our amendment would delete the provision, in section 404(a)(4) of S. 13 as reported, which would have restored the pre-1987 methodology under which the proceeds of VA vendee-loan asset sales—whether the loans were sold "with or without recourse" against VA—were counted as offsetting collections. The background and purpose of this provision are discussed on pages 267-71 of the committee report. Senator MURKOWSKI and I are proposing to strike it from the committee bill only in order to facilitate the Senate's expeditious consideration of the bill by avoiding the possibility of a point of order being raised against it. We continue to support the policy and purpose of this provision very strongly.

EXPANSION OF SEARCH COMMISSIONS

Mr. President, the committee amendment contains a provision derived from Amendment No. 710 which I submitted on September 6 and which is cosponsored by my colleagues on the Veterans' Affairs Committee, Senators MATSUNAGA, DECONCINI, ROCKEFELLER, GRAHAM, and JEFFORDS. The amendment has the same cosponsorship. This provision would amend the Department of Veterans Affairs Act, Public Law 100-527, so as to provide that any commissions established pursuant to section 3 of that act for the purpose of recommending individuals for appointment to the position of Chief Medical Director [CMD] or Chief Benefits Director [CBD] of the Department of Veterans Affairs would be comprised of up to 13 members, to include 4 persons representing veterans served by VA. Under current law, as enacted last October, such commissions are comprised of up to 10 members, with only 2 being specified as persons representing veterans served by VA.

Earlier this year, a Commission was established to recommend individuals to fill the position of Chief Benefits Director. In setting up that entity, VA Secretary Edward Derwinski appointed four representatives from veterans service organizations. Despite my concerns that this action did not accord with the law, I did not voice any formal objection because I was aware of questions which were raised at the time within VA as to whether there was, under the statute, the need for such a search Commission for that task since there was no vacancy in the CBD position; rather, the current CBD, John Vogel, had not resigned or announced his intention to resign—indeed, he is a leading candidate for appointment as the first CBD under the new Department.

More recently, Secretary Derwinski appointed a Commission to seek recommendations for the position of Chief Medical Director following the announcement by Dr. John Gronvall, VA's current CMD, of his intention to step down as soon as a replacement has been selected. In accordance with section 3(b)(2)(B) of Public Law 100-527, which clearly applies in the situation of an "anticipated" vacancy, Secretary Derwinski appointed only two representatives of veterans service organizations—one from the American Legion and one from the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Mr. President, many members of the Disabled American Veterans have contacted me to express their very strong disappointment about their organization not being represented on the CMD search Commission, noting the fact that all of their members have service-connected disabilities and, as such, are primary consumers of VA's health-care system. I have also been made aware of substantial unhappiness among other organizations, including the Paralyzed Veterans of America which has a very active and effective medical program.

I am generally sympathetic to the concerns expressed, but, at the same time, I recognize that Secretary Derwinski under current law was empowered to appoint only two veterans service organization representatives, thus ensuring that he would have to exclude some important organizations. The provision in the committee amendment is designed to avoid a recurrence of this unfortunate situation, which has become so divisive and has created much unnecessary and counterproductive tension between VA and several service organizations.

Mr. President, this provision would also provide for the addition of a 13th Commission member in order to achieve three purposes: First, to make the Commission membership an odd number; second, to help keep the role of representatives of service organizations in appropriate balance; and third, to give the Secretary a little more discretion in comprising the Commissions. Under this provision, the Secretary would appoint a 13th member from among four statutory categories—persons representing program activities affected by the VA entity concerned, either the Veterans Benefits Administration or the Veterans Health Service and Research Administration; persons representing veterans served by VA; persons who have experience in the management of VA programs or of programs of similar content and scope; or an individual who is a former CMD or CBD.

Mr. President, I note that the provisions in Public Law 100-527 relating to the establishment of these CMD/CBD search Commissions and the composition thereof originated in S. 533 as reported by the Committee on Governmental Affairs and passed by the Senate, in H.R. 3471, on July 12, 1988, and arose out of recommendations made by the Veterans' Affairs Committee to that committee. The provisions originally reported in and passed by the Senate would have required the appointment of Commissions of up to 14 members, including four representatives of veterans served by VA. The provisions finally enacted relating to the size and composition of these Commissions represent the end point of extensive negotiations between House and Senate conferees, one of whom I was privileged to be, on this issue among others. Thus, this provision now represents a further effort to put forward, and secure House reconsideration of, the original Senate position as to the makeup of these search Commissions.

NAMING THE LEAVENWORTH, KS, VA MEDICAL CENTER AS THE "DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS MEDICAL CENTER"

Mr. President, the committee amendment includes a provision, offered on behalf of the distinguished senator from Kansas [Mrs. KASSEBAUM], which would designate, upon enactment, the Leavenworth, KS, VA Medical Center, as the "Dwight D. Eisenhower Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center," and would provide that any reference to this Medical Center in law, regulation, or other U.S. document shall be considered to be a reference to the "Eisenhower" VA medical center.

Mr. President, the life accomplishments of former President Dwight D. Eisenhower are far too numerous and our time too limited to elaborate on all of them here. As the Senator from Kansas pointed out in the introduction of S. 1404, a bill to name the Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center in Leavenworth, KS, for Dwight D. Eisenhower, the renaming of the Fort Leavenworth facility is fitting for two reasons.

First, President Eisenhower had very close ties with the State of Kansas. In the town of Abilene, KS, where he was born and raised, can be found not only the Eisenhower Museum and Library, but also his family home and final resting place.

Second, next year will commemorate the 100th anniversary of President Eisenhower's birth. Therefore, the renaming of the Leavenworth VA Medical Center in his honor would certainly seem a most appropriate way to bestow further honor and tribute on this great American who served his country so admirably.

Mr. President, I would note that this proposed naming of the Leavenworth facility complies with the Rules of Procedure of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs—as amended February 3, 1989—including the requirement that the pertinent State department or chapter of each congressionally chartered veterans' organization having a national membership of at least 500,000 has indicated in writing its support of the proposal.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of recent letters from the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Disabled American Veterans, and the American Veterans of World War II, Korea, and Vietnam, supporting the proposed naming be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

TECHNICAL CHANGES REGARDING THE COURT OF VETERANS APPEALS

Mr. CRANSTON. The committee amendment includes two provisions I am offering with Senator MURKOWSKI relating to the new United States Court of Veterans Appeals. Both were requested by Chief Judge Frank Q. Nebeker in a letter of September 18, 1989. The first provision would amend section 4061(a)(2) of title 38, relating to the scope of the court's powers, so as expressly to authorize the court to compel actions that have been "unreasonably delayed," as well as, under current law, to compel actions that have been "unlawfully withheld." This change would parallel the comparable judicial-review provision in the Administrative Procedure Act, section 706(1) of title 5, United States Code. Second, our amendment would empower judges of the court to administer oaths, a power given to the Court of Military Appeals, 10 U.S.C. 936, and the Tax Court, 26 U.S.C. 7456, the most clearly analogous courts.

Mr. President, I concur with Chief Judge Nebeker that these changes are appropriate to clarify the court's powers.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, it has been a pleasure to work with Senator MURKOWSKI and all the members of the committee in the development of this comprehensive legislation. I want to note the contributions of, and thank, the committee staff members who have worked so very hard on this legislation—on the minority staff, Lisa Moore, Chris Yoder, Laura Stepovich, Todd Mullins, Vic Reston, and Al Ptak; Roy Smith, who so ably provides editorial support to the committee; Bob Baney, on detail to the committee from the General Accounting Office, who worked so effectively on the provisions relating to VA's Security Service, and, on the majority staff, Sandi Isaacson, Darryl Kehrer, Michael Cogan, Thomas Tighe, Elizabeth Beuchler, who left the committee staff at the end of July, Erin McGrath, Jodi Epstein, Mike Cuddy, Brett Hansard, Charlotte Hughes, Sharon Blackman, Claudia Kashin, Bill Brew, Ed Scott, and Jon Steinberg.

Mr. President, I am delighted that we have been able, once again, to develop a truly bipartisan measure that will fulfill our commitment to ensure that compensation and DIC benefits for this Nation's service-connected-disabled veterans and the survivors of those who have died from service-connected causes are protected from the effects of inflation, that will help to maintain and improve the quality and efficiency of health-care services provided to eligible veterans, and that will provide needed safeguards for and improvements in VA programs.

Mr. President, I urge the Senate's approval of the pending legislation.

U.S. SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON VETERANS' AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, May 10, 1989.

Hon. EDWARD J. DERWINSKI,
Secretary of Veterans Affairs,
Washington, DC.

DEAR ED: In the face of the current severe budget shortfall in the Department of Veterans Affairs health-care system, there has been renewed discussion of the desirability of legislation permitting VA to retain some or all of the amounts it collects as a result of third-party reimbursement rather than requiring VA to submit these payments to the U.S. Treasury, as it must under current law. I am writing to explain why I was strongly opposed to this approach during consideration of the legislation enacted in the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985, Public Law 99-272, and why I continue to believe that legislation to allow VA to retain third-party payments is very ill-advised.

I can understand why it may seem logical and fair, upon initial analysis, for VA itself to utilize the third-party payments for care given in VA facilities. However, in practical and operational terms, the funds collected would not be a source of additional support for the VA health-care system. Rather, if VA were authorized to retain these funds, VA budget requests and appropriations would be reduced by an amount equal to the amount anticipated to be collected. Moreover, I believe there is a substantial probability that the reductions would significantly exceed the amounts of the collections. Let me explain why.

If there were VA retention of third-party reimbursements, the Administration's request for VA appropriations for a coming fiscal year would be reduced by the amount estimated to be collected. This is not speculation; it is exactly what the Office of Management and Budget has made clear to VA that it would do (most recently stated by VA in Dr. Gronvall's testimony at the April 12, 1989, House Veterans' Affairs Committee Hospitals and Health Care Subcommittee hearing). This would almost certainly result in VA being put in the position of trying to provide health-care services at the program level contemplated in its budget request, as possibly amended by the Congress, but having to do so with a reduced appropriations level. VA would thus be forced to depend on its ability to make the collections at the OMB-projected rate in order to make up the difference.

In addition, because the OMB consistently overestimates the amount of third-party reimbursements to be collected, this legislation would give OMB the power to bring about a decrease in VA's overall medical care budget by projecting greater amounts of third-party collections than VA would actually receive. For example, the OMB estimate of third-party payments for FY 1990 is $304 million while VA's own estimate of these payments is only $136 million. If VA were authorized to keep the money it collects, rather than depositing it in the Treasury, and it eventually collected only the amount it estimated it will, total VA funds available for health care for FY 1990 would be decreased by $168 million. Such a result would aggravate an already desperate VA health-care budget situation.

I am aware of some efforts to try to draft legislation to prevent OMB from taking the steps I have described. I seriously doubt whether any legislation could be effective in that regard.

Thus, although I have strongly advocated increased funding for VA health care, I continue to reject the desirability of VA's retaining third-party reimbursements. Ironically, this seemingly "free" money could, and I believe almost certainly would, hurt VA more than it would help.

I welcome your views on this and other issues as I continue in my efforts to maintain the high quality of VA health-care.

With warm regards,

Cordially,

ALAN CRANSTON,
Chairman.

PARALYZED VETERANS OF AMERICA,
Washington, DC, June 15, 1989.

Hon. ALAN CRANSTON,
Chairman, Senate Committee on Veterans' Affairs, Russell Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR CRANSTON: On behalf of the members of Paralyzed Veterans of America, I whole heartedly support your position regarding opposition to the Department of Veterans Affairs retaining any funds accrued through third party reimbursements. As you so clearly articulated in your letter of May 10, 1989, such a policy would work to the detriment of the veterans' healthcare system and would further weaken its already tenuous financial viability.

If third party receipts were a source of DVA operating funds this fiscal year the Department would be in even a more perilous financial position than it currently is. This year's funding shortfall has resulted in the curtailment of services to Category "A" and "B" veterans. This action would reduce the projected receipts from third party payers thereby further exacerbating the shortage of DVA operating funds.

Again, PVA agrees completely that third party payments should not accrue to the Department of Veterans Affairs. DVA should receive all needed appropriations with receipted funds going directly to the Treasury. We sincerely appreciate your continuing leadership in this and other issues of concern to this Nation's veterans.

Sincerely,

GORDON H. MANSFIELD,
Associate Executive Director for Government Relations.

VIETNAM VETERANS OF AMERICA, INC.,
Washington, DC, May 17, 1989.

Senator ALAN CRANSTON,
Chairman, Senate Veterans Affairs Committee, Russell Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN CRANSTON: Thank you for your letter of May 10, 1989 in which you provided an analysis of the relative liabilities of depositing funds, derived from third party reimbursements within the DVA health care function rather than in the U.S. Treasury. This subject has recently arisen in connection with legislation introduced by Senator Murkowski to authorize DVA collections from third party insurers of disabled veterans being treated for non-service connected disabilities.

On initial review of that legislation, we were of the opinion that redirecting third party reimbursements from the Treasury to DVA health care was a prudent move given the DVA's shortfall in health funding. On closer examination, however, and in further discussion of this matter with Senator Murkowski's committee staff, we arrived at the same conclusion you reached in your May 10 analysis.

Moreover, we are now fully prepared to oppose the rerouting of funds derived from third party reimbursements from the Treasury to the DVA's health care operations. Should you need some directed assistance in preventing this change, please feel free to contact Paul S. Egan, our Legislative Director.

Sincerely,

MARY R. STOUT,
National President.

THE AMERICAN LEGION,
Washington, DC, May 17, 1989.

Hon. ALAN CRANSTON,
Chairman, Senate Veterans Affairs Committee, Russell Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN CRANSTON: This is in response to your May 10 letter regarding VA retention of third party reimbursement payments for health care provided to certain veterans in VA medical facilities.

As you know, The American Legion remains opposed to the concept of third party reimbursement. Prior to its enactment as a budget reconciliation device in 1986 we opposed it for several reasons, to include the basic concern expressed in your letter.

We believed then, and continue to believe today, that the Office of Management and Budget would attempt to reduce VA medical care budgets by the annual amounts of its projected revenues in reimbursement payments. Having learned from experience, we were convinced that OMB would artificially inflate those projections for the specific purpose of recommending lower spending levels for VA medical care. This, in fact, has happened and continues to happen.

Our organization certainly shares your concern over legislative proposals that would authorize VA to retain third party payments. While they appear initially to offer VA a financial advantage we are convinced that such a budgetary arrangement would provide OMB more leverage in its annual attempt to restrict veterans health care funding.

Mr. Chairman, we appreciate your attention to this matter. You can be sure that we will closely monitor any proposal that seeks to change the current budgetary treatment of third party reimbursement payements.

Sincerely,

MYLIO S. KRAJA,
Executive Director.

EXHIBIT 2

THE AMERICAN LEGION,
Topeka, KS, July 7, 1989.

Senator NANCY KASSEBAUM,
Russell Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR KASSEBAUM: Enclosed is a copy of Resolution number 10 approved by The American Legion, Department of Kansas, on May 21, 1989. This resolution calls for the renaming of the Leavenworth VA Medical Center in Leavenworth, Kansas in honor of Dwight D. Eisenhower.

As you may recall, you helped The American Legion in this same cause several years ago; however, the Disabled American Veterans were against the change; therefore, the task could not be completed. However, The American Legion has again passed this resolution and, we convinced both the Veterans of Foreign Wars and the Disabled American Veterans to approve similar resolutions during their respective State Conventions which took place recently.

Since 1990 will mark President Eisenhower's Centennial, The American Legion believes it a fitting tribute to rename the Leavenworth VA Medical Center as a part of the year long observance planned. We would like to hold the rededication ceremonies on January 29, 1990 which marks the beginning of Kansas' Eisenhower Centennial Celebration. Therefore on behalf of The American Legion, Department of Kansas, I ask you to take whatever steps necessary to implement such a tribute to President Eisenhower.

Sincerely,

CHUCK YUNKER,
Department Adjutant.

RESOLUTION No. 10

Whereas the citizens of Kansas, including thousands of Kansas Veterans who served in the Armed Forces under him, are proud of Dwight David Eisenhower, thirty-fourth President of the United States and Five Star General of the Army; and

Whereas Abilene, Kansas was home to the Eisenhower family and was chosen as the site of the Dwight David Eisenhower Library and his final resting place; and

Whereas the Command and General Staff School at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas played a large roll in "Ike's" career; and

Whereas a fine Veterans Medical Center is located in Leavenworth, Kansas; and

Whereas the Staff of the VA Center at Leavenworth is heartily in favor of changing the name of the Center to honor "Ike"; and

Whereas it would seem only right and proper that a facility dedicated to serving Veterans and located in an area closely associated with "Ike's" career should bear his name as a continuing reminder of the high esteem in which "Ike" is held by all veterans; and

Whereas the Centennial of "Ike's" birth will be celebrated in 1990 and his service to our nation meets the criteria required to have a Veterans's Administration Medical Center named in his honor; now, therefore, be it

Resolved by The Kansas Department of The American Legion in regular Convention assembled in Topeka, Kansas, May 21, 1989, That action be taken by the Department of Kansas to rename the Veterans Administration facility in Leavenworth, Kansas, as the Dwight David Eisenhower Veterans Administration Center; and be it

Further resolved, That such action include as a first step, informing the Kansas Congressional Delegation, the Governor of Kansas and other Veterans Organization of the intent of this resolution and asking for their support of our efforts; and be it Further resolved, That the national Organization of The American Legion be advised of this Resolution and asked to lend their support to our efforts.

VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS OF THE UNITED STATES, DEPARTMENT OF KANSAS,

August 2, 1989.

Hon. NANCY KASSEBAUM,
U.S. Senator, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR KASSEBAUM: Thanks for your recent telephone call and the news on the proposed renaming of the VA Medical Center at Leavenworth, Kansas.

We certainly appreciate the opportunity to have a part in this governmental process.

At our State Mid-Summer Meeting we voted our support for the name change to Dwight D. Eisenhower Medical Center.

It was also brought out at the meeting by Past State Adjutant Quartermaster Barney M. Aldridge of Topeka, that in 1980, when the VA Center here in Topeka was renamed, the Veterans of Foreign Wars submitted two names and the American Legion also submitted names for the committees' consideration.

In the final selection on the name of Colmery-O'Neil, the V.F.W. was assured by verbal agreement that if the V.F.W. supported the name of Colmery O'Neil, the next name change in Kansas would be selected from names submitted by the Department of Kansas, Veterans of Foreign Wars.

This verbal agreement was made between Ernest Garcia of Senator Dole's office, V.F.W. Representative Cooper T. Holt of the V.F.W. Washington D.C. office and Troxal K. Mellinger, then Commander of the Kansas V.F.W.

If and when the Wichita VA Medical Center is renamed, we would appreciate your support concerning this agreement.

We appreciate your support on Leavenworth, and look forward to working with you in the future.

Sincerely,

DARRELL F. BENCKEN,
Adj.-Qm., Department of Kansas, V.F.W.

DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS,

DEAR SIR: Enclosed is a copy of Resolution passed by The Disabled American Veterans at their Annual Convention June 11, 1989.

Sincerely,

ELMER E. SPILLMAN,
Adjutant.

TOPEKA, KS.

DISABLED AMERICAN VETERANS DEPARTMENT OF KANSAS—RESOLUTION

Whereas the citizens of Kansas, including thousands of Kansas Veterans who served under him, are proud of Dwight David Eisenhower, thirty-forth President of the United States and Five-Star General of the Armies; and

Whereas Abilene Kansas, home to the Eisenhower family, is the last resting place of the former General/President and the location of the Eisenhower Library, and

Whereas the Centennial of "Ike's" birth will be celebrated in 1990; and

Whereas is only right and proper the oldest Veterans Administration Medical Center in Kansas, Leavenworth VA Center, located near the historic Forth Leavenworth US Army Command and General Staff School, where The General was once assigned, be renamed as the; Dwight David Eisenhower, Veterans Administration Medical Center, and

Whereas the staff of the Leavenworth VA Center, and the other major veterans organizations support this effort, now therefore, be it

Resolved by the 1989 Department of Kansas Convention of the Disabled American Veterans; assembled in Topeka, Kansas, June 11, 1989, That full support be given to this renaming, and, be it Further resolved, That the Department of Kansas, Disabled American Veterans, inform our two United States Senators, our five United States Congressmen, and the other veterans organizations of the intent of this Resolution and ask for their assistance and support.

DEPARTMENT OF KANSAS,
September 18, 1989.

Hon. JIM SLATTERY,
Member, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SLATTERY: We, the AMVETS Department of Kansas, are in support of HR 2987 that would change the name of VA Medical Center at Leavenworth to the Dwight David Eisenhower Medical Center.

If we can be of further assistance to you, please feel free to contact us.

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT E. PITTS,
Commander, AMVETS.

BURRTON, KS.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I am pleased that the Senate Committee on Veterans' Affairs has endorsed my flight training legislation by including it in the committee amendment to S. 13, the Veterans Benefits and Health Care Act of 1989. As my colleagues know, I have been working for a number of years to reinstate flight training benefits for eligible veterans under the Montgomery GI bill, and this legislation brings us one step closer to realization of that goal.

The flight training component of the committee amendment addresses two major concerns facing our Nation—veteran unemployment and pilot shortages. I believe it addresses these concerns in a reasonable, cost-effective manner.

There is a significant need to expand employment opportunities currently available for veterans. It is a national tragedy that one of every three homeless people on the street is a veteran. Lack of adequate job training is one of the primary contributors to this tragedy.

The authorization of flight training benefits is certainly not a panacea for veterans' employment needs. But common sense dictates that if we do a better job of matching the skills and interests of our veterans with vocations currently in demand, we will reduce the number of veterans unable to find jobs. That is why I believe the Montgomery GI bill will be strengthened by the authorization of flight training benefits.

I know my colleagues are aware that America is facing a serious pilot shortage. The Future Aviation Professionals of America [FAPA] has quantified that shortage. FAPA reports that in the next decade, America will need to fill approximately 32,000 jet pilot positions and up to 30,000 nonjet regional airline pilot positions.

This demand for pilots cuts across all segments of the aviation industry. The University of North Dakota's Center for Aerospace Sciences estimates that by the year 2010, 240,000 pilot positions will need to be filled. The majority of these openings will be for commuter pilots, not airline captains.

Similarly, the Aircraft Owners and Pilots Association [AOPA] has stressed that the Nation's 80,000 to 120,000 nonairline positions—such as air ambulance pilots, crop dusters, and corporate pilots—are facing the same shortage as the rest of the industry. AOPA reports that current-level efforts to train commercial and instrument pilots will leave us with a shortfall of over 4,000 pilots as early as 1992.

The pilot shortage has been caused by a number of factors. A review of pilot training over the last 15 years tells part of that story. Student pilot starts have dropped by 30 percent. Instrument rating issuances are down 49 percent. And commercial pilots certificates issued are down a staggering 58 percent.

These dramatic decreases in pilot training coincide with an 11-percent increase in the average age of commercial pilots. Within the next 10 years, we can expect to lose nearly 2,000 pilots annually due to retirement.

These statistics add up to one indisputable conclusion—America is faced with a pilot shortage of drastic proportions. The problem is exacerbated by the fact that current methods of training pilots simply cannot meet this demand.

This fact was the subject of a hearing before the Senate Commerce, Science, and Transportation Subcommittee on Aviation this summer. In chairing that hearing, Senator WENDELL FORD, my distinguished colleague who has been a strong supporter of flight training benefits for many years, emphasized the need for our Nation to address that growing shortage. I want to extend my thanks to my good friend from Kentucky for his leadership and help in bringing authorization of flight training benefits one step closer to reality today.

It is with these concerns in mind that I drafted the flight training amendment. The amendment authorizes flight training that meets FAA standards required of all flight programs. Further, it enables veterans to use the training methods that are available to them by region as well as the type of training that will address all aspects of the pilot shortage. The amendment offers a comprehensive approach to an extensive problem.

In the past, some have expressed reservations about previous flight training measures due to concern that the benefits might be subject to abuse.

In response to this concern, additional safeguards were written into the flight training amendment I offered on the Senate floor last year. That amendment received overwhelming support when it was incorporated into the Veterans' Benefits and Programs Improvement Act of 1988. Nevertheless, doubts lingered in some people's minds, and the spectre of abuse cited in outdated studies and the press of legislation close to adjournment prevented House acceptance of the amendment in conference.

I am pleased that we are considering the flight training issue early enough in the 101st Congress to allow it to receive thorough scrutiny free from the artificial pressure of congressional adjournment. I am also pleased to report that significant steps have been taken to further address Members' concerns about the potential for abuse of flight training benefits.

In an effort to clarify the intent of the flight training amendment and further tighten the safeguards against abuse, I have worked closely with my colleague from Alaska, Senator FRANK MURKOWSKI, the ranking minority member of the Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee. Through our combined efforts, we have reached a solution that will make flight training benefits available, but eliminate one of the most easily abused components of flight training.

Eligibility criteria for receiving flight training benefits remain the same as in last year's amendment; individuals must have a valid pilot's license, meet the medical requirements for a commercial pilot's rating, and be pursuing training recognized as being necessary to obtaining a vocation in the aviation industry—training that must be authorized by the Federal Aviation Administration and the State Approving Agency. There is an additional stipulation, however, addressing the concern that, under previous flight training benefits, pilots were reimbursed for flight time that was not related to actual training, but rather was accumulated in the course of a pilot's private business travel or as recreational flying.

Although substantial efforts were made last year to address this concern, this potential program abuse was recognized by some as one of the major obstacles to reinstatement of flight training benefits. Through the elimination of reimbursement to program participants for time spent accumulating solo flight hours, a bipartisan agreement has been reached that will allow veterans to receive flight training benefits and, at the same time, allay the fears that program funds might be spent on vocational flying.

Finally, as a 4-year test program with a mandated department review, this flight training program contains its own checks and balances. I am confident that, as written, there will be overwhelming support for reauthorizing these benefits through 1994.

Mr. President, I am encouraged by discussions I have had with key House Members regarding flight training. I am very hopeful that, when S. 13 reaches the House/Senate conference flight training will be retained in the final legislation.

Before closing, I would be remiss if I did not acknowledge the contribution the distinguished chairman of the Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee, Senator ALAN CRANSTON, has made to promotion of my flight training amendment. Senator CRANSTON has worked with me for 2 years on this legislation, and his advice and counsel have been indispensable to the effort to reauthorize flight training benefits.

Mr. President, I look forward to the Senate's favorable consideration of this Committee amendment that will bring both new employment opportunities for America's veterans and a new generation of pilots for our aviation industry.

VETERANS BENEFITS AND HEALTH CARE ACT OF 1989

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I rise today in support of S. 13 and commend the distinguished chairman and ranking minority member of the Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee for their work on this comprehensive legislation. I am pleased with the policy directions this bill takes in a number of areas and would like to highlight particular provisions in this bill which I strongly support.

Section 213 of the committee bill establishes a pilot program for noninstitutional care as an alternative to nursing homes. Florida is facing a severe shortage of nursing home beds. Federal and State budget pressures will make it difficult to keep pace with demand. Any opportunities for developing alternatives to nursing home care should be explored, not only for financial reasons but, as I am sure all will agree, nursing home care is neither appropriate or necessary for every aging person.

Second, Mr. President, section 214 of the committee bill extends and improves the preventive health care programs of the VA. Everyone agrees that preventive health care saves lives and money. With the fastest aging veteran population, Florida has a real interest in providing our veterans with preventive care.

This provision will expand the categories of veterans eligible for such services and require that these veterans annually be offered a minimum of two preventive health-care services when they are receiving other treatment or care. It will also require the VA to annually implement at all VA health-care facilities a major health promotion initiative.

Third, I am very pleased with the provisions in this bill improving efforts to recruit and retain quality health care professionals in the VA health care system. One of the underlying problems causing delay and denial of services to eligible veterans is the lack of manpower in veterans' health care facilities. While there is a nursing shortage in the health-care industry nationwide, the VA seems to have particular difficulty attracting nurses because it generally offers below-market salaries. Sections 251-270 establish much-needed salary, benefits, training and continuing education policies.

Title III of S. 13 makes a number of improvements in veterans education and employment programs. I would like to highlight section 309 which authorizes the Secretary of Labor to furnish employment and training information to military personnel separating from the armed services. The overall goal of this project is to ease the veteran's transition from military life to the civilian work force.

In Florida, we have seen how such a program not only benefits the veteran but also public and private sector employers. In the early 1980's, the State of Florida created an interagency task force to recruit military personnel leaving active-duty service to fill a variety of skilled labor positions, such as math and science teaching and electrical engineering. This task force, under the auspices of the Florida Department of Education's Career Development Services, launched an advertising campaign in military journals and at military-discharge centers encouraging personnel to locate in surrounding communities needing skilled labor.

The program was eventually transferred to the Florida Department of Labor and Employment Security and established as the military retiree skills bank. With the assistance of the Department of Defense, the Department of Labor developed a computer data base with 3,000 names of people with high-technology skills who were planning or had recently undergone separation from the military. Each person received a letter from the Governor offering placement assistance in skilled labor positions. The job bank information was also available for public and private sector entities in search of skilled labor.

Increased emphasis on the services provided by this type of program in matching skilled labor to industry and public sector needs can be expected to become increasingly critical in the coming years as the skilled-labor supply continues its current decline.

Title V of S. 13 addresses memorial affairs. Arlington National Cemetery is place of honor for deceased veterans. Its history dates back to 1864. Unfortunately, it is anticipated that all in-ground plots will be exhausted by the year 2020 and that the columbarium for cremated remains will be exhausted by 2029.

Mr. President, section 502 of S. 13 includes provisions I introduced in S. 1141 to set aside an appropriate area in Arlington Cemetery, not suitable for the burial of casketed remains, for the unmarked internment of the cremated remains of persons eligible for internment in the cemetery. The area, already being designed under the leadership of the Secretary of the Army, will include a memorial wall with the names of those choosing this burial option. I commend my distinguished colleague from the State of Florida, Congressman CHARLIE BENNETT, for originating this idea and am pleased to have worked with him to secure Senate approval for this plan.

Finally, Mr. President, I would like to express my support for a provision in the committee amendment to S. 13 that will help achieve savings for the Government. The amendment requires the VA to contract with a private firm for the recovery of costs for VA-furnished care provided to certain veterans with health insurance.

Currently such reimbursement is authorized for the care of non-service-connected disabilities. This amendment extends the authority to include reimbursement for the cost of VA-furnished care in the cases of those whose service-connected disabilities are rated at 20 percent or less.

Many veterans have private health insurance provided through their employers. The veteran and his or her employer is paying for this coverage, yet the Government is paying for their health care. Considering the fiscal constraints the VA is experiencing in the delivery of health care, we must look at every opportunity for savings which do not jeopardize veterans services.

This amendment will not affect veteran eligibility for health care. Further, this amendment will not reduce the VA budget and appropriations requests. The amendment specifically states third-party reimbursements collected would go to the general treasury rather than the VA, and thus the VA budget request should not be lowered.

Again, I commend the Senator from California and the Senator from Alaska for their diligent work on S. 13 and am proud to be a cosponsor of this legislation.

THE VETERANS BENEFITS AND HEALTH CARE ACT OF 1989

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, I rise in support of S. 13, the Veterans Benefits and Health Care Act of 1989. This omnibus bill comprises seven titles and nearly 90 active provisions designed to improve health, education, compensation, and loan programs for the Nation's 27 million veterans.

Major features of this legislation include the following:

Full disability and dependency and indemnity compensation cost-of-living allowances [COLA's] equal to that provided for Social Security and VA pension annuitants;

Priority care for veterans suffering from post-traumatic stress disorder [PTSD];

Recruitment and retention incentives for scarce health care professionals such as nurses;

Extension of the veterans readjustment appointments authority for an additional 2 years;

A 9.5-percent COLA in service-connected disabled veterans' rehabilitation subsistence allowance;

Establishment of a new home loan guaranty fund; and Provisions for purchase of additional home loan guarantee entitlements.

Mr. President, I am pleased that the committee has seen fit to create a separate title in the bill for three provisions designed to improve services and benefits for minority veterans which are derived from measures that I introduced earlier this year. The first provision, section 601, would require the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to assign to an Assistant Secretary responsibility for assessing the effects of VA policies and activities on minority veterans, and for coordinating and monitoring policies facilitating the access of such veterans to VA benefits and services. It is clear from reports the committee has received that minority veterans have special problems and needs that are not being addressed by the VA. By placing oversight responsibility for minority veterans at the Assistant Secretary level, the committee hopes to ensure that concern for native American, Hispanic, black, Asian-, Pacific-Islander, and women veterans is institutionalized at the highest policymaking levels. I am extremely pleased that the original legislation on which this section is based is cosponsored by Senators from both sides of the aisle, including the chairman and ranking minority member of the committee, Senators CRANSTON and MURKOWSKI, who each made numerous material improvements to its form and content.

The second provision, section 602, would reestablish the VA's advisory committee on native American veterans for an additional 2 years. Since its creation in 1986, the advisory committee has provided the VA and Congress with important information concerning the problems and needs of a unique class of veterans. By reestablishing the committee, Congress would ensure the continued existence of an important mechanism for considering and assessing the situation of Indian veterans. Moreover, the advisory committee would serve as an important, primary resource for the Assistant Secretary who would eventually be assigned responsibility for minority oversight, as called for under section 601.

The third provision under the minority affairs title, section 603, would require the VA to conduct a study to determine whether native American, Native Alaskan, and Pacific Islander veterans residing on trust or communally owned lands experience difficulty in obtaining VA home loan benefits, and, if so, to propose administrative, regulatory, or legislative changes to address the problem. The need for this provision is clear: very few, if any, veterans residing on reservations or other trust lands have been able to receive VA guaranteed home loans. This is primarily because of the nontransferrable nature of trust land, which makes it unsuitable for collateral, and the low economic status of those residing on reservations, which disqualifies loan applicants on income insufficiency grounds. It is my hope that the study will lead to changes, including the limited reopening of the VA's moribund Direct Loan Program, that will permit veterans residing on reservations and other trust lands to own their own homes in their own communities.

Mr. President, another provision affecting minority veterans is included under the health care title of the bill, and is based on legislation I introduced earlier in the session as well as in the 100th Congress. I refer to section 206, which would require the National Center on PTSD to conduct a study of the extent to which, and the degree of effectiveness with which, the Department reaches out to, and furnishes treatment to, certain minority Vietnam veterans who suffer from PTSD or other psychological problems, and who were not adequately sampled in the VA's recently completed national Vietnam veterans readjustment study [NVVRS]. The committee has received evidence indicating that veterans from certain ethnic and cultural backgrounds may have wartime experiences and reactions that are qualitatively different from that of white veterans, and therefore may require the development of unique outreach and treatment regimes to meet their readjustment needs. Implementation of section 206 would permit the VA to assess the effectiveness of its outreach and treatment of such veterans in a clinical research setting.

In closing, Mr. President, I wish to commend Senator CRANSTON, the chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, for the leadership he has exhibited in managing to bring this large but carefully constructed bill to the Senate floor. Year after year, the senior Senator from California holds countless hours of hearings on every conceivable subject that may relate to the welfare of the Nation's veterans.

And, year after year, he develops new initiatives or modifications to existing programs to improve the services and benefits that our Government provides to veterans. This year is no exception. I commend him for his energy, patience, and, most of all, his continuing commitment to veterans.

I also want to commend Senator MURKOWSKI, the ranking minority Member, whose sense of bipartisanship has made committee deliberations a fruitful, cooperative enterprise.

Last, I would be remiss if I did not recognize the efforts of the majority and minority committee staffs, headed by Jon Steinberg and Alan Ptak, respectively, which have worked hundreds of hours to produce the carefully refined legislative product before us today.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support the pending bill. I yield the floor.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, it is with great honor that I introduce this amendment to S. 13, the Veterans Benefits and Health Care Act of 1989. I am doubly honored that my colleague Senator DOLE is joining me as a cosponsor. This amendment will designate the Veterans Administration Medical Center at Leavenworth, KS, as the "Dwight D. Eisenhower Department of Veterans Affairs Medical Center." First, President Eisenhower had very close ties with the State of Kansas. In the town of Abilene, KS, can be found not only the Eisenhower Museum and Library, but also his family home and final resting place.

Second, next year will commemorate the 100th anniversary of President Eisenhower's birth. As members of the Eisenhower Centennial Commission, Senator DOLE and I will be engaged in a number of activities throughout the country. In that regard, the renaming of the Leavenworth hospital in "Ike's" honor would certainly be appropriate.

As I mentioned before, President Eisenhower had very deep Kansas roots. Raised and schooled in Abilene, he graduated from Abilene High school and began his celebrated military career soon thereafter by attending West Point Military Academy. In order to hone his military planning and leadership skills, Ike returned to Kansas to attend the Command and General Staff Course at Fort Leavenworth. From there, one need only refer to basic U.S. history texts to learn of General Eisenhower's achievements and contributions to a nation he dearly loved. Assuming command of the European theater during World War II, he led the greatest amphibious operation in battle history, the Normandy invasion.

His achievements as President of the United States were equally historic, and he proved to be one of the most popular Presidents of all time. His Midwestern roots can be found in the legacy of his Presidency: a genuinely bipartisan domestic and foreign policy; a Federal Government living within its means; significant international exchanges founded on the notion that reasonable and sound negotiation can be effective; and a national commitment to education, science and technology. He was a decent and good-humored man, a strong leader, with a vision both practical and far sighted.

For these reasons, I believe designating the Leavenworth VA Hospital in President Eisenhower's honor would be a fitting tribute.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, as ranking minority member of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, I rise today in support of S. 13, as reported by the committee. This bill, the Veterans Benefits and Health Care Act of 1989 proposes to make significant improvements in veterans' benefits and health-care programs administered by the Department of Veterans Affairs [VA]. I am pleased to support this bill and I urge my colleagues to do to.

S. 13, as reported contains six titles: compensation and pension, health care, education and employement, home loan, memorial affairs, minority affairs, and miscellaneous. I believe this bill is one of the most comprehensive veterans' bills ever considered by the Senate. I will not discuss each of the over 100 provisions contained in S. 13. I refer my colleagues to Senate Report No. 101-126 for the details of each provision. However, I will briefly highlight a few provisions of special interest to me.

COST-OF-LIVING INCREASE

Mr. President, S. 13 would provide a cost-of-living adjustment [COLA] to be effective December 1, 1989, for the 2.19 million veterans receiving compensation for disabilities and illnesses incurred or aggravated while they were on active duty. The COLA would be equal to the percentage that will be provided for Social Security and VA pension recipients. The COLA is currently estimated to be 5.2 percent. The same COLA would be paid to dependents and survivors of those who died on active duty or as result of a service-connected disability.

HEALTH CARE

Mr. President, the health care provisions relate to several primary issues: mental health, extension and expansion of certain VA general health-care programs, and health-care personnel issues.

RECRUITMENT AND RETENTION

Mr. President, this bill contains many provisions which are designed to improve VA's ability to attract and retain health-care personnel, particularly registered nurses. VA, like its counterparts in the Department of Defense and the private sector, is feeling the effects of the nursing shortage. The real solution is to increase the pool of individuals who want to be nurses. In my view, this must begin at the junior and high school levels. However, in the mean time the health-care industry must address the shortage in a variety of ways. This bill attempts to address educational and pay issues. Although I do not support every provision in this portion of the bill, I am hopeful that my concerns can be addressed in the conference process.

TOBACCO AUTHORITY

Mr. President, S. 13 contains a provision which would repeal the Secretary of Veterans Affairs authority to provide free tobacco products to veterans receiving hospital or domiciliary care. I believe the current VA authority authorizing the Secretary to furnish such tobacco products to hospitalized veterans to be inconsistent with current VA practice. VA has not utilized this authority in over 20 years. We are living in a health conscious environment and in light of the information regarding the health hazards associated with smoking, I believe this provision makes a lot of sense.

This repeal would not prohibit the VA from selling tobacco products—that general authority will remain in section 4201 of title 38. This provision would, however, delete specific statutory reference regarding the furnishing of free tobacco to veterans in hospitals and domiciliaries.

NONINSTITUTIONAL CARE

Mr. President, I am please that the committee bill includes a provision which requires VA to conduct a 4-year pilot program of furnishing, under contract, health, rehabilitative, and health-related services in noninstitutional settings. Health-related services would include such things as homemaker, transportation, and bathing/dressing assistance. Specifically, this provision would authorize VA to furnish such services to veterans who are eligible for, and otherwise in need, of nursing home care; and are either receiving or needing that care primarily for the treatment of a service-connected disability, or have service-connected disabilities rated at 50 percent or more.

Let me describe a case of a veteran who would be assisted by this provision. An Alaskan veteran is in need of, and receives, community nursing home care for the treatment of a service-connected disability. VA is paying for his care and will do so indefinitely because he needs care for his service-connected disability. His care costs VA $8,000 per month. This veteran's family wants him at home. They are willing to take the responsibility of caring for him but will need some help. This family cannot understand why VA lacks the legal authority to provide such services at home but will pay $8,000 monthly to keep him institutionalized. This provision would correct that situation by authorizing VA to pay for health-related services at the veterans home.

HOME LOAN GUARANTEE

Title IV of the bill would restructure the veterans' home loan program. It would establish a new home loan guaranty fund and provide the fund with ongoing sources of funding to be used for the operation of the program. It would allow veterans who lose their homes due to default and foreclosure to escape the additional burden of debt to VA for the amount of the VA guarantee. It would provide an incentive for veteran homebuyers to make a small downpayment when they buy their homes.

Mr. President, I will not assert that this title is above criticism or that it will solve all of the problems of the Loan Guaranty Program. It is not and it will not.

The bill does little to address the controllable causes of program losses: underwriting, appraisal, loan processing, loan servicing, property acquisition, property management, and property sales. The Congress has passed legislation addressing many of these areas and the committee is now reviewing VA's implementation of these bills. In many areas VA has made commendable progress but there is more to be done.

Nor does the bill completely address the allocation of risks between veterans, lenders, and the taxpayers. Credit risk, the risk that a homebuyer will be unable or unwilling to make his or her payments is partially—up to $36,000 under current law and up to $41,000 under the committee bill—is assumed, in part, by the Government. That is, in fact, the purpose of the benefit. This benefit allows veterans to buy a home even if they have not, because of their service, been able to accumulate the savings necessary for a downpayment or establish the credit history needed to qualify for a downpayment free loan.

The bill does address the risk assumed by the veteran by limiting his or her exposure to the potential loss of the home. If enacted, this bill would eliminate any risk to the veteran that foreclosure will result in additional personnel debt if the house does not provide adequate security to satisfy the loan, accrued interest, and foreclosure costs.

Left addressed only indirectly is the question of allocation of risk and costs between VA and lenders in that situation. This means current practice will continue. Under current practice VA may either pay the lender the entire outstanding loan amount, accured interest, and foreclosure costs or the VA can pay the guaranty—up to $41,000 under the committee bill. In the first case the VA takes possession of and resells the home. VA bears the loss if the value of the home is inadequate. In the second case, the lender gets the house—and the $41,000—but also the expense—and risk—of reselling the house. On a nationwide basis, VA takes possession of the home about 75 to 80 percent of the time.

In a world of stable or rising real estate values this question would not be a major one. But, we can no longer count on living in such a world. In recent times, we have seen declining real estate values in the industrial midwest, in the farm belt and most recently in the oil patch, including Alaska. The Congress has never explicitly considered the extent to which losses on VA-guaranteed loans resulting from declining property values should be transferred to the taxpayers or the extent to which they should be born by lenders, just as they are in the case of a conventional mortgage. Such a decision would have to consider the extent to which lenders influence, through their underwriting, appraisal, servicing, and foreclosure processing actions can influence the amount of losses in individual properties.

The bill does contain a provision which will allow VA to consider a portion of the cost to the Government of borrowing the funds necessary to acquire foreclosed properties when VA acquires a property.

VETERANS READJUSTMENT ACT

Mr. President, I am pleased the bill now before the Senate includes provisions extending the Veterans Readjustment Act [VRA] and expanding eligibility for this program. VRA allows Federal agencies to hire eligible veterans directly, without the delay of the normal civil service hiring system. It thus serves as a benefit to both Federal agencies, who gain disciplined, capable employees by hiring veterans, and veterans, who are provided with an effective tool for obtaining Federal employment.

I am distressed that the bill now before us does not provide eligibility for all compensable service-connected disabled veterans. It does provide eligibility for disabled veterans evaluated 30 percent or higher. However, these veterans already have the benefit of a direct hiring authority and VRA is redundant for them. Approximately half of America's disabled veterans are evaluated either 10- or 20-percent disabled and would receive no benefit from this provision based on their disability. I look forward to the day when the Congress will be able to correct this situation.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, I do not support every provision in S. 13. My concerns about certain provisions are outlined in additional views which I, together with certain other Republican members of the committee, submitted to accompany the report on S. 13. However, on balance this is a good bill.

Mr. President, in concluding I wish to thank the chairman of the committee, Senator ALAN CRANSTON and the other members of the committee and their staffs. I also thank the outstanding efforts of the majority and minority staffs of the committee for their hard work on this bill. In particular, I wish to acknowledge the work of my most dedicated committee staff including my chief counsel and staff director Alan Ptak, Vic Reston, Chris Yoder, Lisa Moore, Laura Stepovich, Tracy Gourd, Todd Mullins, and Janet Klinger. I further recognize the work of the majority staff including Bob Baney, Sharon Blackman, Bill Brew, Michael Cogan, Mike Cuddy, Jodi Epstein, Sarah Graham, Brett Hansard, Charlotte Hughes, Sandi Isaacson, Claudia Kashin, Darryl Kehrer, Erin McGrath, Joan Orgon, Ed Scott, Pamela Winaker, and the majority chief counsel and staff director, Jon Steinberg, and our fine printers Roy Smith and Charlie Carter. I would also like to take this opportunity to express my thanks to Sandi Isaacson, of the majority staff. She has recently left the committee staff to pursue other endeavors and I wish her the best of luck. My staff and I will miss Sandi's hard work and professionalism.

I urge my collegues to join me in supporting this legislation, I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on agreeing to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The committee amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Veterans's Affairs be discharged from further consideration of H.R. 901; that the Senate proceed to its immediate consideration; that all after the enacting clause be stricken; that the text of S. 13 be substituted, as amended, in lieu thereof, and the bill be read for the third time, passed, and the motion to reconsider the vote on final passage be laid upon the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (H.R. 901), as marked was passed.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, on behalf of Senators CRANSTON and MURKOWSKI, I send an amendment to the title to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the title is agreed to.

The title was amended so as to read:

To amend title 38, United States Code, to increase the rates of disability compensation and dependency and indemnity compensation for veterans and survivors, to increase the allowances paid to disabled veterans pursuing rehabilitation programs and to the dependents and survivors of certain disabled veterans pursuing programs of education, and to improve various programs of benefits and health-care services for veterans; and for other purposes.

ORDER FOR RECESS

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until 10:40 a.m., Wednesday, October 4, and that immediately following the prayer the Senate stand in recess until 12 noon, to accommodate the joint meeting with the House of Representatives to hear the address by the President of Mexico and that upon reconvening the provisions of the previous unanimous-consent agreement remain in effect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS UNTIL 10:40 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, if the distinguished Republican leader has no further business and if no Senator is seeking recognition, as I pray they are not, I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess until the previously ordered time of 10:40 a.m., Wednesday, October 4.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I have no further business, and I commend the chairman of the Judiciary Committee for his work on the bill on which we have been working.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, having had the privilege of standing in for the majority leader on this occasion at this hour, I might add two points. No. 1, I would never like to be majority leader, and I commend the Senator from Wyoming for being willing to take on the responsibility of the whip of the Republican Party and do this almost every evening. Most of us get to go home about 5 hours earlier than this hour on occasion. That is a slight exaggeration, but I seriously commend my colleague from Wyoming for the job that he does and his willingness to do it. I am not going to ask him why he does, but I commend him.

Mr. SIMPSON. I thank the Senator from Delaware. We realize it is the majority leader and the minority leader who do the work. They are the ones who get the brunt of the legislative body. I commend both of them.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 11:57 p.m., recessed until Wednesday, October 4, 1989, at 10:40 a.m.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

EVENTS IN SOUTH AFRICA

HON. DAN BURTON
OF INDIANA
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, our collective attention is focused these days, as it should be, on events in South Africa. We are all, I believe, united in our firm opposition to apartheid. We all want to see South Africa move toward a post-apartheid, nonracial, democratic future. But we have a lively debate going about the best means to achieve that goal.

Many of my colleagues support further sanctions. But the evidence is that sanctions do not work and that further sanctions would inflict great hardship and suffering upon the blacks of South Africa. The evidence is overwhelming that blacks of all walks of life in South Africa are firmly opposed to sanctions for these reasons. I commend to my colleagues' attention the executive summary of a recent Gallup poll of South African blacks, and a letter from the vice president of Gallup to the chairman of the Africa Subcommittee.

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY OF SURVEY FINDINGS

(Overall Opinion Concerning the Policies of Sanctions and Divestment)

A Gallup survey of South Africans conducted in March 1989, indicates strong opposition to economic sanctions imposed on South Africa by foreign governments and equally strong opposition to the idea of foreign divestment of corporate investment in South Africa. South Africans overwhelmingly believe that sanctions (84%) and divestment (85%) are bad ideas, and blacks and whites are equally likely to hold these views.

The possibility that sanctions and divestment will lead to higher unemployment and poverty is the reason most frequently given for thinking such policies are a bad idea.

Despite the strength of opposition to sanctions among blacks there are approximately one in six who believe sanctions are a good idea. The largest proportion of this group holds this opinion because they believe such a policy will pressure their government to abolish apartheid.

When respondents are posed with a variety of scenerios concerning the consequences of sanctions, the basis for and degree of opposition to sanctions is evident. Approximately six in ten blacks, for example, would oppose all sanctions even if such sanctions might cause the government to resign within five years. Oppositon increases to two-thirds of the black population given a more stringent condition that "many people would lose their jobs" is introduced.

Given the possibility that the respondent might lose his or her own job because of sanctions, more than three-quarters of all South Africians, including 93% of whites and 76% of blacks, would oppose sanctions. The negative response to sanctions is also evident among the 73% of blacks who disagree that non-whites are "prepared to suffer and to risk losing their jobs while sanctions and boycotts are used against South Africa."

Concerning the expected reaction of the South African government to sanctions imposed by foreign governments, eight in ten South Africans, including 77% of blacks, think their government will make only a few small changes (43%) or no changes (36%) in its apartheid policy. Only 16% believe sanctions will lead the government to end apartheid. Approximately the same proportion (17%), see sanctions as a very successful means of changing the apartheid policies of South Africa. One-third, on the other hand, including the majority of whites, believe a policy of sanctions would not be at all successful in this regard. Another third believe sanctions can only be somewhat successful in forcing change.

Opinion regarding divestment by foreign corporations follows the same pattern as that regarding sanctions. Eighty-three percent think overseas companies should not leave South Africa because this is not a good way to fight apartheid. Sixteen percent believe companies should divest because the South African government does not want companies to leave and will be persuaded to end apartheid if they do. Eighteen percent of blacks compared to only 7% of whites agree that divestment will force an end to apartheid.

In fact, the survey shows that South Africans believe there is an important role to be played by foreign corporations operating in South Africa. A substantial majority (58%) of South Africans, including 51% of whites and 59% of blacks, think that American companies in South Africa can help make the government change away from apartheid.

The negative aspect of the withdrawal of an American corporate presence in South Africa is reflected by the three-quarters, including 84% of whites and 73% of blacks, who believe ending American business operations would have a bad effect on the lives of blacks in that country.

Nearly three-quarters (73%) think that ending American business operations would seriously hurt the South African economy. This view is more prevalent among blacks (77%) than among whites (50%). Among whites, 45% think such action by American companies will hurt their economy only a little.

While six in ten (60%) think divestment will seriously hurt the strength of the South African government, this view is most prevalent among blacks (69%). Whites are more likely to think divestment will effect the strength of the government only a little (42%) or not at all (37%).

Majorities of South Africans believe American business activity: contributes to a higher standard of living for black South Africans (78%); provides black workers with good jobs that would not otherwise exist (74%); does not contribute to the misuse of black workers (60%); does not help to continue racial segregation and discrimination (58%).

THE GALLUP ORGANIZATION, INC.,
MARKETING AND ATTITUDE RESEARCH,
Princeton, NJ, August 3, 1989.

Hon. HOWARD WOLPE,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Africa, Committee on Foreign Affairs, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN WOLPE: The Gallup poll of South Africans on the issues of sanctions and divestment referred to in your July 10th memorandum to Members of the House of Representatives, was conducted by the Gallup Organization, Inc. headquartered in Princeton, New Jersey in conjunction with Markinor, the South African affiliate of Gallup International, on behalf of the South African Chamber of Mines, the mining industry trade association.

I was responsible for overall management of the project including questionnaire development, sample design and analysis of the survey results. I personally share your abhorrence of apartheid, and I am certainly aware of the sensitive nature of the project. We have, therefore, taken great care to ensure that the questions were written fairly and that the survey method would produce an accurate representation of black public opinion in South Africa. I believe we have been successful in both regards.

Our survey of South Africans, conducted in March of this year, indicates strong opposition to economic sanctions imposed on South Africa by foreign governments and equally strong opposition to the idea of foreign divestment of corporate investment in South Africa. South Africans overwhelmingly believe that sanctions (84%) and divestment (85%) are bad ideas, and blacks and whites are equally likely to hold these views.

The possibility that sanctions and divestment will lead to higher unemployment and poverty is the reason most frequently given for thinking such policies are a bad idea.

Despite the strength of opposition to sanctions among blacks there are approximately one in six who believe sanctions are a good idea. The largest proportion of this group holds this opinion because they believe such a policy will pressure their government to abolish apartheid.

Backing for sanctions is strongest among blacks who told us they support the ANC (35%) or the UDF (31%). Support is also greater among blacks who live in urban areas compared to rural (25% vs 12%) and among those who are best informed politically compared to those who are less knowledgeable (30% vs 10%). But it should also be noted that 65% or more of blacks in each of these groups say they believe sanctions are a "bad idea" (ANC supporters, 65%, UDF supporters, 69%, urban residents, 74%, well informed, 70%).

Contrary to your assertion that we failed to permit South Africans to react to or "vote for" conditioned sanctions, that was precisely the point of the survey. You will see in reviewing the enclosed report of survey results that we have asked numerous questions about support for sanctions and divestment in the real world context of how they might affect actions of the South African government and how they might affect the people of South Africa.

When respondents are posed with a variety of scenarios concerning the consequences of sanctions, the basis for and degree of opposition to sanctions is evident. Approximately six in ten blacks, for example, would oppose all sanctions even if such sanctions might cause the government to resign within five years. Opposition increases to two-thirds of the black population given a more stringent condition that "many people would lose their jobs" is introduced.

Given the possibility that the respondent might lose his or her own job because of sanctions, more than three-quarters of all South Africans, including 93% of whites and 76% of blacks, would oppose sanctions. Sixteen percent believe companies should divest because the South African government does not want companies to leave and will be persuaded to end apartheid if they do. Eighteen percent of blacks compared to only 7% of whites agree that divestment will force an end to apartheid.

This Gallup survey of South Africans is based on face to face interviews with 2,192 individuals. The interviews were conducted in the preferred language of the respondent by interviewers of the same race as the respondent. I went to South Africa and talked at great length with these black, colored, Asian, and white interviewers as they returned from their interviews. I have complete faith in their work and that of the methodology and research staff at Markinor.

The results of the survey are based on 1,400 interviews representing a national sample of black South Africans. In addition, interviews with 392 white respondents are representative of the metropolitan white population of the country. One hundred interviews each were conducted with colored and Asian race groups residing in the Cape Town and Durban metropolitan areas respectively.

A separate survey using the same questionnaire and sampling methodology was conducted during the same time period of a representative sample of the squatter population residing in the Johannesburg, Cape Town and Durban metropolitan areas. We found no differences in opinion among black squatters compared to those interviewed in the primary study.

Regarding the timing of the survey. We began negotiations for this project in the spring of 1988. The field work was scheduled for March 1989, in preparation for release of the results in May. While we could not have known at the outset that Rev. Boesak and Bishop Tutu would visit Washington in May, release of the results was timed so that an accounting of public opinion would be part of the debate over sanctions.

I would be happy to answer any questions you might have about our report or the project.

Sincerely,

NEIL UPMEYER,
Vice President.

DR. STANLEY IRZINSKI APPLAUDED FOR HIS COMMITMENT TO THE DISABLED

HON. PAUL E. KANJORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Dr. Stanley Irzinski, to recognize his many career achievements and, most importantly, to recognize his great sense of community service.

Dr. Irzinski graduated from Wilkes College in Wilkes-Barre, PA, and Pennsylvania State University as a doctor of education in counseling and rehabilitation. He is currently administrator of United Rehabilitation Services, Inc. [URS], located in Wilkes-Barre, with branch facilities in Hazleton and Tunkhannock.

URS was established as a result of the Wyoming Valley United Way's Community Services Study Commission Report. It is a comprehensive vocational rehabilitation center providing services to the disabled adult population of northeastern Pennsylvania, with a daily enrollment of over 500 persons, making this one of the Nation's largest populations of handicapped persons under one administration. In addition, URS works in conjunction with other community resources helping disabled adults learn to function within the community to the best of their ability.

Dr. Irzinski has recognized that a large number of disabled adults, hundreds in our area alone, remain without services and have little or no opportunity to enter into the mainstream of society. An advocate of progressive programming, he has made a great impact on rehabilitation trends statewide and nationally, as well as locally. He is eager to make the public aware of the challenges faced by the disabled and the progress being made to overcome these obstacles.

In addition, he is a supportive and compassionate leader who is truly committed to his work. His strong dedication inspires those who work with him to do their best to assist the disabled.

Dr. Irzinski was recently presented with the prestigious Bell Greve Award by the National Rehabilitation Association in recognition of his leadership in developing exciting vocational and leisure opportunities for the disabled.

I commend Dr. Irzinski on the tremendous work he has done on behalf of the disabled citizens of the Wyoming Valley. With the help of people like Dr. Irzinski, dedicated and committed to the disabled, it is possible for the less fortunate in this country to become contributing members of society.

THAT'S THE AMERICAN WAY—THAT'S THE FARMER'S WAY

HON. E de la GARZA

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, last month a trainload of generosity arrived at the railroad station in the small city of George West, TX, in my 15th Congressional District.

Five rail cars were carrying 85 tons of rolled hay grown and cut in the northern part of Texas. These five carloads were the first of a planned 22-rail car shipment to south Texas totaling about 700 tons of hay. Every speck of it was donated by producers in north Texas anxious to help their fellow producers to the south.

For nearly 3 years, uncommonly dry weather has turned into severe drought in south Texas. Livestock producers were looking to the sky for signs of hay to help feed their animals. When they focused their vision on the railroad tracks, they saw the hay coming from their brethern in the north of Texas where wet weather has resulted in an abundance of hay.

The Texas Farm Bureau organized this impressive hay donation program and we appreciate the time and energy devoted by north Texas Farm Bureau members in putting the whole operation together.

To each and every farm producer in Texas who donated hay to this relief effort, this Congressman—as chairman of the House Agriculture Committee and speaking for all our committee—stands up to acknowledge your generosity and your desire to help fellow producers who are still battling the drought.

When farmers and ranchers extend their helping hands to other farmers and ranchers, you are seeing American agriculture at its finest. It makes no difference what crop is grown or what animal is reared, all farmers and ranchers share a kindred spirit and a common soul when it comes to their love of the land. Nowhere is that fraternal spirit more evident than when help comes from within.

The Union Pacific Railroad Co. took the lead in transporting this donated hay to our south Texas producers. I had approached the railroad and asked if it could assist in bringing the hay from its loading point in Longview, TX, down to south Texas and the Union Pacific people obliged with a smile and a desire to help those in need.

The hay donation effort would have been halted in its tracks were it not for the commitment of Union Pacific. I applaud Union Pacific for showing the spirit of compassion and generosity in moving this hay free of charge.

The Southern Pacific railroad joined the effort so that additional rail cars would be available. The 700 tons of donated hay destined for south Texas would never have a chance of arriving in south Texas without the help of Southern Pacific. We extend out gratitude to the management of Southern Pacific for making it possible to ship all 700 tons of the hay to south Texas and make this private effort a total success. Without Southern Pacific, the effort could not have expanded to its current size and we applaud the railroad for its commitment.

For some producers in south Texas this donated hay will mean the difference between hanging on and going down. These producers will mark this day in their hearts with a view to returning the favor if the need arises. There may come a day when our friends in north Texas need our help, and to a person, south Texans will be there to help—no question about that.

This is one program which did not need Uncle Sam. The Federal Government watched with great satisfaction in seeing farmer reach out to farmer in a time of need. That's the American way—that's the farmer's way.

UNITED WAY LABOR PARTICIPATION COMMITTEE

HON. HOWARD WOLPE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to the Greater Kalamazoo United Way's Labor Participation Committee for their efforts to address the drug problem facing Kalamazoo, MI. The committee has scheduled an October 4 rally designed to bring together union members with residents throughout the area to formulate an action plan.

Drug abuse is a poison in this country which is draining away the talent and energy of people in communities like Kalamazoo. President Bush has recently released a blueprint for an all-out war on drugs and has asked our country to get tough on drug suppliers and users. I fully support the need to strengthen drug law enforcement and hold sellers and users accountable for their actions. However, while we might be able to win a battle or two on the drug law enforcement front, I believe we will never win the war unless we recognize the importance of eliminating the demand for drugs in the first instance.

The Kalamazoo Labor Participation Committee recognizes the necessity of drug rehabilitation. Their program is an example of the kind of community-wide drug prevention effort that is needed to provide individuals and their families with the education and information needed to help better prepare them to say no to drugs and to select other alternatives. This initial meeting and the followup activities are testimony to the recognition by local union members of their responsibility to the community in which they live and their desire to be an effective element in the struggle to save people's lives and their livelihoods.

Mr. Speaker, I am certain my colleagues will want to join me in saluting the Greater Kalamazoo United Way Labor Participation Commitee for their continuing efforts to improve the quality of life for working people, their families and their neighbors. I am honored and privileged to represent constitutents who care so deeply for their comunity and who are willing to act upon their beliefs.

BALTIMORE CITY COLLEGE CELEBRATES 150TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. BENJAMIN L. CARDIN

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, Baltimore City College, the third oldest public high school in the United States, celebrates the 150th anniversary of its founding on October 20, 1989.

Established the same year that baseball began in Cooperstown, NY, City College has enjoyed a history rich in tradition, academic excellence, and community spirit. For 150 years its students have studied the humanities, a curriculum based in the classics, philosophy, history, languages, literature, and the arts, and have gone forth from City to excel internationally, nationally, and locally.

During the 150th year City graduates hold positions of public trust in all levels of government—from the Governor of Maryland, William Donald Schaefer, to the mayor of Baltimore, Kurt Schmoke. Judges on the U.S. Court of Appeals, the court of special appeals, the circuit court, and district court all include graduates of City College. State senators and delegates, Baltimore City Councilmen, the public defender, and the Maryland Stadium Authority chairman come from City College.

Graduates from all walks of life continue to credit their success to the faculty and teachers who inspired them—Dr. Philip H. Edwards, C.B. Moloy, J.J. Hinson, Boyd Winkleblech, Henry Yost, John Desch, Millard Foard, Floyd Holden, James Leonhart, G. Warfield Hobbs, Blanche Bowlsey, John A. Pentz, Warren Wilmer Almy, George Young, Ken VanSant, Otts Helm, Andy Norgan, Harry Lawrence, Dr. Templeman, and countless others.

On the 100th anniversary of City College, then Gov. Harry W. Nice, also a City graduate, said:

City College has made possible advanced education for many young men who otherwise would never have had the opportunity of higher education. The taxpayer's money has never been more profitably spent. The returns from the investment have been of inestimable benefit to the public at large, in infusing into our public life leaders, in the professions and in business, with a civic consciousness making for the general welfare and good of the entire community.

In the years since the centennial celebration the benefits of City College have grown even larger. Contributions have been made in our everyday world and contributions have been made that are larger than life. Authors Leon Uris and Russell Baker have provoked thought and sparked humor throughout the world. Scientist Abel Wolman made it possible for people in countries all over the world to have healthy water systems. John Wheeler brought the "black hole" theory to scientific minds across our boundaries. Major league pitchers Tommy Byrne and Johnny Neun have thrilled baseball fans in Yankee Stadium. T. Garrison Morfit—Garry Moore—and Michael Tucker have come into homes througout the country. Educators Eric Goldman and Norman Hackerman changed lives in higher education. Aaron Straus, Robert H. Levi, and Joseph Meyerhoff established traditions of philanthropy touching the breadth of Baltimore and beyond.

We celebrate the great accomplishments of the past. Yet City College celebrates something even greater than the past. Its future, and the future for public education looks bright because of its strong roots. In keeping with its respect for the classics, Latin is still required at City. Students there say the Pledge of Allegiance in Latin. Students there still strive to live up to the school motto—"Palman Qui Meruit Ferat"—honor to him who earns it.

The students at City in 1989 look different than they did 150 years ago. The school that was all male and white has become a coeduational school that is 75 percent minorities. Yet the students are really not different. They carry the spirit of tradition and the pursuit of excellence. They go forth to the best colleges and universities in the country in ever increasing numbers. At the last graduation exercises 85 percent of the class had been accepted into college, 10 percent planned to enter the military, and 5 percent planned to go directly into business.

At a time when the foundations of public education are being questioned, when America's competitiveness in the international economy is threatened, when talk of our youth centers around high school dropouts, teenage pregnancy, and drug abuse, it is with pride that Baltimore City College tells its story of past, present, and future success. We celebrate this historic event, and believe that our celebration is no more and no less the celebration of the success of the best of public education.

RELIGIOUS LEADERS IN ROMANIA HARASSED

HON. CHRISTOPHER H. SMITH

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, over and over again we are presented with evidence that the Romanian authorities continue their harsh practices of intimidation and repression of the religious congregations within their borders.

I would like to bring to my colleagues' attention the systematic harassment which has been endured by Romania's Rev. Laszlo Tokes and his congregation, the Diocese of Temesvar—in Timisoara. I am concerned about the safety of Reverend Tokes, especially in light of the recent mysterious death of one of his parishioners.

Mr. Speaker, Reverend Tokes has long been the object of official harassment for his religious faith and activities. He has openly renounced the regime's actions against the Hungarian Reformed Church in Romania but not without severe consequences. Likewise, one of this parishioners, Erno Ujvarossy, was outspoken in his defense of Reverend Tokes and has met a violent fate.

On September 12, Mr. Ujvarossy disappeared, never to be seen again alive. Mr. Ujvarossy had received many threats because of his active participation in the Diocese of Temesvar and support for his minister, and had expressed his grave fear to Reverend Tokes. On September 16, Mr. Speaker, the body of Mr. Ujvarossy was found in woods outside Timisoara.

Sadly, Mr. Speaker, such unexplained deaths are not completely unusual in Romania. A number of other cases of organized street beatings, death threats and outright murder of religious leaders in Romania have been documented.

The people of Romania, and especially the religious community, are living under the constant fear of harassment, persecution, and even the threat of murder. It is clear that the authorities are condoning or turning a blind eye to these abuses of a person's basic human rights of life and freedom if not actively involved in the practice themselves. Mr. Speaker, the Government of Romania is more and more showing its true colors as an outlaw regime. The people need our support in condemning their oppressors. Congress must not shy away from this task.

WAX AND GOLD IN ATLANTA

HON. DAN BURTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the terrible catastrophe that has befallen the people of Ethiopia for the past 10 years deserves our close attention. The Ethiopians are victims of a vicious Communist dictatorship led by Colonel Mengistu. Their ruthlessness and cruelty knows no bounds. I commend the following unpublished statement by Yonas Deressa, noted Ethiopian freedom fighter.

WAX AND GOLD IN ATLANTA—WHY JIMMY CARTER'S ETHIOPIAN PEACE INITIATIVE WILL FAIL

(By Yonas Deressa)

"Summin a Worq"—"Wax and Gold"—is an ancient Ethiopian figure of speech I learned at my mother's knee. It's used to illustrate the fact that things people do or say often have a hidden significance. "Wax" stands for an outward, obvious meaning. "Gold" is the reality it hides.

I was reminded of this familiar old metaphor by the recent news that former President Jimmy Carter has persuaded Ethiopian Communist dictator Mengistu Haile Mariam to send a delegation to Atlanta, Georgia, on September 7th for peace talks with one of his most implacable enemies. That enemy is the Eritrean Peoples' Liberation Front (EPLF), an insurgent movement that has fought for more than two decades to split off the Ethiopian province of Eritrea from the rest of the country.

At first glance this seems a momentous occasion. During his 15 years in power, Mengistu has made himself the engineer of a state machine of repression that has murdered almost 2 million people, caused 3.5 million to flee the country, and turned Ethiopia into a living hell for the rest. He deliberately caused the great famine of 1984-85 to crush resistance to his rule. His so-called "resettlement" campaign kidnaps poor farmers and ships them, packed like cattle, hundreds of miles to concentration camps, killing at last count over 150,000. Today every Ethiopian lives in fear of the midnight knock on the door, of being taken away, or simply disappearing.

But now Mengistu seems to have compromised on his often expressed resolve to crush all resistance to his absolute rule, and opened the door to an end to the violence that is tearing the country apart. And at the same time, he has begun campaigning for better relations with the United States, after more than a decade of excoriating America as an enemy of the world socialist revolution.

In short, one of the world's greatest megalomaniacs—a dictator whose ruthless brutality rivals that of the Khmer Rouge and exceeds that of Idi Amin—seems to be turning over a new leaf.

If only it were true. But in fact, Mengistu is playing the game of "Wax and Gold." He has no intention of making any real concessions in Atlanta—in fact, he simply cannot afford to reach a peaceful agreement with the Eritrean guerrillas.

The struggle for Eritrea is only part of the civil war Mengistu's repression has provoked in 11 of Ethiopia's 14 provinces. And the war is not going well for him anywhere. In March 1988, the EPLF captured 20,000 of Mengistu's best troops and sewed up its control of Eritrea, Ethiopia's gateway to the sea. In the vital province of Tigre next door, the army suffered an even greater defeat this February at the hands of the Tigre People's Liberation Front (TPLF). Another 12,000 troops were captured and Mengistu's army was driven completely out of the province. Elsewhere in the country, Ethiopian army units, demoralized and riddled with desertions, are having increasing difficulty dealing with the growing number of separatist insurgents besieging the regime, threatening to break the country into pieces.

In May most of Mengistu's top generals tried to oust him in a coup, failing apparently because they were betrayed before it took place. On the domestic scene, fifteen years of Stalin-style collectivization and rule by violence have alienated every sector of society from the regime, destroyed the economy, and literally bankrupted the treasury. Mengistu is universally hated; his regime is crumbling. Terror—enforced by his East German-led secret police—is now the only thing keeping him in power.

With his back against the wall, Mengistu is desperately searching for a way to stave off the end. He needs economic aid from the West, but his continuing atrocities have made him a pariah in the Free World. And his army, newly bereft of its most experienced leaders in the purges that followed the coup attempt, needs time to rearm with Soviet-supplied weapons, conscript more cannon fodder, and lick its wounds.

Jimmy Carter's peace initiative is just the opportunity Mengistu wants to gain breathing space, as well as a chance to refurbish his image in the West. He is betting that if he makes a few token concessions and manages to convince Americans he is sincere about reforms, he'll be rewarded with desperately needed economic aid and diplomatic pressure against the neighboring countries that support the guerillas. That is the gold that lies beneath the wax.

An objective look at Mengistu's options shows that he has nothing to give at the negotiating table. His last, tattered shreds of legitimacy as ruler of Ethiopia are based on his pose as a nationalist trying to keep the country together against the separatist insurgencies. Ethiopians are deeply patriotic, and view with horror the prospect of their country being partitioned. If Mengistu give Eritrea away he's finished. On the other hand, if he agrees to federation with the province—the least the EPLF can accept and maintain its own legitimacy—he also loses. Federation means Eritrea would have its own flag and its own autonomous government. The result would only be to discredit Mengistu's brutal, totalitarian rule over the rest of the country, giving added credibility and momentum to the remaining insurgencies.

Mengistu's recent actions belie his new pose as humanitarian peace-maker. Far from emulating the reforms of his Soviet mentors, he has forbidden the very mention of the words "perestroika" and "glasnost." The notorious resettlement campaign is continuing, as well as a huge effort to "villagize" the entire rural population of Ethiopia. At gunpoint, farmers are forced to pull up stakes and then herded into centralized compounds where they can be more easily taxed, monitored, and browbeaten into accepting the state's edicts. Under a new conscription campaign press gangs are kidnapping thousands of teenagers for the army. And in the province of Gondar, Mengistu is training 80,000 new troops for yet another bloody offensive against the guerillas in neighboring Tigre.

The revenge Mengistu took against the officers arrested in the recent coup was savage enough to curdle anyone's blood. Some were dragged behind trucks until dead; their heads were then cut off, stuck on pikes, and paraded through the streets. One general was tortured to within an inch of his life, then displayed on television half dead in his underwear. Another general was tied to the ground while a battle tank crushed him to death. Still another was flogged in public until he died, all the while being forced to hold a framed portrait of Mengistu.

Mengistu has already demonstrated a lack of sincerity about the upcoming Atlanta talks by secretly negotiating in South Yemen to cut a deal behind the EPLF's back with its rival and arch-enemy, the Eritrean Liberation Front. And meanwhile, he has blocked progress toward peace in neighboring Sudan, which is being torn apart by a civil war resulting from his sponsorship of the Sudanese People's Liberation Army, led by renegade army officer John Garang. As I predicted in a paper published last May, Garang—under pressure from Mengistu—recently sabotaged peace talks by making nonnegotiable demands that were unacceptable to the Sudanese government.

Mengistu was rudely reminded at the beginning of this month that parleying with the EPLF alone won't pull his chestnuts out of the fire when his attempt to take back Tigre was stymied by widespread resistance by the TPLF. No doubt we can expect a similar reminder from the growing Oromo Liberation Front (OLF), as well.

Atlanta is going to be a bust.

There is a way out of this deadlock, however, in the form of a resistance movement dedicated to Ethiopian unity and the liberal democratic ideals that have served the West so well. Today, thanks to a radio station broadcasting in Ethiopia's three major languages, its message of hope has galvanized the entire nation. With its call for a constitutional, federal-style government giving representation to all Ethiopia's many and varied ethnic groups, it is the only movement that offers hope for an end to the growing violence, and its replacement with a stable, free society. Because of the high regard in which Ethiopians hold the United States, American support for this movement would result in the speedy collapse of Mengistu's regime and its replacement with one dedicated to democracy, freedom, and the rule of law. But the democrats were not invited to Atlanta. And so far, the U.S. has refused to give them any kind of substantial support. Now that possibility seems to be receding as American diplomats warm to Mengistu's new friendliness and his empty promises for more moderate behavior.

Actually, Mengistu has played this game before, taking the advice of leftist friends in the U.S. Congress and making token gestures in order to neutralize the threat of economic sanctions. Each time, however, he has reverted to form, embarassing his Congressional patrons.

Americans must ask themselves, what do they hope to accomplish with such initiatives as the Atlanta negotiations? Is it simply to stabilize communism in Ethiopia? Or do they want to see an end to the kind of regime that engineered the starvation that horrified them four years ago? Do they want free elections and a constitutional government in Ethiopia—the strategic linchpin of Eastern Africa?

If they do, now is the time to push for real reforms, by giving support to the democratic resistance and including them in any American-sponsored negotiations. Mengistu is desperate, and deeply vulnerable to the right kind of pressure from the U.S. Faced with the choice of giving up power gracefully, or being thrown to the wolves, he would choose to save his hide.

But as things stand, Jimmy Carter cannot hope to emulate Theodore Roosevelt's triumph at the turn of the century, when he won the Noble Peace Prize for refereeing the end of the Russo-Japanese War. The negotiations in Atlanta will go down in history not as a milestone, but as a farce—doomed by American optimism and Mengistu's game of wax and gold.

DIMMICK MEMORIAL LIBRARY CELEBRATES 100 YEARS OF SERVICE

HON. PAUL E. KANJORSKI

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the Dimmick Memorial Library in Jim Thorpe, PA, as the citizen's of this town celebrate the library's 100th anniversary.

A fund to construct the library was established when Mr. Milton Dimmick, a prominent attorney at the time, died and in his will bequeathed his entire estate to a library building fund. Mr. Dimmick asked that the library be named in honor of his father, mother, brother, and sister. His father, also a lawyer, served as a Member of Congress for several terms. Dimmick's estate bought the land on which the library now stands for $1,781.

The cornerstone of the Dimmick Memorial Library was laid on June 15, 1889, and on October 1, 1890, the library opened its doors to the public for the first time. In July of this year, the cornerstone was rededicated in a ceremony conducted by the Carbon Lodge No. 242 Free and Accepted Masons. This impressive program was highlighted by a procession through the town of more than 150 members of the Masonic Order.

During the ceremony, a second cornerstone was laid. The stone laid in 1889 was recently opened by the library, revealing a number of newspapers of the era as well as coins, including a silver dollar and an Indian head penny. Enclosed in the rededication cornerstone were newspapers published on or about July 8, 1989 and coins of the present period. These artifacts have been sealed in an airtight lead container to be opened, perhaps, in another 100 years.

In 1979, the library was gutted by a disastrous fire, destroying 25,000 volumes of the library's collection. After the fire, the library operated on a temporary basis until the building was repaired. A new wing was added at that time with the help of a $76,000 grant from the Gladys Brooks Foundation in New York.

The highlight of the Dimmick Memorial Library's year-long centennial celebration will be an anniversary banquet to be held in Jim Thorpe on October 14, 1989. Because of my great belief in the value of a sound education, I was honored to be asked to serve as the keynote speaker for this a memorable event. The Dimmick Memorial Library has contributed greatly to the community of Jim Thorpe by providing citizens, both young and old, with an accessible pool of information.

The Dimmick Memorial Library has certainly served as a bountiful resource of knowledge and learning for the citizens of Jim Thorpe as well as the surrounding communities. I know that my colleagues in the House of Representatives will join me in congratulating the Dimmick Memorial Library and all those who have contributed to its success.

"GROCERS CARE" SALUTE TO INDEPENDENT FOOD INDUSTRY

HON. E de la GARZA

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of the House the community contribution of the American independent retail grocers and their wholesalers.

In past years, through passage of the National Independent Retail Grocers Week, the House and Senate have recognized the important role these businesses play in our economy. This week, October 1–7, 1989, commemorates the 5th year we have recognized this important segment of the food industry.

Next week, National Grocers Association, heads of philanthropic and consumer groups will honor outstanding independent retail grocers and wholesalers as well as their State association executives for their community service with the N.G.A. "Grocers Care" awards.

This annual celebration highlights the important role small business plays. According to Thomas K. Zaucha, President and CEO of National Grocers Association [N.G.A.], active leadership with community service projects reflect the commitment independent retail grocers and their wholesalers have to the communities they serve.

CAPITAL AREA COMMUNITY SERVICES 25TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. HOWARD WOLPE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay special tribute to the Capitol Area Community Services [CACS] on the occasion of its 25th anniversary celebration.

Founded on November 25, 1964—less than just 3 months after President Lyndon B. Johnson signed into law the Economic Opportunity Act—Capitol Area Community Services has worked to meet the needs of low-income residents in the Greater Lansing, MI, area. CACS, has, over the years, proven to be a most effective warrior in the war on poverty, and has been a model for the other 954 community action agencies throughout the Nation.

In the past year alone the CACS distributed over 1.3 million pounds of commodities to 10,296 households, provided nearly 18,000 direct services and 13,000 information and referral services, furnished 19,819 rides for medical and grocery shopping trips and 10,497 hours of homemaker services to senior citizens. Additionally, during this time over 1,000 children were enrolled in the Preschool-Head Start Program, 141 young people were enrolled in high school completion programs, 54 obtained unsubsidized employment through the agency's Neighborhood Youth Corps, and 651 families were given targeted fuel assistance while 359 homes were weatherized.

The success of the Capitol Area Community Service is due, in large part, to its capacity to adopt to meet changing urgent needs, and its ability to work closely with other agencies in addressing those needs. CACS serves as a critical link in the Greater Lansing community by effectively utilizing the community services block grant moneys it receives to leverage other private and public funds, by spending its dollars effectively, and by working with other community programs to avoid the duplication of services.

There are many individuals who deserve special recognition for their efforts in the creation of the Capital Area Community Services—Mary Black, Marc Coey, Cargaret Cotsidas, Dorothy Payne, Edward Eustace, Dr. Duane Givson, Althea La. Pointe, and Elton Tubbs, to name but just a few. There are many hundreds of others—staff, volunteers, and members of the board of directors—whose selfless contributions have been responsible for CACS success over the past quarter of a century.

Mr. Speaker, I am honored and privileged to represent constituents who care so much for their community and their neighbors. They are testimony to the fact that, working together, we can make a difference. I am certain that my colleagues will want to join me in congratulating them and in wishing them many years of continued success.

HUGO'S CATASTROPHIC DAMAGE

HON. FLOYD H. FLAKE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Speaker, I take this opportunity to express to the Congress my sense of urgency to provide immediate assistance to the helpless victims whose homes were destroyed by Hurricane Hugo. Although it is premature to know the full extent of damage, today we do know that many areas are without power, tens of thousands of people are homeless and a quarter of a million people are without jobs in the Virgin Islands, Puerto Rico, and South Carolina. Damages are appraised between $2 and $3 billion.

We, in the Congress must do everything in our power to encourage the recent efforts in aiding the devastated cities left in the wake of Hurricane Hugo. For instance in my State of New York, Mayor Edward Koch announced on September 22, 1989, that city emergency personnel—the police department, the fire department and nine parks' departments—and supplies were dispacted to Puerto Rico in response to a request from the Puerto Rican government for help in relief efforts there. Supplies varied from vehicles, generators, communications equipment, and articles of clothing to food and water. Private and voluntary organizations throughout the United States are seeking contributions and other aid for victims of Hurricane Hugo.

I commend the preventive measures taken by mainland United States with the forewarning of Hugo's catastrophic damage in the islands. Many lives were ultimately saved because of preventive measures and people's willingness to follow such instructions as evacuating homes and buildings, stocking up on supplies and boarding up buildings. True, many human lives have been spared yet we must now focus on reconstructing the ruins of these people's lives. Clearly, a long-term commitment is imperative in reassembling the lives of our neighbors in the Caribbean and South Carolina.

THE 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS HIGH SCHOOL IN THE BRONX

HON. ELIOT L. ENGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the 100th anniversary of Christopher Columbus High School, which is located in my district.

In 1939, Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia opened the doors of Columbus High School for 3,600 students at a time when the Depression loomed large and education became a cornerstone on which to build a new America. How appropriate that the new school was named after the great discoverer who dared to explore new horizons.

Since that time, the school has graduated more than 25,000 students. Its graduates include the actress Ann Bancroft, author Robert Elegant, and the comedian Gary Morton. Its distinguished faculty has enlightened countless students and then often risen to leadership positions in the education community.

Columbus High School also features some innovative programs that are models for other schools in New York City and throughout the country. The school's elective music and art programs are among the most comprehensive in the city and have helped bring out the creativity in its students. A program entitled Project Education, which attracts promising students interested in teaching careers, allows pupils to take a formal course in education as well as serve as cadet teachers in neighboring elementary and junior high schools.

For all their fine work, I congratulate the students, parents, teachers, and administrators—particularly the current principal, Frank J. Melia, and his staff—who have built the well-deserved reputation that Columbus High School now enjoys. I am confident that Christopher Columbus High School will continue to provide quality education and community leadership, and I join with the residents of my district in wishing all those associated with the school a happy and healthy 100th anniversary.

NEW BILATERAL TRADE INITIATIVE BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND MEXICO

HON. DONALD J. PEASE

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to voice my pleasure over a new bilateral trade initiative between the United States and Mexico: The Trade and Investment Facilitation Talks. Yesterday, Secretary of State James Baker and Secretary of Foreign Relations Fernando Solana signed an understanding to begin these talks, and U.S. Trade Representative Carla Hills and Secretary of Commerce and Industrial Development Jaime Serra Puche signed the action plan to implement them. These talks are designed to build on the 1987 Bilateral Trade and Investment Framework Agreement.

The Framework Agreement greatly improved the process by which we conduct our commercial relations with Mexico. It instituted consultative and dispute settlement mechanisms and established working groups in agriculture, investment, intellectual property rights, and other issues. Since the signing of the Framework Agreement, both nations have managed to avoid major trade controversies, and I believe that framework—and the goodwill of both nations—deserves much of the credit.

As Cochair of the Competitiveness Caucus Task Force on Mexico and a member of the Ways and Means Trade Subcommittee, I am hopeful that the Trade and Investment Facilitation Talks will move the framework process beyond the mere avoidance of conflicts—albeit an important goal—toward the achievement of substantive agreements on remaining barriers to trade and investment. I stand ready to work with USTR as it devises its negotiating strategy for these forthcoming talks.

Below are the texts of the Understanding and Action Plan signed yesterday.

UNDERSTANDING BETWEEN THE GOVERNMENT OF THE UNITED MEXICAN STATES AND THE GOVERNMENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA REGARDING TRADE AND INVESTMENT FACILITATION TALKS

I. GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS

The Government of the United Mexican States and the Government of the United States of America:

1. Recognizing the importance of their bilateral trade and investment relations to the well-being and prosperity of their peoples and taking into account the economic interdependence between Mexico and the United States;

2. Recognizing that in recent years the two Governments have built institutional mechanisms to conduct their trade and investment relations;

3. Appreciating that progress has been made under the "Understanding concerning a Framework of Principles and Procedures for Consultations regarding Trade and Investment Relations" of 1987 in further improving the bilateral process of consultations;

4. Taking into account that Work Groups have been established under the Framework Understanding in the areas of agriculture, industry, investment and intellectual property rights, services, tariffs and coordination; and

5. Noting that these Work Groups have served as consultative bodies and as vehicles for the progressive reduction of impediments to trade and investment flows.

II. MANDATE FOR TRADE AND INVESTMENT FACILITATION TALKS

Intending to build upon the Framework Understanding have agreed:

1. To move beyond the consultative and dispute settlement functions of the Framework Understanding to negotiate in product areas and interrelated issues in order to facilitate trade and investment and to promote predictability and certainty in both countries' marketplaces.

2. To conduct these negotiations in a manner consistent with the principles set forth in the Framework Understanding, and with the rights and obligations of each country under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade [GATT] and the Uruguay Round of Multilateral Trade Negotiations.

3. To ensure the continuation of consultations initiated under the Framework Understanding, in particular the ongoing activities under the above cited Work Groups.

4. To expand, where appropriate, the scope of these Work Groups to provide for a comprehensive evaluation of trade and investment issues that is conducted through analyses of product areas and interrelated issues, including (but not limited to) tariffs, nontariff barriers to trade, investment, intellectual property rights, technology, services, marketing restraints, distribution problems and trade remedy actions.

5. To initiate "trade and investment facilitation talks", which are to be comprehensive negotiations on market access and trade and investment facilitation in product areas and interrelated issues.

Done at Washington this third day of October, nineteen hundred and eighty-nine, in two original copies, in the English and Spanish languages, both texts being equally authentic.

For the Government of the United States of America: James A. Baker, Secretary of State.

For the Government of the United Mexican States: Fernando Solana, Secretary of Foreign Relations.

ACTION PLAN FOR IMPLEMENTATION OF THE OCTOBER 3 MANDATE TO INITIATE TRADE AND INVESTMENT FACILITATION TALKS

Objective—To implement the mandate provided by the "Understanding Between the Government of the United Mexican States and the Government of the United States of America Regarding Trade and Investment Facilitation Talks."

Scope.—This Action Plan provides guidelines for negotiations that are to be conducted under the Understanding.

Product Areas and Interrelated Issues.—The areas and issues that are to be examined in future negotiations are to be determined through bilateral consultations held after the Understanding is signed.

The initial list of product areas and interrelated issues that would be covered in the negotiations is to be decided in November 1989.

Negotiations on product areas would concentrate, inter alia, on problems that arise from the time a product leaves the factory or farm until it reaches the ultimate consumer.

Negotiations on interelated issues could include (but not be limited to) those on tariffs, non tariff barriers to trade, investment, intellectual property rights, technology, services, marketing restraints, distribution problems and trade remedy actions.

Bilateral Teams.—Negotiations are to start after an intensive period of analysis and review conducted by binational teams of experts. Initially, the binational teams would gather information and analyze current trade and investment difficulties.

Period of Negotiations.—Negotiations are to be completed over the next several years. The schedule of negotiations is:

October 1989: Agreement of mandate for negotiations.

November 1989: Agree on the initial areas or issues; initiate analysis.

March 1990: Issue reports; initiate negotiations.

July 1990: Announce first phase results.

November 1990: Announce second phase results; create new binational teams.

February 1991: Issue reports; initiate negotiations.

June 1991: Announce first phase results.

October 1991: Announce second phase results; create new binational teams.

Done in Washington this third day of October, nineteen hundred and eighty-nine, in two original copies, in the English and Spanish languages, both texts being equally authentic.

For the Government of the United States of America: Carla A. Hills, United States Trade Representative.

For the Government of the United Mexican States: Jaime Serra Puche, Secretary of Commerce and Industrial Development.

THE OVERSEAS PRIVATE INVESTMENT CORPORATION IN CHINA

HON. TED WEISS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, on June 6—2 days after the brutal massacre of hundreds, perhaps thousands, of unarmed demonstrators on Tiananmen Square—I offered an amendment to the foreign aid authorization bill to suspend the activities of the Overseas Private Investment Corporation [OPIC] in the People's Republic of China. I believed then—and I continue to believe today—that the suppression of the Chinese prodemocracy movement makes the Beijing government ineligible for the benefits associated with OPIC coverage. This opinion is also shared by OPIC's president, Mr. Fred Zeder, who in testimony before the Foreign Affairs Committee on July 13 announced that OPIC had suspended its activities in China.

My amendment to prohibit OPIC coverage, however, was never intended to affect projects approved before the June 4 crackdown. Such projects involve commitments between OPIC—a U.S. Government corporation—and investors who reasonably expect these commitments to be honored. In light of such previous commitments, OPIC now plans to proceed with five projects that had received clearances prior to the crackdown, but were not executed as a result of the political turmoil of last June. Proceeding with these previously approved projects is consistent with the intention of my amendment.

The decision to go forward with these projects, however, should not be seen as a deviation from our Government's condemnation of recent events in China. These projects will proceed because of preexisting agreements—not because of any diminution in our opposition to the Chinese Government's efforts to silence the prodemocracy movement.

In a recent letter concerning these five projects, OPIC President Fred Zeder has reaffirmed his intention to continue the current policy of denying OPIC coverage for new investments in China. No applications for OPIC insurance or guarantees have been processed since the June 4 crackdown, and OPIC has no intention of considering any new applications so long as the Chinese Government continues to violate the human rights restrictions that govern OPIC activities.

Believing that the Tiananmen Square massacre has faded from memory, the Chinese Government is now quietly attempting to rebuild its diplomatic and commercial relationships with the United States, even while the crackdown on dissent continues. Mr. Zeder, through consultation and cooperation with the Congress, has helped to assure us that OPIC remains committed to a policy of effective opposition to the continuing crackdown in China. I very much appreciate his efforts to keep the Congress informed about OPIC's activities on this important issue. Mr. Zeder's letter follows:

OVERSEAS PRIVATE INVESTMENT CORPORATION,
Washington, DC, September 27, 1989.

Hon. TED WEISS,
U.S. House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN WEISS: Since assuming my duties here at OPIC, I have placed high priority on cooperation and consultation with the Congress. By so doing, I believe we can best ensure that OPIC makes a meaningful contribution to U.S. foreign policy goals and that OPIC operates in a manner consistent with its statutory charter.

As you know from testimony which I presented on July 13, 1989 to the Subcommittees on International Economic Policy and Trade, Asian and Pacific Affairs, and Human Rights and International Organizations of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, my first appearance before a Congressional committee since taking up my duties at OPIC, I joined in the condemnation of recent events in China. More importantly, I announced at that time that OPIC has ceased issuing new coverage in China, a policy which remains in effect today. Further, while we are closely monitoring pending legislation which would statutorily suspend OPIC programs in China, I can assure you that even in the absence of final passage of such legislation, OPIC will not support any new projects in the People's Republic of China as long as proceeding with such projects in that country would not be in keeping with OPIC's statutory restrictions and the foreign policy interests of the United States.

To avoid any misunderstandings, my staff has consulted with yours regarding five projects which would be entitled to OPIC coverage even if the pending sanctions bill were in effect, and which certainly, in our view, should be covered. These projects had received clearances prior to June 1989, but were not executed as a result of uncertainty created by the events of June which shocked the conscience of us all. Approval of these projects at this time represents no change or deviation from OPIC's policy against any new project coverage. Applications which had not been processed before June will not be considered further under present circumstances, including anticipated adoption of a sanctions bill.

Thank you for your courtesy and cooperation in considering this matter. We are sensitive to your interests and look forward to continuing to work with you on this and other matters which will promote proper respect in China and throughout the world for democracy, worker rights and human rights.

Sincerely,

FRED M. ZEDER,
President and Chief, Executive Officer.

A TRIBUTE TO BISHOP JOHN WALKER

HON. WALTER E. FAUNTROY

OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Speaker, this morning in the Washington Post, one great churchman of Washington, DC, paid high tribute to another great churchman. I would share this tribute—which is a measure of both these men of God—with Members and staff of the U.S. Congress.

Father Timothy S. Healy, S.J., who served in our Nation's Capital with distinction as president of Georgetown University for many years, captured in words the spirit of Bishop John Walker.

It is the tragic loss of Bishop Walker that fills our hearts with sorrow today. Though the memory of his good deeds and high goals remains an inspiration for all of us, it is our task now to carry on the work to which he dedicated his life—in human relations and in ministry to those who are the least among us.

As a lasting monument to his spiritual leadership, we shall all join the congregations of the National Cathedral in celebrating 100 years of their building of a cathedral that shall, indeed, be the center of a national and international ministry in the Nation's Capital.

REMEMBERING JOHN WALKER

The death of Bishop John Walker brings sadness and a sense of loss. Both are personal, of course, but both are very much more. For me he was a friend, but also a major part of this city as I had come to know it. He touched my life, and Georgetown University, and in a great many more ways, the life of the city itself.

I first met him on his own ground at the National Cathedral, where I was struck by his grace of movement. Despite the voluminous and heavy trappings of a bishop's regalia, he carried them rather than letting them encase him. Beneath the robes was a self-possessed gentleness. It's a rare gift, and having so very little of it myself, I can envy it in others. It argued to no weakness either of perception behind those quick-appraising eyes or of resolve: he could end a discussion with a determined smile that dropped the temperature notably.

His too the quicksilver of humor. Years ago we robed together at St. Paul's School in New Hampshire, where he, an alumnus, and I, a guest, shared a chapel ceremony marking the school's 125th anniversary. His robes were episcopal, mine academic. Both of us had a red, almost floor-length scapular, his from Canterbury, mine from Oxford. As I wriggled into mine and he recognized it, he took his miter, held it out to me and said, "Try this on for size; you've already got the rest of the outfit." Much to the annoyance of the master of ceremonies, we both processed out chuckling.

He told me of his tough and lonely years at St. Paul's, where he was the only black student. But he also praised and cared for the school because of the training it gave his mind. He had a feel for schools, and seemed to understand by instinct the edgy balance of a university such as Georgetown, where, in John Courtney Murray's words, the church meets the world across an uneven and ever-shifting frontier. I told him of my fear that the university's belief in God and in His laboring presence in creation could become a distraction or, worse, a memory. His comment was typical: "God seems to weigh more in this century than in earlier ones."

During Georgetown's bicentennial I asked him to let us use the National Cathedral for an ecumenical "celebration of freedom." We talked it over, and both of us wanted not to vaunt but to render thanks for the 200 years of freedom that our fellow citizens had granted both our churches. At one point he laughed at the irony of the site and the celebrant; a cathedral of the one church that had to give up its colonial "establishment" and a university that by its very being in the 1780s was the first great test of the new republic's willingness to carry out its principles about religious neutrality. John Walker not only lent us the cathedral, but came himself and spoke from his heart that same commitment to respect and comity.

Most of the time we shared events and activities that had to do with the city itself, Georgetown's front yard and his diocese. The problems always seemed insoluble: homelessness, AIDS, drugs and the battle to protect and yet armor the young. He knew in his bones the irreducible gap between the cuckoo in Washington's nest—the federal establishment—and the real city. Both of us feared being locked in the cuckoo's half of the nest, with its banks and lawyers, lobbyists, think tanks and universities. He ached over how separate the intellectual and social life of the capital was from the lives and pains of the people who make it work, who in their poverty hold it all together with wiring and roads, with shops and stores, with service and humor and hard work.

Over the years he became for me a living bridge across that gap in the city's life. On one hand he was the prelate who ruled its great cathedral, moved with ease among its potentates, married their kids and buried their parents. On the other, he was a man who could walk in every part of the city and know its pain and fear. He could move from Northwest to Southwest without changing smile or rhythm. He was always the priest, always used the fact of his blackness to console and strengthen and bring together, as if both halves of our 10 square miles were bonded somehow in his own person.

That, of course, was his secret strength, one that tied him in friendship to Cardinal Hickey: his priesthood, it is so easy for prelacy in the 20th century to be what it was in the bad old days of the 16th: more princely (in preoccupation if not in style) than priestly. Both men, despite the fleshpots of the world's most powerful capital, never yielded to power's blandishments, never yearned after its rewards. John Walker knew the Apostle's hunger and thirst: "I am in labor until Christ be built up in you." His whole life and work in the city looked to that end and that end alone.

Now, just as the city prepares to celebrate its completion, he lies in state under the soaring cathedral he labored to finish. For all who knew him, the great arches will seem empty, haunted by a comfortable ghost who was in quiet and love the heart and life of the building itself. Cathedral and city are the poorer for his loss, but all of us are richer for the years we spent with him. "The Lord had given," and we have known a modest and good man. "The Lord has taken away" too soon, and left all of us with the hurt of his loss. John Walker would have been the first to join us in ending the ancient prayer, "Blessed be the name of the Lord."

UNITED WAY LABOR PARTICIPATION COMMITTEE

HON. HOWARD WOLPE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to the Greater Kalamazoo United Way's Labor Participation Committee for their efforts to address the drug problem facing Kalamazoo, MI. The committee has scheduled an October 4 rally designed to bring together union members with residents throughout the area to formulate an action plan.

Drug abuse is a poison in this country which is draining away the talent and energy of people in communities like Kalamazoo. President Bush has recently released a blueprint for an all-out war on drugs and has asked our country to get tough on drug suppliers and users. I fully support the need to strengthen drug law enforcement and hold sellers and users accountable for their actions. However, while we might be able to win a battle or two on the drug law enforcement front, I believe we will never win the war unless we recognize the importance of eliminating the demand for drugs in the first instance.

The Kalamazoo Labor Participation Committee recognizes the necessity of drug rehabilitation. Their program is an example of the kind of communitywide drug prevention effort that is needed to provide individuals and their families with the education and information needed to help better prepare them to say "no" to drugs and to select other alternatives. This initial meeting and the followup activities are testimony to the recognition by local union members of their responsibility to the community in which they live and their desire to be an effective element in the struggle to save people's lives and their livelihoods.

Mr. Speaker, I am certain my colleagues will want to join me in saluting the Greater Kalamazoo United Way Labor Participation Committee for their continuing efforts to improve the quality of life for working people, their families, and their neighbors. I am honored and privileged to represent constituents who care so deeply for their community and who are willing to act upon their beliefs.

THE SILVER ANNIVERSARY OF RAIN

HON. ELIOT L. ENGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the 25th anniversary of an organization that provides vital services to the elderly and homebound in my district, Regional Aid for Interim Needs, Inc. [RAIN].

Since 1964, RAIN's founder and president Bea Castiglia has worked tirelessly to reach out to the most needy people in the community. Bea's concern for the sick and elderly grew out of her own personal experience of caring for her terminally ill mother-in-law while raising three children and holding down a job as a nurse. Twenty-five years ago, Bea made a promise that if she persevered, she would dedicate the rest of her life to helping others. That is exactly what she has done.

RAIN began as a community-based organization that provided homecare assistance to the elderly, but its services have since grown to include a senior citizen center, a social service referral center, a thrift shop, and a program that provides meals for the homebound poor.

Today, more than 1,000 clients are served by RAIN Home Attendent Services. More than 300 meals are served in the senior center or delivered to the homebound every day. Countless others have received guidance and comfort from Bea Castiglia and her staff.

This week, the community is gathering at a dinner dance to honor RAIN and the people who have supported its efforts through the years. It is with great pride that I extend thanks and congratulations to Bea Castiglia and her staff on behalf of all the people in the Bronx who have been touched by RAIN's caring attention.

REPEAL CATASTROPHIC

HON. PHILIP M. CRANE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Speaker, important legislation is being laid out for us tomorrow concerning catastrophic health care. It is our second chance to vote no against this preposterous act which was mistakenly passed last year. I am in support of the amendment to repeal the Catastrophic Act of 1988, and believe that the original purpose of the act has now become skewed. The most crucial part of health care for Americans now, long-term nursing care, is not even included in the package. This poorly designed health bill only served to increase the costs of health care to our senior citizens. Not to mention that these same seniors are being asked to pay new taxes on top of it all.

I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues the following article by David P. Gergen which appeared in U.S. News and World Report on September 25, 1989. As he states, "the program brought a deluge of new taxes but only a drop of new protection." In order to demonstrate that we are truly concerned about the issues facing our aging citizens, we simply must repeal the catastrophic bill and start over.

REPEAL A BAD HEALTH BILL

(By David R. Gergen)

If I had to live my life again," Tallulah Bankhead once said, "I'd make the same mistakes, only sooner." When Congress gets around to correcting one of its dumber mistakes, it won't be soon enough for many older Americans.

A year ago, complete with ruffles and flourishes, Congress passed and President Reagan signed the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988. It was hailed as the biggest expansion of medicare since 1965, a historic advance in protecting the 33 million beneficiaries of medicare. But that was before senior citizens read the fine print. For most, the program brought a deluge of new taxes but only a drop of new protection. They have been angrily howling ever since, and a red-faced Congress is now scratching its head over what to do next.

The benefits package is riddled with catches and loopholes. Its centerpiece, sponsors said, was to protect older Americans against the devastating costs of acute illness. But under the rules, only 4 percent of all beneficiaries will be helped each year in paying for such illness, according to the Congressional Research Service. New coverage for prescription drugs will help far more people, 16.8 percent of senior citizens per year, but no one will realize any benefit until an annual $600 deductible is paid. For most drugs, consumers must pay 50 percent of any additional costs.

For this pig in a poke, Congress has singled out senior citizens to pay hefty new taxes. Veterans are not asked to pay for all costs of VA hospitals, parents are not asked to pay all the costs of schools, but the elderly—and the elderly alone—must bear the entire costs of this new program. About a third of the costs are to be met by mandatory new charges on all medicare enrollees, starting at $4 a month this year and rising to at least $10 a month by 1993. The other two thirds of the costs are to come from a controversial new surtax. For every $150 in taxes owed to the federal government, a senior citizen must pay an extra "tax on a tax," starting at 15 percent this year and rising to at least 28 percent by 1993. As with all new Washington entitlements, the costs are sure to explode. A new Bush administration document estimates that the program will cost $48 billion over the next five years, 60 percent more than first thought.

These new charges will help to sock many older Americans with the highest tax rates in the country. Those who scrimped and saved for their retirement will be penalized the worst, while those who want to keep working past age 65 will be encouraged to quit. Critics say the surtax hits only wealthy retirees and they should stop bellyaching. Not true. It's a middle-class tax, kicking in this year for any individual with income over $17,285 and requiring payments from more than 40 percent of senior citizens. In fact, the wealthy are shielded from high payments by a cap placed on the tax, starting at $800 this year.

But the worst feature of this law is that it provides the kind of coverage most seniors don't need and don't want. Some 62 percent of medicare enrollees already have some private insurance against acute illness, often paid for through past employment. An additional 10 percent are protected by medicaid. It makes no sense to force people into paying twice for coverage. What most senior citizens want far more and aren't getting is coverage against a true catastrophe: Long-term nursing care. It is extraordinarily expensive to buy insurance protecting a family against nursing-home charges, which average $25,000 for a year's care and are driving an estimated 1 million Americans a year into poverty.

Congress is now tinkering with changes in the law. Both the Bush administration and Democrats are reluctant to abandon it because it will produce surplus revenues this year that can paper over the federal deficit. It is outrageous to make new taxes from senior citizens hostage to Washington budget shenanigans. Congress should have the courage to repeal the 1988 law and start over. The nation has enormous problems in health care—medical costs rising at twice the inflation rate, more than 31 million Americans uninsured, poor children with no medicaid coverage, older Americans with no nursing-home coverage. From the ashes of the 1988 medicare act, the President and Congress should build a new national-health-care system that is fairer and more durable than today's mess.

LEGISLATION TO CORRECT INEQUITY IN LAW AFFECTING WIDOWS OF FEDERAL LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICERS

HON. FRANK R. WOLF

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing legislation today to change a provision in title 5, United States Code, section 8336, that negatively affects some spouses of Federal law enforcement officers.

The problem was brought to my attention by an individual in my district who recently lost her husband, a Federal law enforcement officer, to brain cancer. Her husband had 20 years' service as a Federal law enforcement officer but died before his 50th birthday.

Law enforcement officers are allowed to contribute to a special 7½ percent pension over the years. If they die before the age of 50, however, their spouses are only allowed to collect an annuity based on a 7-percent contribution over the years. In some cases, this one-half of 1 percent reduction affects their annuity by as much as $4,000 a year.

This legislation would amend the law to allow the spouses of deceased Federal law enforcement officers the opportunity to receive the special 7½ percent law enforcement annuity as long as the officers had 20 years or more of law enforcement service at the time of their deaths, regardless of age.

This initiative is fully supported by the National Treasury Employees Union and the Federal Law Enforcement Officers Association and I hope Members will join me in sponsoring this legislation. A copy of the bill is included with this statement.

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 8341 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(j) If a law enforcement officer dies after satisfying the service requirement under section 8336(c) of this title for entitlement to an annuity, but before satisfying the age requirement thereunder, any right of a widow, widower, or former spouse to an annuity under this section based on the service of the decedent shall be determined as if the age requirement had been met on the day before date of death."

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to benefits payable for periods beginning on or after the date of enactment of this Act to any survivor of an individual whose date of death is after 1985.

TAIWAN'S NATIONAL DAY

HON. FLOYD H. FLAKE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. FLAKE. Mr. Speaker, 78 years ago the heroic Chinese leader, Dr. Sun Yat-sen, created the first free democratic nation in Asia, the Republic of China. On Tuesday, October 10, the anniversary of that momentous event, the island nation of Taiwan will celebrate its National Day.

Indeed, Taiwan has much to celebrate. Its per capita income, by the end of this year, will climb from 30th to 25th in the world, or from US$6,053 to US$7,237. Taiwan's per capita income will surpass those of Spain and Puerto Rico. At the same time, Taiwan fully recognizes its responsibility to help other nations. Most recently, it announced it was going to help other nations by establishing a $1 billion development fund and a $75 million education fund.

Mr. Speaker, I applaud Taiwan's many accomplishments, and I wish to extend to Taiwan's president Dr. Lee Teng-hui my best wishes and congratulations.

AN OUTSTANDING HONOR FOR AN OUTSTANDING MAN—L. WILLIAM SEIDMAN

HON. GUY VANDER JAGT

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. VANDER JAGT. Mr. Speaker, it is a very special personal honor for me to have this opportunity to bring to the attention of my colleagues a most recent tribute given to a dear friend and a most highly respected government official, well known to all of us, L. William Seidman, Chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. Bill, a fellow Michiganite, was recently recognized as the 1989 recipient of the Business Leadership Award presented by the College of Business of Arizona State University and its Dean's Council of 100.

I am so pleased to have this chance to extend my personal congratulations to Bill whose great service to our country, in a whole host of challenging and difficult roles, has always been exemplary.

Permit me at this time to bring to your attention a statement issued by the Arizona State University regarding Bill's Business Leadership Award, along with some very special background materiai on Bill's outstanding accomplishments.

FDIC CHAIRMAN PRESENTED BUSINESS LEADERSHIP AWARD BY ASU COLLEGE OF BUSINESS

L. William Seidman, chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Coroporation and former dean of the Arizona State University College of Business, is this year's recipient of the Business Leadership Award, presented by the college and the Dean's Council of 100.

Presented annually, the honor is given in recognition of "broad accomplishments; to someone whose lifetime contribution is recognized as significant to the nation and whose presence presents a model for future business leaders." Past recipients include Edward Brennan, chairman and chief executive officer of Sears, Roebuck & Co.; Donald Kendall, former chairman of PepsiCo; and David Packard, chairman of Hewlett-Packard Co.

The council is a group of the Valley's top business executives who serves as advisors to the business college's dean. Seidman founded the group during his tenure as dean from 1982 to 1985. He received the award during a Council of 100 luncheon today at the Arizona Biltmore.

Appointed to head the FDIC in 1985, Seidman had been vice chairman of Phelps-Dodge Corporation before coming to ASU. He also served as President Ford's assistant for economic affairs from 1974 to 1977.

In addition to the Business Leadership award, Seidman was honored with the formal dedication of the Seidman Institute for Business Leadership, which he also founded while dean. The institute serves as the umbrella over 10 business research centers located in the college. They are the:

Arizona Real Estate Center;
Center for Advanced Purchasing Studies;
Center for Business Research;
Center for Financial System Research;
COAR: A Management Technology Research Center;
Decision Systems Research Center;
Economic Outlook Center;
First Interstate Center for Services Marketing;
Hahn Center for Entrepreneurship and Innovation; and the Joan and David Lincoln Center for Ethics.

L. WILLIAM SEIDMAN

L. William Seidman, 67, became the fourteenth Chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation on October 21, 1985.

At the time of his presidential appointment, he was Dean of the College of Business at Arizona State University, Tempe, Arizona, one of America's largest business colleges. While in Arizona, he was Chairman of the Governor's Commission on Interstate Banking, and also wrote a business column for the Phoenix Gazette.

Mr. Seidman was in the White House with President Gerald Ford as his Assistant for Economic Affairs from 1974 to 1977. He served as co-chair of the White House Conference on Productivity in 1983 and 1984.

On the business side of his career, Mr. Seidman was Vice-Chairman and Chief Financial Officer of the Phelps Dodge Corporation (a fortune 500 company) from 1977 to 1982.

Mr. Seidman was managing partner of Seidman & Seidman, Certified Public Accountants, New York, New York, from 1968 to 1974. One of the major public accounting firms in the Nation.

He is also the founder of The Washington Campus, a consortium of universities organized to help students and corporate executives understand the operations of the White House, the Congress, and the regulatory agencies.

Mr. Seidman holds an A.B. from Dartmouth (Phi Beta Kappa), an LL.B. from Harvard Law School, and is an honors graduate with an M.B.A. from the University of Michigan. He served in the U.S. Navy from 1942-46, earning battle stars and the Bronze Star Medal.

Mr. Seidman and his wife Sally have six children. Their son Tom is a movie director in California; Tracy is an artist and ranch operator in New Mexico; Sarah is a freelance writer and maple syrup producer in Vermont; Carrie is a ballet dancer in Montana and former N.Y. Times sports reporter; Meg is an assistant race horse trainer in Nebraska; and Robin is a school teacher in New Jersey.

A TRIBUTE TO THE DISTINGUISHED CAREER OF PETE ESCOVEDO

HON. RONALD V. DELLUMS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Speaker, October 3, 1989 marks the occasion of a testimonial dinner honoring a legendary Latin-Jazz percussionist Pete Escovedo. Born in Pittsburg, CA, Pete has invested a great deal of his time in his native Bay Area and the Escovedo family have been a creative force in Latin-Jazz history.

I know firsthand of Pete's notable accomplishments and the leadership he has shown to enhance and preserve as a historic treasure the art form jazz. Pete has received numerous local and national awards recognizing and honoring him as "Jazz Musician of the Year." He has recorded and performed with a variety of top artists, including Billy Cobham, George Duke, Herbie Hancock, Mongo Santamaria, Stephen Stills, Greg Kihn, Carlos Santana, Boz Scaggs, Cal Tjader, Tito Puente, Anita Baker, Woody Herman, and many others. We join this salute to a dedicated and committed citizen who is serving as a role model to our youth and as someone committed to a worldwide legacy for jazz.

Music is the essence of Pete's life and we personally extend our congratulations and best wishes to Pete Escovedo. I am delighted to share his remarkable achievements with my colleagues in the U.S. Congress and the people of our Nation.

RECOGNIZING THE NEED FOR A COMPREHENSIVE CHILD DEVELOPMENT POLICY

HON. AUGUSTUS F. HAWKINS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, the New York Times lead editorial of September 30 correctly points out the glaring need for a comprehensive child development policy for children under 5. Indeed, a joint statement issued by the President and the Governors at the education summit last week recognized the need to help poor children "get off to a good start in school." We, as a nation, can ill afford to ignore the benefits derived from successful early childhood programs. The Head Start expansion and early childhood education provisions included in H.R. 3299, the Omnibus Reconciliation Act, would help us fulfill this need.

For the benefit of my colleagues, I am inserting the Times editorial in the RECORD.

[From the New York Times, Sept. 30, 1989]

OVERLOOKED IN VIRGINIA: LITTLE KIDS

As he stood at the conference on American education this week, president Bush saw only dimly the one need that stands out most sharply on the horizon: the youngest children.

Government programs to help preschool children have proved successful. If children aren't ready for school—in health, curiosity or self-esteem—they will likely suffer through their school years. But despite urgings from the assembled governors, Mr. Bush only halfheartedly embraced the job of helping to ensure that all children are mentally and physically prepared for school.

The two-day meeting in Charlottesville, Va., of the President and the nation's governors merits praise. It created a cooperative, bipartisan spirit on a subject of great national importance. It yielded agreement to develop national performance goals, seek more flexibility in the use of Federal funds, restructure the public school system and strengthen accountability through annual report cards.

There is little question that American education needs a dramatic overhaul. A series of articles in The Times this week demonstrated that students are leaving schools without adequate job skills. That threatens the nation's economic security and its social fabric.

Mr. Bush pledged a new "social compact" for his Administration, parents, educators and state politicians to improve the chances of all youngsters. The participants in the conference agreed to establish national education goals like improving math and science skills, and reducing the dropout rate. And the White House and the governors also agreed to try to find ways that would give states and local school districts more flexibility in using existing Federal funds.

But as Gov. Bill Clinton of Arkansas observed, "This country needs a comprehensive child development policy for children under 5." A joint statement by the White House and the governors recognized the Federal Government's responsibility to help poor children "get off to a good start in school," and Mr. Bush later cited the need for more Federal support for Head Start and other prekindergarten programs. However, he failed to pledge additional dollars or specific targets, promising only to give priority to those programs as funds become available.

That's not good enough, given the urgency of the problem and the demonstrated long-term benefits of early childhood intervention. The governors are pledged to do better by America's schoolchildren once they enter kindergarten. Now Mr. Bush needs to do better by them before they get there.

HONORING THE REVEREND SPYRIDON MACRIS

HON. GUY V. MOLINARI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. MOLINARI. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to the memory of the Reverend Spyridon Macris, an outstanding clergyman and contributor to the Staten Island community.

For almost 25 years, Father Macris served the people of Holy Trinity Greek Orthodox Church with great enthusiasm and compassion. His dedication to the church was a deep and personal one. During his tenure at Holy Trinity, membership increased over threefold. The parish also saw the completion of a new church.

Father Macris took great pride in his Greek heritage, and because of his inspirational ability, became a leader to the Greek community as well. Every year the church organized a Greek festival, which served as a celebration of Greek culture and history. I always looked forward to attending this festival and saw firsthand the respect and affection Father Macris engendered.

Our community is saddened by the untimely death of Father Macris, but comforted in the knowledge that his legacy of hard work and genuine concern for others will serve as a model for all of those who want to make their community better.

In a few weeks, Mr. Speaker, a group will gather on Staten Island for a luncheon at which Father Macris was scheduled to be the guest of honor. His friends had wanted to pay a public tribute to him. Now, we will gather with, of course, some sadness. But it will also be a time for gratitude and thanksgiving as we remember a man of caring who contributed so much to our community.

AMERICAN WATERWAY OPERATORS' STATEMENT IN SUPPORT OF H.R. 1465, OIL POLLUTION PREVENTION, RESPONSE, LIABILITY AND COMPENSATION ACT OF 1989

HON. BOB CLEMENT

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. CLEMENT. Mr. Speaker, this week the House of Representatives is scheduled to consider H.R. 1465, the Oil Pollution Prevention, Response, Liability and Compensation Act of 1989.

This important measure is the product of many hearings and the experience of past Congresses which have considered similar measures. It is a bill which takes a tremendous step forward in preventing future oil spills and in insuring an immediate response should a spill occur.

Recently, the American Waterway Operators, which is the trade association representing the tug and barge industry, issued a statement on the bill which I commend to my colleagues. The statement also discusses several amendments that may be offered and their detrimental effect should they be adopted.

I invite my colleagues to read this statement as the House begins consideration of this important legislation.

STATEMENT ON OIL SPILL LIABILITY LEGISLATION

I am Joe Farrell, President of the American Waterways Operators (AWO), the national association of the tug and barge industry. The barge industry transports 40 percent of America's petroleum and petroleum products. I am speaking on behalf of AWO and other national organizations directly concerned with either marine transportation or natural resource development.

Americans demand safe, environmentally-sound transportation of oil, and full compensation if an accident occurs. The House of Representatives is soon to consider comprehensive legislation that provides a single federal regime for oil spill liability and compensation. These organizations have for over a decade advocated enactment of such a law, and we support the bill which Rep. Walter B. Jones, Chairman of the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, will bring to the House floor. It contains many sound measures for preventing and responding to oil spills more effectively, imposes strict liability on vessels and facilities that handle oil, and ensures swift, fair and full compensation to oil spill victims by the transporter, backed up by an unlimited fund financed entirely by the private sector. The concept of this legislation is even more valid today than when first developed in 1975, as the tragic spill in Prince William Sound has dramatically demonstrated. In the backdrop of the legislation pending in Congress, we must recognize that U.S. energy consumption is very high. Americans consume over 17 million barrels of oil a day, burn over two million tons of coal a day, and use nuclear energy for over 17 percent of the electricity generated in the U.S. every day. Although Americans constitute only six percent of the population, we consume a full 40 percent of the world's energy. Nothing in the foreseeable future will change this pattern. If anything, energy consumption will increase as the population grows and the benefits of our industrial democracy expand.

Further framing what is at issue, we wish to highlight some data:

Major oil spills occur infrequently. Over three-quarters of all recorded spills are 100 gallons or smaller;

In the course of the last 22 years, there have been 45 major spills world wide. Six of these occurred in or near U.S. waters; and Major oil companies . . . at which much of the passion of the current oil spill debate is aimed . . . own only eight percent of the world's tanker fleet. The rest are owned by independent operators.

The House bill is based on a system of shared liability between the shipowner and the cargo owner. It is important to understand that this scheme of shared liability is a major undergirding of safe transportation. If cargo owners are exposed to spill liability, they will exercise extraordinary diligence in selecting vessel operators with proven safety records to transport their cargos. It is also important to understand that under this legislation, limitation of liability only describes the line where payment of cleanup and compensation costs shift from the vessel owner to the cargo owner, and in no way limits the ability of victims to be fully compensated for their claims. It works this way:

The shipowner, who transports the oil, is responsible for paying all cleanup and compensation costs up to his limit of liability. Shipowners are subject to unlimited liability in cases of gross negligence or willful misconduct, or a violation of operating or safety regulations;

The cargo owner, who introduces the oil into commerce, is responsible for paying any cleanup and compensation costs which exceed the shipowner's limit of liability. The cargo owners share of these costs are derived from a comprehensive fund financed entirely by a tax paid by the oil companies. Therefore, under this legislation, oil spill cleanup and compensation will be borne entirely by the shipowners and the oil companies. The U.S. taxpayer will not be forced to bear any of these costs.

We are here today to express our support for the House bill, and our concern about a group of amendments being sponsored by Representatives Gerry Studds and George Miller, at the behest of strict environmentalists, aimed straight at the heart of fundamental goals of virtually all Americans: to reduce to an absolute minimum the likelihood of major spills and, when and if spills occur, move immediately to contain and clean up the spill, and swiftly and equitably compensate the injured for damages and restore, replace, or rehabilitate natural resources.

The Miller-Studds amendments would impede progress toward these goals. Instead of strengthening environmental protection in the transportation of petroleum, the Miller-Studds amendments would weaken it. Instead of spending compensation to oil spill victims, the Miller-Studds amendments would ensure long delays.

If enacted, the Miller-Studds amendments would expose petroleum transporters and facilities such as offshore drilling rigs, production platforms, and terminals in virtually all incidents to unlimited liabilities for oil spills. If enacted, these amendments would severely restrict, if not eliminate completely, the ability of oil transporters and producers to obtain insurance and maintain efficient shipping, drilling, and terminal operations. The result would be that responsible parties will be driven to abandon the oil transportation business. If replaced at all, they will be replaced by undercapitalized and environmentally insenstive parties.

If enacted, the Miller-Studds amendments would remove the provision in the legislation preempting state liability laws for cleanup costs, natural resource damages, and third party claims. This would dismantle the establishment of comprehensive legislation to replace the current patchwork of international, federal, state and common law. In so doing, lost would be the great benefit of a single regime to provide full, fair and swift compensation to those injured by a spill. Messrs. Miller and Studds insist that claimants must pursue recovery of speculative and punitive damages in state courts. Consider what that would do in the real world. We reviewed this past summer, following the three spills of last June, the liability laws of those affected states: New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Texas and Rhode Island. The analysis shows clearly that the citizens of those states would fare far better under a federal preemptive compensation scheme as proposed in the House bill, rather than under the conflicting laws of the states.

If enacted, the Miller-Studds amendments would provide that federal caps on liability would not apply in cases of simple negligence as opposed to gross negligence. "Simple negligence" is a legal term of art; for all concerned, this proposal has serious potential consequences. The legal concept of negligence is inherent in any activity where an element of risk is involved. Because claimants must access arcane legal concepts, utilizing instead a simple negligence standard would serve to tie up the matter of compensation in the court system for years. The structure of the House bill assures that all cleanup and compensation costs are paid by the transporter or the cargo owner—liability limits merely delineate where the payment shifts to the cargo owner. Anyone who portrays limtis of liability as a cap on cleanup and damage costs either does not understand the legislation or is purposely trying to mislead.

If enacted, the Miller-Studds amendments would also apply to organizations whose sole purpose is to respond to spills and protect the environment. But without reliable limits on potential liability, such organizations would be inhibited from responding quickly and effectively to a spill. Some might be forced to shut down because insurance would be unavailable or too costly.

If enacted, the Miller-Studds amendments would add onto the federal regime another layer of shared liability, termed "secondary liability." Under the House bill, the cargo owners are liable for cleanup and damage costs through the federal taxes they will pay to create the backup federal compensation and cleanup fund. The proposed addition of so-called secondary liability breaks down in no constructive way this allocation of risks and has far-reaching ramifications for the world oil distribution network by fostering restructuring of cargo owner arrangements. What this amendment would really do is defeat the clean, easily accessed, streamlined regime claimants need and will have under the House bill.

We urge the Members of the House of Representatives to reject the Miller-Studds amendments and adopt the oil spill liability legislation brought to the floor by Chairman Walter Jones. We believe that this legislation provides the fairest and most effective approach to oil spill liability and compensation. Attempts to weaken it must be defeated.

EMPLOYEE OWNERSHIP WEEK

HON. ROBERT T. MATSUI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to invite my colleagues to join me in commemorating October 1-7, 1989, as Employee Ownership Week.

Employee ownership is becoming a practice that is instrumental in helping more Americans share in our Nation's growth and prosperity by enabling our citizens to accumulate significant amounts of capital stock in the businesses with whom they are employed. It has become a powerful incentive for employees to make the best of their talents and energies in their places of work, thus strengthening their competitive potential in the Nation's enterprises. Moreover, this practice is a viable tool for creating and retaining jobs in communities throughout our country.

I need only look to my own community to find a shining example of how employee ownership can work. The Lynn-Edwards Corp. of Sacramento is the Nation's largest publicly held office supply distributor. This is a company that started operations out of a garage in lieu of a warehouse with only a panel van to serve as a delivery truck. From these humble beginnings, Lynn-Edwards has grown to become one of the most successful and respected companies in the western region of the United States.

The growing number of firms and their employee owners who have used this concept deserve special praise for their participation in the positive economic trend of employee ownership. Certainly, all the jobs that have been saved, the businesses that have remained solvent, the families that have benefited, and the futures that have been brightened speak to the worthiness of saluting employee owners everywhere.

THE DEATH PILL

HON. ROBERT K. DORNAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call your attention to the excellent article in the October 1989 issue of the American Spectator magazine. In the article, Charlotte Low Allen discusses the destructive abortion pill, RU-486. Just last week its French creator was awarded the prestigious American Lasker prize for research. The Washington Post reported it a safe and effective approach, a stunning advance which could transform family planning. But this is blatantly false.

As Ms. Allen relates in her article, RU-486 has more than a dozen contraindications which proscribe its use. It is no morning after pill. It must be administered under direct medical supervision and the procedure, which last several days, is painful and bloody. What was supposed to be a quick and easy way to fix unwanted pregnancy has turned out to be an extremely ugly alternative. And so goes the tragedy of abortion.

Mr. Speaker, I enjoin my colleagues to read this timely article:

THE MYSTERIES OF RU-486

(By Charlotte Low Allen)

Now that the Supreme Court has decided to allow states to restrict abortion substantially at hospitals and medical clinics, interest among members of the women's movement has rekindled in do-it-yourself abortion, a fad of the early 1970s bra-burning days that fell into disuse. The home remedies range from cocaine (it can induce uterine contractions) to something called "menstrual extraction," which involves a syringe, plastic fishtank tubing, and a Mason jar. These methods although touted by feminist health clinics, are generally considered dangerous, certainly for the mother, but also for any baby who survives them to birth. "Sadly, many home remedies could damage a fetus instead of kill it," was Newsweek magazine's rather odd comment on the subject.

Invariably into this discussion of ways of completely privatizing abortion—thus removing it from the purview of the law and the right-to-life movement—comes the abortion pill, RU-486. That pill, as this article will explain, is far from a do-it-yourself abortion fix, but there are many optimistic souls who would like to think it is.

RU-486 is an anti-progesterone steroid that destroys the uterine lining, at least in most cases, starving out the already attached fetus, which dies and is expelled. In the year since the pill, whose trade name is Mifepristone, went on the French market, the National Organization for Women and its offshoot, former NOW president Eleanor Smeal's Fund for a Feminist Majority (FFM), have been leading a campaign to find a U.S. pharmaceutical company willing to take on the U.S. marketing of the pill.

The NOW/FFM coalition is one wheel of a strong troike whose other wheels are the Population Council and the Planned Parenthood Federation of America. They seem determined to push RU-486 through, with the goal of speeding FDA review to four years (by using European tests in lieu of American ones), limiting damage exposure for any private company that decides to make the drug, and even using federal funds to pay the research and marketing costs.

RU-486 is currently the sole property of its French developer, Roussel-Uclaf, a joint subsidiary of the German pharmaceutical company Hoechst and the French government. Invented in 1982, the pill has been on the market in France since September 1988; 12,000 French women are said to have used it so far. China also had a brief licensing arrangement with Roussel to use RU-486 as part of its one-child-per-couple population-halving program but has reportedly terminated the arrangement. Because China does not recognize international copyright or patent conventions, it is difficult to say with certainty whether some black-market version of the pill is currently circulating in that country and perhaps outside its borders.

Meanwhile, no U.S. pharmaceutical company to date has shown the slightest interest in manufacturing or marketing it. Part of the reason for the drug industry's cold feet is probably fear of a massive boycott by the right-to-life movement of all the drug company's other products. In 1985, the National Right to Life Committee was instrumental in Upjohn Co.'s decision to stop making its labor-inducing prostaglandin (another extremely painful abortifacient) and to disband its entire fertility research division.

But the main reason for the hesitancy on RU-486 is undoubtedly fear of liability exposure. No company wants to see its product go the lawsuit-dotted way of the first generation of birth control pills (millions of dollars in damage awards, including $2.75 million in punitive damages against the Ortho Pharmaceutical Corp. alone) or, even worse, the Dalkon Shield, whose $2.5 billion in punitive assessments, with another $12 billion possibly to come, forced the manufacturer, A. H. Robins Co., into bankruptcy court (a payout plan was recently approved).

From a reading of the somewhat scant English-language medical literature on RU-486—articles in the New England Journal of Medicine, Lancet, and the American Journal of Obstetrics and Gynecology—the abortion pill emerges as one of the creepiest human concoctions around. And not only because it kills the unborn, a job at which it is actually not outstandingly efficient, zapping only about 50 to 85 percent of them depending on which study you read (prostaglandin, taken in conjunction with the pill, boosts the rate to 95 percent). By contrast, surgical abortion is 99 percent effective.

Abortion via the pill is an ordeal for the women involved, far more of an ordeal than conventional surgical abortion. It is time-consuming (the abortion part alone lasts three days, and the clinical part comprises a week's worth of visits), bloody (one woman in a Swedish trial required a transfusion, although for most it resembles an exceedingly heavy menstrual period, with bleedings lasting an average from six to sixteen days, occasionally up to thirty), and painful (many women require analgesic shots to ease them through). Nausea and vomiting are other common side effects: so, in some women, for reasons no one can figure out, are itching and burning sensations around the vagina.

In the seven years since Dr. Etienne-Emile Baulieu, the French physician who developed the RU-486 molecule for Roussel, announced his invention, the drug has gone through several violent transmogrifications of description, leading one to wonder just how much anyone really knows about it. At first, it was supposed to be the long-desired "morning after" pill, preventing the fertilized egg from implanting itself on to the uterine wall as normally happens a week after conception. Then the Roussel researchers discovered the drug did not work immediately after conception. So it was next touted as a kind of menstrual regulator, a drug a woman could take every month and not even know if she was aborting, presumably easing her conscience. Then they found that it quickly causes a phenomenon called "dysynchrony," in which a woman's ovulatory and menstrual cycles become unlinked, reducing the drug's effectiveness in terminating any pregnancy.

In 1987 Balulieu bragged that RU-486 would completely replace surgical abortions up through the first ten weeks of pregnancy, which is when 80 percent of abortions take place. It turns out that the drug does not work very well after the seventh week. Indeed, timing is of the essence with RU-486. It is most effective taken about a week after a woman misses her menstrual period up through that seventh week, when it is markedly less effective. That is typically about a three-week window. So far, all the studies have concluded that RU-486 is "safe." But "safe," in the definition of Marie Bass of the Reproductive Health Technologies Project, means "there's been no evidence so far of mortality." That is, no woman has yet died from taking the pill.

No one has researched the long-term effects of RU-486 on a woman's health or fertility. The drug seems to suppress ovulation for three to seven months after it is taken. Some women clearly have no trouble eventually conceiving again: the studies have reported repeaters in their programs. But there are no scientific data on this question. Rather ominously, rabbit studies reveal that RU-486 can cause birth defects, Lancet reported in 1987. The drug's molecular structure resembles that of DES, the 1950s antimiscarriage drug that, by altering the fetus's DNA, tended to cause cervical cancer in the daughters of the women who took it. All the published studies strictly warn that women on whom the drug proves ineffective cannot change their minds but must undergo a surgical abortion. Birth defects, a sure source of lawsuits, are one reason the U.S. pharmaceutical industry is steering clear of RU-486.

One might well ask: Why bother with this drug at all? Some abortion advocates have been asking themselves this very question. RU-486 "probably represents a technical advance in an area where none is needed, or at least not very much," said Dr. Phillip G. Stubblefield, president of the National Abortion Federation, at a reproductive health conference in 1986. Many physicians have expressed concern over the heavy bleeding, which occurs even if the drug fails to induce an abortion. It typically takes from eight to ten years to obtain the federal Food and Drug Administration's approval for a new drug (stages of animal and human studies plus layers of review), and the cost of testing and marketing a new drug can range from $30 million to $70 million. Some have suggested it may be prohibitive for a private company even to obtain the necessary insurance to perform the clinical tests.

The Health and Human Services Department currently forbids the National Institutes of Health from funding abortion research as part of its $8 million contraceptive program. But the Population Council, a 37-year-old, $20 million nonprofit organization that has the backing of the Rockefeller and Melton foundations and currently subsidizes most U.S. research on contraceptives, has recently been paying for U.S. studies of RU-486 on a Roussel license, including a series at the University of Southern California's medical school. NOW is trying to browbeat the pharmaceutical industry into getting involved. (Its scare-tactic prediction: the pill "will be available in the U.S. either legally or illegally, in no more than 2-5 years.") Planned Parenthood lobbied heavily last year in hopes of defeating an amendment that would have exempted abortifacients from a products-liability reform bill in Congress.

Following the feminist and population-control lead has been a generally bovine press. News stories about RU-486 continue to call it a "morning-after" pill, although many mornings must pass before its effective. A June 1988 article in Mother Jones magazine is typical of the general level of media ignorance. "For a woman whose period is late, using RU-486 means no waiting, no walking past picket lines at abortion clinics, and no feet up in stirrups for surgery," burbles health writer Laura Fraser. "It also means she will never have to know whether she had actually been pregnant." Wrong on all counts, Miss Fraser. Although Baulieu, with typical hyperbole, has boasted that the pill will soon be available over the counter in drugstores for home dosing, it is being administered in France only under strict hospital-like supervision in the presence of a doctor. (Roussel reportedly has every pill marked and accounted for to make sure none slips into the black market.)

Thus, a woman who used RU-486 to have an abortion would have to make three trips to the clinic past those picket lines: an initial visit for medical screening (anemics and those with previous pregnancy problems are eliminated) and to take the pill, a second trip forty-eight hours later for the prostaglandin, administered either via injection or vaginal suppository, and a third trip a week later to make sure she has completely aborted. Furthermore, because timing is so critical with RU-486, she will learn, via a pelvic examination (feet in stirrups) and ultrasound, not only that she is pregnant, but just how pregnant she is. No doctor fears malpractice liability would likely expose a non-pregnant patient to the risk of hemorrhaging. Many women may even see the dead fetus they have expelled, a sight the surgical-abortion industry typically spares them. At seven weeks, a fetus is about three-fourths of an inch long and recognizably human.

Some members of the health profession have expressed reservations about the abortion pill, most notably Sue Halpern, a researcher at the Columbia University College of Physicians and Surgeons, in an April 1987 article in Ms. Magazine. But anyone outside scholarly circles who dares dissent from the RU-486 brouhaha can expect perfunctory dismissal as a right-to-life hysteric.

Much of NOW/FFM literature repeats claims for RU-486 that the medical profession has already dropped. For example, one press release still calls it a "menses inducer." Another NOW assertion is that "chemical abortion entails even less risk than a vacuum aspiration abortion," the suction procedure that is the most common form of surgical abortion in the United States. How's that again? Pro-choice advocates have always insisted that surgical abortion itself is virtually risk-free, even safer than childbirth, and it certainly takes less time than the pill, and without the side effects. Is surgical abortion actually riskier than anyone has let on?

It turns out that NOW is comparing apples and oranges: the risks of legal, rigidly supervised administration of RU-486 in the West to the risks of illegal, putatively unsupervised surgical abortions in Third World countries where sanitation standards are not high. But what if RU-486 started to circulate illegally—or even legally—in those Third World countries, where there are not enough doctors to supervise every dose and patients may not be sophisticated enough to return for the crucial follow-up visits? "The woman does need to have access to a health clinic," admits Bass of the Reproductive Health Technologies Project.

The heavy NOW/FFM drum-beating for RU-486 has created a double bind for the 10,000-member National Women's Health Network, which does not want to be seen as anti-abortion or aligned with the right-to-lifers but has serious qualms about introducing reproductive products onto the market without adequate testing. Just by way of contrast to RU-486, another Population Council product, the new Norplant contraceptive—a set of hormone-releasing capsules to be injected into a woman's arm and designed to last five years—has been in the works for twenty years and still does not have final FDA approval. "Women know the contraceptive revolution has been influenced more by the pursuit of population control and profit than by the need for safe birth control," wrote Sybil Shainwald, a past president of the Network, in a recent issue of USA Today. The Network is taking a schizophrenic line on the abortion pill. "It's a complicated issue," says executive director Victoria Leonard. "Certainly the Network would think it appropriate that there's more extensive testing and that it be followed closely to watch for abuses in medically under-served communities."

The search for "better" contraceptives and "better" abortifacients is at bottom an effort to neutralize via technology the blind, brute hand of Mother Nature, who drives male and female inexorably together to couple and to reproduce the species. It is the force that through the green fuse drives the flower: trying to stop the process is like trying to stop a tulip bulb from sprouting. Stopping the reproductive process (or "controlling fertility," to borrow the phrase du jour of the women's movement) is unimaginably hard, yet we want to believe that science will someday, somehow make it easy, like waving a fairy godmother's wand. The egg and sperm will never meet: the pregnant woman will magically become un-pregnant by swallowing a pill.

All chemical methods of fertility control are designed to interfere in some fashion with the complex hormonal process of the female reproductive system, producing the estrogen that releases the egg for fertilization and the progesterone that stimulates the building of the uterine lining and the nourishment of the fetus for its first eight weeks. The early birth control pills were heavy serial mixes of synthetic estrogen and progesterone designed to mimic pregnancy, fooling the pituitary gland into stopping egg production. The newer generation of pills contain little synthetic estrogen and low levels of progestin, blocking implantation but not ovulation. IUDs are also likely implantation-blockers (although there is some evidence they simply "dissuade" the sperm from swimming up the fallopian tube to meet the egg), and the newer IUDs release progestin as well.

The early histories of the two biggest fertility-control disasters, the first-generation birth control pills and the Dalkon Shield, bear a striking resemblance to the story so far of RU-486. Indeed, someone who wishes to predict a possible scenario for the abortion pill might do well to read such books as Paul Vaughan's The Pill on Trial, Morton Mintz's At Any Cost: Corporate Greed, Women and the Dalkon Shield, and Nightmare: Women and the Dalkon Shield by Susan Perry and Jim Dawson. As with RU-486, the Population Council was a major player, heavily promoting both the birth control pill (Planned parenthood funded the research) and the IUD. It convened the First International Conference on Intrauterine Contraception in 1962.

The intense promotion of the Pill and IUD by the population-control industry came in the face of overwhelming evidence of unpleasant side effects for both. All tests of the Pill uncovered a laundry list of them: weight gains, depression, anemia, thrombosis, jaundice, nausea, skin disorders, and migraine headaches were only a few. Experimental IUDs tested from the 1920s to the '50s engendered persistent reports of pain, bleeding, infection, and sterility (all had silk tails that tended to "wick" bacteria into the womb, a failing of the multi-filamented Dalkon Shield tail).

Enthusiasts for both contraceptives poohpoohed the reported side effects as female hysteria. With the Pill, it was predicted that unpleasant symptoms would taper off as women's bodies got used to being prepetually synthetically pregnant. The FDA approved the first pill, Enovid, in 1960, after only about four years of testing, mostly on Puerto Rican slum women.

Under the law as it then existed, IUDs as medical "devices," not "drugs," did not require any testing before marketing. At the Population Council's IUD conference in 1962, the individual complaints of women played second fiddle to the general goal of defusing what was viewed as the incipient worldwide population explosion (it was the decade of Paul Ehrlich's book, The Population Bomb). "Perhaps the individual patient is expendable in the general scheme of things, particularly if the infection she acquires is sterilizing but not lethal," one expert declared. "You have to realize that the population movement has an ideological bend, and that, as far as science is concerned, it's not just concerned with finding out the truth," says Mintz, a former Washington Post health reporter. Poor women—Baltimore blacks who visited inventor Hugh Davis's clinic at Johns Hopkins University's medical school—were the Shields' test subjects.

Accompanying the release of both kinds of products was a Sexual Revolution-fueled euphoria that created intense public demand. Each kind of contraceptive seemed to hold itself out as the fairy godmother's touch that would painlessly sever the pesky link between sexual delight and procreation. Pill fever was the hallmark of my own college years during the 1960s. In my dormitory, girls ostentatiously flashed their plastic Pill packets and condescendingly touted its virtues to naives still using the diaphragm. Even girls who did not have boyfriends got Pill prescriptions. One friend of mine was a virgin for four of the seven straight years she was on the Pill. The IUD engendered a similar fad a few years later, although most women I knew had their IUDs removed after a short time because of the pain and heavy menstrual bleeding they seemed to cause. From 1960 through 1970, 20 million women took the Pill. By 1980, 60 million women worldwide had tried IUDs.

The first-generation Pills got pulled from the market amid a flood of lawsuits linking it with thrombo-embolisms; blood clots in the veins that are fatal if they reach the heart. A 1969 study by the FDA showed that women were 4.4 times as likely to have the embolisms if they used the Pill. Other studies linked the early oral contraceptives with cancer. About 13 million women currently use second-generation Pills, although smokers and women over thirty-five are not supposed to take them. At last report, those Pills, too, have been linked to breast cancer, but the FDA has decided no extra warnings are necessary.

About 4.5 million Dalkon Shields were distributed in eight countries during the 1970s, about 2.9 million of them in the United States, before thousands of women started reporting pregnancies and miscarriages, uterine wall perforations, and infection-induced sterility. As many as 90,000 wearers may have been injured. In 1976, Congress amended the Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act to require premarket testing of medical devices such as contraceptives. Currently there are only two IUDs in distribution, both manufactured by small, low-exposure companies and recommended for women in monogamous relationships whose risk for pelvic inflammatory disease is low.

What all of this bodes for RU-486 is uncertain. At the behest of pro-choice members of Congress, a four-year reauthorization bill for Title X federal family-planning assistance now contains a $10 million grant for "development, evaluation and bringing to the marketplace of new and improved contraceptive devices, drugs and methods." If this passes—a Senate version has already been cleared for a floor vote—it would put the federal government into the contraceptive marketing business for the first time. It also could put the government into the RU-486 business, which would please feminists dismayed at what they view as pusillanimity in the private-sector drug industry. On July 23, Congresswomen Patricia Schroeder and Olympia Snowe introduced a $77 million "birth-control research" bill that is drafted broadly enough to include abortifacient research.

We do not know whether RU-486 will be as disastrous as some of the earlier fertility control methods released to unblinking, uncritical cheers from educated people who should have known better. We will not know until a first generation of female guinea pigs—all of whom will be more than happy to volunteer for the job—has put the abortion pill through the clinical test of time.

One of the fascinating aspects of the RU-486 controversy, and also of the recent abortion-rights protests centered on the Supreme Court's recent ruling in Webster v. Reproductive Health Services Inc., is how the women's movement has lately turned into strictly an abortion movement. The much-touted April 9 march in Washington was originally supposed to consolidate support for a variety of issues that are considered to be of central importance to women, including parental leave, government funding for child care, equal pay for work of "comparable" worth so that single mothers can earn family wages, and forcing errant fathers to support their offspring. All these issues (perhaps paradoxically, revolving around women's role as mothers, not as trailblazers of sexual liberation) fell by the wayside as the march became focused on abortion alone. A similar abortion-rights march is scheduled for November 12.

The National Organization for Women is now almost entirely an abortion-rights organization: it's nonprofit litigation arm devotes itself to eliminating abortion restrictions and neutralizing abortion protesters. In late July, at the organization's annual convention in Cincinnati, NOW delegates voted to demand that the U.S. government test and distribute RU-486 and even to consider forming a new abortion-oriented political party. The ideological eggs of the feminists are going into one basket. In the long run, the women's rights advocates may discover they have been used simply to serve the goal of the population control enthusiasts—cutting the birth rate by any means possible. It is a goal in which, as that Population Council expert declared twenty-seven years ago, the scientific truth is subservient to ideology and the individual female patient is expendable.

BLACK LEADERS HONORED

HON. JOHN S. TANNER

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. TANNER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of my colleagues an event which is being held in my congressional district this Sunday, October 8, 1989. At 6 o'clock that evening, the First Baptist Church of Alamo will be holding a special program in tribute to black pioneer male leaders who have been outstanding in the leadership they have provided for the black community in Crockett County, TN.

The five men being honored on this occasion are Rev. J.J. Nance, Rev. John Mathis, Mr. E.D. Brown, Mr. Curtis Koonce and Mr. B.W. Simmons. These men are to be highly commended for their many years of service in the fields of religion and education. I extend to each of them my sincere congratulations upon this recognition.

THE DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR'S LATEST STUDY ON OFFSHORE OIL DRILLING IN THE FLORIDA KEYS IS A WASTE OF $213,000

HON. DANTE B. FASCELL

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my dismay at a $213,000 contract recently awarded by the Department of the Interior [DOI] to a Virginia consultant to study the impacts of oil and gas development on employment and service needs in the Florida Keys. According to DOI's Minerals Management Service [MMS], "it is important to * * * identify the recreation and tourism activities in those areas that may be affected by possible offshore oil and gas development." For the past 6 years, the State of Florida and the Federal Government have conducted numerous studies on the consequences and affects of oil and gas drilling in this area. We do not need another study on the impacts of oil drilling; we need a permanent ban on it in the waters adjacent to the Florida Keys and the Everglades National Park.

I must also question why the Department of the Interior commissioned this study when its Secretary is currently reviewing offshore drilling in this area in his role as chairman of the President's Task Force on Outer Continental Shelf Oil and Gas Development. This study, and earlier comments made by the Secretary of the Interior, lead me to believe that the President's task force is not, and never was, committed to determining the legitimate environmental consequences of oil drilling near the Florida Keys.

I would like to call to the attention of our colleagues an editorial in the September 23 edition of the Florida Keys Keynoter. As the House prepares to take up the oilspill liability and prevention legislation, I urge our colleagues to acquaint themselves with the concerns of our Nation's coastal communities.

[From the Florida Keys Keynoter, Sept. 23, 1989]

ABSURD STUDY

Journalists, as a rule, can't get enough information. The more facts are available, the better—usually.

But this time, the government's penchant for buying an information-gathering "study" seems to have gone too far.

The U.S. Department of the Interior has ordered a Virginia consulting firm to "study impacts of oil and gas development on tourism and recreation in the Florida Keys."

Cost of the study: $213,000. In federal terms, this may be a drop in the bucket. In real terms, it is an outrage.

Any one of the hundreds of Keys residents who have testified at the various oil-drilling hearings could happily tell the Interior the same thing:

The economy of the Florida Keys lives and dies on tourism. The sight of oil rigs on the horizon and water degradation from routine drilling operations would be very bad. A spill or accident of any kind would be fatal.

To have someone tell us this—again—is worth $213,000 from the hard-pressed federal treasury?

And in ordering the study, Interior officials even had the gall to order that impacts from a spill not even be considered!

Oh, but this study will address other things, the bureaucrats say. It will tell us about employment impacts and such.

Again, we offer some facts of life well known to all who are fortunate enough to live here. The cost of Florida Keys living is a bear. An influx of well-paid oil employees will place a crushing burden on a housing market that barely accommodates our essential service workers as it is.

In all likelihood, the consultants will hop down to Key West, put themselves up at a pricey resort for a couple of weeks, then subcontract somebody local to rewrite the Monroe County Statistical Abstract.

We would urge Interior to just buy a copy of the abstract and save us all some $212,985. Give it to the Coast Guard. Make a contribution to the war on drugs. Expand our marine sanctuaries. Give it to anybody who really needs it—not a well-heeled "consultant" from inside the Capital Beltway.

Nothing like the oil-drilling issue has ever elicited such an overwhelming consensus from the people of the Florida Keys.

Our environment is fragile and irreplaceable. To jeopardize this treasure for the sake of oil-company profits is an obscenity.

No Valdez in the Keys.

Study that.

IN SUPPORT OF THE RECONCILIATION BILL'S CHILD CARE PROPOSAL

HON. DALE E. KILDEE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend to my colleagues the statements of the many Members of Congress and concerned community leaders on the importance of the child care provisions within H.R. 3299, the Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989.

These statements exemplify the broad support that these child care provisions enjoy.

STATEMENT OF HON. STENY H. HOYER

The House will be voting tomorrow to protect the provisions of the reconciliation measure which will ensure that our Nation adopts a comprehensive child care policy.

The child care provisions in reconciliation, as opposed to the substitute amendments, offer parents a full range of choices in their day care providers while ensuring that quality day care is available to the broadest number of children. The reconciliation bill provides States and communities with the flexibility and the resources to build upon and improve existing child care services.

The substitute amendments provide little assistance for low-income parents and school-age latchkey children. These are the children who are the most vulnerable to drug abuse and whose parents have the least options. Furthermore, in effect, the substitutes narrow parental choice and provide parents no assurances that their children will be cared for in a safe environment. Furthermore, there is a desperate need to increase the supply of child care, yet the substitute's provisions are completely inadequate in that regard.

The question before the House tomorrow is clear. We can continue to ignore the needs of millions of American families or we can vote to ensure that comprehensive child care legislation is enacted.

STATEMENT OF MARIAN WRIGHT EDELMAN, PRESIDENT, CHILDREN'S DEFENSE FUND

Last week at the education summit, the governors committed themselves to making sure that all American children graduate from our public schools able to read, write, and think well.

This week, the House of Representatives has the responsibility of making sure that American children start school prepared to learn how to read, write, and think well.

Young children who are ill, undernourished, and undernurtured, do not enter the school house ready to learn. Our nation will not be able to improve our children's educational performance until we get serious about improving the environment in which young children develop. This includes the child care programs where they spend their days while their parents work.

The child care package that is included in the Reconciliation Bill, is vital to helping out states and our schools deliver on their commitment to better educate America's children. H.R. 3 will offer low-income families direct child care assistance to help them choose and pay for decent child care, and it will help assure parents at all income levels that their children are safe and well cared for.

This crucial package is threatened by a substitute proposal offered by Representative Stenholm. There are seven compelling reasons why one should vote against the Stenholm substitute:

1. Nationally, under Stenholm, 800,000 children and their working parents will lose urgently needed and safe child care. Southern states will lose $680.5 million child care dollars. Over 300,000 Southern children will be denied the child care assistance included in the House Reconciliation Provisions. Two hundred million dollars under Title XX is not the same as $1.750 billion in H.R. 3 for direct child care assistance.

2. Stenholm provides no minimal health and safety protection for children which polls show parents place at the top of their list of child care concerns. Under the Reconciliation Bill's provisions, states can use funds to meet state-developed minimal health and safety protections. At a time when national leaders are calling for performance goals in education, it would be a travesty to fail to provide decent care to help young children arrive at the school house door ready to learn.

3. Stenholm provides no new or additional help for Head Start. The substitute eliminates the child care assistance necessary to supplement the part-day Head Start program. The substitute merely—and unnecessarily—repeats the action taken by the House to reauthorize Head Start. The National Head Start Association opposes Stenholm.

4. Stenholm's tax provisions, unlike the Downey Reconciliation provisions, penalize working families that the House attempted to help in the Family Support Act. Many working families will either be denied AFDC completely or will have their partial AFDC counted as income for AFDC purposes. Many other working poor families that do not receive AFDC will be denied Medicaid benefits because their Medicaid eligibility is calculated using the AFDC rules for treatment of income.

5. The South has a higher proportion of mothers with children under 6 in the work force than any region and more of them are poor. Seventy-seven percent of southern voters believe there is a shortage of decent affordable child care. Three-fourths believe the federal government should help working parents get safe, affordable child care.

6. An overwhelming majority of parents in all regions support federal investment in quality child care and recognize that a tax credit alone is not enough to protect children whose parents work. A Stenholm tax credit alone that provides an additional $215 a year to a low-income working family with one school-age child and an additional $645 per year for a family with one child under six does not really give parents a real choice to stay at home. Edwards provides even less. The Reconciliation child care provisions respond to the dual crises of low-income working parents for both more income to meet rising housing and food costs and child care assistance which averages $2500–$3000 a year per child.

7. The Reconciliation child care provisions provide states and parents with a range of child care choices from religious institutions to family day care homes. States, not the federal government, set the priorities. The church-state provisions in the bill are the same as those contained in the Head Start program.

It is time for the House of Representatives, the entire Congress and the White House to remember that it is children and the American future that we are about. It is time to bring the American nation into the 20th century in the care and protection of its children and support of its working families. If we do not, we will not be ready to compete in the 21st century.

Statement of Representative Pat Schroeder

When I entered Congress in 1973, I had two little kids. It was not surprising that the fight for a comprehensive child care bill was the first legislative effort I joined.

Sixteen years have passed. My kids are on their own. And the Congress is finally on the verge of passing comprehensive child-care legislation.

In poll after poll, a majority of Americans agree that the Congress should do more to assure adequate child care for working parents.

It's time for the House to listen to the American people and give them a bill that addresses safe, affordable, quality childcare.

H.R. 3, the childcare proposal that Gus Hawkins, Chairman of the Education and Labor Committee, has crafted takes into account two important factors. First, a quality childcare initiative must attend to children's early developmental needs. Second, child-care worries cut across all income and socio-economic levels.

The goal of H.R. 3 is to create more options for moderate and lower income families by expanding some of the effective programs that already exist, such as Head Start, and encouraging the development of new slots and new programs.

The main threat to the passage of H.R. 3 is the substitute offered by Rep. Charles Stenholm of Texas. The Stenholm substitute fails to meet the child care needs of American families in three ways.

The Stenholm substitute caps and phases out the Dependent Care Tax Credit—a tax break offered to all families, regardless of income.

The Stenholm substitute fails to authorize new funds for Head Start.

The Stenholm substitute does not ensure the safety of children in child care programs.

One only has to look around to see that the number of families with both parents working is increasing. These families deserve a good child care bill. Let me alert all of my colleagues: They will be watching.

Statement of Hon. Christopher J. Dodd

Good morning. Every so often we in Congress have a chance to do something right for the families of this nation; something which fulfills both national goals and individual needs; something which is both a prudent expense today and a sound investment for tomorrow. Every so often we turn political rhetoric into bipartisan action. Tomorrow, the House of Representatives will have one of those rare opportunities—to pass meaningful child care legislation which will really make a difference in the lives of millions of low-income families. This could be the most important vote in decades for the children of this nation.

We are here today because we support the child care package included in the House Reconciliation bill and we urge the House to adopt it without weakening amendments. Like the Act for Better Child Care—or ABC bill—which we passed in the Senate last June, the House provisions deal comprehensively with the availability, affordability and quality of care for low-income families. Like the Senate bill, the House packag is designed to establish a floor of safety protection for all children regardless of where they live or how much their parents make.

Three months ago, the Senate voted overwhelmingly to reject pale alternatives which would simply throw poor families a few hundred dollars a year and let them fend for themselves. We chose comprehensive legislation which will improve the quality of care as we help parents pay the bills. I am confident that my colleagues in the House will make the same choice tomorrow.

Statement of Hon. Augustus F. Hawkins

Tomorrow is a crucial day for all proponents of meaningful and compassionate child care. Availability of safe, affordable and quality child care is an essential part of helping poor families become economically self-sufficient. Child care is a major workplace issue of the 1990's and is a key element of a comprehensive competitiveness strategy.

Today, three out of five mothers with children under the age of six work outside of the home. The number of preschool children requiring care will grow from 6 million to an estimated 14.6 million for 1995. By the year 2000, four out of five infants under one year of age will have mothers in the workforce.

I believe that the carefully crafted package incorporated into H.R. 3299 is a responsible approach which will help alleviate the critical shortage of quality child care. This measure builds on effective, existing programs like Head Start, early childhood education, and State initiatives that address pressing child care issues like affordability, accessibility and quality.

This bill has bipartisan support in the House and has been endorsed by more than 150 major organizations.

When H.R. 3299 comes to the Floor, attempts will be made to repalce this comprehensive approach with piecemeal alternatives that do not fully address the needs of parents and children. The Edwards Republican Substitute provides only tax credits, while H.R. 3299 expands tax credits and provides grants to States for child care.

The Stenholm substitute is also deficient because it lacks an education or early childhood development focus as well as any quality assurances. Nor does it target funds to increase the supply of child care.

I am optimistic that the grassroots support for H.R. 3299 will translate into a victory for working parents and their children by providing greater access to quality child care.

Statement of Hon. Dale E. Kildee

Today, Congressman Dale E. Kildee, sponsor of the Act for Better Child Care in the House of Representatives, urged support for the child care provisions in H.R. 3299, the House Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1989, because of their quality assurance protections. H.R. 3299 calls upon states to develop and implement program quality features designed to safeguard the health and safety of children in child care.

In an effort to preserve the comprehensiveness of the House legislation, Kildee is calling for the defeat of the Edwards and Stenholm substitute amendments which would eliminate H.R. 3299's quality assurance protections.

"The quality assurance provisions of H.R. 3299 represent a long-term investment in our nation's children, their futures, and our country's future. The federal government asks states to set speed limits and address other safety related factors in order to receive federal highway funds. We should ask no less for our children," Kildee said.

H.R. 3299 provides:

1. for the development of national model child care standards setting forth guidelines for states to improve the quality of child care;

2. that, within three years, states must develop and implement quality assurance protections relative to the health, safety and development of children in child care, if adequate safeguards are not already in place;

3. that federal funding may be used to improve state licensing and monitoring efforts, to assist service providers to meet local or state child care requirements, and to assist states in improving their quality assurance protections; and

4. that funding designed to improve the quality of child care may be used to assist family, group, and center-based programs.

Statement of Senator Edward M. Kennedy

We have come together this morning to offer our strong support for the child care proposal in the House reconciliation legislation. The Senate has already approved a comparable measure, the ABC bill. We urge the House to reject weakening alternatives and to accept the companion measure to ABC. It is our best hope for ensuring that American families have access to safe, affordable, child care.

Every day, over five thousand mothers turn down paid jobs because of the lack of adequate child care. Every day, more than two million children spend another day alone and unsupervised. Every day, more than three million children risk injury or even death in unsafe day care arrangements.

In my view, the Hawkins-ABC approach has three major advantages over the proposed alternatives. It includes voluntary national standards for health and safety in child care, and it offers incentives to States to see that these standards are met. To do less is to abdicate our responsibility.

It makes early childhood education more widely available. To do less is to ignore the overriding lesson of the education summit in Charlottesville—that such assistance is one of our most important national goals in education.

Finally, the Hawkins proposal provides needed funds to help families pay for quality child care. To do less is to pay lip service to the importance of child care, while denying the tangible help that families need.

I commend Chairman Hawkins for his initiative. The Senate has already enacted strong legislation responsive to the need, and I urge the House of Representatives to do no less.

STATEMENT OF SENATOR ORRIN HATCH

It may seem odd that I am here this morning with so many distinguished Democrats to voice my concern for child care. But this is one issue on which there is no disagreement that the time has come for federal leadership in this area.

On June 23, 1989, the United Staes Senate passed landmark legislation that authorized a comprehensive program of grants and tax credits to help families and communities address the three significant issues in child care: availability, affordability, and quality. This legislation was passed with solid bipartisan support—support that was made possible by the labor of many people, particularly Senators Dodd, Kennedy, and Mikulski. We worked long and hard to fashion a bill that would provide much needed financial help to parents as well as to states and communities for child care programs. We wanted a bill that would provide parents quality assurances but that also recognized the need for local flexibility and parental choice. S. 5 accomplishes these goals.

I am proud to have played a role in the Senate's passage of S. 5, the "Act for Better Child Care" and urge my colleagues in the House of Representatives to support it too. We can be one step closer to safeguarding the children whose parents must work outside the home. We can unlock choices and options for untold numbers of low-income families.

We should not let another session of Congress go by without action on the "Act for Better Child Care."

PEDIATRICIANS URGE PASSAGE OF CHILD CARE LEGISLATION INCLUDING HEALTH AND SAFETY PROVISIONS

WASHINGTON, D.C.—The American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) today urged Congress to pass legislation that will increase the availability and improve the quality of child care in the United States.

"Parents need and children deserve the quality assurance provided by the Early Childhood Education and Development Act (H.R. 3)," AAP president Donald Schiff, M.D. said today. "To spend federal dollars on services for children without addressing the concerns parents have for safety and security is irresponsible and negligent."

The U.S. House of Representatives is scheduled to begin debate on H.R. 3 on Wednesday, October 4th, as part of deliberations on the House budget reconciliation act. A similar child care bill passed the Senate on June 23.

H.R. 3 would provide resources to states to set minimum standards for group size, child-staff ratio, qualifications and training of child care personnel, health, safety and nutrition requirements, and parental involvement. Low interest loans would be available for facility improvement and renovation.

Dr. Schiff noted that a recent AAP/American Public Health Association survey of child care facilities nationwide shows that critical health and safety regulations in many states are inadequate, vague or nonexistent—underlining the need for quality assurances in federal child care legislation.

"We need this child care bill because it enhances parental choice by expanding the supply of safe, affordable child care, while maintaining broad flexibility for states," said Dr. Schiff.

"An opportunity lies before us to take a major step forward in achieving improvements in child care across the country. To do anything less would rob children of their basic right to safety and security," he said.

The American Academy of Pediatrics is an organization of 37,000 pediatricians dedicated to the health, safety and well-being of infants, children, adolescents and young adults.

STATEMENT BY GERALD W. MCENTEE, PRESIDENT OF THE AMERICAN FEDERATION OF STATE, COUNTY AND MUNICIPAL EMPLOYEES, AFL-CIO

WASHINGTON, D.C.—The House of Representatives will be voting later this week on the first major child care initiative since President Nixon vetoed the Comprehensive Child Development Act of 1971. America has changed radically since those days when most mothers stayed home with their children while fathers worked outside the home. In the decade that begins this January, two-thirds of women with preschool children will be working.

We as a nation are totally unprepared to deal with the child care needs of those families. And the American public knows that. A recently released Lou Harris poll has documented a dramatic increase in the number of parents concerned about child care just in the last nine months. Over seven in every ten families want federal action on child care this year.

But it will do those families little good if the House of Representatives votes to replace the child care provisions in the reconciliation bill with either of the substitutes that will be offered by Congressman Stenholm or the House Republicans.

These substitutes strike through the heart of the child care legislation approved by both the Education and Labor Committee and the Ways and Means Committee. They undermine or jettison key aspects of the legislation that would address the strongest concerns of American families.

The Harris poll found a 23 percent jump since January in family dissatisfaction with the cost of child care. Yet, the substitutes will mean less direct child care assistance, especially for infants, toddlers and school-age children. Low income families would stand to lose the most. The Earned Income Tax Credit is not real alternative to direct federal assistance for these families. If they can't make ends met anyway, they may have no choice but to use the added income for food or rent. The solution to their problems with child care costs is not a little extra money. It is direct federal assistance to help pay their child care bills.

No matter how much money you have, it's still hard to find good stable child care, and the Harris poll indicates that. Dissatisfaction with the availability of child care grew 15 percent in the last eight months. Even so, the substitutes strike provisions in the legislation that would require resource and referral systems to help parents find child care. They also eliminate training, licensing and enforcement procedures that will improve quality.

Dissatisfaction with quality has grown 13 percent since the beginning of the year. It's not hard to understand why if you take a look at state policies that are now in effect in the absence of any federal direction. Today, 24 states have no requirements for group size for infants. You can have—and probably do have—as many as eight children under one year of age with one adult. How in the world can those children get any decent attention to their developmental needs? How could they be rescued if a fire broke out? Eleven states have no requirement for health or First Aid training and 19 states still do not require infants in child centers or family day care to have immunizations—the most basic of health standards. Thirty states fail to guarantee unlimited parental access to their children. Can you imagine not having the right to drop in unannounced to see you own child?

Yet both substitutes would strike the requirements in the legislation that would at least begin the process of improving quality. Those provisions are modest at best. We at AFSCME would have preferred strong federal standards. This legislation only requires that all states develop standards in the areas of group size, health and safety, parental involvement, and staff qualifications. They could have the most minimal of standards and still meet their legal obligations under this legislation.

A 15-hour annual training requirement is one of the few standards in the legislation, and it is generating considerable opposition. We represent child care workers, and they tell us all the time about the need for good in-service training to help them do their jobs better. The quality of child care is directly related to the knowledge and skills of the people providing the care. Ongoing training in such matters as hygiene, First Aid and early childhood development makes a critical contribution to the quality of child care.

Our children deserve good quality child care. Without it they will languish in custodial care without the stimulation they need to reach their full potential. Our country needs competent citizens and skilled workers. Parents need the assurance that their children are safe and happy in their absence. The reconciliation bill will help us meet these objectives; the Stenholm and Edwards substitutes will not.

Three years ago the idea of the federal government making a major commitment of its resources and authority to help build a decent child care system for American workers and their children was just a dream in the minds of a few people. The fact that we have moved so far in such a short time reflects the public's strong support for comprehensive child care legislation. We call on the House of Representatives not to sidetrack this important step forward for American families by approving either in the Stenholm or Republican substitute.

WHAT'S GOING ON IN THE SOVIET UNION

HON. LES ASPIN

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. ASPIN. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to give my colleagues a status report on an urgent task the House Armed Service Committee has set itself: To understand what's going on in the Soviet Union and what the implications are for the national security of the United States. Moscow and its allies in the Warsaw Pact pose by far the most serious military threat the United States faces in the world today. This fact has been a fixture on the security policy horizon for decades. It remains so today.

But Mikhail Gorbachev's policies of glasnost, perestroika, and democratization have added two new elements to the U.S.-U.S.S.R. security equation: Great uncertainty and a real chance to reduce the threat of war. For more than 1 year, the committee and its Defense Policy Panel have been engaged in a sustained, systematic, and unprecedented effort to examine first hand the historic changes underway in the Soviet Union. Our aims are to bring the best-informed judgment possible to consideration of the defense authorization bills we present to the House, and to share what we learn in the process with our House colleagues.

We began this effort with the premise that we should seek information from all sources. We have heavily engaged the executive branch, particularly the intelligence community. We have gone to the private think tanks for their Soviet expertise. And we have engaged the Soviets themselves. Why? Because for the first time in 70 years it makes sense to ask the Russians what they are doing. We have armed ourselves for these exchanges with a healthy skepticism, as I shall illustrate in a moment. But we've also found enough substance in the new openness on military matters to make these contacts worthwhile—well worthwhile, as I shall also illustrate.

The committee has taken the unprecedented step of hearing testimony from high-ranking Soviet officials. The reduction in Soviet armed forces announced by President Gorbachev is of obvious and great importance to us. We have twice taken testimony from the civilian who heads the commission reviewing that reduction, Andrey Kokoshin. Mr. Kokoshin also happens to be the deputy director of the Institute for the United States and Canada, a Moscow think-tank from which the West often first hears ideas that later become Kremlin policy.

We have also taken testimony from the individual who is perhaps the top military man in the Soviet Union, Marshal Sergey Akhromeyev. Formerly chief of the Soviet general staff, Marshal Akhromeyev is now a principal military adviser to Gorbachev. As I said at the time, the hearing room of the Armed Services Committee had received many a man in uniform, but never one like his.

There were those who said his testimony was a mistake, that it would merely offer a propaganda platform to the Soviets. When we asked about Soviet tank production—a matter of great concern to the West—some thought his answer supported this criticism. He said production would be 1,700 units for 1989—from all sources for all purposes. It was quickly pointed out that this was about half what Western intelligence agencies estimated. Since then, there have been indications that tank production is, indeed, dropping. Confirmation of that came recently from Defense Secretary Dick Cheney.

Does this mean that we can dismiss our intelligence agencies and simply invite Soviet witnesses to spill military secrets? Of course not. It means a couple of things. The first is that Moscow is finally coming around to the notion that the West has a legitimate interest in asking such questions. The second is that it can be in Moscow's interest to give us straight answers. This kind of public exchange is new to superpower relations and I'm proud the House Armed Services Committee has been able to assume a ground-breaking role.

Going beyond hearings in Washington, the committee in August completed a unique tour of military installations in the Soviet Union. Among the "firsts" were visits to an active East German military unit, to the chemical weapons detoxification plant at Chapayevsk, and to areas of the Baikonur Cosmodrome never seen by Westerners. We toured an active SS-11 missile launch control center and watched the firing of a high-energy chemical laser at a laboratory in a Moscow suburb.

Committee members who made this visit to Soviet military facilities will soon publish a report on what we saw and learned about the unilateral Soviet force reductions in Eastern Europe and the restructuring of Soviet military forces. I hardly need point out how important these issues are to the security of Europe, and the committee report treats them in detail. What I wish to do today is illustrate the process we employed to learn first hand everything we could and then to assess what we had learned.

First, we brought our experts with us to observe first hand along with committee members and staff. The executive branch was fully represented, and private sector authorities of international reputation were in our party. On the way to visit East German and Soviet units, we stopped to talk to our military commanders and intelligence officers in West Berlin. There we learned of their concerns about the restructuring that was going on and the conduct of the unilateral withdrawals. Armed with those concerns, we were able to question Soviet officers in the field, and generals in Moscow. When the answers remained confusing, we asked for and got a session with General V.N. Lobov, first deputy chief of the Soviet general staff and chief of staff of the combined forces of the Warsaw Pact. We didn't get every question answered, but we did get unprecedented access. And we did give the generals a taste of what it's like to be cross examined by civilian legislators—not an everyday experience for officers in the Soviet Union.

Our firsthand examination didn't deal only with high-level military policy. On a visit to a motorized rifle division we were given access to tanks, infantry fighting vehicles, artillery, and the training facilities of the division. It was on a training range that we received a nasty surprise about the way reactive armor is being used on T-72 tanks. We've known that the Soviets were bolting reactive armor onto its existing tanks like so many metal cigar boxes. Reactive armor isn't armor in the traditional sense, but rather an arrangement of steel plates and layers of explosives confined within a steel box.

It's aimed at defeating a whole class of antitank weapons that employ what's called a shaped charge. When this charge hits the tank, it doesn't simply explode. It is shaped so that its explosive power is formed into a narrow, focused jet that eats its way through the tank armor, creating blast effects inside and perhaps igniting stored ammunition.

When the jet from a shaped charge hits one of the reactive boxes, it detonates the explosive inside. That, in turn, sends the plate flying to interrupt the jet. And that usually means the jet won't penetrate the base armor of the tank. To combat reactive armor, the United States has gone to dual shaped charge warheads on its antitank weapons. The first charge sets off the reactive armor, gets it out of the way and a second, larger charge ignites fractions of a second later to penetrate the tank. For another wrinkle, the United States and other nations have developed shaped charge weapons that attack tanks from above, reasoning that frontal armor is the toughest to penetrate.

Pictures of tanks with a single layer of these boxes bolted over exposed surfaces have become commonplace in the West. What we saw, however, were tanks with not one, not two; but three layers of reactive boxes bolted to the top of their turrets. That can't be anything but bad news to forces planning to defend against these tanks with current antitank weapons. At the same time, our antitank weapons should retain high effectiveness against Soviet armored fighting vehicles whose numbers are being increased as tanks are withdrawn from Soviet forces in Eastern Europe.

Direct contacts with the Soviets have thus loomed large in our efforts to track what's going on in the Soviet Union. And the most important element has been our contact with the committee on defense and state security of the Supreme Soviet, the newly reconstituted legislature in Moscow. United States Government-Soviet experts judge that the unprecedented access we have to the Soviet military would not have been possible except through our counterpart committee. That's certainly a good enough reason for the contracts, but there are more, as well.

For one thing, legislature-to-legislature exchanges are appropriate. In our scheme of things, most dealings with foreign governments are strictly the province of the executive branch. We've made that clear to our Soviet counterparts. We want to inform ourselves, not conduct negotiations that belong to the White House and the State Department.

For another, there is the development of the Supreme Soviet itself. In decades past, it was a rubber stamp. Under Gorbachev, it may become something quite different—a more independent legislature. We have a ringside seat on its development. That's important for more reasons than idle curiosity. If power in the Soviet Union—to start wars, for instance—becomes diffuse, it can only help the cause of world peace. I can report to you first hand that there is much sentiment in the defense committee of the Supreme Soviet to prevent a handful of Kremlin leaders from launching another Afghanistan. It's not foolproof, of course. Real democracies with independent legislatures have launched inappropriate military adventures. But if the Supreme Soviet becomes an independent power center within the Soviet Government, it will be tougher for the Soviet Union to go back to the bad old days. And it will be tougher to keep policy debates secret. We'll resume our person-to-person contacts early next year when members of the Supreme Soviet defense committee visit the United States.

In the coming weeks, we will be factoring what we have learned into a new look at five critical areas in the U.S.-U.S.S.R. military balance. Those are the strategic and naval balances, and the balances in Europe, the Middle East and South Asia, and Northeast Asia. We hope this report will help provide a context in which to consider the administration's 1991 defense budget early next year.

These are extraordinary times. Events in the Soviet Union today may represent the triumph of Western values as some now proclaim. We can only hope that it is true. But the military forces of the Soviet Union—and therefore the threat they represent—remain formidable. We must find a way not only to seize an historic opportunity for better superpower relations, but find ways to reduce that threat as well.

INTRODUCTION OF VAN POOL LEGISLATION

HON. BARBARA B. KENNELLY

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation designed to promote the use of mass transit and van pools.

My bill would restore Federal tax incentives for employer-sponsored van pools and mass transit subsidies.

Prior to 1986, the Tax Code allowed employers to set up van pool programs for employees as a tax-free fringe benefit, as long as the program was available on a nondiscriminatory basis. That provsion has now expired.

Therefore, for an employer to continue the program, it must determine the fair market value of the transportation, deduct any payments made by the employee, and report the difference as imputed income to the employee on his or her W–2 form. Not surprisingly, many employers have elected not to continue these subsidies due to the paperwork.

Current law allows employer-provided discounts of up to $15 per month for mass transit costs tax free to the employee. In many communities, however, this is an insufficient amount to encourage employees to use mass transit. In Hartford, CT for instance, the average monthly cost is $86. Yet, under current rules, if the employer provides a larger discount, the entire amount is taxable to the employee.

My bill would reinstate the provision that allowed the value of qualified van pool benefits to be excluded from the income of employees. In addition, the bill would raise the limits on mass transit subsidies to $100 per month in order to promote greater utilization of this benefit in communities with higher transit costs.

I would urge my colleagues' support.

JACK J. COYLE

HON. GEORGE E. SANGMEISTER

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. SANGMEISTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Jack J. Coyle who has served as the executive director of the United Way of Will County for 12 years, and it gives me special pleasure to recognize him for his efforts and achievements in Will County. Jack will be honored at a reception on October 10, 1989, given by the volunteers for the United Way of Will County.

Jack began his distinguished career with the United Way of Will County in 1977 when he was hired as the executive director. He was responsible for campaign, budget, public relations, and planning. Through Jack's determination and strong leadership during his tenure, the United Way more than doubled the amount raised in previous campaigns and under his leadership, the United Way was able to greatly increase agency participation due to his "open door" policy.

Jack has long been associated with the United Way. He served as executive director of the United Way of Champaign County for 16½ years. His list of achievements there includes the development of a working relationship between the State department of mental health, the county mental health board, and the United Way. Jack also developed the White House Conference Committee on Aging and other projects directly benefiting senior citizens while with the Champaign County United Way.

Jack has also served as chairman of the Federal Emergency Food and Shelter Program in Joliet for 8 years and was instrumental in obtaining $1,408,048.01 for Joliet and Will County for food, utilities, and shelter.

While serving in World War II, Jack was decorated for his distinguished service and leadership. He was awarded the Distinguished Service Cross, the Purple Heart, and the British Distinguished Conduct Medal.

Mr. Speaker, Jack Coyle's service to his community has been lengthy and outstanding. He serves as a role model for all who know him. I am pleased to take this opportunity to honor and recognize this man of fine character whose public service and commitment to improving the lives of his fellow Americans is exemplary. I want to invite my colleagues to join me in extending our thanks and best wishes to Jack Coyle.

TRIBUTE TO THE NEDROW VOLUNTEER FIRE DEPARTMENT

HON. JAMES T. WALSH

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commend a local volunteer organization in my district, the Nedrow Volunteer Fire Department, for its community service in the area of health care. While it is common for firefighters in towns all across the United States to earn the respect and praise of their fellow citizens, I believe the Nedrow firefighters are unique in their approach. I want to brag a little bit today about the creative way these people are helping their neighbors.

For several years now, the members of the department have offered a drive-in blood-pressure-checking clinic, free of charge.

They also offer free tests for glaucoma and diabetes, but this blood pressure clinic is perhaps the most novel in its approach.

People simply drive their cars into a bay and a volunteer does the testing, sometimes without the passenger even getting out of the car. As you can imagine, this method of testing is particularly valuable for people who use walkers or wheelchairs. Because they have made the process so easy, the department has encouraged countless others to come in for a checkup when those people may have just as easily stayed home on the couch.

I am very proud of Coordinator Charles Petrie and all the members of the Nedrow Volunteer Fire Department who volunteer their time in this worthwhile endeavor. I look forward to being with these good and selfless people very soon when I drive in to have my own checkup.

The members of the Nedrow Volunteer Fire Department have shown themselves to be worthy of our greatest praise and admiration. We will never know how many lives they have saved, but we in central New York do know this is just one more reason to be thankful they are there.

THE REALITY IN CUBA

HON. ILEANA ROS-LEHTINEN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mrs. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, the Subcommittee on Western Hemisphere just completed its five-part series on United States relations with Cuba and unfortunately, the view of most of the panelists involved in the discussions is that the United States should renew full diplomatic relations with Cuba.

Last week's panelists included representatives from the liberal American Civil Liberties Union as well as the editor of the magazine "Conservative Digest." The other two panelists espoused opinions calling for closer ties with Fidel Castro. One businessman even made this incredible statement.

"It is a fact the President Fidel Castro is in power by popular demand. Anyone who would believe the Cuban people are either being held hostage or ruled by military power can only be considered misinformed. He is most certainly loved by the Cuban people with very few exceptions."

It is almost inconceivable that such an idiotic and baseless statement could be uttered in the hallowed Halls of Congress.

This statement, and others actually as ludicrous, were made during the hearing by a U.S. businessman who wants to sell lobsters to Fidel and believes that his civil rights are trampled upon if he is not granted this privilege.

This fellow traveler continued by asking:

"What terrible crimes have the Cuban people committed which make them so undesirable as not to have been able to initiate negotiations toward full diplomatic relations and normalization of trade?"

Apparently this greedy and selfish businessman does not understand the difference between the corrupt Government of Cuba and the honest people of Cuba who are under full control of the tyrant Fidel Castro.

The businessman finished his words before the Congress by saying:

"Cuba, being only 90 miles from our coast, is potentially a major market for a great range of American products and services."

All that this person sees when he sees Cuba is dollar signs. He does not see the suffering of the political prisoners long since held in jail even after their term of sentence has expired. He does not see the anguish of a mother whose 12-year-old daughter is forced to leave her home and work in the sugar mills.

He does not see the fear of a 16-year-old who is made to fulfill his service by working in Siberia. He does not see the empty churches and synagogues which people fear to attend because of the religious persecution they will have to endure. He does not see the meal ration coupons which force the homemaker into deciding how to stretch one pound of hamburger meat for a full month's use.

He does not see the long lines of people hoping to be able to buy some shoes for their children.

But far more important, this greedy businessman does not see or does not care to see that there is only one newspaper in Cuba, the state party controlled Communist Granma. He does not see that any opposition is quickly and effectively crushed and silenced. Or that no one is allowed to even circulate flyers espousing an opinion different from the party line.

It is too bad that this businessman and others like him only see dollar signs when they see Cuba. It is sad, that they so cavalierly dismiss the true suffering of the Cuban people under the dictatorship of Fidel Castro.

THE NUTRITIONAL INFORMATION LABELING ACT

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, before the August recess I reintroduced the Nutritional Information Labeling Act (H.R. 3084). It is a bill that I introduced last year to amend the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act to require that the label or labeling of a food state the specific common or usual name and the amount of each fat or oil contained in the food. It also requires the label to state the amount of saturated, polyunsaturated, and monounsaturated fats contained in the food, the amount of cholestrol contained in the food and the amount of sodium and potassium contained.

Today's consumers have become very health conscientious and deserve the information required to make informed decisions when purchasing products for future consumption. I know the consuming public wants nutritional labeling but the FDA has been slow in responding to the decade long call.

The benefits of health conscientious society is apparent in the marked decrease in the death from diseases of the cardiovascular system, like heart attacks, stroke, and high blood pressure. Most physicians attribute the decline to changes in health-related habits, such as elimination of smoking, increased exercise, and changes in diet. All of these things help reduce the risk factor that leads to cardiovascular disease.

Unfortunately, minorities suffer disproportionately from heart disease and could benefit greatly from increased nutritional information. Because so many of these individuals have limited access to health care, providing improved labeling information on food products could be a way to prevent development of cardiovascular disease within the minority community that leads to expensive treatment.

My bill is an attempt to insure that the American consumer is provided with the necessary information to purchase products that will not contribute to his poor health. I ask my colleagues to support me in this effort to have a healthier and more intelligent consumer.

A TOUCHING TRIBUTE TO THE MAN, AND TO AN ERA

HON. JIM KOLBE

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. KOLBE. Mr. Speaker, I am enclosing an article that describes the effort put forth by the State of Arizona to preserve a historical monument. The Tom Mix memorial, constructed in honor of the late cowboy star of the western film era, is characterized by a likeness of his favorite steed, Tony the Wonder Horse. Unfortunately, in recent years two statues have been stolen from this monument. The Panel County Historical Society has rallied behind preservation of this monument, and has commissioned its restoration. Inmates of the Arizona State Prison in Florence are fashioning a third statue of Tony. We can only hope that future visitors to the site will recognize the importance of this link to our frontier history and leave the new statue as they find it. The figure of the riderless horse, with head bowed, is a touching tribute to the man, and to an era.

[From the Arizona Daily Star]

WANDERING STEED—PINAL OFFICIALS HOPE TONY THE WONDER HORSE III STAYS PUT

(By Douglas Kreutz)

Coming soon to a lonely stretch of highway near you: Tony the Wonder Horse III.

"We're getting a new statue of Tony put up in the place where the other ones were stolen," Billy Earley, spokeswoman for the Pinal Country Historical Society, said last week.

"We're not going to give in to this stealing."

Last month, a statue of Tony, the favorite steed of movie cowboy Tom Mix, was stolen from the Mix memorial in a quiet desert area on U.S. 89 between Tucson and Florence.

That statue had been erected as a replacement for the original Tony the Wonder Horse likeness, which was taken in the spring of 1980 by thieves who apparently used a hacksaw to remove it from a stone pedestal.

The original statue, depicting a horse with its head lowered and its saddle empty, was put up by the Florence Chamber of Commerce in 1947 at the site where Mix was killed in a one-car accident Oct. 12, 1940. Mix, who was famous for performing his own stunts with Tony in a series of action-packed silent-screen westerns died of a broken neck after his yellow Cord roadster crashed in a dry wash.

The original Tony statue was never found.

And a spokesman for the Pinal County Sheriff's Department said this week that there are no leads so far in the theft of Tony II.

Earley said the historical society, which provided materials for the second Tony statue, has been working with the Arizona Department of Transportation to produce Tony III.

"Whether you liked it or not, Tom Mix was an idol for many, many people, and we want to keep that monument in place," Earley said. "We hope to have the new horse in place by next month.

"If I could find the person who took the other horse, I'd have a shredding party," she said. "It's just disgusting to do something like that."

Tom Teague, area maintenance superintendent for the Department of Transportation office in Globe, said the department is providing sheet metal for Tony III—and for a backup Tony as well.

"We had one piece of sheet metal and we bought another one so we could have another horse cut out while we're at it," Teague said. "That way we'll have a backup if it gets ripped off again."

Teague said inmates at the Arizona State Prison in Florence, who produced Tony II, will cut out the two new statues in a prison shop.

"Then we'll install it out there," he said. "It could be up within the next few weeks. As soon as we get the horse ready, we'll get in touch with Mrs. Earley and coordinate plans with her on putting it up."

Teague said the transportation department would foot the costs of the project, estimated at about $100 per horse.

Teague and Earley said they know of no way to protect Tony III and subsequent Tony the Wonder Horses from thieves.

"There's not really much we can do to secure it," Teague said. "There's a weak point where the statue is attached (to the monument)."

Said Earley: "How could we protect it? You can't have a guard out there all the time, can you? And you couldn't fence it. They'd just cut the fence.

"I can't think of a way in the world to keep it secure," she said. "I would just hope people would have the decency to leave it there."

THE FOURTH ANNUAL "CALIFORNIA RIDESHARE WEEK"

HON. NANCY PELOSI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, this week California is celebrating the fourth annual California Rideshare Week to recognize the serious problem of automobile congestion and to highlight commute alternatives.

My district of San Francisco has recently been honored by the California Transit League, which called the city "the home of the best transit system in California." In San Francisco, we have seen what explosive population growth does to transportation infrastructure and we understand the need for transit and transportation planning.

This is an opportunity to discuss, at the Federal level, our commitment to transportation planning. At the Federal level, we must support funding for mass transit. The Federal Government played a major role in roadbuilding in this country; we built an excellent Interstate Highway System. It is now time to turn our attention and energy toward building an intercity transit system which will alleviate the gridlock which is choking urban areas.

We must also insist that people who receive tax-free employer-provided parking are not denied the same tax benefit for employer-provided transit benefits. This is essential if we are to encourage people to leave their cars at home.

And we must acknowledge that, at the bottom line, transportation planning has become an environmental issue. If we are to be successful in our battles to save our coasts and clean our air, we must look for alternatives to the fuel-intensive and smog-producing automobile.

I commend the California rideshare organizations which have coordinated California Rideshare Week and I hope their efforts will add renewed vigor to local, State and Federal officials who are working to address the important issue of transportation planning. It is an issue of great urgency to all cities in the United States.

PROTECT REV. LASZLO TOKES AND OTHER ROMANIAN HUMAN RIGHTS ADVOCATES

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, the Congress and the administration have denounced the oppressive policies of Romania's ruthless dictator, Nicolae Ceausescu. His economic policies have demanded exportation of most of the nation's food products, causing widespread starvation and poverty among Romanian citizens. His rural "systemization" policy has displaced thousands of people, destroyed historic architecture, and threatened local customs and traditions. He has intimidated and persecuted religious and ethnic minorities.

I would like to call the attention of my colleagues to an ethnic Hungarian living in Romania who constantly faces the threat of death for speaking out against the Romanian regime. Laszlo Tokes is a minister of the Hungarian Reformed Church in Temesvar—Timisoara—Romania. The danger he is in cannot be exaggerated. Two weeks ago one his parishioners was murdered for being associated with him.

For years, Reverend Tokes has raised his voice in defense of human rights in Romania, protesting the Romanian regime's brutal campaign to destroy the culture and institutions—including the churches—of some 2 million ethnic Hungarians in Romania.

Romanian authorities have reacted to the minister's protests with characteristic brutality. They have repeatedly tried to drive him from his parish and forcibly relocate him, but he has refused to abandon his congregation. They have arrested, searched, and interrogated him, disconnected his telephone, prohibited anyone from contacting him, and created an atmosphere of terror in his parish. Tokes remains under close surveillance today.

The official campaign of terror has extended to Tokes' parishioners, who suffer telephone threats and constant harassment, and now one of them has been killed as an act of violence threatening and intimidating the congregation. On September 16, 1989, Erno Ujvarossy, who had been active in defending Tokes, was found murdered in Transylvania's Vadasz forest. This murder has not been acknowledged in Romanian newspapers. Mr. Ujvarossy's family and members of this Hungarian parish know that their fears have been justified. They recognize that the Romanian authorities will stop at nothing to terrorize dissidents like Reverend Tokes. Nevertheless, Tokes continues to stand up for his people, even in the face of death.

As cochairman of the Congressional Human Rights Caucus, I urge my colleagues in Congress to join me in denouncing the policies of Nicolae Ceausescu and calling for an end to the harassment of Laszlo Tokes, parishioners of the Hungarian Reformed Church, and members of other religious and ethnic minority institutions in Romania. We must support Reverend Tokes and others like him, who seek "to tear down the wall of silence and terror in Romania that is more solid than the Berlin Wall." The vicious practices of the Romanian regime—murdering it citizens, like Erno Ujvarossy, and continually harassing and intimidating its citizens—must cease. These are crimes that must be recognized and denounced by all the civilized world.

I call on my colleagues in Congress to add their voices in condemning Ceausescu for his flagrant human rights violations and to actively and effectively speak out for the human rights of the suffering peoples of Romania. I applaud my distinguished colleagues, Congressman CHRIS SMITH, author of H.R. 2765 which imposes limited sanctions targeted at Romanian food exports, and Congressman FRANK WOLF, who chairing the recent Congressional Human Rights Caucus briefing on Romania and for helping to disseminate information on this issue which demands our urgent concern.

SUPPORT NURSE AIDE/NURSING HOME REFORM LANGUAGE IN RECONCILIATION BILL

HON. GEORGE W. GEKAS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of at least one section of H.R. 3299, the Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989: the provisions of section 4271, amendments relating to nursing home reform. While other provisions of this reconciliation bill have been the focus of great controversy and rhetorical flourishes, the nursing home reform amendments of section 4271 have been quietly, but happily, accepted.

Let me pass on some background to those in the House who may not be aware of the importance of section 4271. The passage of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987 [OBRA '87] created a problem by stipulating that all nurse aides used by nursing facilities participating in Medicaid and hired prior to July 1, 1989, would be required to pass a State-approved training and certification exam in order to retain their positions. An aide who failed the test on the first try would be allowed to take the test again but failure to pass the test by a January 1, 1990, deadline could result in loss of the job. A delay in the publication of regulations by HCFA in response to OBRA '87 resulted in a delay in the development by the States of training and evaluation programs. Delay upon delay caused confusion and uncertainty within the nurse aide field. Some States issued regulations requiring nurse aides to take difficult written tests at faraway locations and to pay for the costs of the training and tests. In some cases the exact training manuals and procedures had not been chosen, leaving nurse aides to have to decide for themselves what to study for the tests. Nurse aides who have been practicing their gentle art for years upon years felt that they would suffer under a written test requirement and would undoubtedly have to leave the field. New hires expressed the same concerns. The nurse aide profession was in a tailspin of concern and confusion, wondering if there would be enough of its members left to handle the needs of our nursing homes.

Hundreds of nurse aides and others in the nursing home field contacted me with a variety of concerns associated with the effects of OBRA '87 and the HCFA/State regulations thereto. Many expressed a desire to see no training or testing of nurse aides; many felt that training and testing of aides was desired but the method of training and testing had to be revised and improved; and others had no problem with training but were opposed to written tests, especially for those who had been working in their profession for many years. In response to their concerns I introduced three measures, H.R. 2302, H.R. 2303, and H.R. 2687, which respectively repealed, grandfathered, and delayed the OBRA '87 requirements. In addition, my office was in constant contact with HCFA and the office of the Committee on Energy and Commerce's Subcommittee on Health and the Environment, chaired by Mr. WAXMAN of California, in an effort to advance a change in the language of the OBRA '87. Along with the efforts of myself, Mr. WALGREN of Pennsylvania, and others, Mr. WAXMAN and his subcommittee presented to the House language in the reconciliation bill which meets many, if not all, of the concerns expressed.

In summary, H.R. 3299 provides for a delay from January 1, 1990, until October 1, 1990, of the date by which nurse aides must complete a competency evaluation program; gives nurse aides a choice of demonstrating competence through means other than a written examination; prohibits the imposition of fees on nurse aides for textbooks, course material, and other costs related to training or competency evaluation; as well as other clarifications.

I commend the subcommittee and Chairman WAXMAN for their work in this area and urge my colleagues to approve this reform language which supports the nurse aide profession.

TAIWAN CELEBRATES 78TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. JOSEPH P. KENNEDY II

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to join my friends on the Hill in extending my best wishes and congratulations to the people of Taiwan on the occasion of their 78th anniversary—October 10, 1989.

Taiwan, small as it is, has much to be proud of. It has a booming economy and a bulging foreign reserve; it is a constitutional democracy; and most important of all, it is our friend and ally in the Pacific.

Taiwan's representative in Washington, Dr. Ding Mou-shih, is a seasoned diplomat with considerable charm, wit, and grace. I appreciate his firm grasp of issues and he has certainly done much to help me understand his country.

Good luck, President Lee Teng-hui. God bless you and your people.

IMMANUEL LUTHERAN CHURCH CELEBRATES ITS 125TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. HELEN DELICH BENTLEY

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Speaker, last week we celebrated Religious Freedom Week, a reminder to us all that we are fortunate recipients of that freedom. Much of our history is bound up with religious values and a heritage bequeathed to us by our immigrant forebearers. Their zeal and dedication in establishing congregations in their new homeland provide countless examples of personal sacrifice and personal triumphs over adversity.

Such an example is furnished by Immanuel Lutheran Church, which celebrates its 125th anniversary in this month of October. Immanuel Lutheran congregation was founded on October 3, 1864 by German-Americans, recent arrivals from Europe who were determined to preserve their strong Lutheran traditions for themselves and their children. Their reasons for leaving Germany were diverse; there were intellectuals disappointed by the failed revolutions of 1848, young people fearful of the ever-increasing powers of an oppressive police state, and middle-class shopkeepers anxious for economic prosperity. The first meetings of the congregation were held at Depford Hall located at Gough and Dallas Streets in East Baltimore. Eleven days after President Lincoln's assassination it was resolved to begin the construction of an impressive church edifice on Caroline Street near Baltimore Street. The cornerstone was laid in September 1865, and on May 6 of the following year the completed structure was dedicated with appropriate services. Among the speakers for the occasion was Prof. Charles Porterfield Krauth of Philadelphia, the foremost leader of conservative Lutheranism in America. In keeping with the founders' intense interest in Christian education, a day school was established shortly thereafter.

Assimilation into the larger community caused church members to question the continued use of German as the language of worship and gradually English services were introduced in the 1890's. The early 1900's, particularly the post-World War I years, saw members relocating to the suburbs, returning for worship services. School enrollment declined and the onslaught of the Great Depression multiplied the church's financial worries, but the congregation did not lose heart. In August 1934, lightning struck the church spire resulting in the partial destruction of the church building itself and its organ. Members accepted this disaster as a challenge and, in faith, the building was rebuilt and rededicated on April 7, 1935.

During the years of World War II, efforts were made to reach the families without a parish who were housed in Government projects, but membership declined, making pastoral efforts, however diligently made, more and more difficult. The congregation made a momentous decision at the close of the war to relocate, believing that missionary efforts might be more gratifying at a new site.

A cornerstone for a parish hall, which would serve as a place of worship until the church proper could be built, was laid on September 28, 1947 at the 2-acre plot on Loch Raven Boulevard and Belvedere Avenue. The church building itself was completed in 1951, expedited by a generous gift from Emma Wolpman Momberger, a lifelong member.

The imposing stone church structure, regarded as one of the finest examples of church architectural design in America, has not changed since that time. Yet within, the congregation worshiping there is no longer comprised solely of descendants of German-Americans. The membership has grown to reflect changes in the community Immanuel serves, but its mission remains the same—to minister to the needs of the people of its congregation as well as those of the community at large.

Great things have happened in the history of Immanuel Lutheran Church in the last 125 years, and great things have taken place in our Nation. Both have survived a bloody Civil War and two World Wars, both have struggled under the economic hardships of the Great Depression, both have witnessed societal changes and have adapted to those changes, and both have never lost the fervor and sense of commitment exhibited by those early immigrants.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate Immanuel Lutheran congregation on the occasion of its 125th anniversary, and admonish the members to continue to live in deeds, not in years. You have contributed immensely to the community you serve. Continue to labor in the knowledge that God will continue to use your strength and abilities to meet your responsibilities to that community, the Nation, and the world. More service is demanded of you, and I wish you continual prosperity and growth.

GEN. HARRY W. BROOKS HONORED FOR MINORITY BUSINESS ACHIEVEMENTS

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring an American success story to the attention of my colleagues in the House of Representatives. Maj. Gen. Harry W. Brooks, U.S. Army, retired, has been honored by the Minority Business Development Agency during this year's Minority Enterprise Development Week for outstanding achievements in the business world.

After 25 years of service in the U.S. Army, including the command of the 25th Infantry Division, General Brooks retired in 1976 and joined Amfac, Inc., a member of the Fortune 500.

His stellar service record in the military is matched only with his performance on the corporate battlefield. He rose through the ranks to become the executive vice president and chairman of Amfac, Inc.'s Horticulture Group.

General Brooks' achievements are admirable for any individual; however, his rise to the top is especially noteworthy: he was the only black executive vice president of a Fortune 500 company in the United States.

General Brooks, not one to rest on his laurels, left Amfac, Inc. in 1984 and took control of Gurney Seed and Nursery Corp., and formed Advanced Consumer Marketing Corp. [ACMC]. ACMC, under Brooks' leadership, has charted an upward path and acquired an IBM advanced product dealership at the highest discount level.

As chairman and chief executive officer of ACMC, he has seen it grow into the 25th largest black operated industrial supply company.

ACMC has turned a profit for 2 years running, doing so last year on $27 million in revenues.

Mr. Speaker, Minority Enterprise Development Week highlights the achievements of some of our Nation's most successful and innovative entrepreneurs. They are to be commended for their commitment to fulfilling the American dream for themselves, their children, and our Nation. I sincerely hope that General Brooks' achievement will serve as an example to all Americans.

WILLIAM V. CHAPPELL, JR., VETERANS' OUTPATIENT CLINIC

HON. EARL HUTTO

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, October 3, 1989

Mr. HUTTO. Mr. Speaker, I am very supportive of this legislation to name the veterans' outpatient clinic in Daytona Beach, FL, as the William V. Chappell, Jr., Veterans' Outpatient Clinic. As a member of the Florida delegation I am well aware of the hard work of Bill Chappell in establishing the veterans' outpatient clinic in Daytona Beach. I had the privilege of visting with Bill in his district on several occasions and each time a number of his constituents mentioned to me their deep appreciation for Congressman Chappell's work in getting this facility so that the veterans of that area could receive needed medical attention.

Bill Chappell, before his death on March 3 of this year, was a longtime statesman in our Sunshine State of Florida. His record of public service is among the most distinguished of our political leaders. Bill, who was a veteran of the Navy in which he was an aviator, was always in the forefront of fighting for veterans' benefits. He was active in this manner in both the Florida Legislature, in which he served as Speaker of the Florida House of Representatives, as well as in the U.S. Congress. Bill was a very active member of the Appropriations Committee and served as the chairman of the Subcommittee on Defense Appropriations. He was a true patriot who believed in and supported a strong defense for our Nation. Therefore, it is altogether fitting that this facility in Daytona Beach be named William V. Chappell, Jr., Veterans' Outpatient Clinic. I am pleased to be among the supporters of the legislation to accomplish this purpose.

TRIBUTE TO SYNTHIA SUZANNE COCKRELL

HON. RICHARD A. GEPHARDT

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate Ms. Synthia Cockrell, who is being recognized by the Department of Defense as an outstanding Federal employee with a disability for 1989 in an awards ceremony today. The strength of America is rooted in its workers, and Synthia's accomplishments are a heartening example of the vigor of the American spirit.

Synthia Suzanne Cockrell was born totally deaf, has no peripheral vision due to paralyzed eye muscles, and suffers from amblyopia, which means that she can only use one eye at a time.

Synthia worked throughout high school as a keypunch operator for Sample Brothers, and she was hired by the Defense Mapping Agency Aerospace Center in St. Louis, MO, shortly after her high school graduation. She has been promoted twice in the last 6 years, and she has received several outstanding performance ratings. These achievements are especially impressive considering the nature of her work; without peripheral vision and only the use of one eye at a time, she must constantly move her head to scan documents and to check appropriate key-ins. Synthia has exhibited superior performance, and she is still improving.

Synthia's determination has proven her to be an employee who is reliable, conscientious and courageous. Because of this, she has been an inspiration to her fellow employees. Synthia has shown unusual fortitude and she has never shunned responsibility, always keeping a healthy outlook and accepting any challenges that may come her way.

It is an honor to recognize and pay tribute to Synthia Cockrell, who clearly personifies the contributions and abilities of the physically challenged in today's society, and I feel certain that I speak for the entire House of Representatives when I wish Synthia all the best.

IN HONOR OF GEORGE HAGOPIAN, CHAMPION OF VETERANS

HON. DAN ROSTENKOWSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise to address the House on a matter of great sadness for me—the passing of the Honorable George Hagopian, alderman of the city of Chicago and champion of the veteran, at age 68, on September 1, 1989.

George Hagopian was a man of the highest principles and the deepest commitment. He was also one of the kindest men I have ever met.

I must have had hundreds of conversations and meetings with George. Yet, there is one incident which I will always think of first in remembering of him. One of my daughters was suffering a grave illness, and I was worried sick. George went out of his way to track me down. He offered the simple comfort of his spirituality and he asked what he could do for me.

The call had the most remarkable effect on me. It lifted me up when I needed it most. That one phone call captures what George Hagopian meant to me and I will never forget him.

As a dedicated elected official, George distinguished himself in many good causes on behalf of the people and businesses of his Northwest Side 30th Ward. However, George reserved his most passionate work for a constituency which stretched far beyond his ward lines—the veteran.

It can truly be said that George yielded to no one in the protection and promotion of the interests of those who served our country, and their families.

He proposed the Chicago City Council Committee on Veterans Affairs, fought for its creation, and served with distinction as its first chairman. A veteran himself, he threw himself into the championship of causes and positions backed by his wartime peers. Sometimes this embroiled him in raging controversies, such as the question of the use of the American flag in artistic and political expression. His devout patriotism was never more forcefully displayed, nor with greater effect.

George also had a deeply spiritual side. His study of the Bible and biblical history was contagious, resulting in a regular study group involving a number of aldermen and other local leaders. He was honored by his colleagues by being asked to deliver the invocation at city council meetings. George took that responsibility very seriously, and did it beautifully.

His devotion to things spiritual was matched by his pride in his ethnic heritage. Born of Armenian immigrants, George never forgot his roots. Nor would he let others forget the tragic events which fell upon his people at the turn of the century. His faithfulness to the task made him my chief adviser on that terrible event. I am sure that he also helped a great many others to guard against the horrors of genocide in any form. In that way, George was protecting the past and the future.

George's commitments to God and to the Armenian people found common ground in his generous involvement in St. Gregory the Illuminator Armenian Apostolic Church, at Normandy and Diversey in Chicago. In fact, he donated the very land on which it was built, although he was hardly a wealthy man. He kept all of his friends fully aware of the doings at the church, and many visited there with George.

In sum, Mr. Speaker, this was a fine man and I am proud to have called him my friend. He will be terribly missed by his family, his colleagues, his constituency, and his city. My sympathy and that of my entire family goes out to his children, his grandchildren, and all who loved him.

I thank my colleagues for this opportunity to put this tribute to Alderman George Hagopian into the permanent RECORD of the House. He deserved to be so remembered.

LONG BEACH TRANSIT HONORED FOR OUTSTANDING ACHIEVEMENT

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, the American Public Transit Association, the international organization representing nearly 1,000 rapid transit and motor bus systems, has honored Long Beach Transit with the award of the prestigious Public Transportation System Outstanding Achievement Award.

The award is given annually to the North American transit system that has demonstrated extraordinary achievement in efficiency and effectiveness in its size category.

I am very proud of the level of service provided by Long Beach Transit. During the last 3 years, ridership has increased by more than 700,000. At the same time, the cost per vehicle service has increased by less than half the rate of inflation.

My wife Lee and I offer our congratulations to all of the people who have helped produce this record of success for Long Beach Transit. I am now offering APTA's description of Long Beach Transit's award winning operation.

Long Beach Transit has established itself as one of the leading transit systems in California and the Nation. By concentrating on the development of standards and specific action plans to improve efficiency and effectiveness, LBT has maintained an outstanding record of limiting cost increases to well below the overall increase in the Consumer Price Index. It has reduced the number of peak-hour buses from 136 to 100 while at the same time increasing the number of passengers carried by more than 700,000. LBT has been particularly effective in reducing absenteeism and improving vehicle maintenance facilities and procedures, resulting in a 20-percent reduction in road calls over the past 2 years, and substantially more reliable service to the consumer. At the same time it has improved efficiency and effectiveness, LBT has developed within the organization a focus on innovation and maximizing the level of customer and community satisfaction with public transit services. For example, the organization responded to the challenge of privatization by successfully bidding to operate 27,000 hours of service at a cost reduction of more than 25 percent. As a result of such efforts, more than 95 percent of riders and nonriders rate LBT favorably, and ridership continues to grow substantially.

Larry Jackson, the president and general manager of Long Beach Transit, has served as President of APTA. In that role, he successfully led the battle to retain Federal operating funds for transit. LBT has also been an active participant in the Transit 2000 Taskforce and APTA Marketing Committee.

HONORING VA MEDICAL DISTRICT DIRECTOR MALCOM RANDALL

HON. CLIFF STEARNS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, thank you for this opportunity to say a few words about Mr. Malcom Randall, a good friend and constituent of mine from Gainesville, FL. Mr. Randall is the Medical District Director for Medical District 12, which includes Florida and southern Georgia. He has held that important position since 1973, after serving for 7 years as the Director of the Veterans' Administration Medical Center in Gainesville, a position he still holds.

Mr. Randall was honored in 1983 by President Ronald Reagan, who presented him with the Presidential Rank Award for distinguished senior Federal executives. The Veterans' Administration has also given him their most prestigious award, the Meritorious Service Award.

He has been a member and served on the boards of numerous State and Federal organizations, including the American Health Planning Association, the North Central Florida Health Systems Agency, the Council of Teaching Hospitals of the Association of American Medical Colleges, and the Governor's Committee on Alzheimer's Disease. He was also named Gainesville citizen of the year by the Civitan Club and Outstanding Director in the VA hospital system.

Malcom Randall has an impressive biography, with accomplishments that he can be very proud of. But I'd like to take a moment to talk about more than his résumé. I'd like to address his dedication to public service, a dedication which has spanned 50 years. He has unwaveringly supported the cause of veterans, and has actively and aggressively championed their causes in the State of Florida and at the national level. He has fought to get funding for the facilities that are so badly needed in our State, because he knows and sees firsthand the dire necessity for more and better service for our Nation's veterans.

I truly admire Malcom Randall's perseverance and effort throughout the last 50 years. I look forward to working with him in the future and hope that my service to veterans is as long and heartfelt as his has been.

BIRTHDAY OF J. HOWARD CARTER

HON. BILL GREEN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I want to share with my colleagues news concerning a special constituent, Mr. J. Howard Carter of New York City. On October 13, 1989, Mr. Carter will celebrate his 85th birthday in the company of more than 100 of his family and friends at a birthday party at the Spring Lake Golf Club in Spring Lake, NJ.

As one of the founding partners of the law firm of Townley and Updike, Mr. Carter has had a long and illustrious career as an attorney in New York City. During his career, he represented a wide variety of clients, including the New York Daily News. In addition to his legal practice, Mr. Carter was also a professional baseball player. But, Mr. Carter's prowess in the sporting world has not been limited to baseball. He is a well-known golfer and is the former president of Wingfoot Country Club, Westchester, NY.

Please join me in extending congratulations and best wishes to Mr. Carter on the momentous occasion of his 85th birthday.

AN AMERICAN HERO

HON. JOE BARTON

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, at a time when many newspaper headlines reflect drugs and crime, I'd like to proudly recognize a fellow Texan who, in making headlines herself, is a hero. I am referring to Nancy Carroll who, as a "Tarrant County, Texas hero," is the kind of person our Nation still cultivates, one representing honesty and integrity.

Nancy Carroll is a resident of Fort Worth, TX, and is currently employed as a maid. While on duty at a local bank, Nancy discovered $100,000 and immediately turned the sum in to the authorities. As her story spread, she has been commended not only in Texas but all over the world—from Fort Worth's neighboring town of Cleburne where the city's high school proclaimed September 20 as Nancy Carroll Day, to Munich, Germany where one man wrote to Nancy claiming she should be acknowledged "for her demonstration of what a human being ultimately is."

Heroes do still exist. And in my book, they don't come any better than Nancy. She is a symbol of what I believe most citizens all over the world still strive to be—honest and hard working. These individuals who we read about—however seldom—give the rest of us inspiration. I thank Nancy for that.

COUNTRY MUSIC MONTH

HON. BOB CLEMENT

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. CLEMENT. Mr. Speaker, "From out the wide Pacific, to the broad Atlantic shore," Americans love country music. Country music legend Roy Acuff immortalized those words in a song written by A.P. Carter and copyrighted in 1933 by Peer International Corp.

I use those words to reflect the broad appeal country music has in our Nation. Today country music has also gained international appeal, spreading across our planet.

Today I join a majority of my colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives in officially proclaiming the month of October as "Country Music Month."

With the adoption of House Joint Resolution 401, designating October as "Country Music Month," the U.S. House of Representatives will be honoring an industry that has annual sales of $550 million.

According to a recent Harris survey, country music is the best liked music in America, with over 60 percent of adult Americans stating that country music is their favorite music.

Over 2,200 radio stations in America are fulltime country music stations, up 92 percent over a decade ago.

From the Soviet Union to Australia people love country music. People always know about my home city, Nashville, TN, because it is the home of country music. Since being elected to the U.S. House of Representatives, I have had the opportunity to visit many parts of the world.

More than once I've had foreign citizens ask me, "Do you really know Johnny Cash?"

This illustrates the unique "Americanism" of country music. It is a musical style that was born in the hills of Tennessee, Virginia, and the Carolinas. Country music draws its roots from religious hymns, traditional ballads, folk songs, and even the soulfulness of rhythm and blues, and embodies the spirit of America.

In fact, there is nothing more American than applie pie, our flag, and country music.

I am proud to represent "Music City U.S.A.," the home of country music. I am also proud to present House Joint Resolution 401 to declare October as "Country Music Month" on the floor of the U.S. House of Representatives.

I urge my colleagues to join me and the millions of country music fans across this Nation and throughout the world in recognizing this great American style of music on the 25th or silver anniversary of "Country Music Month."

THE 78TH ANNIVERSARY OF TAIWAN

HON. ROBIN TALLON

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. TALLON. Mr. Speaker, 78 years ago the heroic Chinese leader, Dr. Sun Yat-sen, created the first free democratic nation in Asia, the Republic of China. On Tuesday, October 10, the anniversary of that momentous event, the island nation of Taiwan will celebrate its 78th national day.

We here in Congress and around the free world should celebrate as well. We should acknowledge and recognize Taiwan's many contributions and successes. We should pledge America's support for Taiwan and especially for what Taiwan stands for: democracy and free enterprise. And we should express our warmest regards to Taiwan's President, His Excellency, Dr. Lee Teng-hui, and to his Washington envoy, Dr. Ding Mou-shih, a most eloquent spokesman for Taiwan, who has helped us understand Taiwan's efforts in reducing her trade surplus with us and in cooperating with us fully on matters of mutual interest and concern.

H.R. 1335, VETERANS' COMPENSATION AMENDMENTS OF 1989

HON. GERALD B.H. SOLOMON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the House of Representatives unanimously approved H.R. 1335, the Veterans' Compensation Amendments of 1989, to provide a full cost of living allowance [COLA] for veterans with service-connected disabilities and for the survivors of veterans who have died as the result of their military service. The Bush administration supports a full COLA. The 4.9 percent COLA is welcome news for these veterans and their survivors, who deserve this protection against inflation at least as much as any group of Federal beneficiaries I know of. Along with my colleagues on both sides of the aisle, and as the former ranking member of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, I was pleased to support H.R. 1335. As the senior ranking member of the House Rules Committee, I have continued to take an active interest in veterans affairs and have had the opportunity to help along legislation affecting veterans when it came before the Rules Committee.

Mr. MONTGOMERY, chairman of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, and Mr. STUMP, the ranking member, are providing outstanding leadership to the committee, and I commend them for advancing this essential bill promptly. Also, Mr. APPLEGATE, chairman of the Subcommittee on Compensation, Pension and Insurance, and Mr. MCEWEN, the subcommittee's ranking member, started the ball rolling for the COLA, and I take my hat off to them too.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 1335, along with the COLA provision, contains provisions intended to encourage collocation of Department of Veterans Affairs regional offices with DVA medical centers, both for cost effectiveness and improved services to veterans. For reasons which are unclear, DVA has endorsed the concept of collocation, but is moving toward implementation at a glacial pace, having collocated facilities at only one place in the Nation. At Little Rock, AR, collocation is a great success, according to the ranking member of the Subcommittee on Hospitals and Health Care, Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT.

Mr. Speaker, the other body has not yet passed its veterans COLA bill, S. 13, and I urge it to follow suit to ensure that veterans receive a timely COLA on December 1, 1989.

REMEMBERING JUSTICE OF THE PEACE LINDON WILLIAMS

HON. JACK FIELDS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, October 3, 1989

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, a good friend of mine, Justice of the Peace Lindon Williams of Baytown, TX, died September 24, and I would like to take a moment to remember this man who worked so hard, in so many ways, to improve his community, his State, and his country.

Lindon Williams gave new meaning to the term "public service," and he gave politics a good name. Lindon was more than just a dedicated public official for 22 years; he was a man who cared deeply about his community, his State, and his Nation. And he was convinced that the best way to help others was to become involved in public service. But long days in the legislature, or on the bench, didn't prevent Lindon from working with community groups throughout east Harris Country to make that area a better place for all who live there.

Lindon served with distinction in the Texas House of Representatives from 1967 to 1975 and in the Texas Senate from 1975 to 1985. His interests were as diverse as his committee assignments: education, business and industry, natural resources, and intergovernmental affairs. In 1984, his colleagues elected him president pro tempore of the senate, which put him third in line to the Governor. Indeed, on December 8, 1984, Lindon was inaugurated as "Governor for a day" and was honored in ceremonies in Austin.

In 1985, upon the death of precinct 3, place 2, Justice of the Peace N.O. "Pookie" Morrison, Harris County commissioners appointed Williams to the vacancy. In 1986, Lindon won a full term as judge in the justice court of east Harris County without opposition.

Lindon's real passion, however, was helping America's veterans. A U.S. Army veteran of Korea, Lindon was appointed by Gov. Mark White to serve on the Texas Veterans Commission; eventually he served as secretary of the commission.

Later, Lindon was elected State commander of the American Legion. In that capacity, he and I had a number of opportunities to work together on behalf of the approximately 100,000 Texas members of the American Legion. Lindon was a life member of the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars and the Disabled American Veterans. Lindon served as chairman of the Texas Medal of Honor Committee, which established—and raised more than $50,000 for—the Texas Acre at Freedoms Foundation in Valley Forge, PA. Also, he served as a member of the Texas State Korean and Vietnam Veterans Memorial Committee.

But Lindon was a man of tireless energy who saw opportunities to serve others elsewhere, as well.

He was an active member of the Baytown Rotary Club; he served on the board of governors of the Shrine Crippled Children's Hospital; he was a member of the Baytown Shrine Club; he was raised as a master mason at Galena Park Post 1290; and he was a 33-degree Scottish Rite Mason and a member of the Scottish Rite and York Rite.

In addition, Lindon was active in many of the chambers of commerce in east Harris County, including the Highlands Chamber; the North Channel Area Chamber; the Northeast Houston Chamber; the Crosby-Huffman Chamber; the Baytown Chamber, which he served as director; and the Galena Park Chamber, of which he was a past president.

Lindon also was active in the Boy Scouts of America, a member of the Royal Order of Jesters, a member of the board of directors of Youth Reach and a member of the Channelview Eastern Star.

Mr. Speaker, Lindon Williams was an extraordinary man whom I very much respected as a public official and very much liked as a friend. Lindon is survived by his lovely wife, Evelyn, and two sons—Gerald and Lindon II, all of Baytown. He also is survived by his mother, Bessie Williams of Dayton; his twin sister, Lorene Williams Graves of Dayton; his sister, Ina Williams Clegg of Dayton; and his brother, J.B. Williams of Liberty.

To each of them, I want to extend my deepest and most heartfelt sympathies. Your husband, your father, your son, and your brother was one of those rare men who truly made a difference in the lives of others. Our community is much the better for his work in the legislature, on the bench, and as a neighbor. All of us will carry with us our own special memories of this wonderful man, and all of us will remember him with admiration and affection.

SENATE—Wednesday, October 4, 1989

(Legislative day of Monday, September 18, 1989)

The Senate met at 10:40 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the Honorable HARRY REID, a Senator from the State of Nevada.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind, and thy neighbor as thyself.—Luke 10:27.

Gracious God, merciful Father in Heaven. Testing Jesus, the lawyer, desiring to justify himself, asked, "And who is my neighbor?" Jesus responded with the familiar story of the good samaritan. His point: We are to be neighbors to any need, known or unknown.

With profound gratitude, loving God, we thank Thee for the massive outpouring of neighborliness from all over the Nation to those people in South Carolina who suffered such cosmic tragedy and loss from Hurricane Hugo. Grant, dear God, that this spontaneous expression of love may continue until healing and restoration is complete in all the devastated areas; and give to those who have suffered so much a special sense of Thy love and grace. In Jesus' name who is love incarnate. Amen.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore [Mr. BYRD].

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, October 4, 1989.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of Rule I, Section 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable HARRY REID, a Senator from the State of Nevada, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. REID thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia is recognized.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Journal of the proceedings be approved to date.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. President, since I seized the floor before your gavel, I do remind all Senators that we will adjourn now until noon; that we are adjourning to hear the address of the President of Mexico in a joint meeting of Congress to be held in the House of Representatives. We will return to the regular order of business at noon today.

JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO HOUSES—ADDRESS BY THE PRESIDENT OF MEXICO

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will now stand in recess until 12 noon, for the purpose of attending a joint meeting with the House of Representatives to hear the address by the President of Mexico.

At 10:43 a.m., the Senate recessed until 12 noon.

Thereupon, at 10:45 a.m., the Senate, preceded by the Secretary of the Senate, Walter J. Stewart; the Sergeant at Arms, Henry K. Giugni; and the President pro tempore of the Senate, ROBERT C. BYRD, proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives to hear the address by the President of Mexico, Carlos Salinas de Gortari.

(The address delivered by the President of Mexico to the joint meeting of the two Houses of Congress appears in the proceedings of the House of Representatives in today's RECORD.)

At 12 noon, on the expiration of the recess, the Senate, having returned to its Chamber, reassembled, and was called to order by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

FLAG PROTECTION ACT OF 1989

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate Calendar No. 258, H.R. 2978.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the bill by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 2978) to amend section 700 of title 18, United States Code, to protect the physical integrity of the flag.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. PELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PELL].

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to speak as if in morning business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senator from Rhode Island may speak out of order.

ATTEMPTED COUP IN PANAMA

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, all decent people are disappointed that the coup in Panama did not succeed and that General Noriega has yet to be ousted. I congratulate the President on the restraint with which he handled the situation.

It would have been easy for him to have responded to the calls for U.S. troops unilateral participation in violent actions to throw out Noriega. But if he had done that we would have reaped the bitter frustration of that exercise for many years to come as the hemisphere saw it as one more example of belligerence on the part of the United States.

To my mind the only time that U.S. troops should be used in Panama is either to protect the Canal in accord with the Panama Canal Treaty, or to defend American lives or to be part of multilateral forces that might be created by the OAS or the United Nations to restore democracy in Panama.

I yield the floor.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll, the absence of a quorum having been suggested.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, we are about to move to our discussion and debate, as has been ordered by the Senate some several months ago, on a statutory remedy to prevent the burning of the flag.

Under our previous unanimous-consent agreement, the Senate Judiciary Committee was instructed to hold hearings on both the statutory remedy and a constitutional remedy—constitutional amendment as a remedy—for dealing with preventing the burning and mutilation of the flag.

The Senate Judiciary Committee has followed the instructions of the Senate and has held extensive hearings, as, I might add, the House of Representatives has. We are now on, as previously ordered, the legislative remedy.

Well, upon the completion of the recess, whether or not there is a recess, we will then be voting on the constitutional amendment. So the only thing before us today, by previous order, I say to my colleagues, is the statutory remedy.

Mr. President, after consulting with the distinguished ranking member of the Judiciary Committee, I would like to ask unanimous consent that only two amendments be in order to this legislation and a technical amendment—the two amendments being the Biden amendment clarifying expediting review provisions, and the Dole amendment adding language to the bill "maintain on the floor and on the ground."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. THURMOND addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. THURMOND].

Mr. THURMOND. I have just been informed that the Republican leader does not wish to give any consent at this time. So if we can delay that.

Mr. BIDEN. No problem. I misunderstood. I apologize.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Delaware withdraw his request?

Mr. BIDEN. Yes. Maybe we should move right to the heart of the matter, Mr. President. I ask that we call up what is being held at the desk, the House bill, H.R. 2978, for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the pending business.

Mr. BIDEN. That is the pending business. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, we have come a long way in a relatively short time since the Supreme Court decision of Texas versus Johnson, and we can take heart that in the Halls of the Congress and across the Nation we proceeded rationally and democratically to consider how best to accomplish what most of us think we should accomplish, and that is protecting the American flag.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate suspend.

You may proceed.

Mr. BIDEN. Thank you.

Now, after more than 3 months of deliberation, and after an extensive series of hearings before the Judiciary Committee, and after a similar set of hearings in the House, and after listening to a broad spectrum of witnesses, we are ready to vote on legislation to protect the flag.

Mr. President, I stand more firmly than ever behind the legislation before us. It is simple, it is quick, it is constitutional, it is the constitutional means of legislatively protecting the flag.

As soon as the President signs this legislation, assuming the House and Senate were to pass it, it will be illegal to burn the flag, to trample upon the flag, to deal with the flag in a way that all of us, most of us, at least, hope will not be able to be done.

Mr. President, I have discussed at length—both on this floor and in the committee—the decision in Texas versus Johnson, the rationale for the legislation before us, and the reasons I believe the legislation before us is constitutional. But very briefly, let me recapitulate.

The fatal flaw in the law struck down in Texas versus Johnson was that it made the prosecution of Mr. Johnson turn on whether someone else was seriously offended. In other words, the State of Texas punished Gregory Johnson because of the content of the message that he conveyed.

The law punished only one point of view, a point of view defined through the eyes of the beholder, or put another way, as the case clearly points out, both in lower court case and Supreme Court case, if when Johnson burned the flag it could not be proved that the one witnessing it was offended, there would be no offense.

So the offense rested upon whether or not someone was offended. Therefore, it punished a point of view, the point of view held in the eyes of the beholder of the action. And that, the Court said, is unconstitutional. It made the Texas law what first amendment lawyers call "content based." That led to it being struck down.

Mr. President, the legislation before us eliminates that particular flaw. That was the basis for the Court's decision in Texas versus Johnson. It would change the Federal statute from one that punishes expression of a contemptuous idea to one that protects the physical integrity of the American flag in all circumstances.

Operation of this statute will not depend on whether the flag was used for communicative or noncommunicative purposes, or upon whether anyone might or might not be offended or opposed to what the person is doing. It is straightforward, and it is simple. It says that you cannot burn the flag under any circumstances. So, therefore, it does not go to the message being communicated, and, therefore, it does not go to the first amendment.

Mr. President, unlike the law struck down in Texas versus Johnson which is, as the lawyers say, content based, this legislation is content neutral. Unlike the law struck down in Texas versus Johnson, whether one's treatment of the flag violates the amended Federal law would not depend on the likely communicative impact of that conduct. Unlike the law struck down in Texas versus Johnson, the amended Federal law is, in fact, aimed at protecting the physical integrity of the flag in all circumstances, which is, I think, what we want, Mr. President. That is what we are about. Are we or are we not going to protect the flag, that unique American symbol?

Mr. President, the Judiciary Committee had 4 days of hearings on the statute, and it proposed a constitutional amendment. The hearings were extensive, covering nearly 20 hours of witness time, and the witnesses were enlightened and informative and extremely well respected.

It is undeniable, Mr. President, that we had compelling testimony in support of the constitutionality of this legislative approach that we are undertaking.

It came from constitutional scholars who are categorized as conservatives. It came from those who are categorized as moderates, as well as from liberal scholars.

For example, Geoffrey Stone, dean of the University of Chicago Law School and a noted first amendment scholar, said that at minimum, there were reasonable grounds to believe that the statute was constitutional. He made it clear, furthermore, that the constitutionality of the statute is not in his words "controlled by the principles that dictated the outcome" in Texas versus Johnson.

Henry Monaghan—who teaches at Columbia Law School, who is one of the Nation's leading experts on precedent and who is recognized as a "conservative"—said in a written statement submitted to the committee that the majority opinion in Texas versus Johnson "goes out of its way to state that flag desecration was not immune from all legislative control."

Other witnesses—Profs. Larry Tribe, Walter Dellinger, Gordon Baldwin, and Brady Williamson—echoed this same theme. The record before the Judiciary Committee simply belies any claim that the statute cannot survive constitutional scrutiny.

Suffice it to say, Mr. President, that I began the hearings firmly believing that the statute was constitutional, by the time the hearings were over, I was more confident than ever that the statute will pass muster, and I believe that anyone who studies the record of our hearings will reach the same conclusion.

Mr. President, I believe it makes the most sense for us to take up the House bill that is before us, a bill that has already passed the House of Representatives by an overwhelming margin, 380 to 38. Based on its very extensive hearings, those held in the House, the House added some provisions to the operative language of the Senate bill. Their changes were well thought out. They improve the bill, and I commend our colleagues in the House for their hard work.

But there is one change, however, that I believe this body should make to the House bill. The House added a provision for expedited procedure, and if I can note parenthetically the reason for that: One of the things that the critics of this approach, the legislative approach, have is they say "Now, wait a minute, BIDEN; if you and THURMOND and others go ahead and pass a piece of legislation although it will be from that moment on, if the President signs it, illegal for someone to burn the flag, and if they do they must suffer the consequences which could include a fine and/or a jail sentence, at some point in the future the court may strike this down, a year, 2 or 3 years from now, and then we will have lost a great deal of time in dealing with the ultimate remedy that they believe is necessary, a constitutional amendment."

So in order to deal with that the House attempted to do what I considered doing in the so-called Biden bill, but because the way the momentum moved here I did not add it at that moment, and that is provide an expedited procedure provision. Simply stated, it is a means by which the Congress can constitutionally direct the courts to move quickly on an issue once the issue is before the courts. Unfortunately, the House of Representatives, in its effort to do that, I believe, and I believe some of their membership now believes, went too far in that they passed a provision that may not be constitutional. They said that once a matter is brought before a district court it must automatically without any decision, without even being briefed, go straight to the Supreme Court of the United States of America to be considered.

There is a body of constitutional opinion that suggests that we do not have the authority to do that. But it is clear we do have authority to deal with an expedited procedure.

And I might add under the leadership of the Presiding Officer we did that in a number of areas including the so-called Chadha case. We did it in the Gramm-Rudman issue. We did it in Buckley versus Valeo.

Fortunately we have good and qualified staff that is here to help me out on this and I appreciate it very much.

But what we did in those cases is we said, look, once a case is taken before a Federal district court and it is briefed and a decision is rendered on the constitutionality of the issue that is briefed, then it can bypass the circuit court and go straight to the Supreme Court and we can ask the Supreme Court and direct the Supreme Court to move on that constitutional question and do it quickly.

So what the Senator from Delaware, in conjunction with the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, is going to do in a moment, after the Senator from South Carolina makes his opening comments, is send an amendment to the desk, and I will not take a lot of time explaining then, but I will explain a little more now, which will have as its purpose to clarify and rectify the expedited provision that the House bill now contains by eliminating the requirement that it go straight from the moment jurisdiction is taken to the Supreme Court of the United States of America.

This change we believe, I believe, and I believe the Senator from South Carolina believes will in fact remedy any question that remains about the constitutionality of the bill.

I understand that Senator DOLE also has an amendment. He wants to add language to the House bill that makes it illegal to maintain on the floor or the ground the American flag. The original provision of the Senator from Delaware in the Senate bill, the so-called Biden flag bill, contains that very language. I believe it is necessary. I believe it is a useful addition and when the time comes for the Senator from Kansas to do that we will readily accept that amendment.

Mr. President, I urge our colleagues to support the legislation before us. The flag deserves protection—for as President Woodrow Wilson said on Flag Day in 1915:

> The flag is the embodiment, not of sentiment, but of history. It represents the experiences made by men and women, the experiences of those who do and live under the flag.

Mr. President, I urge our colleagues today to join me in restoring the dignity of the American flag we all respect.

I further urge them to consider this point: Historically this great body has almost always turned to a legislative remedy before it has attempted a constitutional amendment to remedy a situation unless it was absolutely clear that there was no legal way, constitutional way by which you could legislatively remedy a situation. I think we should be prudent. Amending the Constitution is a significant and solemn step and undertaking. I respect and suggest to our colleagues, assuming they believe as I do that it is important and necessary to protect the flag—and I will not bore my colleagues with my rationale why I think that is important; I have done it too many times on the floor and in the committee—but assume they do, I respectfully suggest that we should be prudent.

The overwhelming body of scholarly opinion believe the approach of the Senator from Delaware is constitutional. We should at a minimum seek the legislative remedy before we seek to amend the Constitution.

Second, I say to my colleagues that assume for the sake of discussion the Senator from Delaware is incorrect and the House is incorrect, that it is not possible to legislatively remedy this situation. We will have lost nothing because during the period this law is in place people are going to know full well that there is a sanction if they burn the flag. It may well be, arguably, that 2 years from now they are let out of jail because it was not constitutional. But there is a sanction in place. And if the statutory approach of the Senator from Delaware does not work, the constitutional remedy would still be available and nothing would have been lost.

So, Mr. President, I urge my colleagues, when it comes time to vote on this amendment, to support it.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to, at this point in my speech, have printed in the RECORD a much longer dissertation on the constitutional comments made by the constitutional scholars on the constitutionality of this amendment.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

> The law at issue in Texas v. Johnson did not make it a crime to burn or otherwise destroy the American flag. Instead, the law prohibited such acts only if they were conducted in a manner that was offensive to others. Similarly, the Federal statute does not make it a crime to subject the American flag to misuse. Rather, it criminalizes misuse only when the actor is "casting contempt."
> Under the terms of the majority opinion in Texas v. Johnson, the fatal flaw in each such statute is that the commission of the crime is inextricably linked to the communication of an idea. They were, in other words, "content-based." The court was not, and has never been, presented with a content-neutral statute—a statute that banned flag burning and other similar acts of destruction in all circumstances—a statute under which prosecution would not depend on such communication.
> The legislation before us is such a content-neutral statute. Unlike the Texas law, this statute focuses not on the likely reaction of the audience when it views flag burning—the so-called "communicative impact"—or on the intent of the actor but on protecting the physical integrity of the flag.

The legislation, in the words of the majority opinion in Texas v. Johnson, is "aimed at protecting the physical integrity of the flag in all circumstances' and thus should pass constitutional muster."

Several witnesses testified that the statute will pass, or has a reasonable chance of passing, constitutional muster.

Geoffrey Stone said: "Johnson does not directly control the constitutionality of the Biden-Roth-Cohen Act * * *. In the end, there are at a minimum reasonable grounds to believe that the Supreme Court would uphold the proposed statute."

"Unlike the Texas law invalidated in Johnson, the proposed legislation is not content-based, it is not directly related to the suppression of free expression, and its constitutionality is thus not controlled by the principles that dictated the outcome in Johnson. Put simply, the decision in [Johnson] does not of its own force invalidate the [Biden bill].

Professors Williamson and Baldwin said: "The legislation adopted by the House of Representatives and the legislation before this committee are content-neutral on their face. Unlike the proposed constitutional amendment, they are specific and immediately enforceable. Unlike the Texas statute, they are 'aimed at protecting the physical integrity of the flag in all circumstances.' "

They also said: "This committee has heard several distinguished witnesses argue that the Supreme Court would not approve this statute. We find this difficult to accept because the legislation before this committee is content-neutral, at least on its face, and for at least one of the justices in the 5–4 majority in Texas v. Johnson that might be sufficient to distinguish and validate this statute * * *. The proposed legislation focused more precisely on conduct itself rather than on the expressive impact of the conduct. That, too, distinguished it from the Texas law and that, too, might be a sufficient distinction for at least one justice."

Brady Williamson added: There are "substantial differences between the Biden statute and the Texas statute invalidated in Texas v. Johnson. The legislation passed by the House and, I believe to an even greater extent, the legislation before this committee, does not punish speech as such, it does not make criminal conduct dependent on the eye of the beholder, it is content-neutral and it protects the physical integrity of the flag in every circumstance."

Walter Dellinger said: "A simple act of Congress protecting the physical integrity of the flag in all circumstances has a very reasonable basis for being sustained in the United States Supreme Court."

Henry Monaghan said in his written statement: "In fact, Texas v. Johnson is far too unstable a precedent to permit a confident conclusion that a majority of the court would reach such a result [striking down all flag destruction statutes]. Johnson itself was 5–4, and the minority seems adamant. Thus, the fundamental question is whether the proposed legislation is sufficiently different to detach one or more members of the majority. As a predictive matter, that seems to me a fair possibility, given both the discriminatory character of the Texas statute and because the majority opinion itself goes out of its way to state that flag desecration was not immune from all legislative control."

Larry Tribe said in his written statement: "* * * The relevant fact is that five Justices on the current Supreme Court (the four dissenters plus Justice Blackmun) are on record as having voted, either in Johnson or in prior opinions expressly endorsed in the Johnson majority opinion, that the first amendment permits the conviction of flag-burners so long as the government does not make the mistake Texas made—that is, so long as the government does not single anyone out for prosecution based on the views he or she meant to express."

At some point after the Senator from South Carolina has spoken, I will move the adoption of the amendment on expedited procedure, and then at the appropriate time I am sure Senator DOLE will quickly move to adopt the Dole amendment.

I thank the Chair, and I yield the floor.

Mr. KERREY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized.

Mr. KERREY. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. THURMOND] is recognized.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, in accordance with the unanimous-consent agreement of July 14, we are now considering a proposed statute designed to overturn the infamous Johnson decision which allows the contemptuous burning of the American flag.

We have arrived at this juncture through a series of events which I will briefly describe.

During the Republican Convention of 1984 in Dallas, TX, one Gregory Lee Johnson was an active participant in an anti-American demonstration through the streets of that host city. The aggressive demonstration culminated to a gathering in front of Dallas City Hall.

While many fine citizens of Dallas watched in anger and disgust, Johnson doused an American flag, which had been stolen during the march, with kerosene and set it on fire. While he engaged in this offensive conduct, Johnson chanted, "America, the red, white, and blue, we spit on you."

Being in violation of a Texas statute which prohibits the desecration of a venerated object, Johnson was rightfully charged, tried, and convicted. His conviction was upheld on first appeal but later reversed by a Texas Court of Appeals and that decision was finally affirmed by the U.S. Supreme Court as protected conduct under the first amendment.

Now Mr. President, I am not sure which offends me more, Johnson burning an American flag or the fact that the Supreme Court would sanction his contemptuous conduct.

In any event, immediately after the Supreme Court ruling, I introduced a proposed constitutional amendment to alter the Johnson decision. A Senate resolution passed 97 to 3 expressing our resounding disapproval with the decision. Additionally, both statutory language and proposed constitutional amendments were introduced to overturn the Johnson decision.

Also, after bipartisan discussions with members of the Senate, President Bush transmitted language for a 27th amendment to the Constitution. The President's proposal states simply, "The Congress and the States shall have power to prohibit the physical desecration of the flag of the United States." This language is succinct and would effectively overturn the Johnson decision.

Public officials and millions of Americans expressed their anger and consternation with the Johnson decision.

On July 14, the Senate entered into a unanimous-consent agreement concerning the various legislative proposals addressing the Johnson decision. The agreement provided for at least four hearings, consideration of the statutory approach on the Senate floor prior to the October recess and the proposed constitutional amendment to be the Senate business upon return until final disposition.

That brings us up to the current situation. I will have more to say on the constitutional amendment upon its consideration here in the Senate.

Mr. President, the Senate Judiciary Committee indeed held four hearings on the Flag issue. The primary focus of our hearings was not whether we should provide protection for the Flag, but what is the proper course for providing that protection.

There was sharp disagreement among some of our Nation's top constitutional scholars as to whether a Federal statute seeking to overturn the Johnson decision would be constitutional.

President Bush, Attorney General Thornburgh, and Assistant Attorney General William P. Barr are convinced that a constitutional amendment is the only way to adequately protect the Flag.

Judge Robert H. Bork, former Assistant Attorney General Charles J. Cooper, Stephen B. Presser, Professor of Law at Northwestern School of Law, and Eugene W. Hickok, Jr., Professor of Political Science at Dickinson College, also testified that only a constitutional amendment will be effective in reversing the Johnson decision.

While I stated that I would support Chairman BIDEN's bill to overturn the Johnson decision, I remain convinced that a 27th amendment to the Constitution is the only sure and foolproof way to protect the integrity of the American Flag.

While a statute may be effective, a constitutional amendment would make clear that the Congress and the States have the power to prevent the physical desecration of the American Flag.

Proponents of the statutory approach claim that a Federal statute neutral in its application—preventing all physical destruction of the Flag regardless of intent—would be constitutional.

I am not too sure that the American people want a neutral Flag statute in the wake of the Johnson decision. Our proposed constitutional amendment is designed to prohibit offensive, egregious conduct such as Johnson's and to protect the Flag as our symbol of national unity.

A statute which is content neutral would not only address contemptuous desecration of the Flag but would also make criminals out of those persons who retire a worn or soiled Flag out of respect by burning.

The House bill presents a different situation. It is not neutral in its application by providing certain exceptions to conduct with the Flag. It is my belief that while these exceptions in the House bill concerning the disposal of a worn or soiled Flag are appropriate, they may not be reconciled with the Johnson decision. The majority opinion clearly states that government action allowing some types of conduct with the Flag while prohibiting other conduct would not be constitutional. The majority opinion states:

If we were to hold that a State may forbid Flag-burning wherever it is likely to endanger the Flag's symbolic role * * * we would be saying that * * * the Flag itself may be used as a symbol * * * only in one direction. We never before have held that the Government may ensure that a symbol be used to express only one view of that symbol.* * *

This statement from the majority opinion would likely render the House bill unconstitutional.

Mr. President, although I will support the statutory approach for overturning the Johnson decision, I look forward to consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 180, the proposed constitutional amendment, as the most effective and honest measure to address this unfortunate Supreme Court ruling.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina has not yielded the floor.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article by Stephen B. Presser and ArLynn Leiber Presser, entitled "Rights, Responsibilities and the Flag," which appeared in the Chicago Tribune, September 27, 1989, be printed in the RECORD following my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. THURMOND. I would state Stephen B. Presser is a professor at the Northwestern University School of Law, and ArLynn Leiber Presser is a lawyer and freelance writer.

Professor Presser presented these arguments to the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

RIGHTS, RESPONSIBILITIES AND THE FLAG

(By Stephen B. Presser and ArLynn Leiber Presser)

According to a Newsweek reading of the conventional wisdom, only Neanderthals would favor an amendment to the Constitution to reverse the Supreme Court's opinion in Texas v. Johnson, which held flag burning to be protected by the 1st Amendment. As lawyers with a deep interest in history, who return often to the world of our Constitution's framers, we believe there are compelling reasons to support the proposed amendment to prohibit desecration of the flag.

The most challenging task for our nation as it proceeds in the third century of its development is to strike a balance between the need to protect the freedom of individuals and the need to maintain the sense of an American community.

Without freedom for individuals, much that is rich and diverse in American culture would vanish. Over the years, legal and constitutional development has recognized this and increasingly protected Americans' liberties and rights. Arguably, much of the Supreme Court's devotion to furthering individualism has been noble. It is difficult to argue with the hard-won rights that allowed slaves to be freed, women to own property and both groups to vote and fully participate in society.

But without a sense of community and decency, unbridled individualism will degenerate into license, anarchy and greed. The Constitution's framers clearly were more concerned with the civic responsibilities and duties a citizen owed the American republic than with assuring citizens maximum freedom or license.

In fact, in the early years of the republic, it was widely recognized, in common law or by federal statute, that false writings critical of the character of the American government or its officials were likely to result in a criminal offense punishable by fine or imprisonment. It was commonly said that the two things a republic ought to fear most were too much luxury or too much licentiousness in the press.

Certainly, we do not advocate a renewal of the concept of seditious libel. Rather, we would like to emphasize that the greatness of American institutions did not in the late 18th Century and does not now rely entirely on the principle of individual self-expression.

The logic of the majority opinion in Texas v. Johnson misses what our Constitution's framers and other great English classic liberals, such as Edmund Burke, knew: There are times when the sensibilities, the traditions, the prudence and even what Burke called the "prejudices" (probably meaning concepts of decency or taste) of the majority of the people deserve some deference.

Now that our more secularized society forbids, the official expression of American sensibilities, traditions or tastes through religious exercises, virtually the only acceptable public outlet seems to be in the realm of politics or patriotism. Just as it is wrong to construe freedom of expression so broadly that obscenity or libel must be left uncontrolled, so should the outrage sought by maliciously burning the flag be prohibited.

Further, though it may be true—as the Supreme Court has often reminded us—that it is a test of our commitment to individual freedom to be able to tolerate the statement of the thought or the idea that we hate, such a theory does not require us to tolerate actions that offend our sense of decency.

As the minority in Johnson understood, the Texas flag desecration statute challenged in the case did not prohibit, nor would the proposed constitutional amendment prohibit, the communication of thoughts or ideas regarding the flag. Only offensive actions would be barred.

Still, it is apparent even to us, whose sympathies lie with the dissenters in Johnson, that the logic of the court's previous 1st Amendment cases compelled the result the majority reached. That logic also would probably be the nemesis of a congressional statute prohibiting desecration of the flag, even one as carefully and neutrally crafted as the one before Congress. Only a new Supreme Court decision or a constitutional amendment could change the result in Johnson.

It is time to permit Americans to make a statement about our political community and the responsibility membership in it entails. As this country has moved away from the turmoil of the great Depression and the carnage of World War II and has experienced the increasing pace of immigration and technological advances, there has been an extraordinary breakup of the ideals upon which the United States was built.

In the war of ideas, we are now often fighting ourselves—black against white, Jew against Gentile, immigrant against native. We are more a boiling cauldron than a melting pot. We often seem unable to agree on the simplest norms for behavior or the most basic ideas that should bind us.

We cannot hope for a preacher to walk through our cities and towns telling allegorical tales that make the orignial principles of the Constitution clear. All we have are symbols. Just as Jesus gave his followers simple parables to make powerful points and to bind a church, our nation's framers gave us select symbols to make our country understandable. The flag certainly seems to be the most recognizable—and the one we all seem to endorse.

Too often we are more aware of our rights than our responsibilities as American citiens. We are often adamant about our rights—to fair or equal treatment, to government aid and to protection. A constitutional amendment on the flag, if nothing else, would be a beginning in making us more aware of our responsibilities.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. KERREY].

Mr. KERREY. Mr. President, let me first state that I have a great deal of respect and admiration for the Senator from South Carolina. His sense of duty to the Nation and his sense of honor to our country are sincerely felt, and I believe more of it is needed. I admire his willingness to stand for those things that have made this Nation great, and I believe he has led many of us who often wonder whether or not the people themselves understand what true patriotism is.

I would like to continue some comments I made earlier about this. I do not support either the statutory change or the change in our Constitution. As I have said on a previous occasion, I was offended, not only by the burning of the flag but by the statements made by Mr. Johnson, from Texas—greatly offended. Watching the videotape of those events made me angry and made me wonder how it was the Supreme Court could have decided the way that they did.

But, in the calmness of the Fourth of July recess, I read the judgment of the Supreme Court, and I discovered that I agreed with it. It was altogether reasonable, no new rights had been created; in fact, a unanimous decision by a Texas court had concluded the same way. A conservative circuit court had concluded that this was a right protected under our Constitution and that it was not something new being considered by the people.

In fact, I think it is significant that the Solicitor General of the United States himself did not intervene on behalf of the United States at the Supreme Court level.

I would like to go slightly beyond that today, Mr. President, to speak to why I think the statutory change is not needed. Though I understand why it is being offered and appreciate in particular it is being offered out of a genuine concern for the symbol of America, our flag, and a genuine concern as well for our Constitution, I find in the first instance that the statute is not needed because I see no evidence of danger.

I see no threat to our domestic tranquility being offered up by lines of people preparing to burn the American flag. I believe the negative feelings that all of us have, and all Americans have, toward people who burn a flag are deterrent enough; that our outrage at this act is enough; that the United States of America faces other problems that we have been debating the last 3 or 4 weeks that we need our law enforcement people addressing; and that Government should not intervene unless it is needed.

Mr. President, I simply do not see the clear and present need for us to pass a statute and ask our Government at all levels to respond to a danger that I believe does not exist.

Second, I do not believe it is needed for democracy. It is not an inalienable right that we would put forward to emerging democracies. I hear no one when they visit Poland say: Make sure in your new Constitution that you have a protection that prevents your citizens from burning the Polish flag. I do not hear people talking about prohibiting the burning of a flag as an inalienable right, and urging other democracies to include it in their constitutions. It is not needed for the maintenance of democratic freedom.

Finally, Mr. President, I do not believe it is needed for us, as individuals, to use the freedoms that we have to give honor to our God. It is not needed because I believe it is inalienable and I believe we have attempted with our Constitution to give honor to that inalienable need to be free and to express oneself. Of all things today in the United States of America, we need to encourage our people to be less afraid of speaking what they genuinely believe, to be less afraid of letting their own minds and hearts give rise to what they think ought to be done, less afraid to rise before the audience and say, "This is what I believe is right. This is what I believe is wrong. This is what I believe should be done."

It is also, it seems to me, Mr. President, something that sends the wrong message to our people because to be a truly unselfish individual, to live and I think to give honor, inalienably, to our God, means we must serve others. We must give ourselves to our families. We must give ourselves to our neighbors. We must be willing to risk our own freedom in defense of a stranger, in defense of someone else's rights. We must look out there, Mr. President, and see that there is in the end something more important than just our own personal security, our own personal well-being, our own personal material wealth.

We need to be encouraging Americans to understand it takes more than words for us to build a more perfect union. It takes more than words for us to be a strong and good and noble country, more than just words for us to show the world what democracy can do.

I finish here, Mr. President, by quoting from a song that I will not attempt to sing. It was in the Broadway version of "My Fair Lady." Liza Dolittle, speaking to Henry Higgins, saying:

Words, words, words, I'm so sick of words. If you're in love, show me.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The senior Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I want to join in paying tribute to my friend, the Senator from Nebraska. I think all of the Members are very familiar with his distinguished service in advancing the interests of this country and in combat. As he speaks on the floor of the U.S. Senate today, we know that they are not just words from the Senator from Nebraska; they come from one who has struggled to represent to the best of his ability this country in wartime and is now carrying on that challenge in peacetime as our colleague.

I think his statement, although brief, is enormously compelling. Even though there are only a few of us here on the floor, I hope our colleagues will have the chance either to see it on the television or to hear about it from others. I want to join, as I say, in commending the Senator for his statement on this extremely important issue which touches upon the most fundamental principles of our Constitution and our society.

I urge the Senate to reject the proposed flag desecration law.

Patriotism is not the issue—free speech is. All of us cherish the flag as our most hallowed national symbol. And all of us are outraged when a demonstrator shows his contempt for America by burning the flag.

The challenge facing us today is how best to hold true to the constitutional freedoms for which the flag stands. First among these is freedom of speech.

If freedom of expression means anything, it means that we must tolerate not just views we approve, but views we detest as well.

That fundamental principle is what gives America its true strength, and permits our flag to fly high.

Once we abandon the broad tolerance required by the Constitution, even for unpopular views, what will we say the next time we are offended by some other form of protest? Once we yield to the temptation to stifle dissent, there is no fair way to draw the line.

That fundamental constitutional value was at issue in the Johnson case. Gregory Lee Johnson committed a despicable act. He burned the flag to express his anger against the President. But Johnson was not prosecuted for starting a fire, or inciting a breach of the peace.

He was prosecuted under a Texas law which made it a crime to mistreat the flag in a way that would seriously offend others. He was prosecuted because he used the flag to send a message with which most of us disagree.

The Supreme Court ruled that the Constitution prohibited the State of Texas from prosecuting Johnson for his act of protest. The decision generated an initial firestorm of public outrage, which ignited an unwise effort to amend the Constitution to forbid flag desecration.

But with the passage of time, millions of Americans have indicated that they are unwilling to tamper with the Constitution to silence dissent. It is wrong to desecrate the Constitution to prevent desecration of the flag.

The proposed statute is supported in good faith by many who see it as the only means of heading off a constitutional amendment. But if we really want to honor the constitutional values symbolized by the flag, we must oppose the statute as well.

Since the proposed legislation is not explicitly aimed at expression, it may be upheld by a majority of the Supreme Court against a constitutional challenge. But the outcome is in doubt, since the courts will obviously consider the degree to which enactment of the statute is motivated by the desire to stifle unpopular speech.

I also believe that because of the breadth of the criminal prohibitions set forth in the proposed law, the statute will become a tool for selective prosecution of those who use the flag to express unpopular views. In my opinion, that would be clearly unconstitutional.

Because the bill bars all defacing of the flag, regardless of the context, it will criminalize a great deal of relatively trivial behavior, such as throwing out a paper flag affixed to a toothpick. It will change the flag from a treasured symbol to a Government-regulated icon.

Once the image of a flag is created, its owner could change it or dispose of it only at the risk of criminal prosecution. That kind of intrusive governmental regulation of private conduct is contrary to our traditions as a free people, and it is dubious public policy.

A number of outstanding scholars of the Constitution—with strikingly different points of view—testified that doing nothing is the best way to honor the flag and the constitutional values for which it stands. They include former Solicitors General Erwin Griswold and Charles Fried, Judge and former Yale University Law School dean Louis Pollak, and former Senator Charles Mathias. The American Bar Association also opposes the proposed legislation.

The Constitution has served America well for 200 years. It has survived a civil war and countless national debates over bitterly divisive issues.

There is no need to adopt an amendment—or even pass a law—merely to express our anger at a single despicable act of flag burning. We respect the flag most when we take no action at all.

Mr. HEFLIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I rise today in support of H.R. 2978, the Flag Desecration Act of 1989, which will protect the physical integrity of the American flag. Since June when the Supreme Court decision in Texas versus Johnson placed flag burning under the protection of the first amendment, I have felt it is our responsibility to return the flag to the position of respect it deserves.

I support this statutory approach. I also support a resolution calling for a constitutional amendment. In my judgment, we must pursue any vehicle or method which will accomplish the goal of protecting our Nation's flag. This statute was passed by the House of Representatives on September 12, 1989, and represents a comprehensive approach to the situation.

This statute takes the important step of providing a fine or imprisonment for anyone who knowingly mutilates, defaces, burns, or tramples upon any flag of the United States. In addition, this statute does not prohibit the disposal of a flag when it has become worn or soiled. The flag represents the very heart of what it means to be an American. It would be a tragedy for us to allow the power of the flag to be undermined through its legal desecration.

The Pledge of Allegiance is a pledge to the flag "and to the Republic for which it stands." As we recite the Pledge of Allegiance, it comes through loud and clear that the flag represents the Republic. That is the true meaning of the Pledge of Allegiance. The "Star Spangled Banner" is written about the flag. I think the flag is symbolic of America. It is America. If we desecrate America, then I think we ought to be held accountable. If we desecrate the flag, I think we ought to be held accountable.

Dicta in many Supreme Court decisions written by great protectors of the first amendment indicate that there is nothing wrong with statutes designed to protect the flag from destruction and desecration. Hugo Black, Chief Justice Earl Warren, Justice Abe Fortas and others wrote words to that effect.

Some say that the first amendment should not be tampered with in any way. But I point out that the first amendment stands in the position as it is interpreted by the Supreme Court at a particular time and place in the history of this nation.

After the War Between the States, we adopted the 13th, 14th, and 15th amendments. In my judgment, these amendments tampered with the then interpretation of the first amendment. The 13th, 14th, and 15th amendments changed the interpretation of the first amendment as it existed in, at that time and place in our history and gave the right of freedom of expression to those who had been slaves. We are all thankful today for that tampering.

I do not believe the argument that you should not tamper with the first amendment is valid. Tampering depends on the circumstances; it depends on the cause. I think the cause of protecting our Republic is extremely important and, in my judgment, we ought to take all steps to protect our Republic and its sacred symbols. We ought to take all steps to protect against flag burning. I support the legislative approach as well as the constitutional amendment approach.

I do not think there is any inconsistency in supporting both. I think we ought to take all possible steps to protect our flag.

Nothing symbolizes America's patriotism quite like a flag billowing in the wind. Each year on Memorial Day, millions of Americans show their respect for this Nation's veterans by flying a flag over their home. On this same day, thousands of tiny flags fly over the graves of our fallen soldiers at Arlington National Cemetery. Although it is not often that someone destroys an American flag, the power of this image and the symbol dictate that we must protect its integrity. Allowing the legal burning of the flag would create a mockery of the great respect so many patriotic Americans have for the flag.

The flag is an important national asset which we must always support as we would support the country herself. In my judgment, we must act to ensure that the American flag remains protected and continues to hold the high place we have afforded it in both our hearts and our history. Proudly displaying the flag stands as one of this country's great privileges.

Although a constitutional amendment provides a sure way to offset the Supreme Court's ruling in Texas versus Johnson, this statute calls for the Supreme Court's expedited review of the statute if its constitutionality is challenged in any case before a U.S. district court. This provision should expedite the otherwise tedious process which will determine if a flag desecration statute can withstand constitutional muster. I support this bill and also will support a constitutional amendment. The flag must be protected.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting H.R. 2978, which will protect the American flag.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of no quorum having been raised, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I support a constitutional amendment restoring to the States and Congress power to prohibit physical desecration of our flag. I oppose enactment of a new statute to prohibit flag desecration. Let me give you some reasons why I oppose that.

No flag desecration statute, in my opinion, will survive constitutional scrutiny after the case of Texas versus Johnson. The Supreme Court will be very hard-pressed to accept a statute that basically overrules a constitutional decision of the Court itself. Thus, a statutory approach, in my opinion, is a futile and ineffective gesture which will not protect the flag at all. It is unsound to overturn such an interpretation of the Constitution by statute.

I remember when we had Members of this body who basically believed that we should be able to overturn a constitutional decision by a statute, and there was a tremendous outcry against that. Can you imagine trying to overturn an important constitutional decision by a mere majority vote statute? If we permit that in this case or in that case, then we could amend the Constitution at will.

I might also add that when John East, the distinguished Senator from North Carolina, came up with what was called the human life statute—we will all recall Senator East was a very sincere, dedicated person against our present system of abortion on demand—he read very carefully the Supreme Court decision in Roe versus Wade, which said that basically human life does not begin at conception, among other things. He then decided that the Congress of the United States would tell the Supreme Court when life begins. The time would begin, by statute, at conception. That was a very ingenious approach, and he certainly had a right to bring it to the Judiciary Committee, but I can remember the hullabaloo that occurred caused by many who are supporting this statute today. They said, there was Senator East trying to overturn an important constitutional decision, Roe versus Wade, by a mere majority vote statute. If the criticism applied then, it should apply today.

The Biden statute, S. 1338, as adopted in committee, is in my opinion deeply flawed as a matter of policy. This is so because, as a blanket ban, it criminalizes the disposal of the worn or soiled flag by burning. Thus, a veteran or other American wishing to dispose of such a flag in such a manner faces a $1,000 fine or a year in jail, or both, under the Biden proposal. Ironically, Congress itself has recommended the burning of a worn or soiled flag as an appropriate means of disposal.

Proponents of this approach, apparently recognizing the overbroad nature of such a statute, have now brought before us a different version. It is not the facially neutral, content-neutral ban that the proponents of the statutory approach have claimed all along is necessary in order to pass constitutional muster.

It contains an exception to permit flag disposal, but this exception, as I will explain later, only renders the bill even more infirm under the Constitution, as interpreted in Texas versus Johnson.

A Federal statute already prohibits flag desecration:

Whoever knowingly casts contempt upon any flag of the United States by publicly mutilating, defacing, defiling, burning, or trampling upon it shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

This is the proper statutory approach and what Congress needs to do is render it enforceable again with a constitutional amendment, not enact another statute with different language.

I have to say that I really believe the flag is more than just a national symbol. It is a very, very important part of our national life. I think a vast majority of Senators will vote for a constitutional amendment, and probably for this statute. But I think it is wrong to vote for the statute because we will be amending the Constitution at will. I have consistently maintained that point through the years.

WHY WE SHOULD PROTECT THE FLAG

The American people revere the flag as a unique symbol of our country and of the freedom we enjoy as Americans. It is the one symbol that unites a very diverse people in a way nothing else can. Despite our differences of party, politics, philosophy, religion, ethnic background, economic status, social status, or geographic region, the flag forms a unique, common bond among us.

Many of us have lost members of our family fighting for the flag, fighting for what it represents, the freedoms that we all appreciate, and that the rest of the world appreciates as a result of our constitutional way of life. I lost my brother in the Second World War. He was shot down three times flying out of Italy. Twice he got back through enemy lines with the help of the underground, but the third time was killed on a famous raid when they knocked out the Austrian oil fields. Of course, that shortened the war considerably because it knocked out the fuel-gathering capacity of the Nazis at that particular time.

Our family was devastated by his death though we also knew he died not in vain. He died doing the best he could for our country. I lost a brother-in-law in Vietnam under the same circumstances, fighting for freedom, fighting for our flag, fighting for things that he believed in.

Justice Stevens, dissenting in Texas versus Johnson, aptly stated:

A country's flag is a symbol of more than nationhood and national unity. It also signifies the ideas that characterize the society that has chosen that emblem as well as the special history that has animated the growth and power of those ideas. * * *

[The American flag] * * * is a symbol of freedom, of equal opportunity, of religious tolerance, and of goodwill for other peoples who share our aspirations. * * *—Slip op. at 1,2 (Stevens, J. dissenting).

Chief Justice Rehnquist has written:

The significance of the flag, and the deep emotional feelings it arouses in a large part of our citizenry, cannot be fully expressed in the two dimensions of a lawyer's brief or of a judicial opinion.—Smith v. Goguen, 415 U.S. 566 at 602 (1974) (Rehnquist, J., dissenting).

The Chief Justice then noted:

* * *if the government may create private proprietary interests in written work and in musical and theatrical performances by virtue of copyright laws, I see no reason why it may not * * * create a similar governmental interest in the flag by prohibiting even those who have purchased the physical object from impairing its physical integrity. For what they have purchased is not merely cloth dyed red, white, and blue, but also the one visible manifestation of two hundred years of nationhood. * * *—Id. at 602-603.

Justice White has written:

One need not explain fully a phenomenon to recognize its existence and in this case to concede that the flag is an important symbol of nationhood and unity, created by the Nation and endowed with certain attributes. * * *—Id. at 587 (White, J., concurring).

PROTECTING THE FLAG DOES NOT THREATEN THE FIRST AMENDMENT

In my view, it cannot be seriously argued that the protection of the flag from physical desecration impairs the first amendment's principle of freedom of speech. This freedom has never been deemed absolute. Libel is actionable, even under the first amendment. Obscenity is not protected under the first amendment. Nor are "fighting words," designed to provoke violent reactions by an audience, protected. Reasonable time, place, and manner limits may be constitutionally placed on speech. Hence, a person cannot blare out his or her political views at 2 o'clock in the morning in a residential neighborhood and claim first amendment protection.

Protecting the flag from physical desecration does not prevent a single idea or thought from being expressed. It does not interefere with the numerous ways of conveying an idea—through speech, use of placards, leaflets, newspapers, and more. It merely prevents conduct with respect to one object, and one object only, our flag. We can withdraw that one unique object from physical desecration without limiting freedom of speech. Indeed, for many years, a Federal statute and 48 State statutes did protect the flag. Can anyone identify actual harm to the first amendment during this time?

I note that other ardent proponents of the first amendment have expressed similar views. In Street v. New York, 394 U.S. 576 (1969), the defendant burned a flag while uttering a political protest. The Court overturned his conviction since the defendant might have been convicted solely because of his words. The Court reserved judgment on whether a conviction for flag burning itself could withstand constitutional scrutiny. Id. at 581. Chief Justice Warren dissented: "I believe that the States and the Federal Government do have the power to protect the flag from acts of desecration and disgrace. * * * Id. at 605 (Warren, C.J., dissenting). Justice Black—generally regarded as a first amendment "absolutist"—also dissented and stated, "It passes my belief that anything in the Federal Constitution bars a State from making the deliberate burning of the American Flag an offense." Id. at 610 (Black, J., dissenting). Justice Fortas agreed with Chief Justice Warren and Justice Black: "[T]he States and the Federal Government have the power to protect the flag from acts of desecration committed in public.* * * [T]he flag is a special kind of personality. Its use is traditionally and universally subject to special rules and regulation.* * * A person may 'own' a flag, but ownership is subject to special burdens and responsibilities. A flag may be property, in a sense; but it is property burdened with peculiar obligations and restrictions. Certainly * * * these special conditions are not per se arbitrary or beyond governmental power under our Constitution." Id. at 615-617 (Fortas, J., dissenting).

Moreover, there is no slippery slope here—because there is simply nothing else like our flag. We are seeking no protection for any other symbol.

A STATUTORY RESPONSE TO TEXAS VERSUS JOHNSON IS INADEQUATE

I have concluded that a constitutional amendment is absolutely necessary to ensure with certainty the validity of any statute banning flag desecration. I believe it is futile to try to overturn this Supreme Court interpretation of the Constitution by a statute. The Constitution provides, in article V, for the exclusive means of its amendment. The article V amendment process is an organic, fundamental part of the Constitution and should not be evaded and this statute evades that process. As I mentioned earlier, I can well remember when our late colleague, Senator John East, offered a human life bill to protect the unborn by statute. He was met by the same criticism to which this bill is vulnerable and many who are arguing for the bill here today were those who criticized Senator East and did so vociferously. Indeed, Chief Justice Marshall, in Marbury versus Madison in 1803, made clear Congress cannot amend the Constitution. The first Federal income tax statute was declared unconstitutional in 1895. Pollock v. Farmers' Loan and Trust Co., 158 U.S. 601.

Congress had to adopt the 16th amendment in order to levy an income tax. We would not just do it by statute. If we did, the Constitution would not mean anything. It would not be the enduring document that it is today. We have 26 amendments to the Constitution—that is all—in a 200-year history of this country.

I intend to take some time to explain why I find neither S. 1338 as adopted in committee nor the version of the bill before us now, an acceptable means of protecting our flag. I will spend some time first on S. 1338 as adopted in the committee, and then will speak to the version now before us. All of the constitutional flaws in the committee approved bill apply to the bill now before us, and more. I think a discussion of both approaches will help show why the statutory approach in general is so unworkable, and why a constitutional amendment is needed.

I want to state at the outset of this that I am not finding any fault with those who are sincerely advocating this statute and I am not really criticizing them. I think there are only two principled approaches to this issue. One is the constitutional amendment, using article 5, the appropriate way to do it, not overruling the Supreme Court's constitutional decision by a mere 51-percent majority statute. No. 2, doing nothing at all.

I do not like approach No. 2, but I have to say it is a principled approach. I think those arguing this approach are arguing for a system that would break down the Constitution and would ultimately cost us this great document. It would make it easy for any majority to come up with their own personal preferences and be able to amend the Constitution at will by a mere majority statute. Therefore, I think they are wrong.

To approach this matter before us, I believe that a facially neutral statute, such as S. 1338, as adopted in committee, which bans all knowing mutilation, defacement, trampling, or burning of the flag undertaken for any purpose, including for the purpose of ceremoniously disposing of a worn or dirty flag, is unlikely to survive constitutional scrutiny.

Even such a facially neutral statute will be unenforceable when applied to a person who desecrates the flag as part of a political expression, after Texas versus Johnson. Why? Because the Supreme Court declared in that case that the Government's asserted interest in preserving the flag as a symbol of nationhood and national unity is insufficient to overcome a person's so-called right to burn the flag as part of expressive conduct. Indeed, it cannot be denied that the principal, if not the only, purpose in enacting a facially neutral statute is to prohibit expressive conduct that physically desecrates the flag. No one claims that we are interested in protecting the material, the thread, and the dye in the flag. We protect the flag as a symbol, including against those who would desecrate the flag as part of a political expression. Because this is the clear purpose of the statutory approach, that approach will fail after Texas versus Johnson.

The argument that S. 1338, as adopted in committee, is constitutionally sound because phrased in neutral language that does not affect free speech is misplaced. Irrespective of the language chosen, the principal purpose of that bill, like the pending constitutional amendment, is to change the result of the Johnson case. The Supreme Court frequently examines the legislative history of a statute. Wallace versus Jaffree is the perfect case that comes to mind. The legislative history of this law, if it is enacted, will reveal overwhelming evidence that it was designed to prevent the expression of an idea through flag desecration—that is an unconstitutional purpose under the Johnson decision. Indeed, Justice Brennan has written that:

> The only basis for a governmental interest (if any) in protecting the flag is precisely the fact that the flag has substantive meaning as a political symbol. Thus, assuming that there is a legitimate interest at stake, it can hardly be said to be one divorced from political expression. Kime v. United States, 459 U.S. 949, 953 (1982) (Brennan, J., dissenting).

Now, I do not always agree with Justice Brennan, although I have great admiration for him, and I would substitute the phrase "national symbol" for "political symbol," but he is essentially correct on this point.

I want to dwell on this for a moment. The uniqueness of the flag as a symbol distinguishes it from any other object. A content-neutral prohibition on draft-card multilation serves practical, not symbolic, purposes. A content neutral prohibition against misuse of a U.S. military uniform serves practical, not symbolic, purposes. But a statute banning flag desecration, whether facially neutral or otherwise, inherently serves the purpose of protecting a revered national symbol precisely because it is such a symbol. Let us be forthright about this. The flag does not have the kind of practical usage of a draft card or military uniform, and we do not seek to protect it for such a purpose.

As William Barr, Assistant Attorney General for Legal Counsel, testified:

> It cannot be seriously maintained that a statute aimed at protecting the flag would be constitutional.

The unconstitutionality of any statute which attempts to protect all forms of flag destruction has been predicted by Justice Brennan, who wrote that any statute—

> That simply outlawed any public burning or mutilation of the Flag, regardless of the expressive intent or nonintent of the actor—> invalid for the reasons stated in my discussion of Spence v. Washington, Kime v. United States, 459 U.S. 949, 955 n.7 (1982) (Brennan, J., dissenting).

Would be—

The American Bar Association's house of delegates adopted a resolution opposing both a constitutional amendment to overturn Texas versus Johnson as well as a statutory approach to protecting the flag. The resolution was unanimously proposed by an ABA task force. The task force was chaired by former Commissioner of the Internal Revenue Service Randolph Thrower. Its members were Columbia University Law School dean, Barbara Black; former Deputy Secretary of State, Warren Christopher; former Harvard Law School dean and Solicitor General of the United States, Erwin Griswold; Stanford University Law School professor, Gerald Gunther; former New York University Law School dean, Robert McKay; former U.S. Attorney, Earl Silbert; and former Secretary of State, Cyrus Vance.

The ABA's analysis of the constitutional flaws of the legislative approach mirrors my own. The ABA's analysis of statutory proposals, which was a general analysis, in my view, is applicable both to S. 1338 as adopted in committee and the version now before us. The ABA said:

The basic infirmity of these proposals is that they might validate prosecution of those physically abusing the flag without intending to express a contemptuous or dissenting view but would run afoul of Texas v. Johnson and fail on constitutional grounds in those cases where the flag is burned or otherwise abused in an effort to dramatize a protest or cummunicate a dissenting view.

That is exactly what Johnson was trying to do, and I think the vast majority of Americans agree, he was wrong to do it.

The ABA also said:

Whatever the State or Federal legislation on the subject, we can be sure that political protests against actions of the Federal Government will continue to be made by both words and expressive conduct. We can also be assured that legislation such as that being proposed will violate the principles of Texas v. Johnson when applied to desecration of "the flag" as an act of political expression. Yet, desecration of the flag as a political protest is the real target of the legislative proposals. It would thus seem not only futile but also irresponsible for the Congress to enact legislation which would directly challenge a recent decision of our highest court.

As I have mentioned, I believe protecting the flag from desecration is appropriate, but I agree with the ABA that such protection cannot be constitutionally achieved by a mere statute. At least, in this instance, then, the ABA is half right.

A CONTENT-NEUTRAL STATUTE IS THE WRONG STATUTE

Moreover, I do not believe a neutral, blanket statute reaching all physical desecration of the flag, such as S. 1338, as adopted in committee, is appropriate even if it is held constitutional. I think a blanket statute sweeps much too far. There are legitimate reasons to dispose of worn or dirty flags in a way that would run afoul of such a statute. Indeed, Congress has spoken a great deal on this matter and has enacted a statute concerning proper respect for the flag, which includes the following:

The flag, when it is in such a condition that is no longer a fitting emblem for display, should be destroyed in a dignified way, preferably by burning. (36 U.S.C. 176(K)).

But, under S. 1338 as adopted in committee, a veteran or any other American who reverently wished to dispose of a worn or dirty flag by burning it would be subject to a $1,000 fine or 1 year imprisonment or both.

Apparently recognizing the unsoundness of such a result, the committee report attempted to evade this plain meaning of S. 1338 in a footnote. Report, page 4, footnote 2.

The report suggests that disposal of a worn or soiled flag by burning it is not prohibited by S. 1338 because "[s]uch a flag is no longer a fitting emblem for display" and the Government's "interest in protecting its physical integrity no longer applies."

This interpretive gloss clashes directly with the language of S. 1338. It is an entirely useless effort to cure a disastrous defect in the bill. S. 1338 as adopted in committee, punishes the knowing mutilation, defacement, burning, maintaining on the ground, or trampling of the flag—without more. It establishes no exception for "a flag [which] is no longer a fitting emblem for display." Moreover, the definition of the term "flag of the United States" contained in the statute amended by S. 1338 does not turn on whether the flag is "a fitting emblem for display." (18 U.S.C. 700(b)). The forthright way of excluding disposal of a worn or soiled flag from the strictures of the statute is to include a provision to that effect in the statute itself. Indeed, H.R. 2978, the House-passed flag statute, contains such a provision.

And now, at the last minute, I can only assume that the proponents of a statutory approach have recognized that a blanket statute is overboard, after all, and therefore unsound as a matter of public policy. And, they have apparently recognized that no footnote in a committee report can alter the blanket nature of the bill they have been supporting for months as the answer to Texas versus Johnson. So, they have now put before us a bill providing for an exception in its prohibitions when the conduct at issue is the disposal of the flag.

Suddenly, then, the proponents of the statutory approach have changed their tune over here: Their bill no longer protects the physical integrity of the flag in all circumstances. The original S. 1338 certainly did so. But Senators who planned to vote for S. 1338 on that basis better take a close look at the bill now before us. The rationale for S. 1338 as introduced and as adopted by the committee, is no longer viable with respect to the bill before us. The committee report at page 4, says that S. 1338 as adopted in committee—

Focuses solely and exclusively on the conduct of the actor, without regard to any message or idea he or she might be intending to convey, without regard to whether the actor intends to offend or cast contempt. * * *

Mr. President, the bill no longer focuses solely and exclusively on the conduct of the actor. Now, the bill protects conduct by an individual reverently and respectfully seeking to dispose of a worn or soiled flag. That expression of revence for the flag as a symbol is now explicitly permitted under the bill. But if someone wished to express disagreement with Government policy by burning the flag, that is illegal under the bill. Accordingly, the thin veneer of content neutrality, the linchpin, until now, of the alleged constitutional viability of the statutory approach, has been stripped away by its own proponents.

Yet, an exception, such as this one, protecting conduct aimed at disposal of a flag, further undermines the constitutionality of the statutory approach. Indeed, the bill before us has all of the constitutional defects of a blanket statute, and an additional one. Like a blanket statute, such as S. 1338 as adopted in committee, the bill before us will be unenforceable when applied to a flag desecration undertaken for expressive purposes.

The analysis I went through earlier is fully applicable, as is the ABA's analysis, in my opinion.

Moreover, the Court in Texas versus Johnson noted that if a State were to forbid—

Flag-burning wherever it is likely to endanger the flag's symbolic role, but allow it wherever burning a flag promotes that role—as where, for example, a person ceremoniously burns a dirty flag—we would be saying that when it comes to impairing the flag's physical integrity, the flag itself may be used as a symbol—as a substitute for the written or spoken word * * * only in one direction. Slip opinion at 19.

This, the Court indicated, is impermissible. I am convinced that such a rationale would be used to invalidate just the kind of statute now before us.

Thus, we have the dilemma that statute supporters cannot escape: A statute truly neutral on its face, even if constitutional, which I think it is not, would cover flag dispoal by burning and similar appropriate means. But, if such a flag disposal exception is either implicitly or explicity contained in such a statute, it is no longer content neutral, which the statute's supporters had always claimed it must be in order to pass constitutional muster.

You cannot have your cake and eat it too in this way. You cannot have it both ways and neither way is appropriate or really works. Neither will be held constitutional in the end, and we will have gone through the exercise for no good reason at all. And, such an exception makes the statute even more clearly aimed at protecting the flag's symbolic role and even more constitutionally infirm. There is a way out of this dilemma, Mr. President and that is the adoption of a constitutional amendment. For those who feel strongly that we must protect the flag the way to do it, the appropriate way to do it, is through a constitutional amendment and if we disagree with this constitutional decision by the court, then, under Marbury versus Madison, our recourse is to turn to article 5 of the Constitution.

Further, the bill before us, Mr. President, reaches private conduct, such as that undertaken in the home. It is the public casting of contempt on the flag, however, which I believe should be outlawed. Thus, the present Federal statute is the appropriate approach to outlawing flag burning and that statute reads:

> Whoever knowingly casts contempt upon any flag of the United States by publicly mutilating, defacting, defiling, burning, or trampling upon it shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both. (18 U.S.C. 700(a)

Accordingly, I see no need for Congress to pass a new Federal statute; Congress need only assure the constitutionality of the current one, which has been on the books for more than 20 years and is a much better written statute than the one we are trying to pass here today.

A constitutional amendment, therefore, is the safest, surest, and most permanent way of achieving the protection of the flag that the supporters of a statute-only approach also claim they favor. It is difficult to square their opposition to an amendment on their asserted grounds—that it somehow tampers with the first amendment—with their own statutory approach. How is a statute which prohibits flag desecration in all or some instances, including when undertaken for expressive purposes, not a threat to first amendment principles under their rationale, while a constitutional amendment achieving the same thing is such a threat? That is sophistry, especially when the statute is motivated by a desire to protect the flag as a symbol, following the Texas versus Johnson decision. Indeed, the bill before us bans more conduct than the Federal statute now on the books (18 U.S.C. 700). As I mentioned earlier, the current Federal law bans mutilation, burning, and so forth, of the flag, in public, and when done knowingly to cast contempt on the flag. The bill before us prohibits all knowing mutilation and burning, and so on, whether contemptuous or not, and whether in public or in private, with one exception—for flag disposal.

I note that the Federal statute has not yet been struck down by the Court. Of course, it is not presently enforceable. If we enact a constitutional amendment, this statute will already be on the books, and it is a superior statute. Thus, there will be no gap in protection of the flag between the effective date of an amendment and the enactment of a new statute. A new statute is not needed; what is needed is a constitutional amendment legitimizing the statute we now have.

So I encourage the rejection of the bill before us today and the adoption of the constitutional amendment when we consider such an amendment later this month.

One of the arguments that is constantly being made is that what we need to do is pass a statute, and if it does not work then we can pass a constitutional amendment. We should not amend the Constitution of the United States without first trying the statute.

We already have a statute that is better written than this statute. It is on the books now, but it would not be found to be constitutional under the Texas versus Johnson case. And if we go this statutory route, you are talking about at some future date, probably a year or so from now, having a case arise where you have another Johnson mutilate the flag, where it goes to the district court and then is appealed all the way up to the Supreme Court. It may be 4, 5, or 6 years down the road before this matter is resolved. If we pass a constitutional amendment which legitimizes our current statute then it seems to me we would be in a position to have that amendment become the 27th amendment to the Constitution within a relatively short time, probably less than 18 months, and we would resolve this problem in a proper constitutional way and in a way that I think would be beneficial for all concerned.

With that, I yield the floor.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, some have argued that the Johnson case cannot be overturned by statute, and that only a constitutional amendment will be effective. The argument is that only the Supreme Court can define a constitutional right—and that Congress cannot override that definition.

This argument is a red herring. The flag legislation is not an attempt to overrule a Supreme Court interpretation of the first amendment, and we've never said it was. Rather, the flag legislation represents a good faith effort to remedy a defect that the Court has identified in flag destruction laws.

Three principal examples illustrate that the flag legislation is a proper response to the Johnson case.

First is Schacht versus United States. At issue in that case was a Federal law that said actors in plays and movies could wear military uniforms except in one situation—when the actor's performance tended to discredit the Armed Forces of the United States. The Court struck down the provision because it discriminated against a particular viewpoint—only when the actor sought to cast contempt, if you will, on the Armed Forces was there no authorization for his performance.

The Court made it clear that a blanket prohibition on unauthorized wearing of a uniform would have been valid. Thus, Congress could have responded to the Court's decision by banning the use of uniforms in all performances, rather than only when uniforms were used to discredit the Armed Forces. In other words, Congress could have made the law content-neutral to remedy the defect in the law that the Court had found.

Just as Congress could have responded to the Schacht decision with a blanket, content-neutral ban on the unauthorized wearing of military uniforms of the United States, so, too, can Congress respond to Texas versus Johnson with a blanket, content-neutral ban on destroying the flag of the United States.

When asked about the Schacht case during the hearings, Professor Dellinger said: (9/14, Page 55-56):

> I think that is one of the strongest analogies in defense of the kind of statutory proposal you have made. * * * The Court goes to such trouble in Shacht to find the particular flaw in the statute being that you may not wear a U.S. military uniform replica in a theatrical production if it brings discredit on the Armed Forces, so as to indicate that Congress could say we do not want confusing symbols, Congress could come back and say you cannot use the U.S. military uniform in any production, no matter whether it is praiseworthy or blameworthy. If that is constitutional, then I think the blanket ban on flag burning may be constitutional.

Second is the 1975 case of Buckley versus Valeo. In 1971, the Federal Election Commission was created by the Federal Election Campaign Act. The six voting members of the Commission were to be appointed as follows: Two by the President, two by the President pro tempore of the Senate and two by the Speaker of the House. These appointees were then to be confirmed by a majority of both Houses of Congress.

In Buckley, the Court struck down as unconstitutional this method of appointing members of the Federal Election Commission. Given the powers conferred upon the Commission, the congressional control over their selection was held to be an unconstitutional violation of the separation-of-powers doctrine.

Congress quickly passed remedial legislation. In the Federal Election Campaign Act Amendments of 1976, Congress gave the President the power to select all six voting members and delegated to the Senate the traditional confirmation function it performs with other executive branch appointees.

Congress' response to Buckley provides a clear example of a statute, held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, and then modified to conform with the ruling of the Court.

In the second paragraph of the Senate report, under a heading titled, "purpose of the bill," Congress left no doubt as to its intent: The recommended legislation is a measure designed to reconstitute the Federal Election Commission and to make certain other amendments of law necessary and desirable in light of the decision of the Supreme Court in Buckley versus Valeo.

A third example is the response to the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings case, Bowsher versus Synar. In that 1986 case, the Supreme Court struck down portions of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act, under which mandated spending cuts were to be triggered if the Comptroller General issued a report estimating a budget deficit in excess of the amount allowed by the act.

In Bowsher, the Supreme Court held that this triggering mechanism was unconstitutional. Because the Comptroller is removable from his office at the discretion of Congress, the Court held that he was an employee of the legislative branch. His central role in the triggering mechanism thus constituted an impermissible execution of the laws by the legislature.

In the Balanced Budget Act of 1987, Congress responded to the Court's decision by substituting the report of the Director of the Office of Management and Budget for that of the Comptroller. Since the Director of OMB is an officer of the executive branch, Congress' remedial legislation placed the power to execute budget cuts mandated by Gramm-Rudman in the executive branch and the constitutional defect identified by the Court was removed from the legislation.

Several witnesses flatly rejected the argument made by Hatch, Bork, and others, and testified that it is perfectly proper for Congress to remedy a defect in a statute.

Walter Dellinger's testimony said:

"It is * * * simple Hornbook constitutional law that Congress is free to correct any flaw that may have rendered an act of Congress unconstitutional, in response to a Supreme Court decision. That does not in any way abridge the principle of Marbury V. Madison. Indeed, where Congress responds to a decision of the Supreme Court that points out a flaw in a statute by removing that flaw, it is acting very much in accordance with the direction that the Court has indicated and we have seen examples of this in recent years.

Gordon Baldwin rejected the view that this is an attempt to reverse a constitutional decision. When a defect is found in a statute, the Court invites repair. * * * I think the flag decision is a quintessential example of the Court striking out a statute and sending the issue back to the public and to [Congress] for reconsideration and debate, and that is not reversing a constitutional decision.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, what we are dealing with is protest against the Government. We are not dealing with attempts to overthrow the Government by force. That is a different matter. We are dealing with protest, albeit protest that is extremely offensive. The flag means so much to so many in so many ways. Any desecration makes our blood boil.

The flag represents the values and experiences of men and women, represents history, and pride, and our traditions. No wonder we take great offense when the flag is insulted or abused.

I am going to vote for the protection of the flag against desecration. Most people in my State support this vote.

But in doing so, we need to remind ourselves that protest, even obnoxious and blood-boiling protest, is the fundamental ingredient of a free people.

We see what the outlawing of protest did to the people of China. Dictators first of all outlaw dissent by citizens against the government. Noriega does not permit dissent.

The United States of America is strong enough to withstand considerable dissent, and even an occasional fool that burns a flag.

We are not endangered, we are not threatened, and this is not one of the most crucial of all the great issues facing the Nation and the Supreme Court. It just makes us mad. Rightly so.

My point is short of the courageous statement of the Senator from Nebraska, Mr. KERREY. I have said I will vote for a statute and I will.

But I do so with a commitment to caution. We are chiseling away at our freedoms, even if ever so slightly. Let us be ever so careful.

The right to dissent is fundamental. We cannot be a free country without it.

Thank you, Mr. President. I yield the floor.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine [Mr. COHEN] is recognized.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, the pending legislation amends the Federal flag desecration statute in response to the U.S. Supreme Court's decision in Texas versus Johnson, upholding the burning of the American flag as a political expression protected by the first amendment. By amending the statute to meet constitutional objections, it will allow the Federal Government to continue to make flag desecration a crime while remaining consistent with the Court's decision in Johnson.

The Court's decision shocked and angered many Americans, touching off an outcry of opposition in Congress and throughout the country. The flag evokes deep emotions in the hearts of millions of men and women in this country, many of whom have made sacrifices in the defense of the ideas of liberty and freedom that the flag represents. It is unique, a special emblem of our principles and ideals, and of our Nation's struggle for freedom. Americans stand respectfully when it rises, fly it from their front porches on patriotic holidays, lower it to half-mast in times of tragedy and shroud their veterans' caskets in it. I do not know of any more important symbol than the American flag. It is our most revered national symbol.

As Justice Stevens noted in his dissent in the Johnson case:

A country's flag is a symbol of more than "nationhood and national unity." It also signifies the ideas that characterize the society that has chosen that emblem as well as the special history that has animated the growth and power of those ideas. The value of the flag as a symbol cannot be measured.

The Court held that Mr. Johnson's action was expressive conduct protected by the first amendment. I share the Court's reverence for the first amendment and fully agree with the Court that if there is a fundamental principle "underlying the first amendment, it is that the Government may not prohibit the expression of an idea simply because society finds the idea itself offensive or disagreeable."

I believe it is possible to honor the first amendment's protection for freedom of speech while recognizing that the flag is a unique national symbol that warrants unique protection. Preventing the physical desecration of this unique symbol does not in any manner inhibit the constitutional right to criticize the United States, its policies, or the principles upon which it was founded.

The Supreme Court struck down the Texas statute because it found that the law was designed to protect the flag only against abuse that would be offensive to others, rather than protecting the flag from physical destruction in all circumstances. It was, therefore, Mr. Johnson's expression of an idea—contempt for the flag and what it represents, and his desire to convey that message to those who witnessed the flag burning—that was targeted for punishment.

While the contempt and hatred Mr. Johnson expressed for the United States by his words and his actions are offensive to me and to the vast majority of Americans. I do not dispute his right to express or advocate such views. It is not his views but only his action in physically violating the American flag that is in question here.

The pending bill removes from the Federal flag statute those words that could be interpreted as attempting to suppress certain types of expression or speech. By amending the law so that it is "content neutral," it will prohibit the desecration of the flag in all circumstances without reference to the message or point of view being conveyed.

The Senate passed a resolution expressing its profound disappointment that the Texas statute prohibiting the desecration of the flag was found to be unconstitutional, and expressing its continuing commitment to preserving the honor and integrity of the flag as a symbol of our Nation and its aspirations and ideals. We can best demonstrate that commitment and, at the same time, address the Court's decision in Johnson by enacting the pending legislation. By prohibiting the desecration of the American flag regardless of the any political expression the individual may want to convey by his action, the legislation will achieve the result we all seek, and it will do so quickly and constitutionally.

There is, of course, disagreement among Members of the Senate, legal scholars, and others on whether or not this legislation will be upheld as constitutional in light of the Johnson decision. Although we all share the same objective, some believe the statutory approach is flawed and that a constitutional amendment is the only method of effectively protecting the integrity of the flag of the United States.

I joined Senator DOLE, Senator THURMOND, and others in cosponsoring the constitutional amendments introduced shortly after the Johnson decision was handed down. Since that time, however, I have become convinced that the statutory route is a positive approach that will achieve our mutual objective. I have been persuaded by the views of numerous constitutional authorities that the pending bill amends the Federal flag statute in such a way as to make it conform with Supreme Court rulings and, thereby, restores protection for the flag without the need for a constitutional amendment.

The Constitution should be amended only if it is shown to be absolutely necessary; only if it is the only option available to achieve the desired goal. When presented with a reasonable and less drastic alternative, in my view it is both unnecessary and unwise to move to amend the Constitution. I urge my colleagues to give the statutory solution a chance to work. It is quick, easy, contains no risk, and I am convinced that it will achieve our common goal. However, if it untimately proves to be inadequate, Congress can, and I am confident, will initiate the more complicated and lengthy process of amending the U.S. Constitution.

Mr. President, what we have heard in the past few moments of this debate invokes great passion. I was struck that the day the decision from the Supreme Court came down there was an article in the Washington Post, I believe in the style section, about a man who was fined not for desecrating the flag but for flying the flag. Apparently, this individual had a large flag and he would run it up the flagpole on windy days. The flapping of the flag would make so much noise it distrubed his neighbor and, as a result of that disturbance, he in fact was fined for flying the flag. That story was written about the same time as the flag decision itself. I was struck by the anomaly of it.

Listening to the Senator from Utah, he spoke with great passion about his own personal losses in World War II and also in Vietnam. There are others in this Chamber who have also suffered great loss over the years. We have Senator KERREY, who spoke earlier. He suffered the loss of a leg. Senator BOB DOLE and Senator INOUYE also had severe wounds from their service for their country. They may have entirely different views on this subject matter.

Senator JOHN MCCAIN gave a very, very moving speech at the Republican National Convention a year ago. He told the story about one of his fellow POW's who kept his spirit alive night after night be sewing a small replica of a flag on the inside of his jacket. And when the North Vietnamese found this jacket, they took that man out and beat him severely and almost killed him on one particular occasion. No sooner did they return him to his cell then once again he opened that jacket up and started sewing the flag back in.

So there is no doubt about it, the flag is an important, unique symbol. I find it somewhat ironic that we can prohibit the desecration of an Ameican coin or of a dollar bill. If we can prohibit the burning of currency or the desecration of it or the defacing of it, surely we can prohibit the desecration of the American flag.

Mr. President, it has been suggested that the only way to cure the Supreme Court decision is by constitutional amendment. I do not agree with that. There is great debate within the intellectual community and the academic community. It was suggested if we move to the amendment of the Constitution, we can go very, very rapidly. I would disagree with that. I think that will take longer and would be more contentious than this statutory approach.

I think we ought to pass this statute and then find out on an expedited basis whether or not the statute will survive constitutional scrutiny. It may or may not fall. I believe it will survive constitutional scrutiny, but it might not. If that is the case, then we can come back and pursue the constitutional process. I am a cosponsor of the Dole-Thurmond constitutional amendment, but I intend to support this measure and not the constitutional amendment until such time as we pursue the statutory process all the way through.

I thank the Chair.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I rise today to support H.R. 2978, the anti-flag-burning statute.

I am also an original cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 180, the flag desecration constitutional amendment, which will come to the floor for a vote at a later date.

I support a statute because I believe the decision the Supreme Court reached in Texas versus Johnson was wrong and it needs to be addressed.

The statutory approach before us today may work. However, I have always had my doubts, quite frankly, about the possibility of drafting a statute that can pass constitutional muster. Further, it is unclear whether any statute would be upheld by today's Supreme Court. Under the expedited procedures provided for in H.R. 2978, it is entirely possible that the same Supreme Court which overturned the Texas statute in Texas versus Johnson, would find H.R. 2978 unconstitutional.

I believe if this statute can pass constitutional muster, then we can protect the flag without an amendment to the Constitution. However, we cannot know with certainty what the Supreme Court will do if faced with this statute. Therefore, while I will support this statute, I remain committed to supporting the upcoming amendment as well.

I appreciate all the hard work of my distinguished colleague, Senator BIDEN, who held numerous hearings on this issue. I congratulate him for his effort on behalf of a statutory approach. He ensured that all sides in this debate have had their say.

Mr. President, it will take some time, even under expedited procedures, to determine the constitutionality of this statute. Because of the time involved, it makes sense to go forward on both the statutory and constitutional amendment tracks. If the Court upholds the constitutionality of a flag desecration statute, there will be ample opportunity to stop the constitutional amendment process. If, however, the Court eventually overturns the statute, which I think is more than likely, we will have wasted considerable time by not starting to move forward with the constitutional amendment now.

We need to move forward to redress the injustice against the American flag perpetrated by Gregory Johnson in front of the Dallas City Hall in 1984. As Senators will recall, he took an American flag, poured kerosene on it, and burned it. While it burned he chanted, "America, the Red, White, and Blue, we spit on you."

His speech, Mr. President, while offensive, certainly, to this Senator and I know to the distinguished President pro tempore in the Chair, was and should always be protected speech. The act of burning the American flag, I contend, was and is not protected speech. Of all the ways Gregory Johnson could have chosen to express his displeasure, he chose to desecrate the unifying symbol of a great nation.

Clearly, the flag is an important national asset. I would argue the most important one. Chief Justice Rehnquist in his dissent reminds us that freedom of speech is not an absolute right under the Constitution. The Chief Justice cites Chaplinsky versus New Hampshire, in which a unanimous court held that "there are certain well-defined and narrowly limited classes of speech, the prevention and punishment of which have never been thought to raise any constitutional problem * * * it has been well observed that such utterances are no essential part of any exposition of ideas."

In his dissent, Justice Stevens, of my own State of Illinois, stated that "Had he—Johnson—chosen to spray paint—or perhaps convey with a motion picture projector—his message of dissatisfaction on the facade of the Lincoln Memorial, there would be no question about the power of the Government to prohibit his means of expression. The prohibition would be supported by the legitimate interest in preserving the quality of an important national asset." He further wrote that "sanctioning the public desecration of the flag will tarnish its value—both for those who cherish the ideas for which it waves and for those who desire to don the robes of martyrdom by burning it."

I hope H.R. 2978 will pass the Congress, Mr. President, because in the end the Senator from Delaware and I share a common goal of preserving and protecting the flag. Our approaches may be different, but our intent is the same.

I urge my colleagues to support the bill before us today, and remind them that the issue has not ended should we pass H.R. 2978. More will need to be done. Whether it is a statute or an amendment, one of the two approaches needs to be in place to protect the integrity of the flag. For as Justice Stevens stated in his dissent, If "* * * the ideas of liberty and equality * * * are worth fighting for * * * it cannot be true that the flag that uniquely symbolizes their power is not itself worthy of protection from unnecessary desecration."

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I am proud to stand today and offer this legislation with my distinguished colleagues, Senator BIDEN and Senator COHEN. Since the Supreme Court handed down its decision in Texas versus Johnson, I have come to this floor several times to urge that we do something to protect our flag. I believe this is a measure that Americans want, as well as a measure that America needs.

As I have said before, the move to protect our flag—the public outcry since the Supreme Court decision—is sparked by the deep and abiding sense of loyalty we feel toward it. The flag serves as a symbol of courage and virtue and truth that binds us all together as Americans. To our youth it represents hope. To our young families it represents security. To our veterans it is a reminder of ideals for which they were willing to lay down their lives, and to our seniors it is the embodiment of principles for which they have labored so long.

When a soldier dies in battle, or a police officer on duty, or a statesman in office, the flag is used to cover the coffin, then it is presented to the spouse—not as a mere memento for momentary service rendered, but as a reminder—a reminder of all that loved one gave, even life itself, to preserve the spirit, the values, and the promises the flag has come to symbolize. And this is fitting, because with each death, with each drop of blood, each drop of a serviceman's sweat, or a widow's tear, the majesty of our flag unfurls with meaning beyond mortal expression. It unfurls with a meaning that transcends words to the spine tingling, teary eyed, lump in the throat moment most of us feel when the flag passes by. Indeed, the spirit speaks far more powerfully than the words.

Consequently, when America's detractors violate our flag—whether in the alleys of Iran or on the streets of Dallas—they are insulting all who have given so much—they are insulting all who believe so strongly in the values symbolized by the flag. And they are assaulting those very values. And that is why this bill is so important.

Mr. President, there really is no controversy about our desire to protect the flag. The controversy, rather, is about legalisms. In Texas versus Johnson, the Supreme Court, in a 5-to-4 decision, struck down a State flag-protection law as applied to a political protester. I disagree with that decision's result and its reasoning. Consequently, I have no difficulty championing the Biden-Roth-Cohen bill or the House bill; it is simply a legally perfected version of current law, a law I personally believe is constitutional.

The question is whether the new version before us will persuade one of the five justices who struck down the Texas law, as applied, to switch and join the dissenters in supporting a flag-protection statute. Since the answer does not depend directly on the merits of the question but rather on how a single justice may perceive the merits, it is not easy to answer.

The eloquent arguments of the opponents of any legislative response to the Supreme Court decision do not persuade me. But they may persuade a majority of the Court. The arguments of the opponents thus lend support to the need for a constitutional amendment. That is the only solution that provides certainty.

The law held unconstitutional in Texas versus Johnson included a "communicative impact" as one of its elements. The statutory language before us is "content-neutral." Current Federal law requires that the perpetrator act contemptuously. Since this element might be viewed as requiring a communicative impact, the language before us eliminates that requirement. The content-neutral result thus actually broadens the instances of flag burning that are covered.

Without more, a content-neutral statute would pose some problems for patriotic Americans, who out of respect for the flag and with the blessing of Congress, burn worn, torn, or soiled flags. Thus the House bill, H.R. 2978, expressly declares that it does not cover "any conduct consisting of the disposal of a flag when it has become worn or soiled." While S. 1338 contains no such declaration, the committee report states in footnote two that a worn, torn, or soiled flag "is no longer a fitting emblem for display and may be disposed of by burning or other means."

Such exceptions may call into question the content neutrality of the statute. If Congress cannot consistent with Johnson prohibit bad flag burning, can it prohibit all flag burning except good flag burning? Does this scheme bring us back to the Johnson case? That, of course, will be the question before the courts. I would hope that the courts recognize that the argument merely contests the success of the legislative effort. After all, the statute still does not require a communicative impact as an element of the offense. If only flag burnings of a contemptuous nature remain covered, that is fine so long as the contempt is not an element.

Under this analysis, I believe that the legislation is constitutional, and I hope that the courts concur. However, I must admit that the constitutionality of this legislation is a matter over which reasonable men may—and do—differ. That is why only an amendment to the Constitution can provide us a solution with certainty.

For these reasons, I support both the statutory and the constitutional amendment proposals—the statutory solution because I believe it to be constitutional and the constitutional solution because it is the only way to eliminate constitutional doubts for all time.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. LEAHY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SANFORD). The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I rise, as many others have, in support of the bill that will protect the integrity of the flag by outlawing its physical destruction. I cherish the flag for the values and experiences it represents. I believe most Americans do, whatever their political backgrounds.

The chairman of the Judiciary Committee, the distinguished Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN] is right in protecting the flag in the best and most effective way possible, and I commend him for that.

The Judiciary Committee has held exhaustive hearings on the subject of flag desecration, and the chairman has made sure that virtually every idea, every school of thought has been heard. We have heard from scholars, historians, veterans, and other Senators. By far, the most personal and compelling testimony has come from veterans, from those who have fought most courageously to defend the fundamental liberties guaranteed by the Constitution. They do not speak with one voice, but they do speak for all Americans when they attest to the emotions that the flag stirs in each of us.

We cherish and respect the flag as a national symbol because it is rooted in tradition, the family histories of devotion, sacrifice, and respect for these United States.

In fact, when I think of the flag, Mr. President, I think of the flag displayed in every town in Vermont, not just on special days like Memorial Day or Flag Day or the Fourth of July, but all year round. I think of the flagpole outside my mother's home in Montpelier where the flag often flies from early morning to dusk.

It is right we protect the flag.

Mr. President, we are going to do so here today. This bill will protect the flag by changing the current Federal flag desecration statute. Constitutional scholars testified before the Judiciary Committee that this proposal will pass muster by the Supreme Court because it outlaws flag burning in all circumstances. I am convinced, after reading the testimony, that these scholars are correct. I am confident that the legislation is the best way to prohibit physical destruction of the flag, and I support that without any reservation.

The statute the Judiciary Committee reported to the Senate demonstrates that we can protect the flag as true patriots without tampering with the Constitution, because amending the Constitution is not necessary. If you ask me, amending the Constitution in response to the idiotic actions of one publicity seeking jerk in Texas lionizes him. It gives him a place in history that he does not deserve and that none of us should want to give to him.

We can beat our breasts and wrap ourselves in the flag from now until Christmas, but it is going to be meaningless if we betray the oath we are sworn to uphold. It will be meaningless if we allow one foolish publicity seeker to have the last laugh as we rush to amend the very foundation of our democratic system. It would be meaningless because after 200 years when faced with all the dangers and problems of two world wars, a Civil War, Presidential assassinations and resignations, all the other things—including the Great Depression, the expansion of our Nation—we have not amended the Bill of Rights. Can you imagine how sorry we would look to history if we now amended the Constitution because of some publicity seeking misfit? What a way to go down in history.

In fact, in that regard, in many ways it has already gone down in history. I think about the time that has been spent on the floor of the Senate and in the other body because of his actions. I would be willing to bet that we have spent more time this year talking about the actions of one publicity seeking character, and how patriotic we are in response to him—as though any one of us have to defend our patriotism. We probably have spent more time talking about this man in Texas than we have about health care and its sorry state in this country or about the enormous deficit we have run up in the last 8 years, because nobody wants to do anything that might be unpopular; more than we talked about arms control, even though the two superpowers have the ability to destroy the whole world and everybody on it in a matter of hours; certainly more time than we talked about global warming; certainly more time than we talked about the sorry state of education in this country where we are falling far behind the European nations and Japan, again, because we are unwilling to make the sacrifices necessary. Certainly we talked more about this flag burner in Texas than we have about the fiscal disaster we are going to leave the next generation.

That is why I hope, Mr. President, that once we pass this statute, we do not take the next step and pass a constitutional amendment. After 200 years and despite the enormous pressures this country has faced, we have always resisted amending the Bill of Rights. Suddenly because of somebody who none of us would recognize if he walked on the floor of this Senate, we rush to amend the Bill of Rights. Was his act for the TV cameras in Texas more important to our history than two world wars, assassinations, the Depression, the expansion of our country, and everything else we have faced? Boy, that would be a tragic gift to history if we lionize that person that way.

I think the American people will not tolerate shallow contests of patriotism that jeopardize the freedoms they enjoy. Every night on the evening news, we see by comparison how valuable our democracy is. Americans watch as people in other parts of the world fight and flee and die in pursuit of the freedoms that we have automatically under our Bill of Rights. They see Chinese students and East German citizens risking everything they have in hopes of enjoying some measure of what we in this country take for granted, because of the Bill of Rights. They know we can outlaw flag destruction by passing this legislation, and they will not tolerate political expediency that ultimately diminishes their freedom by amending the Bill of Rights.

So we must appreciate the unparalleled liberties we enjoy and resist any efforts to tamper with our fundamental freedoms. As Thomas Jefferson said, "Those who expect to reap the blessings of freedom must, like men, undergo the fatigues of supporting it."

So today we have the opportunity to support our freedom. We will pass this statute to outlaw physical destruction of the flag, and in the process, we will protect our most treasured symbol and the values it represents.

We will protect the flag with a statute that will obviate any need to tamper with the Constitution. That is the most noble course. We will protect the flag, and we will get back to dealing with the other pressing problems facing our country—like budget deficits, crime and drugs, education, and health care—because it is time we get back to the business of the country.

So let us pass the law and, I say to my friends and colleagues in the Senate, let us not abuse this forum in the memory of the Constitution's framers with any more public exhibitions on who is the fairest patriot in the land. By passing the statute, we attack the problem, we preserve the Constitution of the United States, and then, fellow Senators, we can go back to the very pressing needs of this country.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I support the Flag Protection Act of 1989. I first learned of the Texas versus Johnson decision back on June 2 of this year, when the morning news report on the radio announced the 5-to-4 decision by the Supreme Court of the United States. My instinctive reaction was to question why the court reached that conclusion in light of the many precedents which have limited freedom of speech in a context of obscenity or where, for example, fighting words were used or where, for example, there was inciting to riot or where, for example, there was the cry of "fire" in a crowded theater.

I then secured the decision in Texas versus Johnson, read through it carefully, and concluded that the better arguments, at least in my judgment, lay with the four dissenters as opposed to the five Justices in the majority.

But whenever I see a 5-to-4 decision, Mr. President, I revel in the fact that in the United States we can have these pitched arguments and animated discussions and then decide close questions by 5 to 4, which is as close as it can be decided. We can think through the issues without resorting to violence, as they sometimes do in Cambodia, or in Angola or in Afghanistan or in Panama. We can rationally consider the issue and decide what, if anything, we wish to do about it.

Immediately after the decision came down on June 21, the Senate had a recess, and I traveled back to my home State of Pennsylvania. There I heard many concerns expressed about this decision. The vast majority of my constituents felt that the decision was a bad decision, that the flag ought to be protected. There was discussion about a constitutional amendment versus a statute. My own instinctive sense was that if a statute could provide the protection, that was the course which ought to be followed. There were some who felt that nothing should be done.

During the course of the past several months, many hearings have been held. Senator BIDEN and I held a hearing in Philadelphia, in Old City Hall, near where the Constitution was adopted, and there we heard the learned viewpoint of Judge Louis Pollak of the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, who contended that Congress should do nothing. Judge Pollak commented that it might be very hard for Congress to do nothing. And that led to my response that Congress was expert at doing nothing.

I often quote my colleague, Senator STEVE SYMMS, who says the country is safe when the Congress is adjourned. There are many people who agree with that.

Whether or not Congress should act is an interesting question of public policy. In my view, there is a clear majority in this country which favors protecting the flag, probably sufficient for the super majority required for a constitutional amendment, but I do believe that is only the beginning of the discussion.

I believe that the best articulation of the democratic process is that of Edmund Burke a century and a half ago when he said that in a representative democracy, consideration should be given to the popular will, but the people's representatives ought to come to a decision based on their own judgment, after taking into account the views of their constituents.

Mr. President, the mood of the American public, at least as I gauge it, has shifted substantially since June 21—and it is only a few months—so that no longer is it the kind of pressing issue it was immediately after the decision came down.

Several months after the decision, I held an open house town meeting in Pottsville, and a young man rose in the courtroom where we had the meeting and read a prepared statement. He happened to be very close to a group of Veterans of Foreign Wars wearing their hats, clearly denominated. The young man read a statement urging that we not do anything on the flag issue because the burning of the flag was a symbolism of the great freedom in this country, that such freedom really was our strength, and we would be stronger, not weaker, to allow that sort of conduct.

The people present, the men from the VFW, listened politely and quietly. I would have expected them to respect that statement in any event, but there was no show of emotion. That moment demonstrated to me that Americans are prepared to address this issue in a calm and measured fashion.

Mr. President, I think we are approaching this issue in a very prompt and responsible way. Here we are at the beginning of October, less than 4 months from the date of the decision. We already have a House-passed bill. We have the matter under consideration in the Senate. We have a provision in this bill, which is an unusual one, which provides for expedited review of the constitutional issue.

So it is entirely possible, Mr. President, that within the year, perhaps within a year from the decision in Texas versus Johnson, we could have a decision on the constitutionality of this provision. I think that is highly desirable.

Mr. President, I think we can derive much wisdom in this situation from the concurring opinion of Justice Louis Brandeis in the case of Ashwander versus the Tennessee Valley Authority. So often Justice Brandeis spoke in dissent or in concurrence, and so often those dissents and concurring opinions have become the majority opinions. But this is what Justice Brandeis said in terms of a constitutional abstention doctrine for the Court and I think it applies equally for the Congress.

He said, "The Court will not pass upon a constitutional question, although properly presented by the record, if there is also present some other ground upon which the case may be disposed of. The rule has found most varied application. Thus, if a case can be decided on either of two grounds, one involving a constitutional question, the other a question of statutory construction of general law, the Court will decide only the latter."

And so, too, Mr. President, I think it the better course of wisdom for the Congress to address only the narrower of the two questions. I think that is especially applicable when we take up the first amendment, part of the Bill of Rights, which has never been amended in the 200-year history of this country.

All of our amendments are important, especially the amendments in the Bill of Rights, but I think few would disagree that the most important amendment is the first amendment because it provides for freedom of speech, press, assembly, religion—really the rockbed of our society. That is the amendment which expresses more of America's values than any other, and it ought to be left untouched if we can possibly do so.

Mr. President, my legal analysis is that the pending statute will be approved by the Supreme Court of the United States. I say that for a number of reasons.

First, the decision in Texas versus Johnson was a 5-to-4 decision so that it was decided by the most fragile of majorities.

Second, when the Court addressed the issues in Texas versus Johnson, Justice Brennan was very careful to point out that the decision turned on the issue of expression, political expression. As noted on page 5 of the slip opinion in Texas versus Johnson, the Court said: "We must first determine whether Johnson's burning of the flag constituted expressive conduct." At page 7, the Court again noted the importance of expressive conduct saying, "We have not automatically concluded that any action taken with respect to the flag is expressive." At page 8 the Court noted, "In these circumstances, Johnson's burning of the flag was conduct sufficiently imbued with the elements of communication." At page 9, again there is a reference to the suppression of expression.

The statute before us, Mr. President, is content neutral. The statute does not require a public demonstration. Thus, flag burning would be unlawful even if done privately by an individual in his own home. That might raise some other issues but it is clear that this statute is very carefully drawn.

Mr. President, there are many precedents for upholding this kind of a limitation on speech. As I alluded to before, "Fire" in a crowded theater; none would disagree that kind of expression is not protected by freedom of speech. The fighting words doctrine already described by some of my colleagues in the Chaplinsky case means that speech which is socially unacceptable may be limited in certain circumstances.

The obscenity laws have long been debated in this country. The Supreme Court of the United States has said that obscenity may constitutionally be banned, notwithstanding the first amendment. And it is hard to define obscenity. Justice Potter Stewart said he could not define it, but he knew it when he saw it. The courts have wrestled with it, and the juries have wrestled with it, and it is a matter of great national debate. There are other examples which I shall not belabor at this point which show that certain limitations on speech are legitimate because the first amendment is not absolute.

Mr. President, I suggest further that the Supreme Court of the United States is not oblivious to what happens in our society. The Supreme Court of the United States does not function in such a lofty ivory tower that the Justices do not hear what goes on in the streets of America or what goes on right across the park, in the Congress of the United States.

Incidentally, I think it is noteworthy for those who have not noticed that the pillars and columns of the U.S. Senate line up directly across the park with the pillars of the Supreme Court of the United States. I am not saying the Justices will note our floor statements as much as we note their opinions, but they do know what America is doing and what America is thinking.

That was articulated precisely by a noted scholar, Walter F. Murphy, in his 1962 book "Congress and the Courts." At page 216, Murphy states: "As a participant in public policymaking who has only limited power, a Justice of the Supreme Court, like a legislator, must weigh considerations of political prudence."

Then there is the very famous statement attributed to Finley Peter Dunn, a turn of the century political commentator who said: "No matter whether the Constitution follows the flag or not, the Supreme Court follows the election returns."

While we like to think of the document of the Constitution as having a meaning all unto itself which only requires interpretation, we know that is not so. For example, Brown versus Board of Education ruled that segregation violated the equal protection laws, but that decision overturned a longstanding precedent of the Supreme Court.

Mr. President, there have been examples in our history where the Court's interpretations of the Constitution have changed. This could be the subject of a learned discourse, but let me refer very briefly to the writings by Prof. Gerald Gunther on constitutional law. On page 152 of Gunther's treatise, he refers to the contentious litigation on the New Deal in the 1930's where the Court reversed its position. Gunther notes that the Court interpreted the commerce power narrowly in the case of Jones and Laughlin involving the minimum wage laws and then shortly thereafter in the case of West Coast Hotel versus Parrish, Justice Owen Roberts changed his position in the face of the Roosevelt challenge, the so-called switch in time that saved the 9. An analysis of these and other decisions very strongly suggests that the Court was very closely attuned with what was happening in public opinion.

One other illustration is worthy of comment and that relates to the Communist organization investigations of the 1950's. Again I refer to Gunther on constitutional law, at page 1490, where he refers to the decisions in Watkins and Sweezy and Voningsberg which provoked considerable criticism in the Congress. Thereafter, the Court decided Barenblatt and Uphouse, and the inference was unmistakable that there had been a marked shift in the Supreme Court decisions attributable to the reaction to those cases.

Mr. President, we have had the recent opinion of Justice Scalia in Wilkins versus Missouri. That case stands for the proposition that the Supreme Court looks to a national consensus in certain constitutional decisions.

Stanford versus Kentucky involved a slightly different issue, but it is illustrative of the same principle. That case involved the question of capital punishment for juveniles. Unlike the flag issue, which concerns the first amendment, Stanford involved the constitutional provision on cruel and unusual punishment. But it is relevant that Justice Scalia looks to what he calls a "national consensus" as a basis for determining what the Constitution means.

Is there a national consensus on cruel and unusual punishment? It is true that Justice Scalia can find the national consensus a little more easily in statutes than in a public opinion poll or open house town meetings or the discussions we in the Congress engage in.

Significantly, to Justice Scalia, the Constitution consists of more than naked words. It is the conduct of our country, the feel of our people.

Mr. President, the feel of the people is not an easy matter with respect to the flag. There are some who say that the Congress should do nothing, that the country would be stronger to let this issue rest. There are many who have articulated that point of view, and with some persuasiveness, although it has not persuaded me.

Then there are those who would like to move ahead with a constitutional amendment, and it may be that that will have to be considered. It may be that that day will come, but I doubt it very much, Mr. President. This carefully drafted statute—a content-neutral statute which does not penalize expression—will likely be held constitutional, especially in the face of the Supreme Court's very natural, understandable, historical response to what is on the public's mind.

I submit, Mr. President, that this statute is a very moderate approach which will provide protection for the flag, which will not jeopardize the solidity or the tranquillity of the first amendment to the U.S. Constitution, and which will appropriately accommodate the many competing interests which we face on this issue.

I yield the floor.

Mr. GRASSLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I have enormous respect for the chairman of our committee and for our ranking member. But I will vote against H.R. 2978.

I oppose it because, like its Senate counterpart, S. 1338, it is flatly insufficient to protect our flag from physical desecration.

Frankly, for the reasons my colleague from Utah and I have written in the report on this bill, I find these statutory approaches to be little more than an empty gesture.

Indeed, there should be no mistake about what we are doing here today—or more accurately, what we are not doing.

These bills will not stop anyone from mutilating, defacing, burning, or trampling on the American flag.

Rather, these statutes are the responses for those of us who really do not want to change the result in Texas versus Johnson.

These are the solutions for those who do not think there is a crime when someone burns the flag.

These are the answers for those who think what Gregory Johnson did was constitutionally protected.

Frankly, these bills are a waste of the Senate's time. We already have a Federal statute on the books. It has been there for over 20 years. We do not need another one. Rather, we need to ensure that the law we already have is constitutional.

After Texas versus Johnson, the only way to do that is to amend the Constitution.

Mr. President, I understand that the pressure on my colleagues to support a statutory response is great. After all, who among us can safely vote against a bill styled to protect our flag from desecration?

And the way things have been so neatly arranged on the floor here today—with this bill passed before we can consider an amendment—my colleagues will think that we've solved the problem of Texas versus Johnson.

My colleagues will think that there is no longer a need for an amendment, that they have done all they need to do.

This view, Mr. President, is wrong. In my judgment, it is profoundly wrong.

I start from the proposition that to protect our flag from physical desecration in no way impairs, restricts, or diminishes the first amendment principle of freedom of speech.

Protecting the flag from physical desecration does not prevent a single idea or thought from being expressed. It does not interfere with the numerous ways of communicating an idea. Rather, it merely prevents conduct with respect to one object, and one object alone—our flag.

We can withdraw that one object from threat of physicial desecration without limiting freedom of speech. For many years, a Federal statute and the laws of 48 States did protect the flag from physical desecration.

Who here can say that any harm was done to the first amendment?

For all these many years, were we less free to express ourselves? Of course not.

Some will suggest that passions have cooled on this issue. Or that Gregory Johnson's act was a one-time-only stunt by a crackpot.

Quite to the contrary, there are many budding Gregory Johnsons out there. Indeed, there were widespread reports of flag burnings following the Supreme Court's abortion decision. Would these acts be proscribed by H.R. 2978? Clearly not.

Under the teaching of Texas versus Johnson, these hateful acts would be deemed "speech," and thus protected by the first amendment.

And, a recent news account told of a Penn State University college professor who burned a flag in her classroom, to—in her words—"promote discussion."

Will H.R. 2978 proscribe this conduct? I doubt it, as long as the professor could find some first amendment pretext for her conduct.

Our hearings and recent events have reinforced my belief that we are obliged to respond to the Supreme Court. I do not take such a responsibility lightly.

I was an original cosponsor of the chairman's bill—S. 1338—to protect the flag by amending the Federal flag desecration statute. I supported the bill because if a statute would suffice, that route might be preferable.

However, the hearings held by our committee have convinced me that a statute will not survive a legal challenge, if this statute does what its proponents say it will.

And I must take exception to our consideration of the other body's flag statute—despite the unanimous consent agreement allowing the Senate to consider it.

H.R. 2978 was not the subject of our committee's deliberations. Its provisions differ from those of S. 1338. We received no direct testimony regarding its possible impact, and there is no Senate report on H.R. 2978.

During the Judiciary Committee's hearings on the constitutional amendment and S. 1338—the Senate Flag Protection Act—we were told that a content-neutral statute, if challenged, would more than likely be approved by this supreme court.

This view may or may not be valid, for reasons I will explain later.

But, for argument's sake, if we agree for a moment that a content-neutral statute regarding the flag is constitutional, in my view, H.R. 2978 does not establish a content-neutral statute that will pass constitutional muster.

I am sure there are those who may argue that the first section of H.R. 2978—prohibiting the knowing mutilation, defacement, burning, or trampling upon any flag of the United States—is not constitutional because of its potential impact on free speech.

Indeed, even a facially-neutral statute will be struck down when applied to a person who desecrates the flag as part of a political expression, after Texas versus Johnson. Why? Because the Supreme Court declared in that case that the Government's asserted interest in preserving the flag as a symbol of nationhood and national unity is insufficient to overcome a person's so-called right to burn the flag as part of expressive conduct.

It cannot be denied that the principal, if not the only purpose, in enacting a facially-neutral statute is to prohibit expressive conduct that physically desecrates the flag. No one claims that we are interested in protecting the material, the thread, and the dye in the flag. We protect the flag as a symbol, including against those who would desecrate the flag as part of a political expression. Because this is the clear purpose of the statutory approach, that approach will fall after Texas versus Johnson.

The unconstitutionality of any statute which attempts to protect all forms of flag destruction has been predicted by Justice Brennan, who wrote that any statute "that simply outlawed any public burning or mutilation of the flag, regardless of the expressive intent or nonintent of the actor" would be "invalid for the reasons stated in my discussion of Spence versus Washington."

But I think an even stronger argument against the constitutionality of H.R. 2978 can be made for the provision in the bill that carves out an exception to allow "conduct consisting of the disposal of a flag when it becomes worn or soiled."

Justice Brennan's opinion in Johnson states:

> The Government may not prohibit expression simply because it disagrees with its message, is not dependent on the particular mode in which one chooses to express an idea.
> If we were to hold that a State may forbid flag-burning wherever it is likely to endanger the flag's symbolic role, but allow it wherever burning a flag promotes that role—as where, for example, a person ceremoniously burns a dirty flag—we would be saying that when it comes to impairing the flag's physical integrity, the flag itself may be used as a symbol—as a substitute for the written or spoken word or a "short cut from mind to mind"—only in one direction.
> We would be permitting a State to "prescribe what shall be orthodox."
> We never before have held that the Government may ensure that a symbol be used to express only one view of that symbol.

That is why I believe that a statute—particularly the statute we are debating today, H.R. 2978—lacks the certainty of a constitutional amendment.

In addition, the provisions of section 3 of the bill allowing for expedited review disturb me.

Why should the Congress mandate a mechanism for expedited review of the question of the constitutionality of cases arising under this bill?

Is the issue important enough to warrant such special treatment? Then, I suppose, one may argue that the Congress should seriously consider granting expedited review to cases arising from other worthy contexts such as civil rights, abortion, religious liberty, death penalty.

And has not the Supreme Court just climbed out from under the weight of much of its mandatory review caseload? Just last Congress, we passed legislation largely eliminating the Court's mandatory jurisdiction.

Why do we want to start to load up the Court again when it has been determined that such expedited review is not in the proper interests of the administration of justice?

The fact is that any statute on this subject should not be guaranteed expeditious review in the Courts.

Certainly, there is sufficient disagreement with the effects of H.R. 2978 to leave in doubt its constitutionality.

And, finally, I am still uncomfortable with attempting to overturn a Supreme Court decision—which is grounded in the Constitution—by the passage of a mere statute. We have had some very persuasive testimony on this point.

I prefer the proposed constitutional amendment—Senate Joint Resolution. 180.

Senate Joint Resolution 180 provides for the following amendment to the Constitution:

29-059 O-90-44 (Pt. 16)

The Congress shall have power to prohibit the physical desecration of the flag of the United States.

We believe adoption of this amendment fulfills its intent to overturn the Texas versus Johnson decision and restore the power to Congress and the States to prohibit flag desecration which we believe they always had. In Johnson, the Court said it could not pick and choose which symbols were so unique as to warrant protection:

There is, moreover, no indication—either in the text of the Constitution or in our cases interpreting it—that a separate juridical category exists for the American flag alone.

This amendment established just such a category in the Constitution's text.

I appreciate the concern that Congress should not act in haste by amending the Constitution. Of course, nothing the Congress does regarding an amendment to the Constitution is automatic or pro forma.

By very thoughtful and intentional design, the passage of an amendment signals only the beginning of the process—one that is cumbersome at best.

As we all know, the States must have their opportunity to speak to the issue through ratification. That is how it should be; and thankfully, that is how it is.

I know many of my colleagues fear the effect that an amendment might—in theory—have on some first amendment rights.

And of course we must be serious and thoughtful in our deliberations about a change in the Constitution. But remember, that great document is not inviolate. The Founding Fathers—to their credit—provided for amendment, albeit through a most cumbersome process—and properly so.

Indeed, a number of the amendments are a direct response to Supreme Court decision. These include the 11th, prohibiting the exercise of Federal judicial power over a case brought by a citizen of one State against another State; the 13th abolishing slavery in the United States; the 14th granting the former slaves citizenship and all rights and privileges pertaining thereto; and the 16th, establishing the Federal income tax.

On thoughtful reflection, and having cited my serious reservations regarding H.R. 2978, I must vote against its passage.

A constitutional amendment is the only real solution to restore the law to the status quo prior to the Supreme Court's June decision in Texas versus Johnson. That is all the constitutional amendment does. That is all we ought to be doing, and that is what this debate is all about.

Thank you, and I yield the floor.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Alabama has been waiting. He said he could dispose of his statement here in about 4 minutes, so I will yield to him.

Mr. SHELBY. I thank the distinguished Senator from Tennessee for his courtesy in yielding to me.

Mr. President, I rise today in support of S. 1338, a bill that has been debated here on the floor this afternoon, a bill that provides it shall be a crime to knowingly mutilate, deface, burn, maintain on the floor or ground, or trample upon any flag of the United States.

I will support this bill as a means to protect Old Glory. But I have as others do, and as the Senator from Iowa has just pointed out, serious doubts as to its constitutionality. However, it is my belief that Senate Joint Resolution 180, the proposed constitutional amendment that calls for a constitutional amendment to protect the flag, is a better route to protect the U.S. flag from any form of desecration or abuse.

I am an original cosponsor of this proposed constitutional amendment Senate Joint Resolution 180. The resolution states that "The Congress shall have the power to prohibit the physical desecration of the flag of the United States." This, in my opinion, is a suitable response here, a much stronger response, a response that will protect the flag from now on.

The infringement on the first amendment was the fatal flaw in the Texas versus Johnson opinion. Unlike the law in that case, S. 1338 is content-neutral. Pursuant to S. 1338, whether one's treatment of the flag violates the amended Federal law would not depend on the likely communicative impact of the conduct.

Mr. President, like you and others, I was outraged over the Court's decision in Texas versus Johnson. I categorically and undeniably reject the majority of the Court's decision in the case. The integrity of the U.S. flag must be maintained.

It stretches the imagination to include the desecration of the U.S. flag within the zone of protection offered by the first amendment. The flag of the United States of America embodies the true spirit of democracy. Mr. Justice Stevens elaborated eloquently on this point. It is so important and central to this argument that it cannot be paraphrased but must be quoted in its entirety:

A country's flag is a symbol of more than nationhood and national unity. It also signifies the ideas that characterize the society that has chosen that emblem as well as the special history that has animated the growth and power of those ideas.

So it is with the American flag. It is more than a proud symbol of the courage, the determination and the gifts that transformed 13 fledgling colonies into a world power. It is a symbol of freedom of equal opportunity, of religious tolerance and of goodwill for other peoples who share our aspirations. The symbol carries its message to dissidents both at home and abroad who may have no interest at all in our national unity or survival.

Mr. President, I can reach no other conclusion than that the desecration of the flag of the United States of America must be prohibited. To knowingly mutilate, deface, burn, maintain on the floor or ground, or trample upon any flag of the United States should not fall within the purview of first amendment protection. The scope of the protection is broad but it does not extend this far and we should do something about it.

As a believer in democracy and as a stalwart champion of the Bill of Rights, I have joined with a lot of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle in supporting legislation that calls and provides for the protection of the integrity of the flag by calling for a constitutional amendment. I am going to vote for this bill today but I do not believe it will meet constitutional muster later and we ought to come right behind it with a constitutional amendment and pass it.

I yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to proceed as in morning business for 6 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? If not, it is so ordered.

RECONCILIATION QUESTIONS

Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, the distinguished Republican leader gave notice yesterday of his intent to propound four parliamentary inquiries of the Chair regarding the reconciliation process pursuant to the Congressional Budget Act of 1974. I rise today to address these inquiries from the perspective of the Committee on the Budget.

First, the Republican leader asks: "Can the Senate Budget Committee incorporate into the reconciliation bill, pursuant to the congressional budget resolution, material which was reported after August 4, 1989?"

Mr. President, from the perspective of the Committee on the Budget, the answer is "Yes." Let me quote from the controlling statute, section 310(b) of the Congressional Budget Act: "the Committee on the Budget, * * * upon receiving all such recommendations, shall report to its House reconciliation legislation."

Two things are worth noting about this statutory requirement. First, it is mandatory. The statute says the Budget Committee "shall" report. Second, it only comes into effect upon the happening of a contingency: "Upon receiving all such recommendations." The mandatory requirement for the Budget Committee to report only ripens when all instructed committees have reported.

Now what happens if the deadline for reporting reconciliation arrives and all committees have not reported? In this situation, we have to fall back on the Standing Rules of the Senate. Rule 25(e)(2) gives the Committee on the Budget jurisdiction over "matters required to be reported by it under titles III and IV of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974." Now the reconciliation legislation is a "matter * * * under title III." It is a creature of section 310 of the Budget Act.

Under this rule, in the absence of specific constraints, the Budget Committee has jurisdiction over the reconciliation bill just as other committees have jurisdiction over other bills within their jurisdiction. Thus, after the deadline has passed, the Budget Committee may report out the reconciliation bill absent the contributions of the tardy committees, or the Budget Committee may wait for all committees to report. Only when all committees report, does the Budget Committee's obligation ripen.

What becomes of the bill that includes a title that is reported late? This lateness is a factor that the Chair must take into account in determining whether the bill as a whole constitutes a reconciliation bill deserving of the procedural protections set forth in the statute. It is a factor, but I should think a rather minor factor when weighed along with whether the other requirements are met, that is whether the committees instructed have achieved deficit reduction of the right amount, whether they have done so in their jurisdiction, and whether provisions are otherwise extraneous or nongermane.

Should a title reported late be subject to any extraordinary remedies? We submit, no. The remedy for failure to comply with the amount of reconciliation instructions is that any Senator may rise and offer a motion to recommit with instructions to report back forthwith an amendment that would bring the title into complete compliance.

But could that remedy apply here? It would make no sense. There is no possible amendment that could make the committee's title comply with the deadline for reporting recommendations.

There is no way it could be sent back and the clock turned back to make it comply with the time requirement.

Now, should the tardy committee be otherwise punished? The Committee on the Budget would respond no. There is sufficient sanction in the threat that the Budget Committee might report the reconciliation bill and the Senate might consider it without that committee's title. In essence, the committee that reports in a tardy fashion, gambles upon the patience of the Budget Committee and on the patience of the Senate leadership.

Mr. President, the distinguished Republican leader asked a second question, and it was this:

"Can the Byrd rule, the extraneous rule, be used to attack the House language on capital gains?" That was the question.

We in the Committee on the Budget would submit that the answer to that is yes. The Byrd rule, by its term, applies to a "reconciliation bill." If the Senate were to take up a House-reported reconciliation bill, it would be considering a "reconciliation bill" pursuant to the Byrd rule.

The procedures regarding reconciliation would apply, including that debate would be limited to 20 hours, that no amendment that is not germane would be received, and that the bill wouuld be out of order if it proposed changes in Social Security.

Likewise, the Byrd rule on what is extraneous would apply. Otherwise, the Senate would be forced to take up a measure to which the Senate's own rules would not apply. Clearly, a gigantic loophole would be created and the result would be unacceptable, in that the Senate's own rules could not be used to determine its actions.

Mr. President, what is the effect of a Byrd rule point of order against a provision in the House bill? The text of Senate Resolution 509 from the second session of the 99th Congress, I think, provides some guidance. The effect would be just the same as if the Senate had adopted an amendment striking the offending provision. That is, after all, the effect of the Byrd rule on provisions of Senate reported reconciliation bills.

Third, the distinguished Republican leader propounds the question: "How to write a capital gains amendment that would not have a point of order?"

If I were the Parliamentarian that is the kind of question I would be loath to receive. It is not the job of the Chair, clearly, I would submit, to negotiate a Senator past procedural impediments to any legislation that a Senator might wish to propose.

Suffice it to say that to be in order on a reconciliation bill, an amendment must be germane within the meaning of the precedents of the Senate, it must not be extraneous within the meaning of the Byrd rule, it must not cause the relevant committee to fail to meet its instructed amount of deficit reduction.

Finally, Mr. President, the Republican leader asked this question: "If there are no recommendations voted out by the Finance Committee on reconciliation, can the committee be brought into compliance through a motion to recommit with instructions?".

That question is now moot because the Finance Committee, after staying in session until 3 a.m. this morning, has reported out with reconciliation instructions.

Thus, Mr. President, in sum, our position on the three questions that the Republican leader gave notice he would ask the Chair, I think, has been made clear. I might say that in my experience, the Parliamentarian and his staff have always used great reason and exhibited substantial professionalism and I trust that the Parliamentarian's advice to the Chair will be of the highest quality, as it has been in the past. Of that I have no doubt.

I do not envy their job, however. Personally, I would not want to be subject to the criticism that the person who sits in the Chair of the Parliamentarian often is, without being allowed to speak in response.

In closing, let me salute the Parliamentarian and his office, whatever he decides in response to these questions that we have raised here today.

Mr. DOMENICI. Will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBB). Will the Senator yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. SARBANES. I will yield if my time has not expired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to be permitted to proceed with a question for no more than 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the Senator is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I say to my good friend, the chairman of the Budget Committee, I was not present for the entirety of his comments.

It is the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee suggesting here today that purported reconciliation bills from committees that are after the deadline date, such as the one submitted today by Labor, Health and Human Resources, which substituted for one that they had already submitted before, on time—but in the meantime they have apparently thought they would do something differently—has my colleague suggested that the Senate need not concur in the extension of the deadline date in order to make that bill reported today, as a substitute to one that was timely, be part of a valid reconciliation bill?

Mr. SASSER. I say to the distinguished Senator from New Mexico that the reconciliation could be modified to include the language reported today by the committee, to which the distinguished Senator has reference.

What I am saying is that the Committee on the Budget, at its option, following the expiration of the deadline, may choose to go ahead and report in spite of the fact that one or more committees have not obeyed the directions of the Budget Committee and reported, pursuant to reconciliation.

In this instance, the Committee on the Budget, as the distinguished Senator from New Mexico knows, did not do that. We simply waited until all committees had reported, including the Senate Finance Committee. And my point is that simply by waiting past the deadline, this does not mean that the reconciliation that ripens at that time would not be eligible for the safeguards and the expedited procedures and that surround a reconciliation bill.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, might I say to my good friend from Tennessee, I do not want yet to say I disagree with the Senator. Because I, as I indicated, have not had a chance to review his statement. But tentatively I would tell the Senate, I believe I disagree. I have not had a chance to search the record but my reflection tells me that never have we treated reconciliation this way in the U.S. Senate.

To the contrary, whenever a committee was late we, either by unanimous consent of the Senate extended the time for the filing of that and if reconciliation itself was late we asked for an extension of time to accept reconciliation measures. I say to the Senate, reconciliation is a two-edged sword. For those who want to use it to produce budgets it is a neat instrument. For those who want to perpetrate mischief by including all kinds of legislation, even until the last hour, by getting a majority on the committee to report it: Beware, Senate. Beware. We are in for some real destruction of the rules of the U.S. Senate. This is a serious issue.

I applaud the Parliamentarians, as my colleague has. They have a tough job. But I submit, precedent does make some sense and the precedent is not some: Willy-nilly, we will ask the Parliamentarian, submit it when you can get around to it, the dates do not mean anything. I do not think that is a very good policy. We will look into it a little more. I thank the Senator for granting me time. I yield the floor.

FLAG PROTECTION ACT OF 1989

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Washington [Mr. GORTON].

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, on June 21, 1989, by a vote of 5 to 4 in the case of "Texas versus Johnson," the Supreme Court of the United States invalidated a Texas flag desecration statute which had been used to prosecute a particularly outrageous and egregious form of flag desecration. That statute differed from the one with which we are dealing today, because it included a subjective element, the element that the actor knew that his action would "seriously offend one or more persons likely to observe or discover his action."

I read each of the three decisions filed by members of the Supreme Court of the United States shortly after that decision came down and was convinced of the error of the result and of the reasoning of the two decisions which led to it. The Senate of the United States—and I think in a commendable fashion—responded promptly to the challenge presented to us by that Supreme Court decision.

The distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee, the Senator from Delaware, with my help, introduced and passed an amendment to a bill on another subject. The amendment made it a Federal offense to desecrate the flag without including the subjective clause which appears to have been the basis of decision governing the 5 to 4 Supreme Court decision.

That proposal was thereafter incorporated in S. 1338, of which both the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee and this Senator are sponsors. After a series of hearings in both the House and the Senate, the House-passed H.R. 2978, which is before us today.

The chairman of the Judiciary Committee, for reasons which I think are appropriate, has determined that we would be better served to debate the slightly different House version than we would S. 1338. H.R. 2978 is a slightly different statutory response to the same Supreme Court decision which is based on the Constitution rather than on a Federal or State statute.

The questions before the Senate during the course of this debate are: Can and should this Nation offer some specially protected status to its flag symbol by statute?

Mr. President, my answer to each of those questions is a "yes" answer. I note that this debate becomes an interesting one because there are at least four distinct responses to the question which is before us today. The other three include, "no," we cannot accomplish this goal by statute but we can and should reach this goal by amending the Constitution to the United States.

A subset of the answer which I make here is that, "yes," we can perhaps accomplish this goal by statute but that we ought to pass a statute and also propose a constitutional amendment at the same time.

And the final answer is a negative answer to both questions, not only that we cannot protect our flag symbol by statute but that we should not do so either by statute or by constitutional amendment because we will restrict what are asserted to be first amendment rights of the people of the United States.

I agree with one of the immediate preceding speakers on this subject, the distinguished Senator from Iowa, for the proposition that a statutory approach to this subject is certainly something which will raise constitutional questions, which will be tested in the courts of the United States.

I am inclined to think that the chances that this statute will be found constitutional are fairly good, either by reason of the very real distinctions between this and the Texas statute or because even the Supreme Court reads the headlines and has some understanding of public opinion and may well be affected in part, at least, by the vehemence and breadth of the objection to its decision of June 21, 1989.

In any event, I do feel it important that we move in this direction in exactly the way that the distinguished Senator from Delaware has asked us to move. As a consequence, I will join him not only in supporting this statute, I will join him in opposing a constitutional amendment now before we have a definitive decision by the Supreme Court of the United States on the validity of our approaching this subject by the statute which is before us today.

During the several months following the June 21, 1989 Supreme Court decision, we heard a great deal of what I can only describe as courting and posturing from those who style themselves protectors of the first amendment, defending the decision of the Supreme Court not only as a question of law but as a question of policy.

Mr. President, I know that you, as has this Senator, read at least half a dozen newspaper columns with the most outlandish prosecutions possible of young people or, for that matter, old people for cutting a cake with a flag on it, or for wearing a flag on a T-shirt or a pair of pants, or the like. They are all threatened with jail should the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States pass a statute like this one criminalizing flag desecration.

Mr. President, I believe those objections to be totally without merit. We can come up with such objections, such absurd constructions to almost any criminal statute which has never been passed by the Congress of the United States or by the legislature of any State. Suffice it to say that no such prosecutions of that degree of absurdity were ever brought or, on the rare occasions they were brought, they did not result in convictions leading up to a decision like that in Texas versus Johnson.

I simply wish to remind my colleagues that the situation which brought about the decision in Texas versus Johnson was not cutting a cake with a flag on it or wearing a flag as a personal decoration. It was exactly the kind of outrageous desecration of the flag of the United States which most Americans find to be so obnoxious.

I am totally confident, Mr. President, that this body, the courts of the United States and of the several States and the people of the United States will be able to distinguish between true desecration, a true and invalid attack on the flag of the United States, and a red, white and blue, herring prosecuted under this statute. I am certain that it will not be misused. I am convinced that we are dealing with conduct and not speech, and that conduct of this sort can and should be prohibited by a country which has a belief in its institutions, its symbol and its history and a full and complete dedication to the rights of freedom of speech.

I must say, incidentally, Mr. President, that I am somewhat dubious about the section in this bill on expedited Supreme Court review. Personally, I would just as soon see no such section in the bill at all and allow this statute to be tested like any other. I do understand, however, that the distinguished Senator from Delaware at least has an amendment which I think will improve this section, and which may well be demanded by a majority of this body.

I want to close, Mr. President, by commending the Senator from Delaware for what I consider to be a balanced and thoughtful approach to an issue which is one of high passion, and of great importance. Not only is the flag the symbol of the United States of America, but the debate and careful consideration of these proposals is a symbol of the ability of the Senate of the United States to deal with such issues responsibly.

Mr. BIDEN. Will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. GORTON. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. BIDEN. I would like to make two brief comments, one personal and one relating to substance of the statute.

With regard to the criticism that has been raised and the Senator has spoken to and indicated that he did not subscribe to, that it was going to spawn litigation and we will not know, we have had testimony—and I have been reluctant to respond and/or speak to each of the points that have been raised here, but I think this one is important to speak to—we have had testimony throughout the hearings we held—and they were extensive hearings. They were genuinely thoughtful undertakings, attended by responsible people who participated as witnesses, some of the best minds in America participating in the hearings—consistent testimony that, ironically, the proposed amendment would unquestionably spawn more litigation by a long shot than any statute, this one of the Senator from Delaware, or any other version, because it does not define what desecration is; it leaves that up to 50 different States, and it raises issues that are almost insurmountable, according to most of the witnesses. And these were people who were against the amendment as well as the statute, some of them like the distinguished and renowned Erwin Griswold, a particular case in point.

I ask unanimous consent that I may enter those statements in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statements were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE BUSH AMENDMENT WILL LEAD TO MUCH LITIGATION

One of the arguments made by the proponents of the Bush amendment is that it will eliminate litigation on the issue of flag destruction once and for all. Several witnesses testified that the Bush amendment will generate litigation, not eliminate it, and will, in one witness's words, lead to a "jurisprudence of the 27th Amendment."

Erwin Griswold said:

"I think the Bush amendment will not only encourage, it will stimulate litigation."

Judge Louis Pollack said:

"I think we can say with confidence—that with the Bush amendment, we could anticipate a decade or so of active litigation in which cases would arise in many quarters of the country * * *"

Walter Dellinger said:

"Far from—being a simple and quick solution to a problem, even after ratification, the Bush amendment will create an entirely new jurisprudence of the 27th amendment."

Gordon Baldwin said:

"While you would be allocating authority to the States to make experiments, you would also be inviting litigation, continued litigation * * *."

Brady Williamson said:

"If you have a multiplicity of laws, you are going to have a multiplicity of reprehensible incidents to test the law. So, instead of fostering respect for the flag, we would have the not intended purpose, but I think the inevitable purpose of fostering disrespect for the flag."

Mr. BIDEN. Further, in the interest of time, I say to my colleague, I will not go on, on the second point because so many people wish to speak, but let me just say, and I say this sincerely, it is not only important but it is flattering to the Senator from Delaware that the Senator from Washington rises to speak on behalf of this approach because without any question the Senator from Washington is regarded by his colleagues on the floor, Republican and Democrat alike, as one of the most thoughtful and knowledgeable lawyers in this body.

I want the record to show that the Senator did not come to this position automatically. The Senator was skeptical. The Senator sought constitutional expertise. The Senator labored over this, and the Senator read on the subject, as one of our former older colleagues used to say.

I am flattered that the Senator has concluded to take the position he has because—again, I am not being solicitous—the Senator from the State of Washington, along with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPECTER] and several others, are viewed by all their colleagues as being extremely thoughtful and able lawyers, Senators who understand and appreciate the Constitution and its complexity.

So I thank the Senator for his support. It means a great deal in this undertaking. I yield the floor.

Mr. GORTON. I thank the Senator from Delaware. I yield the floor.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, before my colleague from Washington leaves the floor, and if I may have the attention of the chairman of the committee, I happen to agree with the last point raised by the Senator from Washington. I am going to vote for this, but my belief is we would be much better off without the expedited review because, among other things, if we do not have the expedited review, if it takes 3 years to get this before the courts—and I think the probability is the courts will approve it, but there is some uncertainty—why not have the statute on the books for 3 years. I do not know what the inclination of my colleague from Washington is, but if he wants to toss in an amendment to knock this portion out, I will be a cosponsor of that amendment.

Mr. GORTON. I thank the Senator from Illinois. I am not sure I feel that strongly about it. I have discussed the subject with the Senator from Delaware. He can answer the question better than I. He intends to make some changes. If he wished to make that change, I would certainly support him on it, but I want to work in concert with him to see that we get something through and not go off on a rock on my own.

Mr. BIDEN. If the Senator from Illinois will yield for a moment, the Senator raises a very important and thoughtful question about expedited procedures.

There are from the perspective of the Senator from Delaware two issues relating to that question. The first is the constitutionality of such a procedure, of the Congress as a whole instructing the Court to move in a manner they would not ordinarily move. The second issue is the utility of such an amendment.

If I can speak very briefly to both points, on the question of the constitutionality, it is the judgment of the Senator from Delaware and a number of people in the House as well, including their informed staffs, that the expedited procedure provision as written in the bill before us is probably unconstitutional. Therefore, the Senator from Delaware, along with the Senator from South Carolina and the minority leader, Senator DOLE, are prepared to rectify that by striking the portions of that expedited procedure which in fact are egregious so that it would conform with expedited procedures that we have historically used and have been upheld by the Supreme Court in the past. I will not take the time to go into that now unless the Senator wishes.

On the second point of whether or not we should have the expedited procedure provisions in this statute, the Senator from Delaware, when he, along with his colleague from Delaware and Senator COHEN from Maine, drafted the original statute he did not include the expedited procedure for several reasons, but the practical fact of life is that there is a need for accommodation and comity in the Congress, at both ends of this long corridor, not just up and down Pennsylvania Avenue. The House Members felt, after holding extensive and thoughtful hearings, that they wanted this procedure for the following reason: They felt it was important that the issue be resolved as rapidly as reasonably possible so that those who wish and believe the only way to go is the constitutional amendment would not be in any way prejudiced by having voted for this particular statute.

I share the point of view of the Senator from Illinois, but the practical fact of life is that it does not do any damage to the substance of the statute, and it does add, for those who are truly uncertain about whether or not to go with the statute or the amendment, preferring a statute because the amendment is such a momentus undertaking, that they would not in any way find themselves in the position that this issue would not ultimately be able to be resolved 2, 3, 4, 5, years down the road.

Last, I say to my friend from Illinois, he raises a central political point—not political in a partisan sense, a political fact of life. That is, if the statute is passed, Mr. President, from the moment we pass it and if it is signed by the President and becomes law, as I sincerely hope it will be, it will be a Federal violation to in fact burn the flag, trample on the flag, et cetera. So the flag sitting to the Chair's right will be protected.

The notion that expedited procedures have been put into place, in my view, does not in any way diminish that protection. I am so confident of the outcome of this before the Supreme Court that I am not reluctant to acquiesce in the House's very strongly held desire to have expedited procedures.

I am not suggesting the Senator agrees with my explanation. I hope that does, though, at least explain why the Senator from Delaware has gone along with the expedited procedure provision as, hopefully, amended.

Mr. SIMON. I understand the position of the Senator from Delaware, and I do not feel so strongly that I want to offer an amendment myself, though my preference would be not to have the expedited procedure.

The second concern I have, though I support the legislation, is the old story of two parents who go out, saying we are just running down to get some gas at the service station. They tell the children do not go near the cookie jar while we are gone.

Well, you know the first thing those young people are going to think about at the time is that cookie jar. I fear that by simply passing the statute it is going to maybe encourage some fringe elements out there. I hope I am wrong on that.

Then speaking to the issue itself, I join everyone in respect for the flag. You visit my home in southern Illinois. We have 12 acres in that little town of Makanda, IL. You will see a flagpole and a flag flying. When I was in the service, as I know the Presiding Officer was in the Marines, I was in an outfit he might not have heard of, the Army. One of the things I was proud to do—maybe a little old fashioned—when I was at a football game and they played that "Star Spangled Banner," was stand there and salute; it did someting to you.

I remember being overseas, and I visited England. I saw some horses and, like everyone else, I went over to see what was going on. The man next to me nudged me and said, "Take off you hat." He said, "That's the Queen's flag going by" and I respected that. I have great respect for the flag, but I also have great respect for the Constitution.

And we ought to handle this statutorily. I happen to think the Supreme Court decision was wrong. Justice Hugo Black, the all-time champion of freedom of speech, Justice Hugo Black who believed so much in freedom of speech, believed that liable laws are unconstitutional. I am pleased his view did not prevail.

There may be some in the press gallery who will have differing views on that. But Justice Hugo Black said, "Free speech does not include burning the flag." I think the Court decision is wrong. I am a champion of freedom of speech.

But I hope we take this route rather than the constitutional amendment. The reason is a very simple one. As you look at our history, whenever we have had an unpopular decision by the Supreme Court, there is almost always a rush to change the Constitution.

It is very interesting as you look back in our history. At one point we had an unpopular Court decision on polygamy. We almost ended up with an amendment to the U.S. Constitution outlawing polygamy.

I do not favor polygamy. My colleague from Arkansas does not. My colleague from Virginia does not. But I think we would agree that you do not handle that problem with a constitutional amendment. I think there are many problems that we face that we can handle statutorily without trivializing the Constitution. That is my fear.

I hope we pass a statute. I would sooner have it without the expedited procedure in it. I think that is a mistake, frankly, but I do not feel strongly enough on it that I want to introduce an amendment. But I hope we refrain from passing a constitutional amendment.

I know there is the passion of the moment. There is a feeling we ought to stand up and have that constitutional amendment. But just as we have great respect for the flag, we also ought to have great respect for the Constitution, and not handle it through a constitutional amendment.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. BUMPERS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BUMPERS. Before the Senator from Illinois leaves the floor, I want to commend him for what I consider to be a very eloquent and concise statement, and what I have to say is largely redundant because he has already said it so well.

Now I have never been favorably disposed toward television evangelists, but I have sort of separated Billy Graham out from that crowd because he said something one time that was very impressive to me in San Francisco. He said people are always coming up to him and saying: "What would Jesus say if he came back today?" He held up the Bible, and he said, "He would say exactly what he said the first time."

If James Madison and John Jay and Alexander Hamilton were alive today, they would say exactly what they said the first time.

I agree with Arthur Schlesinger, Sr., who said that in Philadelphia in 1787 the greatest assembly of minds ever in the history of the world congregated. And we the people of the United States are the recipients of that tremendous wisdom. The Constitution is the thing that has given us the greatest organic law in the world. It is the thing that has made us the second-oldest living democracy in the world next to little Iceland, where incidentally, the literacy rate is 99.9 percent.

But my point is this: I said on this floor dozens of times, when you start talking about amending the Constitution, I belong to the wait-just-a-minute club. I intend to vote for this bill. I am deeply troubled by the expedited procedures. And there may be even a constitutional problem with that.

But I think in the past, the Supreme Court has allowed direct appeals from three-judge courts. But I do not like that part of it. I am sorry we are debating the House bill instead of the language of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Having said that, Mr. President, I also want to say that as I sat here the other night and listened to the amendment on obscenity and indecency there is something in me that was offended by that amendment, not because I am such a great patron of the arts. I agree with everybody here that those exhibits were trash. But you know beauty is in the eye of the beholder. To me, they were terribly offensive. They were trash.

But to suggest an amendment as broad as the one we defeated the other night which was supposed to cure one of those once-in-a-lifetime aberrations was like a finely tuned surgeon using a broad ax.

So I was very pleased that we defeated that amendment the other night, but the point I want to make is there is something in that which is offensive to me because there is a suggestion that some of us, simply because we defend the Constitution and people's freedom of expression through art, speech, religion, and press, that somehow or the other we just do not understand what pornography and obscenity are.

There was not a single soul in the Senate the other night who was not offended by the Mapplethorp exhibits. I was offended by the other one too.

But the point I want to make is when it comes to desecration of the flag, I yield to nobody in this body about my love for the flag. I have never had as many goose bumps in my life as when I graduated from boot camp in the Marine Corps. We had our final parade down the parade ground in San Diego. And after 10 weeks of the most barbaric, brutal treatment I have ever been subjected to in my life, I was really happy that I had endured it, and I was happy that I had about a half-inch of hair that had grown on my head since I went in.

But above all, marching down the parade field behind the American flag while the Marine Band played the "Marine Corps Hymn," I have never been so exhilarated in my life. There is not one person in this body, though, that does not love the American flag just as much as I do. I love it just as much as anybody else.

But because some lunatic in Texas, and in a very isolated instance, decided to desecrate the flag, I am not sure we need to rush to change the works of James Madison, Alexander Hamilton, and in an indirect way, Thomas Jefferson, John Jay, John Adams, George Washington, and all the others.

There are two questions, Mr. President, for this body to answer: That is why and how? Why do we need a statute to prohibit flag burning; and No. 2, how can we accomplish this in a constitutional way?

I think I have better language. I have language that I consider preferable to that which is being offered here. But I am not going to offer it as a substitute. I intend to vote for the language that we are being presented.

The answer to the first question, why, is apparent. Since the Texas versus Johnson decision in June, we all have had a chance to examine ourselves, the reverence and respect we have for our flag, and how much we cherish this great symbol.

I do not think there is anybody who is more patriotic than anybody else in this body. Most people in this body have served in the service at some time or other. I do not think anybody would disagree that one of our most blessed freedoms under the Constitution is freedom of speech, freedom to express ideas, to dissent, to disagree. But the history of this Nation illustrates that these freedoms enshrined in the Bill of Rights are not absolute.

We are not always unconditionally free to say or do whatever we want, whenever we want, and wherever we want. This is true of the two most precious freedoms in the first amendment, free speech and freedom of religion. What one thinks and believes in his heart is absolutely protected.

But some speech is unspeakably offensive to others and is not and should not be protected by the Constitution. The Supreme Court has held that "fighting words" fall outside of the protection of the first amendment. In Chaplinsky versus New Hampshire, in 1942, the Supreme Court upheld the conviction of a Jehovah's Witness for calling a policeman a "goddamned racketeer" and a "damned fascist," even though that speech was clearly politically motivated. Generally defamatory or slanderous statements are not protected by the first amendment. A person cannot simply say or publish whatever they please about another person, without regard to the truth or falsity of the statement.

It is true, the standard is higher when the person being written about is a public official. There are times when, as a public official, I hate the New York Times versus Sullivan decision. If I am going to sue a newspaper for slandering me, I have to prove that it was done with actual malice. The fact that it is false does not give me a right to judgment against them. I have to prove that they did it with actual malice to get me. I have trouble with that sometimes.

So the Court has also held that obscenity is wholly unprotected by the free speech clause. We cannot always say whatever we want. We are not always able to speak wherever we want. The Government has the right to place restrictions on, No. 1, the time; No. 2, the place; and, No. 3, the manner of speech. For example, access to public property, which is not a public forum, such as a jailhouse, can be restricted for purposes of a political demonstration, as Justice Black said in Adderley versus Florida, in 1966. Who here is not familiar with Justice Holmes when he said one does not have the right to yell "fire" in a crowded theater.

Does anybody here believe they have the unfettered right to conduct a demonstration in a courtroom? Of course not. You do not have an absolute right to demonstrate in the galleries of the U.S. Senate, while we are trying to conduct the business of the country. No citizen has a right, an absolute right, to walk onto the Senate floor and carry out a demonstration.

The Court has consistently ruled that free speech can be limited to certain times and places. These limitations on free speech are not only permissible under the Constitution, but they make common sense. Any American, in the exercise of his or her free speech, has a right to spray paint the words "U.S., get out of Nicaragua" on the front of their homes, but they do not have the right to spray that on the Washington Monument. And the Court would not permit it under any of the first amendment guarantees.

There are some forms of conduct which are injurious to people. The Government has the authority to legislate against this conduct, notwithstanding that free speech or religion may be involved. The aims behind these limitations are among the highest and most responsible purposes of government. One, to protect the public health; two, to insure domestic tranquillity; and three, to preserve justice.

While our political and religious freedoms rest at the very core of the first amendment, there are instances when even these can be reasonably curtailed. That is especially true when the speech in question is tied to conduct. For example, if this fellow Johnson down in Dallas, TX, had that day back in 1984 just verbally assaulted the flag, there would not have been a thing in the world the Government could do about it. We could not have silenced him, unless his words caused a breach of the peace or started a riot or was calculated to do those things.

The State of Texas did not prosecute him for saying "America the red, white, and blue, we spit on you." He was not prosecuted for that. But Johnson coupled that speech with a physical act; namely, destroying the flag. Again, while the Court has held time and time again that political and religious speech enjoy the highest degree of constitutional protection, they are indeed subject to limitations where the speech is mixed with conduct, as opposed to pure speech.

Now, there are certain kinds of conduct that are simply unacceptable to society. They are not protected by the Constitution. For example, Congress can prevent the killing of an endangered species such as the bald eagle. We can prevent the pollution of our waterways; we can prevent the dumping of hazardous waste into our food chain; and we can prevent the vandalism of gravesites and the destruction of U.S. mailboxes, an evening pastime in rural America. We can do that, despite the fact that the perpetrator of those acts may be politically motivated.

Now, if the Government can prohibit these destructive acts, then why can it not prevent the desecration of the flag? Does a U.S. mailbox have more protection than the flag? In this respect, the Court's opinion really violates common sense. It seems to me that if we cannot protect the flag, we cannot protect anything. To almost any criminal act there is a potential or arguable first amendment defense. For example, could a citizen murder a declared card-carrying Communist and then use as his defense that he did it to protest the despotic policies of communism? Why, of course, he cannot do that.

Nobody today disputes the Government's ability to ban polygamy, despite a Mormon's religious claim that this practice is his God-given right and done in the free exercise of his faith. The Supreme Court, on this issue, held 100 years ago, in Davis versus Beason, that polygamy was not protected. And as the Senator from Illinois said, everybody wanted to rush out and pass a constitutional amendment banning polygamy. In the wake of the Johnson case, by letting the current law stand unamended, it is virtually unenforceable.

To fail to pass the bill before us would mean choosing dissent at the expense of honor. On the other hand, if Texas versus Johnson had been decided the other way, would we not have chosen honor at the expense of dissent? Dissent is a great political tradition. Lincoln said, "To sin by silence when they should protest makes cowards of men."

I protest. Some of my constituents unhappily protest the way I vote. But it is their constitutional right and frankly their duty to express themselves.

Is there not a way for both of these voices, honor and dissent, to ring fully and equally no matter how raucous, how loud, or how shrill? Is there not a balance between these strong competing interests? I believe this bill essentially addresses that balance.

As the committee record indicates, a number of constitutional scholars have testified that there are legal ways to prohibit flag burning. These are mainly predicated on the Johnson case's focus on the communicative nature of the Texas statute, namely, that a defendant, in order to be convicted, had to engage in conduct that "would seriously offend one of more persons likely to observe or discover his action." Obviously, a conviction for flag burning under these circumstances would silence a political message based on the subjective reactions of other people.

Mr. President, nobody is suggesting anything about how offended somebody may be. People may be listening to my speech right now and be offended. But that does not make what I am doing unconstitutional.

These constitutional opinions of the Court deserve great deference because we ought not to willy-nilly amend the Constitution every time somebody wakes up with a headache.

The statute that we are considering today, the statute that is on the books here today is a disaster. I read it again before I came over here. It is unbelievable. And the Texas statute was a disaster. Both of them were practically invitations to the decision the Supreme Court finally reached.

The statute that we are considering today bans conduct only, not speech, and the conduct is the physical act of damaging the flag.

Moreover, it requires what lawyers refer to as "scienter" or "mens rea" or intent. There must be knowledge by the defendant of what he is doing. One who accidently or inadvertently damages a flag cannot be convicted under this statute. The bill today does not ban a point of view, but only an act. And under these circumstances, since the ban is not content-based, it should not invoke the Supreme Court's strict scrutiny test under which the Government must advance a compelling interest for such a ban.

Here, since the revised statute is content-neutral or does not suppress expression, then a less stringent standard controls for judging the constitutionality of the statute.

Finally, Mr. President, and contrary to the assertion of the Senator from Utah, we are not trying to reverse a constitutional decision by a mere majority vote. We are attempting to pass a statute which will not suffer from the same constitutional objections as the Texas law struck down in Johnson.

It is a sound constitutional maxim that we should closely tailor our means to meet a desired end where freedom of expression is involved. We ought not to amend the Constitution especially when a much less drastic means is readily available. It is analogous to the doctrine of "judicial restraint." We do not want the Supreme Court to rule on constitutional issues when it does not need to. And we ought not to amend the Constitution when statutory relief is available.

We ought not to tamper with the majestic phrases of that document. To me the medicine is worse than the disease. I think we ought to give this legislation a chance.

I do not know if I will ever vote for a constitutional amendment, but I certainly do not intend to until this statute has been tested by the Supreme Court.

This is totally consistent with precedent. When other statutes passed by Congress have contained constitutional flaws—take, for example, the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act which the Supreme Court said was unconstitutional, or at least part of it. What did we do? They brought it back here and we changed it to meet the constitutional objection. We did not jump out there and pass a constitutional amendment. We amended that bill to make it acceptable.

And so it is with this case. The Court did not say that flag burning could never be prohibited. It said that a criminal conviction could not lie under this particular Texas statute because it was designed to prohibit political speech under the cover of a ban on flag burning. I believe the Supreme Court erred in the Texas versus Johnson decision, even though I must say the Texas statute, like the Federal statute, looked like an invitation to being declared unconstitutional.

But I have disagreed with the Supreme Court a number of times. Sometimes I felt that history proved me right. And sometimes history has proven the Court right.

While this time I believe I am right, on another day and with another statute I believe the Court will get it right. And that being the case, Mr. President, this statute is a prudent and wise step and I support it.

It is my hope that with its passage we can return to the pressing business of the Nation, to the real threats facing our country, to problems such as the monstrous deficit which ties our hands every time we turn around; to the war against drugs where Americans are getting gunned down like animals in the streets; to the protection of our environment, the pollution and desecration of which are harming the health of our citizens and our children.

With the passage of this bill I hope we can return to the problems which actually threaten our future and our children's future in a very ominous and real way.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, as we all know, on June 21, 1989, the Supreme Court in its now infamous decision, Texas versus Johnson, invalidated a Texas flag desecration statute. This ruling aroused the deepest possible concern and indeed even outrage in the Senate, in the Congress, and across America. And it called into question State statutes in 47 States.

Within a week, both bodies of Congress passed resolutions expressing our strong concern about this Supreme Court decision. As Members of the Senate went back to their home States, we all heard the same thing, all across America. We heard outrage. We heard the people express their concern. In fact, I am sure we saw people in tears over this decision. I did and I know most Senators did. In city after city across the State of Mississippi, veterans groups, civic groups, and other concerned individuals collected petitions with hundreds and thousands of signatures expressing their concern about this decision and calling on the Congress to take action, in fact calling on the Congress specifically to pass a constitutional amendment that would prohibit the desecration of the flag.

I assure my colleagues, as I am sure they already know, that this is an issue that will not go away. There will be another court challenge. There will be another appeal. This flag burning issue will flare up again and again. So while our constitutents now may not be as much in an uproar as they were when this decision was first handed down in June, it is a passion that is just under the surface and it will come up again. So I think it is highly appropriate that the Congress act and not just hope that this issue will go away.

The House had hearings and acted on a statute. The Senate Judiciary Committee had extensive hearings. And the result of those hearings led to this legislation that we are considering here today, S. 1338.

I have taken the time to read the language of this bill again and again, and I know, as lawyers in this body, we could argue back and forth about this word or that word. Is it strong enough? Is it too strong about expedited procedures? As a matter of fact, I feel strongly that we need expedited procedure because I do not think this bill is going to do the job.

It is an effort to do the right thing by protecting the flag from desecration. But I also fear that the courts and the Supreme Court in particular will eventually strike this down.

How do we know? We do not know. That is what our judicial system is for. That is what expedited procedures are for, not to wait for somebody to burn the flag or in fact encourage somebody to burn the flag so we can test this law that is on the books. But I fear that it will not be enough. Still I will support it because I do think it is well-meaning; it is a step in the right direction.

If it will work, fine. None of us want to amend the Constitution just for the sake of amending the Constitution. We do not like to do that. But this is an issue, I think, that if we cannot address the problem with a law, we are going to have to amend the Constitution.

So today I am going to vote for this bill and hope it will work. If it does not, I am still absolutely committed to the constitutional amendment language that has been proposed by the President and by others in the Senate and the House.

In addition, I will vote for this measure because we have been assured that this body, as well as the other body, will have an opportunity to vote on the constitutional amendment. That is absolutely essential as far as I am concerned. So today I will not attempt to act like a lawyer analyzing all the details. Just suffice it to say that I will support this bill because it does specifically say that anyone "whoever knowingly mutilates, defaces, burns, maintains on the floor or ground, or tramples upon any flag of the United States shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both."

It is good language. It is a step in the right direction. And it also is evidence to the American people that we are going to act here today on this and we are going to act on a constitutional amendment. We will come up with legislation that will protect the flag, the symbol of all that is good and sacred and holy about this great country.

I yield the floor.

(Mr. KOHL assumed the chair.)

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, we have several more people who would like to speak on this issue, including Senator HUMPHREY, Senator METZENBAUM, Senator MCCONNELL, and several others. Senator METZENBAUM just walked off the floor.

Let me say while we are waiting for them to arrive that I think the quality of the discussion and debate—I guess we cannot call it a debate because we have not been challenging and/or reinforcing what has been said here—but the quality of the comments made by our colleagues thus far has been, I think, very significant and very straightforward.

I do think, though, that there are a few misnomers. I will take just a moment while we are waiting for those who have not spoken yet to get a chance to speak.

Mr. President, we find ourselves having it said by some that the reason for this statute is to head off a constitutional amendment. That is not the reason. That may be the result. I for one do not believe the constitutional amendment in question is sound or valid on its face. We will get a chance to debate that when we come back on October 17. So I will not take time to point out why I think that particular amendment, constitutional amendment, is so deficient.

I would point out that it is very possible, in the mind of the Senator from Delaware, to draft a constitutional amendment that does not do violence to the first amendment, that will not spawn interminable and unlimited litigation and that will set a standard that is a standard for the Nation.

Ironically, the reason we usually conclude that we should go the route of a constitutional amendment is because we want to set a national standard. We did not say to the States, for example, you determine when it is appropriate, what age it is appropriate for your constituency, your citizens, to vote in Federal elections. They are Federal elections. We said there is one standard, everyone 18 years or older can vote in a Federal election. We did not pass a law saying to the States, now the States are hereby authorized to determine at what age anyone in the United States can vote for Federal office.

Ironically, we find ourselves in the position that the very people who argue the strongest for there being a national standard to protect their flag are proposing an amendment and supporting an amendment that requires a protection based upon local community standards.

Now we have that law. We have that as the law of the land because of the Supreme Court on matters of pornography and what other people would refer to as injudiciously and the like. But here we are saying we want a national standard. So when we get into the debate that will occur and is occurring about whether or not the statute that the Senator from Delaware and others are proposing is one that is going to end up in litigation, I respectfully suggest that at the appropriate time we will point out at some length—by some length I mean a half hour or an hour—how disruptive the constitutional amendment which is being discussed as the alternative to this statute is.

Today we are in the interesting dilemma, an understandable dilemma, that we are focusing on the statute as we should. And those who do not support the statute are measuring it as against a constitutional amendment that has not been discussed, dissected and/or debated as if it is automatic that merely by passing a constitutional amendment we have rectified a situation that we are all attempting to rectify, that is protecting the flag.

The constitutional amendment merely enables States to make their individual judgments about whether or not they wish to have a law that protects the flag from desecration. Well, desecration is something that has never been defined. It is nowhere defined in the law. It is nowhere defined in the statute and therefore it is left up to every State legislature to determine what desecration is.

In the State of Maine, desecration may be viewed as allowing the flag to be flown on the day that moose season opens. In Mississippi, it may be desecration by putting an American flag decal on the side of a hot dog vendor's machine at the Ole Miss-Alabama game. I know it sounds bizarre, but literally those things can happen.

But, more importantly, what the Senator from Delaware is worried about is by having that incredibly broad mandate left to the States and the States not having to worry about whether or not they are crossing over that line, that first amendment line, if you will, are able to do things that will maybe cause them in times to come to respond to the—how can I say it?—respond to the immediate public sentiment of the moment.

For example, I can imagine in Illinois, the Illinois legislature, when the Nazis wanted to march through Skokie, as you will recall. I know the Presiding Officer is fully aware of that dilemma and how troublesome that was to not only millions of Americans but to millions of people who find it so repugnant. And here the Nazis specifically picked Skokie because it is overwhelmingly Jewish, Jewish American. Now I can imagine the pressure being built in the Illinois State legislature saying, "The American Nazi Party cannot display the American flag; cannot fly the American flag." Well, I quite frankly personally think that would be wonderful, but it would also be a real step in the wrong direction.

To the best of my knowledge, one city in Vermont, up until last year, had the only Socialist mayor in the United States of America; an avowed Socialist, member of the Socialist Party, elected mayor.

I can picture some incident occurring in Vermont and the Vermont Legislature saying the Socialist Party at their convention cannot display the American flag.

You say "OK, BIDEN, so what? Maybe we should have laws saying the Nazis cannot display the American flag and the Socialist Party cannot display the American flag."

What is the next step? How do we move down the line? How about if a third party emerges that is legitimate that the major two parties do not like?

How about if there is a decision in the State of Delaware that we cannot display the American flag on any apparel, and a woman from Pennsylvania, having purchased a $3,000 sequined dress from a designer house in Philadelphia, is invited to the Governor's ball in Delaware? Does she have to worry when she crosses the State line if her dress has the American flag on it?

I know that sounds silly and it sounds like I am just looking for these outlandish examples. But it is real life. It is the way it will work in American politics. We will have 50 different standards in 50 different States.

The reason I bother to take this little bit of time to speak to the amendment is that this statute must be measured on its own, on all fours. Look at this statute by itself.

But, in addition to that, if we are going to compare the amendment to statute, people should understand what amendment we are comparing. Relatively speaking, there is no doubt that the constitutional amendment as proposed would, in fact, spawn years of litigation unless every State in the Union got together and decided it was going to pass one simple, straightforward amendment which mirrored the statute being proposed.

I see my friend from Ohio has come to the floor. He has been so patient. He has been on and off the floor probably for the past 4 hours or so. I will not take any more time at this moment.

But I do want my colleagues to understand that they should not measure this statute against some absolute that clearly resolves the problem. The constitutional amendment proposed does not resolve the dilemma of protecting the American flag. And there are some States which may conclude not to have any statute, such as the State of Wyoming right now, and someone would still be able to burn the flag or trample on it or say whatever they want to say about it.

We really are on a slippery slope when we start to talk about a constitutional amendment that allows individual States to set whatever standard they wish and define in any way they want what the word "desecration" means, and to be able to apply it subjectively for political reasons and for emotive reasons that may occur at the time.

I now yield the floor to my colleague from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM].

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to this bill.

I love the flag as much as any American. I shared the scorn and outrage which Americans felt toward Gregory Johnson's cowardly act of flag burning.

But one of the things that makes this country the greatest and freest in the world, is that we protect free expression even when we hate the message and despise the messenger. Johnson's act communicated little other than some sort of infantile rage at our system of government. It was a contemptible message. But in this country, we do not jail people for expressing contemptible ideas.

I took a position early on this issue. I said that while Gregory Johnson's form of protest was detestable, the Court properly decided to protect his right to protest in that manner. I said that while flag desecration was abhorrent, Congress did not need to pass legislation to prohibit it.

I expected to be criticized for taking this position. But I am frank to say, I have not been. I think I probably received more commendation than condemnation.

The fact is that the American people are not clamoring for action on this issue. They know that respect for the flag is not under siege. That is why there is no grassroots firestorm for jailing flag burners or for amending the Constitution.

When I was home in Ohio last month, I hardly heard a thing about the flag. And I was not alone. News reports indicate that few legislators were pressed on the flag issue while home for the August recess.

The truth is that the American people understand the principles at stake here, apparently better than either Congress or the President. The most important right symbolized by the American flag is the right to differ. The Court's decision in Johnson upheld a bedrock principle of the first amendment, which is that Government may not forbid the expression of an idea simply because society finds the idea itself offensive or disagreeable.

The right to free expression is meaningless if that right only protects expression sanctioned by the majority. The depth of a nation's commitment to free speech is measured by its willingness to tolerate expression which most of its people find repellent. And the strength of a nation's unity—its sense of shared values—is measured by its capacity to tolerate expression which tries to destroy that unity. Strong nations tolerate dissenting expression. Weak nations suppress it. It is that simple.

The Court's decision in the Johnson case was grounded in these enduring principles. Rather than try to craft a legislative response to that decision, the Constitution and the flag would best be served by having Congress do nothing.

Think about the brutal repression which took place in China earlier this year. Look at the fervor with which thousands are fleeing from Eastern Europe. Those are regimes which restrict protest and suppress dissenting expression. Now we should ask ourselves this: Which is more consistent with American values—tolerating outrageous protest or punishing it?

I recognize that the bill before us is intended to protect the flag in all circumstances, rather than simply in those instances in which treatment of the flag is offensive or contemptuous. Since its purpose is content-neutral, there is a real possibility that a majority of the Supreme Court will hold this bill to be constitutional.

But I oppose the bill because it will have the effect of forbidding expression which has been protected by the Court. I do not think we should be passing legislation which affects liberties protected by the Bill of Rights, unless there is a real and compelling need to do so. And I think it is obvious to everyone that flag desecration is not a real problem in this country.

The Court's decision in the Johnson case was courageous and unpopular. It illustrates the wisdom of allowing the Supreme Court to have the last word on the Constitution, thereby preventing the sweep of its protection from varying according to the passions of the day.

The controversy surrounding the Johnson decision illustrates the paradox of living in a nation which is both governed by majority rule and fiercely protective of individual liberties. Johnson's act was detestable and contrary to all that Americans hold dear. But the Court's decision in Johnson was laudable and fully consistent with the principles underlying the Bill of Rights.

I think that some of us are afraid to stand up for those principles. It seems that we cannot summon enough political courage to say to our constituents that protecting free speech means protecting even expression which we find to be wrong-headed, outrageous, and offensive. I think we are afraid that the American people will not understand that. I think we are afraid that our opponents in the next election will be even less understanding.

Mr. President, instead of acting out of fear, let us show a little faith. Let us have faith that the American people understand that tolerating the outrageous protest of a few kooks is the price to pay for the liberties secured by the Bill of Rights. Let us have faith that the flag is well protected by the pride and respect which millions of Americans feel whenever they see it flying.

Since the Johnson decision, we have not seen an outbreak of flag desecration, but instead a spontaneous outpouring of renewed commitment to the flag. To enact legislation to protect the flag betrays a lack of faith in our Constitution and a lack of faith in our people's commitment to the flag. Rather than pass a law, Congress should simply recognize that the flag's safety is most firmly secured by the legions of Americans who quietly, routinely, and freely decide to display it every day.

Mr. President, stop and reflect. If you believe that there is a political tidal wave that you cannot resist, you are wrong. And to my colleagues in the Senate I say the same things. If you think there is some kind of a tidal wave out there that demands that you pass some legislation in connection with the flag, you are wrong. The American people are wiser than you think. It is not really the cloth flag we love, but the country over which it waves. The true fabric of our Nation can be found in the values and liberties set forth in our Bill of Rights. This legislation would not strengthen us as a nation. It would weaken us as a model of freedom for the world.

I urge my colleagues to reject this legislation, as well as the constitutional amendment to be debated later. That would be the right decision. I am concerned that the political decision will be the one that is made rather than the right decision.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, the purpose of the legislation before us is simple and it is direct. It is to make Federal law on the destruction of the American flag conform to the requirements of the first amendment.

This bill will provide a penalty against physical abuse or destruction of the flag, for whatever purpose, It does not seek to shape or direct speech.

Its purpose is directly to correct a weakness in the prior Federal flag statute which the Supreme Court identified in the case of Texas versus Johnson earlier this summer.

The bill does not, as some have tried to claim, overturn a Supreme Court judgment by legislation. Instead it corrects the weakness a divided Court found in a similar State statute, where the penalty for vandalism was conditioned on the offensiveness of the action. This bill makes the prohibited conduct illegal, not its offensiveness or intent.

The freedom of speech clause of the first amendment to the Constitution explicitly protects the right of all Americans to speak freely. It says nothing about actions. The speech provision of the Constitution protects the right of Americans to say things, but does not create a right to do things.

The Supreme Court has both limited and expanded the first amendment's protection.

As a limitation, it has imposed restrictions on some forms of speech. In the 1919 case of Schenk versus United States, Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes wrote that:

> The character of every act depends on the circumstances in which it is done. The most stringent protection of free speech would not protect a man in falsely shouting fire in a theater and causing a panic.

Those words represented a commonsense principle of behavior that is essential to preserve a civil society with free speech. Clearly, no first amendment right would today protect a statement by an airplane passenger that he was about to explode a bomb, even if his purpose was to call attention to his political views.

The Court has expanded first amendment protection to include certain actions, even though the amendment itself specifically protects only speech. The Court has reasoned that certain actions are closely related to speech and should be regarded as a form of speech, particularly where political ideas are involved.

In those cases involving action—the Court calls it "symbolic speech" or "expressive conduct"—the Court balances the governmental interest in prohibiting the conduct against the burden placed on the individual by not permitting the conduct to occur.

In reaching that balance, reasonable people can, do, and have disagreed.

In the flag burning case itself, the Court divided 5 to 4.

In another case, a divided court ruled that homeless persons wishing to demonstrate their destitution could not sleep in the square before the White House. The Supreme Court said that sleeping was not a form of speech protected by the Constitution.

In another case, local statutes barring demonstrations within a certain distance of foreign embassies have been upheld, because they do not unduly burden speech, and they serve valuable government purposes.

In my judgment, the principle applied in those earlier cases applies to the actions in the flag case.

The protesters were not denied the right to speak. They chose to burn the flag as an addition to that right, not as a substitute when speech was impossible or endangering.

The facts in the case are not in dispute. Gregory L. Johnson, apparently leading a group of demonstrators outside the 1984 Republican Convention, poured kerosene on an American flag and set a match to it, while his group chanted: "America, the red, white and blue, we spit on you."

Those words, offensive as they are to me and the vast majority of Americans, are protected by the first amendment. To my knowledge, no one disputes or disputed their right to say those words. Nobody interfered with their right to speak freely. They were not prevented from speaking.

But the did not merely speak. They also acted. It was this action which was punished, not the speech.

Indeed, they may well have burned the flag in order to obtain the attention that their speech itself would not have garnered.

The first amendment guarantees the freedom to speak. It guarantees nobody an audience for his words.

And if these protesters' purpose was to compel attention that their words alone could not attract, there is no constitutional obligation to provide that attention.

I agree with the dissent of Justice Stevens in this case, when he said:

> The case has nothing to do with "disagreeable ideas" * * * it involves disagreeable conduct * * *

Justice Stevens is right. The five-man majority of the Court is wrong.

Justice Stevens made the point succinctly:

> Had [Johnson] chosen to spray paint * * * his message of dissatisfaction on the facade of the Lincoln Memorial, there would be no question about the power of the government to prohibit his means of expression. The prohibition would be supported by the legitimate interest in preserving the quality of an important national asset.

The flag is also a national asset, albeit admittedly an intangible one.

We need not permit acts that undermine its value for all Americans in order to avoid burdening in slight fashion the speech rights of those who seek to be heard in the face of indifference, not persecution.

Every American has the right to speak freely and to dissent from the policies of the Government or from the orthodox and accepted views of the day. It is precisely that vast freedom which makes it unnecessary to condone extreme means of dissent.

Ours is not a repressive system in which dissent is stifled or goes unheard. Ours is a system tolerant of dissent, even extreme dissent.

There is no doubt in my mind that the broad protections of the Bill of Rights are the fundamental reason why we have been able to tolerate all forms of dissent for two centuries without losing our liberties.

But liberty and license are not the same. And the freedom to speak, openly, loudly, even obnoxiously, is not limitless. None of the liberties guaranteed by the Constitution is absolute; each is balanced by a corresponding requirement that the demands of a rational society be respected and the rights of others be recognized.

There are claims that even the most minor infringement upon the right of any dissenter to act out in full his or her preferred form of dissent constitutes an impermissible attack on the very foundations of the first amendment itself.

But that absolutist view of the first amendment does not take account of the fact that the statute before us is not, unlike the law the Court struck down, a statute which goes to communicative purposes or effects.

The legislation simply bans an action, destruction, without regard to the communicative intention of the person performing the action. There is no good reason to assume, as some opponents have, that such a direct statute would necessarily trigger a "strict scrutiny" review by the Supreme Court or, indeed, by any court faced with a challenge to the law.

I believe the 4 days of hearings held by the Judiciary Committee helped elucidate the distinctions between content-neutral legislation, such as the measure before, us, and legislation that is designed to suppress opinion.

Those distinctions are real and have been upheld in other instances where expressive conduct was at stake. With that important distinction in mind, this legislation represents a full, adequate, and sufficient response to the narrowly drawn ruling in Texas versus Johnson. It deserves the support of the Senate, and it will make unnecessary constitutional amendment to accomplish the same purpose.

Mr. President, I am awaiting the arrival of the distinguished Republican leader, at which time I will have an announcement to make regarding the schedule in the Senate for this week and next.

Pending the arrival of the Republican leader, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SCHEDULE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, over the past several days I have consulted on several occasions with the distinguished Republican leader, with virtually every Democratic Senator, and I have also talked to many Republican Senators—I know the distinguished Republican leader has discussed it with all of the Republican Members of the Senate—to consider the course of action the Senate should follow with respect to the schedule for the remainder of this week and for next week.

Several months ago we announced an intention to have the Senate in recess next week. As every Senator knows, these schedules must be announced months and, in some cases, a year in advance to permit Senators to plan their travel schedules accordingly, including their visits to their constituents in their home States.

However, the events of recent weeks and the possibility of an automatic sequester under the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law occurring on or shortly after October 15 now compel me to announce that the recess by the Senate previously scheduled for next week will be canceled. The Senate will not be recessed next week. The Senate will be in session next week, as we attempt to meet the requirements of the law and to prevent the automatic sequester from occurring on or shortly after October 15.

Mr. President, before I describe the proposed schedule for next week, I think it important to describe the schedule for the remainder of this week, because that will be a decisive factor in what occurs next week.

We now have before us pending flag burning legislation, which it is my hope that we will be able to complete in the near future today.

We then must complete action on the drug legislation, which was begun yesterday and which I understand from the managers most of the amendments have been dealt with, with a few more remaining, and hopefully, that will be able to be completed in a relatively short period of time.

We then are required, by a prior agreement, to take up the catastrophic health insurance bill prior to reconciliation. Therefore, it is my intention, if we can complete the drug legislation either tonight or tomorrow morning, to go to the catastrophic health bill, which Senator McCain will initiate with legislation that he has introduced or will introduce.

We then, hopefully by Friday, will be able to begin action on the reconciliation bill, which is, of course, the principal matter to which we must address ourselves in connection with the budget and the pending sequester. I have discussed with the distinguished Republican leader how we might deal with the reconciliation bill in a manner that is most expeditious and fair to all concerned, but I think it is clear that it will take at least Friday and Saturday to complete action on the reconciliation bill. If necessary, we will be in session on Sunday to complete action on the reconciliation bill.

There is a further factor to consider, and that is the previous cloture vote on the Eastern Airlines matter, and it is my hope that we are going to be able to resolve that matter in a manner acceptable to all concerned. We are not at that stage now. Discussions, I understand, are underway seeking to achieve that objective.

If—and I emphasize this to my colleagues—action on the reconciliation bill is completed prior to this coming Sunday evening—I want to repeat that: If action on the reconciliation bill in the Senate is completed prior to this Sunday evening, that the Senate will not be in session on Monday in observance of the religious holiday and Columbus Day and will not be in session on Tuesday. The Senate would be in session on Wednesday. There would be no rollcall votes on that day. The Senate will then be in session on Thursday and possibly on Friday with rollcall votes possible on those days.

Mr. President, the principal purpose for the Senate to be in session next week will be to encourage progress on what I hope will then be the conference on reconciliation. I have, this afternoon, met with most of the Democratic chairmen of the respective Senate committees. They are unanimous in their support for the decision to cancel the recess next week. Each of them is specifically and firmly committed to be here next week, to proceed with the conference, which will of necessity involve a large number of Senators on both sides, so that the conferees may proceed with the least amount of interruption and unimpeded during next week, beginning on Tuesday and continuing through the week. It would be my intention that we would have the least amount of disruption of their proceedings while they are going on.

This involves a great deal of inconvenience to a great many Senators, and a requisite amount of effort on the part of a large number of Senators, particularly those involved in the conference. Although it will be extremely difficult, and many say not possible, it is still my hope that we can complete action on the conference and act on a conference report prior to the deadline on October 16. Since October 15 falls on a Sunday, the date for the issuance of the final sequester order is Monday, October 16.

Whatever possibility exists of that occurring, however slim or large it may be in the eyes of each individual Senator, it will only be possible if all Senators concerned with the conference are prepared to be here and to devote their full time and effort throughout the entire week to that conference.

So, Mr. President, I have discussed this with the distinguished Republican leader, and he has indicated that he will talk with the ranking members of these committees to encourage their participation as well.

This is a difficult circumstance for all concerned. I apologize to each Senator for the inconvenience to which he or she may be subject as a result of this. Each of us, myself included, and I know the distinguished Republican leader, is going to have to cancel plans that have been made weeks, and in some cases, months in advance. But our first and foremost responsibility is our public responsibility, and nothing we do in the next 10 days is going to be more important than completing action on the reconciliation bill, and hopefully preventing the automatic sequester that will occur if we do not do so.

I want to especially thank the distinguished Republican leader for his cooperation in this regard. We have talked on many occasions about this—most recently earlier this afternoon—and he has been extremely helpful in providing me with advice on how best to handle this. There is no way that we can accommodate the interests of every Senator, because those interests are sharply in conflict. This has been done without regard to party affiliation—rather, in an attempt to accomplish our public objective and meet our public responsibilities in a way that provides the least inconvenience to the largest number of Senators.

Accordingly, Mr. President, I note the presence of the distinguished Republican leader, and invite his comment or suggestions in this regard.

Mr. DOLE. I thank the majority leader. I think he has correctly stated it. Recesses are always subject to change. I think if the people look at the date on the calendar and the deadlines we have to meet, there is a possibility of meeting those deadlines, but I think it is fair to say it is certain that we are going to have a Saturday session.

I alert all Members on both sides that we are certainly going to have a Saturday session. It will be the responsibility of ranking Republicans and Democrats to be here next week for conferences. That goes with the leadership and the territory of being ranking Republican and the chairman of the committee. So I will convey that message to Republicans on this side who rank on each of the various committees. I think it was indicated earlier that the last time there was a reconciliation, 58 of the 100 Senators were conferees. I guess they wrestled with about 245 House Members. But in any event it is over half the Senate. So that would keep everyone pretty well occupied starting probably next Tuesday or Wednesday at the latest. I think so.

Everyone has been notified. We alerted Senators on this side through the hotline to make this announcement.

So I am again reflecting what I believe was clearly stated by the majority leader: A Saturday session, possibly a Sunday session this week, out Monday and Tuesday, in on Wednesday, but no votes, and possibly votes on Thursday and Friday. And all this depends on completing action on reconciliation.

I think that is the big if because there are some impediments. There is the Eastern matter. The flag bill will probably be disposed of today, hopefully, and then we have the remaining amendments on the drug bill. Then it is back to the Eastern matter where cloture has been invoked and it takes unimous consent to go to anything else until that is disposed of, including reconciliation and including conference reports.

As part of that equation, and I am not trying to frustrate the majority leader, it is whether or not we are going to be able to get a vote on the President's capital gains package. That is part of the factor, and I am meeting with, as I indicated earlier today, Mr. Sununu, Mr. Brady, and Mr. Darman a little later on today in my office. So we hope we can resolve any question there.

But even if all that works out, it is going to take the cooperation of every Member. We are going to need consensus to do some of these things. And I will be visiting with the majority leader and trying to be helpful where I can.

As he knows, I think at least everyone knows now what to expect and if they have commitments they have to keep they should. Missing votes is not the worst thing if you are keeping commitments that you made with people in your State. That is very important, too.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Republican leader.

So there can be no possible misunderstanding on the part of any Senator at the risk of redundancy, I repeat: The schedule I have outlined for next week is wholly dependent upon completion of Senate action on the reconciliation bill this week prior to Sunday evening. If for any reason the Senate does not complete action on the reconciliation bill by Sunday evening, then the Senate will be back in session next Tuesday working on the reconciliation bill until we do complete action on it. We will just stay right here until we finish it.

There are numerous obstacles, and as the distinguished Republican leader said, it requires a great deal of restraint and cooperation on the part of all Senators. Everyone knows it is not very difficult for a single Senator to obstruct the proceedings of the Senate.

So with respect to next week, I have outlined the schedule but I emphasize the condition upon which it is based.

Many years ago when I was starting to try cases as a lawyer an elderly practitioner who tried many cases told me when you get before a jury do three things: Tell them what you are going to say, say it, and then tell them what you just said.

I have attempted to follow that advice today, having now repeated for the third time the condition upon which the schedule for next week is based.

One way we could obviously expedite that is to move forward on this legislation and I look forward to that. I am pleased to hear the distinguished Republican leader indicate he believes we will be able to complete that sometime today.

I thank the distinguished Republican leader very much for his advice and cooperation in this matter and I thank my colleagues for their patience and understanding in this situation.

Mr. DOLE. I am just reminded I failed to mention another roadblock or barrier is the catastrophic measure but the majority leader mentioned that.

Mr. MITCHELL. I did.

Mr. DOLE. We have that to be disposed of.

But things can move pretty quickly once the Senate decides to move, at least I heard it can.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I yield the floor, and I notice the manager here present.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CONRAD). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Texas.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I intend to vote for the pending bill which makes it illegal to desecrate the American flag.

My views on the bill are very similar to those expressed earlier today by Senator SHELBY from Alabama.

I am voting for this bill because I support the basic objective of the bill. I also intend to vote for the constitutional amendment which will be offered later under the unanimous-consent agreement that has brought this bill before us now, because I do not believe this bill will be sustained when it is taken to court. Given the previous ruling by the Supreme Court, I believe that as desecration of the flag can be portrayed in the context of being a political expression, the Court is going to strike down the bill that seeks to protect the flag.

I cannot imagine a situation in which someone would desecrate the American flag other than to make a political statement about hating America and its great institutions. So I intend to vote for this bill.

I applaud those who will include by amendment, the provision which will provide for expedited consideration of the bill by the Supreme Court. I hope the Supreme Court will uphold the bill. If it does, then should the amendment pass and be sent to the States, it will probably never be ratified.

On the other hand, I think it is important that we move along a dual track so that if the Court does strike down the bill we have an amendment that can go to the States, that can be ratified and will protect the American flag in the process.

There has been a lot of rhetoric on this issue already today. Let me simply say, I believe that the flag is the symbol of the Nation. The other day I was in my State at a school system outside Longview, attending a program on the 175th anniversary of the Constitution.

A fourth grader had written an essay about why we ought to protect the flag, and although I lack that fourth grader's simplicity and eloquence, I will try to paraphrase it, as there is no sense in trying to improve on something that is already good. He wrote:

> We don't let people kill bald eagles. We protect them. We don't let people paint on the Washington Monument. We protect it. Why don't we protect the American flag?

I think that is well put, and it is a position that I hold. This is a great free country. If people have an alternative view they can express it. But I believe the vast majority of Americans believe that the flag as a symbol of the Nation ought to be protected.

I am going to vote for this bill. I hope it works. If it does not work we are going to get the constitutional amendment. I think we ought to move on a dual track.

Although I am not a lawyer, it is my humble opinion that the bill will not stand the constitutional test. So we will need the amendment.

I intend to vote for the bill today. I intend to vote for the amendment when it comes up. If the bill is sustained before the Supreme Court then I think the amendment will be largely superfluous. If the bill is not sustained, then the amendment will go to the States and I believe it will be ratified.

I yield the floor.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I would like to propound a parliamentary inquiry to the Chair. I would be interested to ask the Chair if there is precedent for amending a statute such as this with a constitutional amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will consult the Parliamentarian.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, while the Presiding Officer is consulting with the Parliamentarian, would the Senator from Idaho permit me to comment in response to the inquiry which he made?

Mr. SYMMS. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would say to my friend and colleague that whatever the answer of the Parliamentarian, on July 14 of this year, an order was entered into, pursuant to a unanimous-consent agreement, which specified when the statute would be taken up and when the amendment would be taken up. That is published in the Calendar of Business of today, Wednesday, October 4, 1989, at the top of page 2, which sets forth of the agreement which the Senate entered into following the lengthy discussions between the distinguished Republican leader and myself. Under that agreement, the Senate will take up the constitutional amendment on October 16, 1989.

I thank the Chair.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator from Idaho satisfied by the observation of the majority leader?

Mr. SYMMS. Well, yes. The Senator from Idaho has no intention, I might say to my colleagues and the majority leader, to offer an amendment. I was just curious. I was interested in the debate this afternoon. I have been preoccupied with other things. But in listening to some of my colleagues debate, it was just sincerely a question for this Senator's education if there was precedent for amending the Constitution on legislation like this if it was a relevant subject. That was the question.

I do not intend to do it. I understand we have a unanimous-consent agreement so that it may be irrelevant. But if the Parliamentarian has the answer, I would be happy to hear what it is. If not, I can seek that information from the Parliamentarian at a later time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At this point, the Chair does not have a definitive answer.

Mr. SYMMS. I withdraw my parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry.

What is the position of the Senate with reference to the Senator from New Mexico making a statement on a matter that is not before the Senate and sending a bill to the desk to be referred to a committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator would need to seek consent to do that. The pending business is H.R. 2978.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may have 1 minute to make a statement regarding a bill and send it to the desk and ask for its referral as if in morning business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from New Mexico is recognized.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Chair.

(The remarks of Mr. DOMENICI pertaining to the introduction of S. 1725 are located in today's RECORD under

"Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

MINORITY SMALL BUSINESS PERSON OF THE YEAR

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, today is a very proud day for New Mexico and the United States. Teresa McBride, president of McBride Micro Source in Albuquerque, NM, is the "National Minority Small Business Person of the Year."

Teresa McBride, at age 25, is a young and vibrant New Mexico business leader. Her accomplishments in the world of high-technology computers are outstanding. She started her business in 1985, at the age of 21 with one full-time employee and $5,000. This year, her annual sales exceed $8 million, and she employs 22 full-time staff.

As a Hispanic woman, Teresa also represents an important emerging minority in the United States. Hispanic employment by the year 2000 is expected to increase by almost 75 percent—far more than for any other ethnic group.

I have been working for many years to help create spin-off businesses from the large scientific laboratories in New Mexico. Teresa's story is an affirmation of the business potential of that strategy. Her success is clearly linked to her technological creativity and competence.

Teresa McBride built her computer business with her own talent, creativity, and perserverance. She is an inspiration to all business owners, young people, and potential entrepreneurs. She is an affirmation that our free enterprise system can generate new enterprises in a very competitive field.

In President Bush's proclamation for "Minority Enterprise Development Week, 1989," he recognizes the importance of minority business enterprise to our national economy.

President Bush says:

Minority business men and women have helped to expand our economy through innovation, hard work, and by taking advantage of the opportunities available in our free enterprise system. These enterprises have become an indispensable force in our economy, and they will continue to play a key role in our efforts to expand America's share of world markets.

The President also pledges to "continue to promote quality education and effective job training" and to "foster an appreciation for individual initiative and private enterprise among young people."

Today, President Bush himself presented this award to Teresa McBride at the White House. In so doing, he is affirmed his commitment to the important role of 800,000 minority businesses in America.

I agree with President Bush about the fostering an appreciation of private enterprise among our young people. Teresa McBride is clearly the best choice for this award. Her accomplishments will touch many potential young entrepreneurs as word of her award is made public. I believe her story will encourage many more young people to pursue their business dreams.

Mr. President, Teresa McBride was selected by the Small Business Administration [SBA] for this national award from among local winners in the 50 States.

I am very proud of my good friend Teresa McBride.

I call the attention of my colleagues to her outstanding business accomplishments. The U.S. Senate can be proud of this outstanding young American our "National Minority Small Business Person of the Year."

FLAG PROTECTION ACT OF 1989

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. DOMENICI. I do not believe I did yield the floor. I have a brief statement on the flag and another more lengthy matter, so I will be pleased to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I have no objection to the Senator from New Mexico speaking on the flag, but I think we can begin to move a few of these things. There is what in essence ends up being almost a technical amendment, rectifying the situation with regard to expedited procedure.

AMENDMENT NO. 949

(Purpose: To clarify the conditions for expedited review of constitutional issues)

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislature clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN], for himself and Mr. THURMOND, proposes an amendment numbered 949.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 2, strike line 17 through page 3, line 11, and insert the following:

"(d)(1) An appeal may be taken directly to the Supreme Court of the United States from any interlocutory or final judgment, decree, or order issued by a United States district court ruling upon the constitutionality of subsection (a).

"(2) The Supreme Court shall, if it has not previously ruled on the question, accent jurisdiction over the appeal and advance on the docket and expedite to the greatest extent possible.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I supplied this previously this morning. One of the provisions of the bill before us provides for an expedited review in the Supreme Court on the constitutionality of this statute and I am pleased that this provision was added. But, unfortunately, after consultation with a number of experts in the field and in consultation with the ranking member among our own legislative counsel, I believe it would be beneficial to clarify the wording of the first portion of the expedited review provision which is section (D)(1) of the House bill.

So, Mr. President, without going into a lot of detail let me say it does this. The amendment modifies the remaining two sections on expedition in the House bill so they conform with the changes that we wish to make. Here is what the change is.

Right now, as the bill is written, there is an expedited review calling for the matter to go essentially directly to the Supreme Court of the United States of America. We believe that is probably not constitutional.

So, what we are doing is, as a result of this amendment, ending up with an expedited review provision, very similar to what existed in the Gramm-Rudman expedited review, what existed in Buckley versus Valeo, what existed in a number of other pieces of legislation which we have already passed in the past and which have been held to be constitutional.

This is a straightforward way of providing expedited review in any case in which a district court rules on the question of the constitutionality of this section.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, we think this amendment improves the bill and we are pleased to agree to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I wanted to ask a question of the Senator from Delaware, and the distinguished former President pro tempore.

It is on the general bill. This amendment, of course, would be part of that.

My question is, Why was the word "defile" taken out of the bill? Obviously the committee must have had some reason. I would say, as a preface to this, that "deface" which the Senator has in the language of the bill, "to destroy or mar the face of, looks of, to disfigure"—and then in Webster's, defile is "influenced by foul and by file to foul, to trample, crush, to make filthy, ravish, pollute, bring dishonor on, as a person's reputation."

I thought the purpose of this bill was to stop people from the idea of dishonoring the flag. I was wondering why was that taken out?

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, if I can respond, the reason why "defile" was taken out is because it is not clearly definable. The concern was it would be viewed as requiring or allowing or dealing with communicative impact.

The problem with the Texas statute was the Court said, if we are attempting to impact upon an idea that is being communicated by the person taking a particular action, then we cannot pass a law like that. We cannot do that because that then goes straight to the first amendment. Therefore, all those words and notions which would in fact lead a court to be able to make the argument that we were going at the communication as opposed to simply protecting the flag period, in and of itself—we took out.

Mr. SYMMS. If I can ask the chairman a frank question, and I also would be happy to have a response from the distinguished senior Senator from South Carolina on this also. The current statute, if I understand it correctly, says "whoever knowingly casts contempt upon any flag of the United States by publicly mutilating, defacing, defiling, burning, or trampling upon shall be fined," et cetera.

"Whoever knowingly casts contempt." The Court ruled that someone could cast contempt; is that correct?

Mr. BIDEN. The Court ruled that they could.

Mr. SYMMS. And that is why we are here today, to try to correct that?

Mr. BIDEN. The Court ruled that the guilt or innocence of a person could not be judged on what impact that person's action and words had upon an observer; or had upon a notion he was communicating to a third party.

So we could pass a law and say: You simply cannot burn the flag. Period. Boom. That is OK.

But we cannot stand up and say: You cannot burn a flag if it casts contempt, because casting contempt is in the eye of the beholder. Someone out there has to make a judgment. "That action is contemptuous in my mind. Therefore, you should not do it."

The Court said we cannot do that. We cannot limit expression because another individual out there will not like what we are expressing. But we can, de facto say: You cannot burn that flag. Period.

But we cannot make the gravamen of the crime the idea we are communicating when that idea rests upon and is determined by the observer.

For example, if I took a flag and said all kinds of horrible things about it and destroyed it, and there was no third party to see it, no one in the room, then under the Texas law or under Federal statute, there is no offense. I have not committed an offense because it requires a third party to say: "He cast a contempt on that flag; that is what you just did," or "you brought disgrace on the flag," or you did whatever on the flag, because then the whole idea is, the Court says, the crime rests upon an idea being communicated from one person to another person. If you are trying to deal with that, it says, now you are in the first amendment area, you cannot deal with that any more than with my saying I can walk out on the steps any say we should bring this Government down, or I think the President is a bad guy, or all the Senators are a bunch of bums.

Mr. SYMMS. Just do not bring that one up for a vote.

Mr. BIDEN. I think the Senator is probably right. I hope that answers the question. That is what the Court said. What this amendment is designed to do is avoid first amendment implications and say it is national policy, once this is passed, that you cannot burn that flag, you cannot trample on it, you cannot do things to it that, in fact, mutilate that flag. If you do, it is against the law, period.

Mr. SYMMS. I thank the distinguished chairman of the committee. Let me just read this and, as a nonlawyer, ask the Senator one more question. Quoting from the bill, page 2, line 1:

> Whoever knowingly mutilates, defaces, burns, or tramples upon any flag of the United States shall be fined under this title. . . .

Et cetera. Why would it not strengthen this bill if you had "whoever knowingly mutilates, defaces, defiles, burns, or tramples upon"? I would think you would have a stronger case.

Mr. BIDEN. I understand what the Senator is saying. The reason why we would not is that defile raises a definitional question: What constitutes defiling the flag?

Mr. SYMMS. What are we here for?

Mr. BIDEN. What we are here for is to prevent that flag from being physically destroyed. We are not here to prevent someone from holding onto that flag and saying, "Red, white, and blue, I spit on you."

Mr. SYMMS. If I can ask a further question, if a person had to burn a flag to keep from freezing to death, surely they would not be prosecuted under the statute. But if they dishonor the flag, is that not a different question? I go back to Webster's. Deface says absolutely nothing about dishonor, I say to my colleague; but defile says "to bring dishonor on as on a person's reputation." Is that not what this issue is all about?

Mr. BIDEN. I say to my friend, as he knows, what we are not talking about here, what we are not attempting to rectify is the notion of dishonor, because dishonor is a judgmental call. For example, I think it is dishonoring the flag that the Aryan Nation carries it. I view that as repugnant and dishonoring that flag and everything it stands for. When those folks who call themselves part of the Aryan Nation, or when the Ku Klux Klan carries that flag, or when the American Nazi Party carries that flag, I think it dishonors the flag.

In my view, that is the most repugnant thing that can happen. That is worse to me than having that idiot Johnson burn the flag; to think that the Nazis could carry that flag, implying that anything they stood for was embodied in that flag. That dishonors it.

But that is a judgment call made by me. That is subjective. The Court says when you are being subjective, when you are imposing a penalty that requires a subjective judgment then, in fact, what you are doing is impacting on communication. It is communicative in its nature.

So the way to deal with that, the way to protect that flag is to not use words like dishonor, not use words like disgrace, just be real simple and straightforward. Say, if you burn that sucker, you go to jail. If you put it on the floor and you walk on it, you go to jail. If you mutilate that flag, you go to jail.

Mr. SYMMS. What if you burn it to keep from freezing to death?

Mr. BIDEN. It would be treated the same way as if you shoot someone in self-defense. There is a law that says you cannot shoot folks. It would be a defense to raise as to why you did what you did. That would be defensible. The same way if I walked up and shot somebody, the question of my defense would be I shot them because they were going to shoot me.

There is a law that says you cannot shoot people, but there is a law that says you can explain why you shot somebody. If you use that flag to burn it to keep warm, it is the same way where we have had cases in our courts where people have actually engaged in cannibalism to live. There are all kinds of strange phenomena.

Mr. SYMMS. What if you soil the flag?

Mr. BIDEN. If you soil the flag, if that constitutes mutilation, that is against the law as it appears in this statute, and that would be one that would find someone guilty because you can objectively determine. You can pick up the flag and a judge or jury in court can look at the flag and say: "Is this thing mutilated? Have you done damage to this physical property of the flag?"

And they say yes, as opposed to saying, well, was someone offended by what was done?

Mr. SYMMS. Does soiling then constitute mutilation?

Mr. BIDEN. Yes, soiling can constitute mutilation. For example, if you soil the flag in the sense that if you are walking along and you accidentally drag the flag, it hits the ground and it is dirty at one end, that is one thing. If you come along and you take that flag, you rub it in dirt, use a Brillo pad on it, you do things that end up defacing it so it is not recognizable as a flag, then, in fact, it would fall within the statute.

Mr. SYMMS. I thank the distinguished chairman. Far be it for me, as a nonattorney, get involved in a nitpicking argument about the words you have chosen here.

But it just appears to this Senator that this bill the committee has brought forth would be a better bill if you had the word defile in it, because then you would have covered all those bases.

I thank the chairman.

I would like to make an inquiry, if I could, Mr. President, of the distinguished Senator from South Carolina if he concurs with everything the chairman says, or if he agrees defile would be a worthy word to try to add to this legislation, or was this already debated in committee? Maybe I should ask that.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, this particular bill has not been to committee. It is a House bill. The Senate bill, of course, is here, but they are bringing up the House bill.

According to the dictionary, the word defile means tread underfoot, insult, to make something unclean, to corrupt, to profane or sully, and so forth. I think the chairman has explained it fully and the reasons why it was not put in there.

Personally, I have no objection to putting defile in there. On the other hand, some people feel it might raise some question as to the constitutionality of it, and I believe that is the reason it was left out; is that correct?

Mr. BIDEN. That is correct. If the Senator will yield for just a moment, all of the descriptive words defining "defile" are accurate, one of which was just mentioned—profane. Defile can mean profane. Profane is a communicative word. It rests upon the communicative impact, unlike deface, which means, according to Webster's Dictionary, disfigure. It goes to the physical treatment of the flag as opposed to the communicative impact. You profane something. I can stand here, never touch the flag, never do anything to physically hurt the flag, and I can profane that flag. If I do that, it is clearly in conflict with my first amendment right if the law says I cannot profane the flag.

I yield back to my colleague. But the short answer to his short question is, yes, that is the reason why we would rather not have it, and believe that if we included "defile" in the statute, it would yield it to be unconstitutional.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I yield the floor. I thank the Senators.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, what is the matter before the body now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the pending amendment. Is there further debate? If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 949) was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THURMOND. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I rise today to express some of my thoughts on an issue that is of great concern to many Americans. On June 21, 1989, the Supreme Court ruled in Texas versus Johnson that it was legal to burn the American flag. Since that time, I have heard from many of my constituents, and other Americans as well, who were extremely upset about the Supreme Court's ruling.

I too am upset about the Supreme Court ruling, Mr. President. I have little respect for those who devalue the flag by burning it, walking on it, or in any other way desecrating it. The Court decision was wrong, and that is why earlier this summer I stood with a number of my colleagues in the Senate to express my disapproval of the Supreme Court's decision.

Mr. President, I feel that we must protect the right of every American citizen to speak his or her mind, no matter how offensive their ideas may be. Freedom of speech is a right that the Constitution grants to every American, and our Constitution has preserved the vitality of our Nation for over 200 years.

But, clearly there is a difference between speaking one's mind and desecrating the American flag. The act of desecrating the American flag goes beyond merely expressing a point of view. It is a violent act against the symbol of our Nation. The Supreme Court erred in equating free speech with the desecration of the American flag. Its decision is gravely offensive to countless Americans, particularly those who have carried the American flag into battle to protect our Nation.

Mr. President, this error needs to be corrected. While I think that the foolproof and effective way to fix this error is by a constitutional amendment, some have expressed their feeling that it can be corrected by statute. Either way, Mr. President, this is an issue that must be addressed.

The bill we are considering would remove the provisions in the Federal law against flag-burning that are similar to the provisions of the Texas law the Supreme Court found unconstitutional. It makes all burning, mutilation, and defacing of the American flag illegal, regardless of motives or political purposes of the person who burns, mutilates, or defaces the flag.

The American flag and all it represents deserves the protection of our laws, and I rise in support of this bill to prohibit flag burning because of the necessity to correct the flawed decision of the Supreme Court. I hope that its authors are correct and it solves the problems with the Federal flag-burning law.

It may not, though. There is a very serious question about whether the bill we are now considering will pass constitutional muster. That is why I will also vote for a constitutional amendment to protect the integrity of our Nation and its oldest symbol, the American flag.

Mr. President, I am obviously in the same position as almost all Senators. We want to stop desecration of the American flag. I am one who thought it would be very easy for the U.S. Supreme Court to have ruled otherwise. I am sorry they did not. They made a mistake. So I think we ought to correct it.

Many have made this effort to correct the Supreme Court's mistake a monumental episode in constitutional law. I do not think it is at all. Regardless, we have chosen to proceed first with a statute rather than a consititutional amendment. I compliment the distinguished Senators for bringing it to the floor.

Nonetheless, I am of the opinion that a constitutional amendment can be drafted such that it will not infringe on the constitutional rights that we all hold so sacred, and I hope we will so proceed because I think the overwhelming majority of the American people, in their good common sense, expect we can do such, and I think we can.

We ought to pass the bill that is before us and go to conference, if such is necessary, and get it done quickly. So I will join with what I imagine will be an overwhelming number of Senators, even those who want the constitutional amendment, in voting "aye" later on this evening.

RECONCILIATION

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, as the Senate knows, a new fiscal year began last Sunday. Much to the disappointment of this Senator, the expectations earlier in this year of a quick budget year have wilted away like flowers in the autumn. I am only hopeful that some of the attitudes which existed 7 or 8 months ago between Democrats and Republicans in both Houses and the President in an effort to proceed with a multiyear budget deficit package can be revived. But I note that this disappointment is not only felt by this Senator but by others on the Hill.

Recently, some of my colleagues relieved their frustration by blaming the President for our congressional failures. I am not one who shies away from criticizing Presidential policy when I think it appropriate; I have done my share of that, but truly, Mr. President, if the biblical admonition that he who is without sin, let him cast the first stone ever applied, it now applies. Normally, I would not waste the Senate's time to respond to what I perceive to be unnecessary and false charges, but I choose to do it in a very brief way to set the record straight, at least as I see it.

I do not believe the President of the United States is responsible for our waiting to do the remainder of the appropriations conferences when the year is completed and we are operating under a continuing resolution. I do not believe the President is responsible for having our distinguished majority leader and minority leader come to the floor just 20 minutes ago and talk about completing a reconciliation bill by Saturday night or Sunday at the latest. A reconciliation bill means technical things, but in the sense of this budget, if done properly, it is supposed to carry out the will of Congress and save some money and raise some revenues to meet the target. That is what it is supposed to do. But obviously we are still here and we can pass that bill. The House has not yet passed theirs.

In this Senator's opinion, President Bush does not do everything right, and certainly we can criticize him, but I do not think he is to blame for us not having our work done on time.

Let me remind everyone the President sent Congress a revision of President Reagan's budget on February 9, 1 month earlier than usual for any new President. We asked him to do that. Barely in office, they sent the revisions to Congress. They did it whether or not we liked it. The Congress examined his proposal for a couple of weeks. We then entered into the so-called budget summit for this following 6 weeks.

It is now history. For the first time, the executive branch and bicameral representatives, House and Senate, Democrat and Republican, met, and they agreed, on April 14.

Shortly thereafter, the Budget Committees began to work on this 1990 resolution, and the conference on the budget resolution was completed in record time, by May 15, the date by which the House is supposed to begin appropriations bills. That was done in a timely manner by both bodies.

The budget resolution set a date of July 15 for the committees of the House and Senate to submit their recommendations for this reconciliation package. The instructions were in that budget resolution of May 15. That is when we began to slow down. I am not laying blame on any committee chairman. Nonetheless, I do not believe it is the President's fault we did not get our work done on time. The Senate did not finish their 13 appropriations bills on time. I understand that some would like to blame the President for that. Frankly, we were on our way. The House had finished theirs.

What happened? I hear some say the President kind of threw a monkey wrench in that because he sent up a package on his drug proposals, and that that was very late.

Mr. President, we ordered him to do it on that date. The 26th day of last month, when we asked him to send it to us, was in our law. He sent up a small budget change to accomplish a portion of his proposal. We could have done it however we wanted, and I am not critical again of the Senate, but nonetheless we chose to get into what turned out to be a rather reasonable approach to a different package on drugs. We did that. The House had already finished all of their appropriations bills.

So, Mr. President, it seems to me we are in a real bind because the budget year is already over.

We are starting a new one. We have not yet completed our appropriations bills. I explained that. I cast no stones. If we get those done in the next 8 or 10 days and they get signed, it is not the end of the world. Nonetheless they have an impact on the budget or conversely they have an impact on how much we sequester if indeed we send it to him now. They probably would cause more of a sequester. So we are in a very strained position.

I say nonetheless to my fellow Senators, and I do not think I am exaggerating, in looking at the two reconciliation bills, and I have just explained what they are, I say to the distinguished majority leader and the minority leader in all deference, we probably will not vote on a bill in the name of budget savings and in the name of meeting targets for Gramm-Rudman-Hollings if we stay on the path that is in both those two reconciliation bills the House almost finished. The Senate is in a state of chaos. We do not even have the bills yet. But let us assume we had them.

If we stay on that path and vote for them, that vote on final passage of that reconciliation bill or the conference will be as important a policy vote as you will ever make; not because it is going to meet the budget target. It might do that, but, Mr. President, fellow Senators, there is more law change, tax law change, pension law change, all kinds of laws are changed, altered, and amended.

Speak of the Tax Code and the sanctity of the tax reform package. There are enough changes in the tax law in the Senate almost reported bill—not yet reported but almost—to cause anyone to say "there is no sanctity to the notion that we had a reform bill and we will leave it alone." I have not done the numbers yet but I think to save $9 or $10 billion over 5 years, to raise that much in new revenue we change tax laws to the extent of $38 billion for a net of $9 billion. You do not change $37 or $38 billion worth of tax laws to net out 9 or 10 in increased revenues without having changed tax laws pretty much.

That is just the beginning. There is the Medicare, there is the Medicaid, there is dial-a-porn, the fairness doctrine, and there is pension reform.

So frankly, I do not believe all that is the President's fault. I do not know whose fault it is. But those who think we just kind of hurry our way through this little last episode in the budget process know this is no way to do business. This is pretty risky stuff; to change laws with such an impact in the last hours of last night, and let me say on the basis of what I have read—I am not on that committee. I am not suggesting that good policy cannot be effected expeditiously. Sometimes you make better policy in 3 hours on the last night than you make in 6 months. But I submit we are really making some giant changes in both tax law, in entitlement laws, all in the name of meeting a budget target.

So it is pretty serious. Again, I repeat I do not believe the President of the United States had very much to do with that. I want to read just one paragraph, and I will close.

In the summit that we held with reference to tax measures and the Congress, this was the bicameral leadership agreement with the President of the United States:

> The specific measures composing governmental receipts—the figure—will be determined through the regular legislative and constitutional process.

Continuing on they said very specifically:

> Measures composing government receipts will be determined through the regular legislative processes.

It proceeded—

> Agreements reached between administration and congressional tax writing committees on revenue legislation reconciled pursuant to this agreement will be advanced legislatively when supported by the President of the United States.

No, I do not think it should surprise anyone that the regular legislative process envisioned the President of the United States trying to get his capital gains tax. The thing is nobody thought he would. This is what happened. But he did. Whether it is his proposal or a capital gains proposal, nonetheless, there were at least 9 weeks before these votes. Some would say 12 when committees did not do their work, did not take their votes and did not bring the bill to the floor of the Senate and the House.

I hope they understand, those who had the challenge of putting this together, the Senator from New Mexico is not critical of them. The policy decisions, and the political decisions were tough. But neither do I think we should say the President caused this logjam and this dilemma.

I want to close by suggesting that nothing would please me more than if we could finish this work by Sunday and have the conference alluded to by the distinguished majority leader next week. But I do not believe that is going to work. I will try. I will not race, I am not one to make objections just to make objections. But frankly, we have never completed a reconciliation conference in one week, never. One took 6 weeks, one took 4 weeks, one took longer than both. And the only time we did it in 2 weeks was the posteconomic summit one after the Wall Street crash; a pretty well defined one with executive and legislative having their hands in it together from beginning to end—2 weeks.

So I do not mean to cast cold water on the notion that we are going to avoid a sequester by getting a reconciliation bill here by the 16th. I laud the majority leader for his goal, his determination, and his willingness to be forthright here on the floor of the Senate stating that most of next week's recess is either gone or in jeopardy or rather piecemeal for most Senators.

It hurts me like everyone else but it is probably the reality. I do not believe we are going to get it done on time unless there is serious negotiation, bipartisan, and hopefully with the executive branch about what ought to be in this reconciliation bill. I am not speaking of capital gains, no capital gains. Let the Congress work its will.

But there are many, many other matters, a myriad of matters that meet the goals of certain committees, meet the desires of certain Members, that I tell you, Mr. President, do not belong in this bill. I am not the one who is going to decide that.

But I think a lot of that ought to be taken away rather quickly, and then I say to the distinguished majority leader and minority leader there might be a bill. You send the conferees off next week, if the distinguished majority leader's desires are met, to a conference with the kind of bills that are coming from these two Houses and expect them to produce something that will pass both bodies by the 16th and get signed. I think that would be pretty miraculous.

But, I think we could strip away all but the essentials, if we really wanted a budget reconciliation bill and not a legislative Christmas tree of the highest proportion. We will have more to say about it as we get the details, but it is a rather extraordinary piece of legislation as it winds its way in the waning days of this week perhaps as long as 5 weeks late. Nonetheless it is finally making its way.

I will make a part of the record, if the Senate permits the Bulletin No. 90-01 to the heads of the executive departments. This is a public record, September 29 from OMB Director carrying out the sequester. I think it might be interesting for people to see it.

I believe we are going to have a real sequester, and the probabilities of it are getting better every day. This gives you some idea of how it begins as we move through this first episode by the Director of OMB and ultimately where we will end up in a few weeks.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT, OFFICE OF MANAGEMENT AND BUDGET,
Washington, DC, September 29, 1989.

Bulletin No. 90-01.

To the Heads of Executive Departments and Agencies.

Subject: Apportionment Under the Fiscal Year 1990 Sequester.

1. Purpose.—An initial Presidential order has been issued indicating that a final sequester might be required. This Bulletin therefore, provides guidance on apportionment of amounts for FY 1990. It covers amounts made available under either short-term continuing resolutions or regular enacted appropriations for FY 1990, and amounts normally available without further action (e.g., amounts available under permanent law and amounts normally exempt by the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) from apportionment).

2. Background.—Under the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985 (commonly known as the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law), as amended:

(a) The OMB sequester report due on August 25, 1989, was issued on August 21, 1989, and published in the Federal Register of August 28, 1989.

(b) The President issued an initial order that will be effective on October 1, 1989. The order was published in the Federal Register of August 28, 1989.

(c) Between October 1st and October 15th, the amounts sequestered pursuant to the initial order are required to be withheld from obligation or expenditure.

(d) The Director of OMB is required to issue a final report on October 16, 1989.

(e) On October 16th, the President is required to issue a final order; that order will be effective upon issuance.

(f) If the final order specifies that a sequester is required, then the amounts sequestered under the final order are to be permanently cancelled or reduced.

3. Apportionment guidance.—The amounts provided for FY 1990 will be apportioned as specified in the attachment.

4. Inquiries.—Questions should be addressed to the OMB examiner with budget responsibility for the account.

RICHARD G. DARMAN,
Director.

Attachment.

DETAILED APPORTIONMENT GUIDANCE

1. Apportionment guidance before October 16th.—The amounts provided will be apportioned in the following manner:

(a) Short-term continuing resolutions.—Unless the conditions in section 1(d), below, apply, this Bulletin automatically apportions the lowest of:

The annualized level in the continuing resolution minus the sequester amount, multiplied by the rate of seasonal obligations, as specified in section 1(a)(1);

The annualized level in the continuing resolution minus the sequester amount, multiplied by the period covered by the continuing resolution, as specified in section 1(a)(2); or

The post-sequester amount, which is the sequester base minus the sequester amount in the OMB sequester report, multiplied by the period covered by the continuing resolution, as specified in section 1(a)(2).

(1) Seasonal calculation.—Take the annualized level in the continuing resolution. Subtract the sequester amount in the most recent OMB sequester report. Multiply the result by a percent that is based on a fraction determined as follows:

The numerator of the fraction will be the amount of obligations incurred last year during the period covered by the resolution(s).

The denominator will be the total obligations incurred last year. If the total actual obligations are not yet known, then use the amount on line 7 of the most recently signed version of the S.F. 132 for FY 1989.

Before multiplying, round the fraction to the nearest whole percent that is at least 1 percent. For amounts greater than 1 percent, use the following rounding rule: 13.5 percent becomes 14 percent but 12.5 percent becomes 12 percent.

(2) Period calculation.—Take the annualized level in the continuing resolution or the sequester base, whichever is lower. Subtract the sequester amount in the most recent OMB sequester report. Multiply the net result by a percent that is based on a fraction determined as follows:

The numerator of the fraction will be the number of days in the fiscal year covered by the continuing resolutions for FY 1990.

The denominator will be 365.

Before multiplying, round the fraction to the nearest whole percent that is at least 1 percent. For amounts greater than 1 percent, use the following rounding rule: 13.5 percent becomes 14 percent but 12.5 percent becomes 12 percent.

All conditions specified on the most recent prior apportionment, including those specified in footnotes, are continued under automatic apportionments. An apportionment request must be submitted if the agency deems it necessary to revise or omit such conditions.

(b) Regular FY 1990 appropriations enacted before October 16th.—Take the enacted appropriation (place it on line 1 of the S.F. 132). Subtract an amount determined by applying the sequester percentage in the initial OMB report against the enacted appropriation. Place the amount on line 5, as a negative. The difference is the amount available for FY 1990. Place it on line 7.

(c) FY 1990 amounts normally available without further action.—All accounts must be apportioned or reapportioned in such a way as to give effect to the intent of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law. Therefore, the following amounts are required to be apportioned or reapportioned:

(1) Amounts made available without current legislative action, such as advance appropriations;

(2) Amounts that are already apportioned for FY 1990, such as unobligated balances carried forward; and

(3) Amounts that are normally exempt from apportionment by OMB, such as some special and trust funds.

(d) Written apportionments.—Agencies are required to submit apportionment requests to OMB:

(1) Whenever required by OMB;

(2) If, in the view of the agency, the pattern of seasonal obligations justifies an amount higher than the automatic apportionment;

(3) Whenever the agency deems it necessary to change the conditions specified on prior apportionments or instructions; and

(4) Whenever the conditions specified in section 1(c), above, apply.

2. Apportionment guidance on October 16th.—The amounts provided for FY 1990 will be apportioned in the following manner.

(a) Short-term continuing resolutions.—Unless the conditions in section 1(d), above, apply, this Bulletin automatically apportions the lower of:

The annualized level in the continuing resolution minus the sequester amount, multiplied by the rate of seasonal obligations, as specified in section 1(a)(1); or

The annualized level in the continuing resolution minus the sequester amount, multiplied by the period covered by the continuing resolution, as specified in section 1(a)(2).

All conditions specified on the most recent prior apportionment, including those specified in footnotes, are continued under automatic apportionments. An apportionment request must be submitted if the agency deems it necessary to revise or omit such conditions.

(b) Regular FY 1990 appropriations enacted before October 16th.—If the final report indicates that a sequester is required, then take the enacted appropriation (place it on line 1 of the S.F. 132). Subtract the sequester amount in the final OMB report from the enacted appropriation. Place the amount on line 5, as a negative. The difference is the amount available for FY 1990. Place it on line 7.

(c) Regular FY 1990 appropriations enacted on or after October 16th.—If the final report indicates that a sequester is required, then use the following steps to calculate the amount available for FY 1990. Start with the enacted appropriation and compare it with the sequester base in the final OMB sequester report. The amount available after the sequester will vary, as follows:

(1) The enacted appropriations are above the sequester base for the account in the final OMB sequester report. In these cases, reduce the enacted full-year appropriation by the amount (not the percent) of the sequester specified in the final OMB report. The result is the amount available for FY 1990.

(2) The enacted appropriations are equal to or between the sequester base for the account and the post-sequester amount for the account in the final OMB report. In these cases, the amounts available for FY 1990 are the post-sequester amounts, as calculated in the exhibit using the OMB report.

(3) The enacted full-year appropriations are below the post-sequester amount for the account in the final OMB report. In these cases, the amount of the sequester is zero. The amounts appropriated are available for FY 1990.

The attached exhibit provides an illustration of these three different cases. For apportionment requests (S.F. 132s): the enacted amount will be placed on line 1; the sequester amount will be placed on line 5, as a negative, as not available; and the post-sequester amount, i.e., the amount available, will be placed on line 7.

3. Apportionment requests (S.F. 132) for amounts provided under a continuing resolution.—For written reapportionment requests of amounts previously automatically apportioned, fill in the column, "Amount on Latest S.F. 132" with the amounts that were automatically apportioned under this Bulletin, as follows:

(a) Place the annualized level in the most recent continuing resolution on line 1.

(b) Place the amounts automatically apportioned by this Bulletin on line 7.

(c) Place the amounts automatically apportioned by this Bulletin, as a negative, on line 5.

If only one public law applies, then in the space on line 5 insert the public law. Otherwise, in a footnote to line 5 separately identify:

(1) The sequester amount—cite P.L. 100-119 and P.L. 99-177;

(2) The amount not automatically apportioned because it was greater than the pro rata share, if any—continuing appropriations; and

(3) The amount not apportioned because it would have resulted in a rate of obligation greater than the normal seasonal pattern of obligations, if any—cite the joint resolution(s) providing the continuing appropriations.

4. Budget execution report (S.F. 133).—For budget execution reports:

(a) Place the enacted amount on line 1 of the S.F. 133.

(b) Place the amounts available for apportionment on line 7.

(c) Place the amounts that are not available pursuant to a law, as a negative, on line 5. If only one public law applies, then in the space on line 5 insert the public law. Otherwise, in a footnote to line 5 separately identify each public law and the associated amounts.

REGULAR FISCAL YEAR 1990 APPROPRIATIONS ENACTED ON OR AFTER OCTOBER 16

Illustration: All amounts are in thousands of dollars. Assume that the sequester is 5.3 percent and the amounts in the final OMB sequester report are:

Sequester base	$100,000
Sequester amount	−5,300
Post-sequester amount (calculated from amounts in the OMB sequester report)	94,700

Case (1): enacted above the sequester base for the account. In this case, the enacted appropriation is $110,000.

Enacted appropriation	$110,000
Sequester amount	−5,300
Available for fiscal year 1990	104,700

Case (2): enacted equal to or between the sequester base ($100,000) for the account and the post-sequester amount ($94,700). The following provides examples of enacted appropriations equal to the sequester base ($100,000), between the base and the post-sequester amount ($98,000), and equal to the post-sequester amount ($94,700).

Enacted appropriation	$100,000	$98,000	$94,700
Adjusted sequester	−5,300	−3,300	0
Available for fiscal year 1990	94,700	94,700	94,700

Case (3): enacted below the post-sequester amount ($94,700) for the account—for example $90,000.

Enacted appropriation	$90,000
Sequester amount	0
Available for fiscal year 1990	90,000

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield the floor.

Mr. KERREY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. KERREY. Mr. President, I would like to associate myself with the remarks made by the distinguished Senator from New Mexico. I agree that the amendment or the statutory change to protect the American flag, though it has importance, is not the gigantic issue that a lot of people seem to think it is. I further will associate myself with the Senator's remarks concerning not only the budget but the budget process.

In 1985, when the Senator from New Mexico was the chairman of the Budget Committee, I and a number of other Governors supported and worked for a proposal that was extremely difficult, as it turns out, and it was not agreed to by the President at that time. Unfortunately so, because if it had been done, in my judgment, I and the Senator and the distinguished Presiding Officer would not have to be giving speeches on the floor of the Senate talking about the budget deficit.

RESOLUTION TRUST CORPORATION

Mr. KERREY. Mr. President, I would like to comment that I read in this morning's paper an article that I would like to describe to you a bit today. It is a story about the hard-working people that are working for all of us, the dedicated executives of one of America's largest corporations, the newly formed Resolution Trust Corporation.

Saturday, on the 30th of September, the final day of this fiscal year, this merry band of men found themselves in a very uncomfortable position. They had $8 billion to spend and only a few hours left in the fiscal year to spend it in. For 7 weeks the men had worked very hard and long spending the first $12 billion of the $20 billion that President Bush gave them to help America's savings and loans.

President Bush gave them strict instructions to have all the money spent before midnight, September 30, the last day of the fiscal year. If they spent it by midnight, it would count against last year's deficit. If they spent it 1 minute after midnight, it would count against the deficit of 1990.

So these folks began to sweat and sweat, because they knew how important it was to the President to be able to say that next year's budget deficit has gone down. You know, it is not easy to spend $20 billion in 7 weeks. These executives worked hard and did the best they could. They spent $230 million every day, since the 9th of August. They just could not get rid of all the dough. That is $160,000 a minute, assuming they worked right through the weekend and around the clock.

If only America's Governors had known, maybe they would have had their education summit in a different location. If only America's fathers and mothers had known, maybe they could have gotten a few dollars for the care of their children. If only Tadeus Mazowiecki, the new Polish Prime Minister had known or President Virgillio Barco, and the communities trying to fight the war on drugs, if only these people had known, they would not have wasted their time talking to President Bush or Members of Congress. They would have gone over to 550 17th Street, NW., the home of the Resolution Trust Corporation, where the real money in America is to be found.

Unfortunately, they did not realize that the best way to make a case today for the American taxpayers' money is to incorporate yourself as a savings and loan.

Seeing no other public need except the one in front of them, the public servants I referenced earlier, in the Resolution Trust Corporation, had to come up with an answer, or their boss would be embarrassed.

Here is what they did, Mr. President, with that $8 billion. First, they gave the $8 billion to five savings and loans; and the second thing they did is borrowed that $8 billion right back from them. So they were able to say, with a straight face, "It is all gone, Mr. President," as well as William Seidman, the impeccable financial institution regulating czar. He was able to say in testimony he was preparing that the money was all gone, as well as the master of quick government giveaways, that powerful advocate of free markets, Danny Wall, in a speech he gave to a banking group on Monday of this week.

Mr. President, cleverness with numbers is so frequently and generously rewarded in America today, that I would anticipate this piece of creative accounting would receive the U.S. Chamber of Commerce free enterpriser of the year award. Sadly, some legal technocrat delivered the bad news to our good working people of the Resolution Trust Corporation.

They said that the transaction, in their words, was "a thinly disguised ruse to get the money off the books before the end of the fiscal year." Then to make matters worse, some Treasury Department wizard threatened to undo all their work with a simple wave of his wand, in spite of the shocked protest by William Seidman who said he thought we had it completed, and it was on the books. They have done this before with other FDIC transactions. In spite of that, the Treasury Department reversed it.

The U.S. Treasury airbrushed the entire incident from the record. According to them, it never happened. Apparently, the same can be said of this new RTC oversight board who said, when they were asked about it, "I do not think we knew about it."

It turns out that our faithful executives had done all this work for nothing. It turns out that it does not matter how much money you actually spend in this fiscal year, it only matters what the legal projection is. It turns out that the Office of Management and Budget had frozen the deficit in an estimate it made in August, and it turns out that real spending does not matter. What matters is the legal snapshot taken by Congress and agreed to by the Office of Management and Budget.

So that is the story, Mr. President, that I read in the paper this morning. It does not give me an awful lot of confidence that we are being honest with the American taxpayers, and it does not give me a lot of confidence, as well, in the priorities of our President. In fact, Mr. President, it made me wish I had never learned how to read.

I yield the floor.

Mr. BIDEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

FLAG PROTECTION ACT OF 1989

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I think we are very close to being ready to vote. I expect a voice vote on the amendment. The only other amendment we are aware of is the amendment by the Senate Republican leader, and he has an amendment to add and enhance the statute, adding several words to the statute which would make it illegal to walk upon or trample upon the flag on the ground. He is unavoidably detained at the moment, because he is meeting in his office with a head of state, I believe. He should be here shortly.

Just for the benefit of my colleagues and staff who may be here, to let them know how fast a track this is on, my expectation and hope is, as is that of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. THURMOND] that immediately upon passage of the Dole amendment, which will not require a rollcall vote, and both managers have accepted it—unless someone demands a rollcall vote, and it is clear to me that the Senate Republican leader does not want a rollcall vote on that—we would move to third reading.

To the best of my knowledge, there is no one else who is seeking the floor to speak on this issue, and we have provided the opportunity today for a good number of our colleagues—I do not know how many but a significant number—to speak. It would be my hope, if the Republican leader can break loose, that we could have a vote on this amendment in the next 15 mintues—hopefully, by 6:30, but I cannot guarantee that. The Republican leader is not here at the moment.

So while we are waiting for him, since there is no other business on this amendment that the Senator from Delaware is aware of, and the Senator from Delaware, over the last 4 months, has spoken enough on this amendment and will not in any way be able to enlighten the Senate beyond what I may have—and that is doubtful, how much I have enlightened them to begin with—I would suggest, in the meantime, the absence of a quorum while we ascertain the presence of the leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 950

(Purpose: To include maintaining a flag upon the floor or ground as a criminal act)

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kansas, [Mr. DOLE], for himself, Mr. DIXON, and Mr. THURMOND, proposed an amendment numbered 950.

On page 2, line 1, after "burns," insert "maintains on the floor or ground,".

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, on behalf of Senators DIXON and THURMOND, I rise to offer an amendment to the flag desecration bill now before the Senate.

This amendment is a very simple one. It would add the phrase "maintaining the flag on the floor or ground" to the list of activities prohibited by the Federal flag desecration statute. I would point out that this phrase was included in the original bill introduced by Senator BIDEN—a bill which has been the subject of 4 days of hearings by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

THE CHICAGO ART EXHIBIT

Last March, we all watched television news accounts of a certain so-called art exhibit at the Institute of Art in Chicago. In this exhibit, a U.S. flag was placed on the floor—right below a register for visitors of the institute to sign. Obviously, in order to sign the register, a visitor would have to step on the flag.

Needless to say, the Chicago exhibit caused an uproar—an uproar almost as great as the one that followed the Supreme Court's decision in Texas versus Johnson. Members of veterans' groups, families of veterans, and other concerned Americans were so outraged by the exhibit that they did something that most thought they could never do—they engaged in demonstrations of protest.

SENATE ACTION LAST MARCH

In response to the exhibit, and in response to the overwhelming public outrage generated by the exhibit, Senator DIXON and I introduced a bill that added the phrase "displaying the flag on the floor or ground" to the list of activities prohibited by the Federal flag desecration statute. This bill was supported by the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the Disabled Veterans of America, and other veterans' groups. And the bill passed the Senate unanimously—by a vote of 97 to 0. Unfortunately, the bill has not yet been taken up by the House.

CONTENT-NEUTRALITY

I would also like to point out that my amendment refers only to "maintaining" the flag on the floor or the ground. I have consciously substituted the word "maintaining" for the word displaying so that my amendment would not inadvertently undermine the underlying bill's content-neutrality. In this way, my amendment is consistent with the efforts of Senator BIDEN to draft a flag desecration statute that prohibits only conduct and not speech.

I believe there is no problem with this amendment. I am sorry to take the Senate's time to make the statement. I did want to make the record because it is a repeat of something done earlier in the Senate. I apologize to my colleagues for taking the time.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, it is a positive addition. I think it was worth the brief time the Senator took to make the record. I am prepared to vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 950) was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LIEBERMAN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may speak in morning business for 4 minutes or 3 minutes and this statement not interfere with the debate on the matter before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NEW ADMINISTRATION INITIATIVE ON POLAND

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I am pleased to report that the White House has just announced an important new aid initiative for Poland.

I ask unanimous consent to print the full text of the White House statement in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
OFFICE OF THE PRESS SECRETARY,
October 4, 1989.

STATEMENT BY THE PRESS SECRETARY

The world has watched with wonder as Poland has moved—swiftly and peacefully—to form a new government under Prime Minister Mazowiecki, the first non-Communist government in Eastern Europe in more than forty years. We salute Prime Minister Mazowiecki, President Jaruzelski, Solidarity leader Lech Walesa and so many other distinguished Polish leaders for their courage and wisdom in helping bring about a new beginning for Poland.

From the very start of this Administration, President Bush has taken the lead in supporting reform in Poland and Hungary. At Hamtramck, Michigan, in April, on the day of the signing of the Roundtable Agreement in Poland, the President announced a set of measures to open U.S. Markets and encourage private sector loans and investments. In July, he visited Poland and Hungary and spoke before the Polish parliament, as well as to a massive gathering at the Solidarity monument in Gdansk. He announced a further comprehensive package of assistance measures to support Poland's economic and political regeneration, a package which took account of the fact that Poland did not yet have its new government or its new economic policies in place. He announced a similar program during his visit to Hungary, which is also embarked on a promising path of political and economic reform. A few days later, at the Paris Economic Summit, the President proposed and our Summit partners agreed to a plan for concerted Western action to encourage and assist economic reform and democratic change in Poland and Hungary.

In early September, the Administration submitted to Congress a comprehensive legislative proposal that would create a $100 million Enterprise Fund for Poland and a $25 million Fund for Hungary, as well as a Labor Initiative and an Environmental Initiative together totalling $20 million. In addition to this $145 million proposal, and other initiatives taken by reprogramming existing resources, we have offered $100 million in emergency food aid to Poland in the coming fiscal year, in addition to $8 million in FY 89. In dollar terms, this total package already involves over $250 million.

We have also moved to encourage new trade and investment, by proposing that Congress grant both Poland and Hungary access to the U.S. Generalized System of Preferences and that it authorize the Overseas Private Investment Corporation (OPIC) to operate in both countries. On September 18, the President announced that he would grant Hungary permanent Most Favored Nation status, contingent upon passage by the Hungarian parliament of new emigration legislation, which has since occurred.

We have engaged the resources and creativity of the private sector, recognizing that the U.S. Government alone could not, and should not, render all the support Poland and Hungary require. On the eve of his trip to those countries in July, the President hosted a White House Symposium in which he urged leaders from the American private sector—labor leaders, businessmen, educators, and others—to be actively engaged in supporting economic and political change in Eastern Europe. Labor Secretary Dole visited Poland in August and signed an agreement providing for U.S. technical assistance and bilateral exchanges in the labor field. In mid-September, Commerce Secretary Mosbacher led a U.S. investment mission to Poland and Hungary, where he and American businessmen developed concrete proposals to encourage new private investments, joint ventures, and other forms of expanded U.S business involvement in redeveloping these two economies.

The dramatic changes in Poland over the past two months have lent new urgency to our efforts. What Poland is doing is historic, in the largest sense of the word. It holds the promise not only of a peaceful transition to democratic rule in Poland, but also of the beginning of the end of Europe's division, toward a Europe whole and free. It is also unprecedented: never before has a country attempted a successful transformation of a state-controlled economic and political system into one of political pluralism, democracy and a market economy. The new Polish government under Prime Minister Mazowiecki has a chance to consolidate the public trust that is needed for the difficult economic steps ahead, but it faces major economic problems.

There is no disagreement that both Poland and Hungary need, and will have, strong U.S. support. There is no disagreement that the U.S. needs to play a leading role in developing a concerted Western approach to Poland's economic recovery. The question is how best to achieve our goal. We believe, as do our Western economic partners, that Poland can best go forward by reforming its economy and becoming creditworthy again by reaching early agreement with the IMF on an economic reform plan. We also support a prompt and generous Paris Club rescheduling of Poland's international debt. This, along with agreement with the IMF, will make Poland eligible for IMF and World Bank loans totalling hundreds of millions of dollars annually. It will also give confidence to official and commercial lenders and to investors, whose participation in Poland's recovery is vital.

Poland is taking important steps toward reforming its economy. The Administration had a series of meetings last week with key Ministers in the new Polish government and reviewed the outlines of their economic reform program. It is an ambitious and bold plan, calling for radical economic reform and rapid movement toward agreement with the IMF. An integral part of the plan is an urgent request for Western economic assistance in helping to stabilize the Polish economy as reforms are implemented. In the context of an agreement with the IMF, the Poles seek, in addition to IMF and World Bank support, $1 billion in stabilization funds from the Western industrialized countries.

In response to Poland's request, the President has decided on two major new steps.

He will ask Congress to approve a $200 million grant for stabilization purposes, which would be the U.S. contribution to the $1 billion in Western assistance the Poles have requested. The grant would be contingent upon conclusion of an IMF agreement, and upon the recommendations of an experts' mission that the President will send to Poland soon. The U.S. will be working closely with the Summit Seven and its other allies to make certain that the entire $1 billion is available to Poland for this stabilization fund since the concept can be effective only if the fund is fully financed. A program for use of the $200 million U.S. contribution will be developed with the Polish government. The President wants to work with Congress to develop a strong bipartisan approach toward the common goal of providing prompt and effective support to the government and people of Poland.

It is important to complete development of a strategy to assist Poland's recovery. Toward that end, the President will send to Warsaw within the next few weeks a Presidential Mission including senior U.S. officials, business leaders and experts to discuss with the Polish government its economic plans and evaluate its needs. This mission will make recommendations to the President based on their own findings and their deliberations with experts from the twenty-four nation "Group for Economic Assistance to Poland and Hungary" as to the most effective use of the $1 billion stabilization fund. This mission will also focus on those economic sectors where U.S. expertise and experience can be of greatest assistance—agriculture, business management, financial services and others, pinpointing areas for reform and for productive use of assistance resources. The Congress can certainly be helpful in this endeavor. This initial mission will be followed by experts' missions in key economic sectors. In addition, Administration economists will examine urgently the structural economic challenges Poland will face now and in the years ahead so that we can provide the most effective help possible to the Polish government.

As the President has said, the futures of Poland and Hungary depend on concerted and sustained Western action. These efforts must be complementary, not duplicative, and must be coordinated with the efforts of the IMF and World Bank. That is why the President called on our G-7 economic partners at the Paris Economic Summit to establish new mechanisms for coordinating our efforts. The resulting 24-nation group has already met three times under the chairmanship of the EC Commission. The EC on October 3 committed itself to $330 million in additional assistance, over and above the $271 million in emergency food aid already pledged by the U.S., the EC and other donors. It has also begun to develop a common assistance strategy for Poland and Hungary, along with working groups on food aid, environment, manpower training and other specific areas of assistance. The goal is to set clear priorities, avoid redundant efforts and assume maximum aid effectiveness.

West Germany, France, Britain, Japan, and several other countries have already announced their intention to provide substantial bilateral assistance. The IMF has indicated it will move quickly in assisting Poland to develop an overall economic stabilization and reform program, and the World Bank is prepared to extend promptly major new credits once an IMF program is in place, and to develop additional loans.

Finally, in order to continue the dialogue with Poland's leaders that he began in July, the President is inviting President Jaruzelski and Prime Minister Mazowiecki to visit Washington at times convenient for each of them.

These are the steps the Administration has taken and will be taking in support of democratic change in Poland and Hungary: economic assistance conditioned upon real progress toward reform, business and technical assistance, the opening of investment and trade opportunities, and concerted Western action in conjunction with other industrialized democracies and the international financial institutions. These combined measures constitute an international recovery program that provides broad and substantial Western support for the historic changes now underway in Poland and Hungary.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, the initiative has two main elements. First, the administration will seek congressional approval of $200 million in grant assistance for fiscal year 1990—to be used for economic stabilization efforts. Those funds would be part of a $1 billion effort, involving our European and Japanese allies; and would be contingent upon an IMF agreement, insuring that Poland is committed to badly needed economic reforms.

Although the White House announcement notes that the exact uses for the money are contingent on negotiations with the Poles, it is clear that one important need in Poland is for currency stabilization. I would expect that most of these funds would end up being used for that purpose.

The other principal element of the administration's initiative is the creation of a Presidential mission of senior U.S. officials, business leaders and economic specialists—to go to Poland within the next few weeks; to help the Polish Government in evaluating its economic needs and formulating its economic program; and to report back to the President on how we can best help.

I would note that credit for originating this idea probably goes to the distinguished Senator from New Mexico, Senator DOMENICI, who recommended formation of just such a group in a letter to the President immediately after the President's visit to Poland and Hungary.

Mr. President, the total of all the assistance for Poland so far announced or proposed for Poland by the administration is more than $450 million. That number—in the context of our own deficit crisis and the many, many demands on our foreign assistance budget—reflects the priority the President attaches to responding to Poland's needs at this critical juncture.

But helping Poland is not a numbers game. It should not be turned into a partisan bidding war.

Helping Poland should mean coming up with a well-thought-out, realistic, affordable program of American aid—aimed at Poland's real needs; coordinated with efforts of the West Europeans and Japanese; and conditioned on, and conducive to, needed economic reform in Poland.

That is the kind of aid that serves Poland's needs; advances American interests; and will be supported by the American people.

I think the President and the administration have put together a very strong, credible program. I have one or two other ideas that I will still be pursuing, and I know that others do, too.

But the President's package is an excellent core package; it is the place where our consideration of aid for Poland should start.

The White House statement today includes a strong call for bipartisanship. It calls on the Congress to work with the White House in considering the President's proposals and other proposals on the table.

I am not sure that everyone has been proceeding on quite that course up until now. I hope, though, that everyone will heed the President's call, and that we will stop holding news conferences; stop calling names; and start serious discussions of how we can work together to help Poland, and advance American interests.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, a number of Members who have had the opportunity to visit Poland in recent months have shared their experiences with the Senate. Several have offered comprehensive legislative proposals to assist Poland.

It would be no exaggeration to note that there is a constructive competition among us to bolster the movement of Poland toward democracy and individual opportunity.

The President announced an initial package of assistance to Poland during his July visit. Some said it was not enough. Last month, the Foreign Relations Committee reported a bill that is similar to the President's proposal, but one that would triple the funding originally requested by the President.

Earlier this week, the House Democratic leadership offered an assistance package that was somewhat more modest than the Senate authorization bill. And, now the President has augmented his proposal to take into account the changing situation in Poland under its new democratic Prime Minister.

The President's new proposal adds two new concepts:

A $200 million grant as part of a $1 billion stabilization package by the Western industrial nations.

The dispatch of a Presidential mission of experts to assess the situation in Poland in a comprehensive manner.

Some may be surprised to hear what I am about to say. Sending a Presidential mission to Warsaw to assess the situation there is more important than the extra $200 million proposed by the President.

Let me make clear my own view about the economic situation in Poland. No one—repeat no one—at the present time knows for certain the financial and humanitarian needs of Poland in 1990 and beyond.

Many of us discussed Poland's economic reform plan last week with the new Polish Finance Minister. We learned from him that the new government is just beginning a drastic and unparalleled effort to do a very simple—but also very difficult—thing.

What the Finance Minister and the Solidarity-led government and parliament are trying to do is to make things work again in Poland. After 50 years of war, occupation, and Communist incompetence and corruption, almost nothing works in Poland. Trying to fix the mess in Poland is far more difficult, and politically dangerous, than anything we have ever attempted in America.

No one knows how the Polish people will react to the further sacrifices needed to put things right. But only the Poles can turn their economy and their society around, in their own way. Spending billions of dollars into unreformed Poland right now would be like pouring water into a spaghetti strainer. I think we all know that. Certainly the Polish-American community does.

Many of us have had great little ideas about how to help Poland. This Senator wants us to help the Polish Parliament obtain equipment and training. Many of us are working to help redress specific problems. But none of us, not even the President, or the new Polish Government, is certain about the big picture, the macroeconomic climate, as the economists would say, for growth and investment in Poland.

The President's decision to send to Warsaw a Presidential mission will give him and us a better grasp of what we are about. The mission will consist of business leaders who know how to make things work. It will include experienced officials and private experts in the areas of agriculture, financial services, and management. For the first time, Congress and the President will have a comprehensive review of the Polish situation.

Mr. President, I applaud the President for sending this mission to Poland. It is an approach that I encouraged him to take, and one that makes it easier for us to help Poland in a truly effective and imaginative way.

FLAG PROTECTION ACT OF 1989

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

BY ALL MEANS, PROTECT THE FLAG

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, let me express my wholehearted support for H.R. 2978, Senator BIDEN's flag-protection bill.

Mr. President, there are two routes to our singular goal of protecting the American flag from desecration. We can do it by statute, fully aware that such a law faces challenge in the courts on first amendment grounds. And we can do it by means of a constitutional amendment, which would get the job done once and for all. I do not see these two vehicles—statutory and constitutional—as mutually exclusive.

I support Senator BIDEN's proposed statute because it will get a law in place urgently and immediately. This will provide a bridge, and interim remedy, pending passage and ratification of a constitutional amendment. At the same time, let me make it clear that I continue to support Senator THURMOND's proposed constitutional amendment as the optimum long-term solution; its protection would be ironclad and unchallengeable.

In other words, Mr. President, in supporting Senator BIDEN's statutory solution, I am opting for a bird in the hand, fully expecting also to obtain a bird in the bush, that is, the constitutional amendment.

There is no question, Mr. President, that our flag needs and deserves protection. I do not for a minute accept the hysterical, ultrapurist notion that the first amendment is compromised by flag-protection legislation. Opponents of this bill purport to defend the first amendment, but in fact they end up trivializing and perverting the first amendment. Never in our Nation's history have Americans tolerated wanton desecration of our most cherished and sacred symbol, the flag. Nor would we tolerate someone spray-painting political graffiti on the Washington Monument, or burning a cross on someone's lawn. Those who would characterize these acts as speech protected by the first amendment are dead wrong. The first amendment is not—and was not intended to be—absolute. We have always allowed for commonsense exceptions.

Mr. President, it is in this regard that the Supreme Court's divided ruling in Texas versus Johnson is a decision that shocks the conscience. It is intellectual nonsense, and personally offensive to me and to every other veteran who has seen brave young Americans killed following the flag into combat. The Court's decision is morally outrageous, and it is a gross misinterpretation of the Constitution.

Enough said. The Supreme Court has spoken, now let the people speak. The Justices have confused destruction with freedom, and in the process they have misconstrued the first amendment. I support reaffirming freedom of speech, and distinguishing it from desecration and destruction. To that end, I urge my colleagues to pass the Biden bill and to follow up with a constitutional amendment.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, contrary to what some may believe, the Supreme Court's decision in Texas versus Johnson does not pit flag burners against patriots in a constitutional tug of war over the importance of the flag. Almost all Americans accept the flag's unique symbolic value. That is why it is singled out in the first place. The Court's decision raises two issues for us: First, given its uniqueness, is the flag worthy of our special protection from defilement; and, second, if so, what is the best way to provide that protection, by statute or constitutional amendment?

I share with the majority of the American people the desire to protect the flag from deliberate destruction or mutilation. The flag is an important symbol representing our land, our Government, our people, our ideals, and our values. The flag makes us proud. It has given us courage, and it has moved us to sacrifice. Many brave men and women have died protecting the flag from dishonor and disgrace. These deep feelings have understandably caused strong reactions to the Court's decision. However, we must not be so outraged that we misread what the Court actually said, nor make the wrong decision in seeking a remedy.

During the 200 years since the signing of the Constitution, amendments to it have been added only 26 times. With the exception of the prohibition amendment, no amendment has ever been diminished. This fact, coupled with the time-consuming nature of the amending process, strongly suggests that we should not cavalierly amend the Constitution. A constitutional amendment should be considered only when there is a great and absolute necessity. I believe that a few people engaging in the act of flag burning, however much it offends our sensibilities, does not warrant such a response if there is another effective remedy.

Moreover, I think special vigilance is required when a proposed amendment, such as the administration's, is written in such vague or broad terms that it leaves cracks through which the seepage of political whim can erode the very foundation of our Bill of Rights. As Prof. Walter Dellinger of Duke

University Law School stated before the Senate Judiciary Committee:

> This potentially dangerous amendment would create an entirely undefined exception to either one, some, none, or all of the Bill of Rights; it would place this power in the hands of all future Congresses, 50 State legislatures, the government of the District of Columbia, and perhaps as many as 14,000 local governments * * *.

The Supreme Court's decision, however, does not preempt an alternative statutory remedy. As Prof. Laurence H. Tribe, the well-known constitutional scholar from Harvard Law School, points out, "In a little noted passage, the Court majority observed that the case would have been altogether different if the State had punished Mr. Johnson on the simple ground that he had physically mistreated something that the majority of the people had chosen by law to protect." His conclusion is that the Court would be sympathetic to a narrowly written statute and, therefore, we should "change the law, not the Constitution." I agree.

In addition to being a valid and constitutionally workable alternative, a statute is preferable because it is faster and easier to implement. What is the sense of plodding through an amendment process when a statute that would accomplish the same goal is available right now? Why wait? If the flag is threatened, how would we protect it in the meantime? Also, adoption of the administration's proposed constitutional amendment could well entangle us in a web of litigation over its meaning. Because the amendment is so vague in its relationship to the first amendment, Professor Dellinger stated: "The proposed amendment will produce uncertainty, confusion, and conflicting Court decisions * * *. Such a result would keep us in lengthy litigation—and the flag unprotected—for years to come.

Mr. President, I believe the Biden bill meets the Supreme Court's criteria for constitutionality in this area. It would protect our flag and withstand the Court's scrutiny in regard to the first amendment protection of symbolic free speech. Such a statute would reaffirm the flag's unique symbolic value without jeopardizing the very ideals it embodies.

I urge adoption of H.R. 2978.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, let me quote for my colleagues "The American's Creed":

> I believe in the United States of America as a Government of the people, by the people, for the people; whose just powers are derived from the consent of the governed; a democracy in a republic, a sovereign Nation of many sovereign States; a perfect Union one and inseparable; established upon those principles of freedom, equality, justice and humanity for which American patriots sacrificed their lives and fortunes. I therefore believe it is my duty to my country to love it, to support its Constitution, to obey its laws, to respect its flag, and to defend it against all enemies.

The American's Creed was adopted by the House of Representatives on April 3, 1918. It is no less powerful or correct today.

I do believe it is my duty, and the duty of every American, to respect the flag of the United States; 48 of the 50 States have statutes to protect the national flag, but not the Federal Government.

In Korea, it is illegal to burn the American flag, but we allow it here.

The Federal Government has statutes prohibiting the burning of money, but the Supreme Court says it is OK to burn the symbol of the very principles and truths by which we live.

I am proud to stand here today among my colleagues not only to profess my creed, but to take action in accordance with it.

It is poetically ironic that the word "flag" has a second and beautiful meaning.

"Flag" denotes a member of the genus iris, a very colorful family of flowers: the water-flag, the yellow-flag, the American blue flag. All types of iris.

Just as this many-colored field of flowers is united by a common bond—flag—so are we citizens of the United States united by a common genus—the red, white, and blue flag.

In the "Book of Job," a question is posed: "Can the flag grow without water?" The reference is to a flower, but the analogy is well taken.

Our flag cannot prosper without the sustenance of our ideas. But the flag also needs shade—protection from the burning sun.

Mr. President, our flag should never be burned. What should be burned is the Supreme Court's decision.

I, therefore, join my colleagues in cosponsoring this legislation to protect the flag of the United States.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I respect and concur with the sincere sentiments of my colleagues who would like to protect, by Federal statute, the American flag from mutilation and destruction. I take the view, however, that this bill, if enacted, would be unconstitutional under the Supreme Court's decision in Texas versus Johnson. This compels me to oppose the legislation. As I have said many times, you don't have to agree with what the Supreme Court says, but you do have to obey it.

It seems plain to me that if the notorious Mr. Johnson were to burn another flag at the next Republican Convention and were to be convicted under the proposed law, the Supreme Court would strike down the law just as it did the Texas statute. And the reason, whether we agree with it or not, would be the same—his symbolic political speech is protected by the first amendment and may not be punished by State or Federal statute.

Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, it was on September 4, 1789—exactly 200 years and 1 month ago—that the U.S. Senate approved a constitutional amendment guaranteeing freedom of speech. For all these years—through world wars, urban riots, a depression, and even a bloody civil war—the first amendment has needed no repair, caused no calamity. In fact, it has been the guardian of our freedom. In the words of one scholar, the fourth amendment protects the first amendment, and the first amendment protects the others.

As a member of the Judiciary Committee, I've attended many hours of hearings on the flag issue. Nothing I've seen or heard convinces me that we need a constitutional amendment on account of Gregory Lee Johnson's foolish and offensive act. There's no reason to "go nuclear" when a clean rifle shot may do the trick. That rifle shot is a statute against flag desecration.

All of us have the same goal: to protect the most cherished symbol of our Nation. All of us hold in contempt those who would stain our heritage by defiling our flag. So today we are looking for the best means to reach an agreed-upon end.

The quickest, the most effective, and even the most conservative solution is to enact a law. This point was driven home at Judiciary's final hearing by two law professors from my State, Brady Williamson and Gordon Baldwin. They noted that the constitutional amendment process is time consuming, will generate an avalanche of litigation, and may not even work in the end. It's entirely possible that the Supreme Court will not let a constitutional amendment on the flag override the first amendment—just as the Court has previously not allowed the fourteenth amendment to override the first amendment. What is more, a flag amendment invites a crazy-quilt patchwork of laws across the Nation. Surely it is better to have a single Federal statute on the books.

Mr. President, by enacting H.R. 2978, we fulfill our obligations as guardians of the flag and defenders of the Constitution, H.R. 2978 will pass constitutional muster. Its definition of "flag" is appropriately narrow, protecting flags that are "commonly displayed" and not, say, red-white-and-blue paper plates. Although I am not happy with expedited review—because it means that the Supreme Court will decide an important issue with no factual context outside of a single case—I realize that many Americans want this question settled quickly and with finality. Thus, I favor H.R. 2978 as amended by Senator BIDEN's provision for expedited review.

I would like to close, Mr. President, with this observation: The flag is fireproof. No one—not Gregory Johnson or any other nut—can destroy the symbol of our collective aspirations. The Constitution, however, is much more fragile. Let us not tamper with the document when we can achieve our goals with a more efficient and more effective statute.

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. President, I rise today to express my strong support for a constitutional amendment restoring to the States and Congress the power to prohibit any desecration of the American flag.

Like most Americans, I was truly outraged by the Supreme Court's bizarre decision in the case of Texas versus Johnson. In that case, the Court held that a person can do anything to the flag: burn it, soil it, walk on it, or spit on it—and the vast majority of Americans who love the flag and everything it stands for have to stand aside and let it happen.

After this decision, and the public outcry over it, some people argued that the flag was "just a piece of cloth"—no need to get so upset about burning it.

But, Mr. President, most of us know better—we know that the American flag is a lot more than a piece of cloth. It is the symbol and the standard of this great Nation. It is a beacon of freedom to those who live under the yoke of oppression throughout the world.

The American flag has fired the courage of our fighting men in war; and it is a strong reminder of the values of liberty and justice that set this country apart from every other Nation on Earth.

Burning the flag is not merely burning a piece of cloth; it is an affront to every value and principle that we Americans hold dear. For those hundreds of thousands of families who have lost fathers and sons in war, burning the flag is indistinguishable from scorching the grass on these heroes' graves.

That is why I did not hesitate to advocate and cosponsor an amendment to the Constitution assuring the dignity and sanctity of the American flag. On the morning following the Supreme Court's ridiculous decision, I joined with the Senator from South Carolina, Senator THURMOND, in introducing a constitutional amendment prohibiting flag-burning and other acts of flag desecration.

Also before the Senate today is a separate bill which purports to prohibit flag-burning—without any constitutional amendment.

I share the sentiment behind this measure, but I am concerned that it will do virtually nothing to address the constitutional issue posed by the Supreme Court's decision.

If we only pass this statutory measure, we may be back here within a few months—after the Supreme Court strikes it down—and we will be giving the same speeches; and then, maybe at last, we will owe up to the task of passing a real constitutional amendment.

It doesn't seem to me that a mere congressional statute will do anything to deter a lawless flag-burner like the defendant in the Texas versus Johnson case. If anything, the bill being proposed by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee will be seen as throwing down a challenge to desecrate the flag—and see whether this statute is constitutional after all. In essence, we will be saying, "Go ahead—burn our flag." I don't think that is what we want to do in defense of our Nation's greatest symbol.

So in conclusion, Mr. President, flag-burning is not speech. It merely reflects hostility for the traditions and values of this country. And rather than burn the U.S. flag, I suggest that such people express their hostility in a more meaningful way: by leaving the country and going somewhere else—like Tiananmen Square in China, or East Germany, or the Soviet Union. People in those countries are seeking refuge under our flag, not burning it.

The Marines who risked their lives to raise the American flag over Iwo Jima knew what our flag stands for. Certainly, we know what the flag stands for. Now is the time to enact an amendment to the Constitution—to tell the Supreme Court what the American flag stands for.

We cannot stand idly by while the symbol of our Nation for over 200 years is dragged through the mud, spat upon, walked on, and torched by those who don't know what an honor and a gift it is to be an American.

I urge my colleagues to join the President, the Republican leader, and the ranking member of the Judiciary Committee, in passing this historic constitutional amendment to protect the glorious flag of the United States of America.

Thank you. I yield the floor.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I rise today in support of Senator BIDEN's bill, which protects our national symbol by amending the flag-desecration statute to prohibit physical desecration. It is a straightforward approach to upholding the dignity of our flag without tampering with the Constitution, as some would have this body do.

The Supreme Court held in the recent Texas versus Johnson case—that burning the flag as a political statement was protected by the first amendment's guarantee of free speech. The act which brought this case before the Court was deeply offensive. But as Justice Anthony Kennedy wrote in his concurrence, "It is poignant but fundamental that the flag protects those who hold it in contempt."

The underlying principle of the first amendment is to protect the rights of Americans to express their political views, no mater how unpopular they may be. This right distinguishes our Nation from others around the world. It is telling that at the very time the Supreme Court was issuing its opinion, protesters seeking freedom were being massacred in Beijing.

In an effort to show our disdain for burning the flag, we must not destroy the freedoms that the flag represents. Limiting the first amendment would be nothing less than a fundamental change in what our Republic represents. As we celebrate the bicentennial of the Constitution, I am reminded of Benjamin Franklin's warning; "Those who would give up essential liberty to purchase a little temporary safety deserve neither liberty or safety."

The first amendment, like the flag, has weathered attacks for over two centuries and survived with glory. I will resist efforts to alter the foundation of our form of government that has served us so well for so long.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I want to commend my distinguished colleagues on the Judiciary Committee, Senator BIDEN and Senator THURMOND, for taking on this tough issue and showing such leadership on this matter.

Mr. President, I have often stated my support for both the statutory remedy to Texas versus Johnson and to the constitutional amendment approach which we will soon be discussing on this floor.

I have to confess some surprise, however, that we are debating the House version of the statute rather than S. 1338, which was the version prepared by our colleagues Senators BIDEN, ROTH, and COHEN. It was that bill which was the focus of the testimony the Judiciary Committee received during our hearings on this matter. H.R. 2978 was a companion to S. 1338, but was never discussed in the detail that S. 1338 was or Senate Joint Resolution 180—the constitutional amendment.

But I do support the principle behind the statutory approach. We need to have something in place as soon as possible which will make it very clear that the American flag has a very special role in our society. It is more than a mere symbol. It is so well deserving of the protection we are attempting to enact today.

I am very pleased that my colleagues, Senator THURMOND and Senator BIDEN, were able to cooperate to the fine degree that they have. I am also pleased to support the Thurmond-Biden amendments which eliminate all of my objections to this bill.

Mr. President, I am obliged to remind this body that this bill is not a complete answer to Texas versus Johnson. A great many of the voters out there in the land are also waiting for us to present them with an amendment to the Constitution. Most all of our military veterans are demanding stronger action than "just a statute" protecting the flag. I join in their expressions of concern and I join in their expressions of absolute disgust at Mr. Johnson's obscene antics.

So, Mr. President, I am proud to add my voice in strong support of this measure. I will be equally proud to speak in favor of a constitutional amendment.

Above all, however, we must urge caution as we deal with this issue. What we do here is of no small consequence. Our actions today may shape one of the most enduring pieces of legislation from this Congress.

As we write the statute in final conference, we must carefully phrase its provisions so that we are not attempting to legislate away any constitutional freedoms—this would be wasteful and futile.

It is for us to be cautious and thoughtful in our deliberations, so we do not let our intense disgust at Johnson's antics push us into legislation that is restrictive of our precious freedoms. We must be so careful not to prohibit "innocent" desecrations of our national symbol. That is why I am pleased that this measure has a "dirty flag" defense included in its provisions. That is a thoughtful measure.

We must be even more cautious and thoughtful as we craft a proposed constitutional amendment to protect the flag, as my distinguished colleagues have already stated. An amendment to our Constitution is of monumental consequence. We must be cautious in our approach to its creation.

The reprehensible acts committed by Mr. Johnson should not be allowed to galvanize us into a reaction which dilutes our freedoms, for then he would have achieved his crude goals. Instead, let us make a clear statement that his speech crossed the line. He can speak all he wants about anything he wants—we will not condone his conduct.

So, I do support both of these measures, and I thank you.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the only amendments remaining in order to the pending bill be the following: An amendment by Senator DOLE to add the word "publicly"; and an amendment by Senator WILSON to add the words "physically defiled."

I further ask unanimous consent that no motions to recommit be in order and that votes on or in relation to the amendments be stacked to occur at 10:30 a.m. tomorrow, Thursday, October 5; and that when these amendments are disposed of, the Senate proceed without any intervening action or debate to third reading and vote on final passage of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the first vote be a 15-minute rollcall vote and the second and third votes be 10-minute votes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I thank all concerned for their cooperation in permitting us to reach this point. Accordingly, there will be no further rollcall votes this evening. It is our intention, having discussed this with the distinguished Republican leader and the managers of the bill, that the debate on these two amendments will occur this evening; that when the Senate recesses this evening, it will return to session at 10 o'clock in the morning; that following the time for the two leaders, there will be a brief period for morning business until 10:30, at which time there will then be three rollcall votes: A vote on each of the Dole and Wilson amendments and then a vote on final passage. Senators should now be alerted to the fact that there are no further rollcall votes this evening; there will be three votes to complete action on this bill beginning at 10:30 tomorrow.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MEDICARE CATASTROPHIC REFORM ACT

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I first of all am appreciative of the talents of the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee for allowing me to say a few words at this time in introducing the Catastrophic Reform Act which has been discussed on many occasions on this floor. It is my understanding that perhaps tomorrow, I emphasize perhaps, after we dispense with the drug bill that we will be able to move to the catastrophic reform bill which was agreed to by unanimous consent to be taken up before this Saturday or in any event before the Senate addresses the reconciliation bill.

Mr. President, I know the discussion of this legislation will be long; I know that it will be detailed. I will try to just make a few remarks.

First of all, I would like to comment on the House vote that took place today. I understand the frustration of the Members of the House that caused them to repeal that act, and I also understand why the Members of the House rejected the so-called Stark-Gradison-Waxman amendment.

One of the reasons why I believe the amendment was indeed beaten is because, frankly, it did not address the catastrophic health care issue and should have been renamed the prescription drug bill. But be that as it may, Mr. President, the House of Representatives has spoken on this issue. They have totally repealed the Catastrophic Illness Act which is, frankly, an almost unprecedented action in the history of this body, certainly in recent years where a program's benefits have been repealed by at least one body of the Congress.

Mr. President, I think that is a mistake to repeal. I think the focus of the anger of seniors is the surtax. I believe they deserve and want catastrophic health coverage. I believe they deserve and want protection from spousal impoverishment. I believe they need the Medicaid buy-in and pregnant mothers program, in-home deductible, home health, respite, mammogram screening, the so-called Mitchell drugs and hospice.

Mr. President, we can do that with the $4.90 that is now being paid by seniors as part of their Medicare part B payments. Mr. President, we will have to repeal significant portions of the Medicare Catastrophic Act, but we can keep what I believe seniors need, want, and deserve. We will have to repeal the skilled nursing facility benefit. We are going to have to repeal the outpatient prescription drug program beyond the so-called Mitchell drugs and repeal the part B out-of-pocket.

I would also like to say, according to the number of CBO, and I would like to say this twice because there has been a great deal of misinformation conveyed on my proposal, this proposal is not underfunded according to CBO. This proposal is not underfunded according to CBO. People who have not seen this bill have already told the media and their colleagues that my proposal would be underfunded.

Indeed, it is not. In fact, it builds up a modest surplus in the years ahead and as far as its impact on the overall budget next year is concerned, it is indeed an impact of about $4 billion on the budget deficit.

I say, again, Mr. President, we should not allow bad policy to keep alive a piece of legislation simply because we want to disguise the deficit.

Mr. President, I am pleased that the House acted. I think it is time that the Senate acted. I look forward to the opportunity of debating the numerous amendments which will be proposed to this bill because I think the Senate needs to act, we need to get this issue behind us in one way or another and get back to addressing the real concerns of seniors in this country, which is, of course, long-term care.

I am also suggesting that if we totally repeal this legislation, there will be seniors who have already received these benefits, who believe they will be receiving these benefits, who will now find out that they have been deprived of them and you may get a backlash of enormous proportions on this issue.

So my proposal basically says let us keep what we can. Let us give them what we promised them—catastrophic illness hospitalization coverage, protection from spousal impoverishment, deductible home health, hospice, mammogram screening, and other benefits. At the same time, Mr. President, we have to repeal the most expensive parts of the program, which drove us into this terrible surtax dilemma and which, by the way, has escalated costs so dramatically such as prescription drugs, such as the skilled nursing facility benefit, and the part B cap we need to preserve. We need to do it for seniors. I look forward to the debate on the floor. I caution again my colleagues against repeating what the House did. Let us try to preserve some benefits and give the people what they really want. That is repeal of the surtax.

Mr. President, I thank my colleague from Delaware again for his patience and his courtesy. He has been on the floor now I believe for over 8 hours. He has been very kind in allowing me to speak on this issue.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill be held at the desk and that the text be printed in the RECORD, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1726

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. REPEAL OF MEDICARE CATASTROPHIC COVERAGE PROVISIONS EFFECTIVE IN YEARS AFTER 1989 AND SUPPLEMENTAL MEDICARE PREMIUM.

(a) GENERAL REPEAL.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The following provisions of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988, as amended by the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988, are hereby repealed, and the Social Security Act shall be applied and administered as if such provisions (and the amendments made by such provisions) had not been enacted:

(A) Section 201.

(B) Subsections (i), (j), and (k) of section 202.

(C) Section 211(c)(3).

(D) Section 212 (other than subsection (b)(2)).

(E) Section 213.

(2) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The repeals made by this subsection shall take effect as if included in the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988.

(b) SUPPLEMENTAL MEDICARE PREMIUM REPEAL.—

(1) GENERAL REPEAL.—Section 111 of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988, as amended by the Technical and Miscellaneous Revenue Act of 1988, is hereby repealed, and the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 shall be applied and administered as if such provisions (and the amendments made by such provisions) had not been enacted.

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS RELATING TO TRUST FUNDS.—

(A) FEDERAL HOSPITAL INSURANCE CATASTROPHIC COVERAGE RESERVE FUND.—Section 1817A of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395i-1a) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) On November 1, 1989, the Secretary shall transfer any amount remaining in the Trust Fund (including interest) to the general fund.".

(B) SMI TRUST FUND.—Section 1841(a) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395t(a)) is amended by striking "which are attributable to the catastrophic coverage rate and which are not otherwise appropriated under section 1817A(a)(2) to the Federal Hospital Insurance Catastrophic Coverage Reserve Fund".

(3) EFFECTIVE DATES.—The repeal and amendments made by this subsection shall take effect as if included in the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988.

(c) MODIFICATION OF EXTENDED CARE SERVICES.—

(1) DURATION OF EXTENDED CARE SERVICES REDUCED TO 100 DAYS PER YEAR.—Section 1812 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395d) is amended by striking "150 days" in subsections (a)(2) and (b)(1) and inserting "100 days".

(2) POST-HOSPITALIZATION REQUIREMENT REINSTATED.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Section 1812 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395d) is amended—

(i) in subsection (a)(2), as amended by paragraph (1), by striking "extended care services for up to 100 days during any calendar year" and inserting in lieu thereof "(A) post-hospital extended care services for up to 100 days, and (B), to the extent provided in subsection (f), extended care services that are not post-hospital extended care services";

(ii) in subsection (b)(1), by inserting "post-hospital" before "extended care";

(iii) in subsection (e), by inserting "post-hospital" before "extended care"; and

(iv) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(f)(1) The Secretary shall provide for coverage under clause (B) of subsection (a)(2) of this section, of extended care services which are not post-hospital extended care services at such time and for so long as the Secretary determines, under such terms and conditions (described in paragraph (2)) as the Secretary finds appropriate, that the inclusion of such services will not result in any increase in the total of payments made under this subchapter and will not alter the acute care nature of the benefit described in subsection (a)(2) of this subsection.

"(2) The Secretary shall provide—

"(A) for such limitations on the scope and extent of such services described in subsection (a)(2)(B) of this section, and on the categories of individuals who may be eligible to receive such services, and

"(B) notwithstanding sections 1814, 1861(v), and 1886 of this title for such restrictions and alternatives on the amount and methods of payment described in such subsection, as may be necessary to carry out paragraph (1).

"(g) For a definition of 'post-hospital extended care services' and definitions of other terms used in this part, see section 1861 of this title.".

(B) MISCELLANEOUS AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(i) Section 1811 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395c) is amended by inserting "post-hospital" before "extended care".

(ii) Paragraphs (2)(B) and (6) of section 1814(a) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395f(a)) are each amended by inserting "post-hospital" before "extended care" each place it appears.

(iii) Section 1861(e) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x(e)) is amended—

(I) in the matter before paragraph (1), by inserting "and, subsection (i) of this subsection," after "and paragraph (7) of this subsection";

(II) in the second sentence, by inserting ", and subsection (i) of this section" after "and section 1814(f)(2)";

(III) in the fourth sentence, by inserting "except for purposes of subsection (a)(2)" after ", such term shall not"; and

(IV) by inserting after the first sentence the following new sentence: "For purposes of subsection (a)(2) of this section, such term includes any institution which meets the requirements of paragraph (1) of this section.".

(iv) Section 1861 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x) is amended by inserting after subsection (h) the following new subsection:

"(i) The term 'post-hospital extended care services' means extended care services furnished an individual after transfer from a hospital in which such individual was an inpatient for not less than 3 consecutive days before his discharge from the hospital in connection with such transfer. For purposes of the preceding sentences, items and services shall be deemed to have been furnished to an individual after transfer from a hospital, and such individual shall be deemed to have been an inpatient in the hospital immediately before transfer therefrom, if such individual is admitted to the skilled nursing facility—

"(A) within 30 days after discharge from such hospital, or

"(B) within such time as it would be medically appropriate to begin an active course of treatment, in the case of an individual whose condition is such that skilled nursing care would not be medically appropriate within 30 days after discharge from a hospital; and an individual shall be deemed not to have been discharged from a skilled nursing facility if, within 30 days after discharge therefrom, such individual is admitted to such facility or any other skilled nursing facility.".

(v) Subsections (v)(1)(G)(i), (v)(2)(A), and (v)(3) of section 1861 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x) are each amended by inserting "post-hospital" before "extended care" each place it appears.

(vi) Section 1861(y) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x(y)) is amended

(I) by inserting "Post-Hospital" before "Extended Care" in the heading and by inserting "post-hospital" before "extended care" each place it appears, and

(II) in paragraph (1), by inserting "(except for purposes of subsection (a)(2))" after "Boston, Massachusetts, but only".

(vii) Section 1866(d) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395cc(d)) is amended by inserting "post-hospital" before "extended care".

(viii) Subsections (d)(1) and (f) of section 1883 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395tt) are amended by inserting "post-hospital" before "extended care" each place it appears.

(3) COINSURANCE MODIFIED.—

(A) AMOUNT.—Paragraph (3) of section 1813(a) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395e(a)) is amended to read as follows:

"(3) The amount payable for post-hospital extended care services furnished an individual shall be reduced by a coinsurance amount equal to one-eighth of the inpatient hospital deductible for each day (before the 101st day) on which he is furnished such services after such services have been furnished to him for 20 days.

(4) USE OF EXCESS PREMIUM REVENUES.—Nothwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall use any excess revenues resulting from the amendments made by this section to—

(A) first, reimburse the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund for any costs resulting from the provision of extended care services to individuals admitted before November 1, 1989, and

(B) second, to further reduce premiums imposed under section 1839 of the Social Security Act.

(5) STUDY.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services, or the Secretary's delegate, shall study the reasons for the unexpected increase in cost estimates of the extended care services benefit under title XVIII of the Social Security Act. The Secretary shall report to the Congress no later than February 1, 1990 the results of the study, including any recommendations for further modifications to such benefit appropriate during the consideration of the provision of long-term care benefits.

(6) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this subsection shall apply to admissions occurring after October 31, 1989, and shall apply to care and services furnished on or after such date.

(d) LIMITATION OF DRUG BENEFITS TO IMMUNOSUPPRESSANTS AND HOME IV DRUGS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subparagraph (B) of section 1861(t)(3) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x(t)(3)) is amended by striking "in 1990" and inserting "in years after 1989".

(2) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this subsection shall take effect as if included in the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988.

(e) ADJUSTMENT IN MEDICARE PART B PREMIUM.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 1839(a) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395r(a)) is amended—

(A) in paragraph (1) by striking all after "(a)(1)" and inserting the following: "(A) The Secretary shall, during September of 1989 and of each year thereafter, determine the monthly actuarial basic rate and the monthly actuarial catastrophic illness rate for enrollees age 65 and over which shall be applicable for the succeeding calendar year.

"(B) The monthly actuarial basic rate determined under this paragraph for a calendar year shall be the amount the Secretary estimates to be necessary so that the aggregate amount for the calendar year with respect to those enrollees age 65 and over will equal one-half of the total of the benefits and administrative costs which he estimates will be payable from the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund for services performed and related administrative costs incurred in such calendar year with respect to such enrollees (excluding benefits payable under section 1833(c)).

"(C) The monthly actuarial catastrophic illness rate determined under this paragraph for a calendar year shall be equal to the sum of—

"(i) the amount the Secretary estimates to be necessary so that the aggregate amount for the calendar year with respect to those enrollees age 65 and over will equal the total of the benefits and administrative costs which he estimates will be payable from—

"(I) the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund for services performed and related administrative services costs incurred in such calendar year with respect to such enrollees under section 1833(c), and

"(II) the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund, which are attributable to the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988, as amended, and

"(ii) the amount (if any) that the Secretary estimates to be necessary to offset any amount—

"(I) by which the monthly premiums otherwise payable under this section with respect to such enrollees for such calendar year (disregarding subsections (b) and (f)) are reduced by reason of the limitation imposed by subsection (f), and

"(II) that are attributable (as determined by the Secretary) to the portion of such monthly premiums that is determined under paragraph (3)(A).

"(D) In calculating the monthly actuarial rates under this paragraph, the Secretary shall include appropriate amounts for a contingency margin.",

(B) in paragraph (2) by striking "1983" and inserting "1989",

(C) in paragraph (3)—

(i) by striking "1983" in the first sentence and inserting "1989",

(ii) by striking the second sentence and inserting the following: "The monthly premium shall (except as otherwise provided in subsection (e)) be equal to the sum of—

"(A) a weighted average of the monthly actuarial catastrophic illness rate for enrollees age 65 and over, determined under paragraph (1) of this subsection, and that rate for disabled enrollees under age 65, determined under paragraph (4) of this subsection, for that calendar year, and

"(B) the smaller of—

"(i) the monthly actuarial basic rate for enrollees age 65 and over, determined according to paragraph (1) of this subsection, for that calendar year, or

"(ii) the monthly payment rate most recently promulgated by the Secretary under this paragraph, increased by a percentage determined as follows: The Secretary shall ascertain the primary insurance amount computed under section 215(a)(1), based upon average indexed monthly earnings of $900, that applied to individuals who became eligible for and entitled to old-age insurance benefits on November 1 of the year before the year of the promulgation. He shall increase the monthly premium rate by the same percentage by which that primary insurance amount is increased when, by reason of the law in effect at the time the promulgation is made, it is so computed to apply to those individuals for the following November 1.", and

(iii) by striking "amount of an adequate actuarial rate for enrollees age 65 and over as provided in paragraph (1)" in the third sentence and inserting "amounts of adequate actuarial rates for enrollees as provided in paragraphs (1) and (4)", and

(D) by striking paragraph (4) and inserting the following:

"(4)(A) The Secretary shall also, during September of 1989 and of each year thereafter, determine the monthly actuarial basic rate and the monthly actuarial catastrophic illness rate for disabled enrollees under age 65 which shall be applicable for the succeeding calendar year.

"(B) The monthly actuarial basic rate determined under this paragraph for a calendar year shall be the amount the Secretary estimates to be necessary so that the aggregate amount for the calendar year with respect to disabled enrollees under age 65 will equal one-half of the total of the benefits and administrative costs which he estimates will be payable from the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund for services performed and related administrative costs incurred in such calendar year with respect to such enrollees (excluding benefits payable under section 1833(c)).

"(C) The monthly actuarial catastrophic illness rate determined under this paragraph for a calendar year shall be equal to the sum of—

"(i) the amount the Secretary estimates to be necessary so that the aggregate amount for the calendar year with respect to disabled enrollees under age 65 will equal the total of the benefits and administrative costs which he estimates will be payable from—

"(I) the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund for services performed and related administrative services costs incurred in such calendar year with respect to such enrollees under section 1833(c), and

"(II) the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund, which are attributable to the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988, as amended, and

"(ii) the amount (if any) that the Secretary estimates to be necessary to offset any amounts—

"(I) by which the monthly premiums otherwise payable under this section with respect to such enrollees for such calendar year (disregarding subsections (b) and (f)) are reduced by reason of the limitation imposed by subsection (f), and

"(II) that are attributable to the portion of such monthly premiums that is determined under paragraph (3)(A) (as determined by the Secretary).

"(D) In calculating the monthly actuarial rates under this paragraph, the Secretary shall include appropriate amounts for a contingency margin.".

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(A) Section 1839 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395r) is amended—

(i) by striking "the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Account) in the last sentence of subsections (a)(1) and (a)(4) and inserting "the amendments made by the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988",

(ii) by striking "(b), (e), and (g)" in subsection (a)(2) and inserting "(b) and (e)",

(iii) by striking "subsections (f) and (g)(6)" in subsection (b) and inserting "subsection (f)",

(iv) by striking "monthly premium" in subsection (e)(1) and inserting "portion of the monthly premium otherwise determined under subsection (a)(3)(B)",

(v) by inserting "basic" in subsection (e)(1) after "actuarial", and

(vi) by striking subsection (g).

(B) Section 1840 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395s) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(i) Notwithstanding the previous provisions of this subsection, premiums collected under this part which are attributable to the monthly actuarial catastrophic illness rate established under subsections (a)(1)(C)(i)(II) and (a)(4)(C)(i)(II) of section 1839 shall, instead of being transferred to (or being deposited to the credit of) the Federal Supplemental Medical Insurance Trust Fund, be transferred to (or deposited to the credit of) the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund.".

(C) Subsection (a) of section 1844 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395w) is amended by striking the last sentence.

(D) Subsections (a)(1)(A)(i) and (a)(1)(B)(i) of section 1844 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395w) are each amended by striking "twice the dollar amount of the actuarially adequate rate" and inserting "the sum of the dollar amount of the actuarially adequate catastrophic illness rate and twice the dollar amount of the actuarially adequate basic rate".

(E) Section 1876(a)(5) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395mm(a)(5)) is amended—

(i) in the matter preceding subparagraph (A), by striking "200 percent of", and

(ii) in subparagraphs (A)(ii) and (B)(ii), by striking "monthly actuarial rate" and inserting "the sum of the monthly actuarial catastrophic illness rate and twice the monthly actuarial basic rate".

(3) EFFECTIVE DATES.—

(A) The amendments made by paragraph (1) of this subsection shall apply to monthly premiums for months beginning after October 1989.

(B) The amendments made by paragraph (2) of this subsection shall take effect on or after November 1, 1989.

(f) REVISION OF MEDIGAP REGULATIONS.—(1) Section 1882 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395ss), as amended by section 221(d) of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988, is amended—

(A) in the third sentence of subsection (a) and in subsection (b)(1), by striking "subsection (k)(3)" and inserting "subsections (k)(3), (k)(4), and (m);

(B) in subsection (k)—

(i) in paragraph (1)(A), by inserting "except as provided in subsection (m)," before "subsection (g)(2)(A)", and

(ii) in paragraph (3), by striking "subsection (l)" and inserting "subsections (l), (m)"; and

(C) by adding at the end the following new subsections:

"(m) In the case of an insurer which had in effect, as of December 31, 1988, a medicare supplemental policy with respect to an individual, for which the individual terminated coverage as of January 1, 1989 (or the earliest renewal date thereafter), no medicare supplemental policy of the insurer shall be deemed to meet the standards in subsection (c) unless the insurer—

"(1) provides written notice, by January 15, 1990, to the individual (at the most recent available address) of the offer described in paragraph (2), and

"(2) offers to the individual, during the period beginning on January 1, 1990, and ending on March 1, 1990, continuation of coverage under such a medicare supplemental policy (with coverage effective as of January 1, 1990), under the terms respecting treatment of pre-existing conditions and group rating of premium which are at least favorable to the individual as such terms as existed with respect to the policy as of December 31, 1988.".

(2) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that States should respond, at the earliest practicable date after the date of enactment of this Act, to requests by insurers for review and approval of riders and premium adjustments for medicare supplemental policies in order to comply with the amendments made by paragraph (1).

(3) ADJUSTMENT OF CONTRACTS WITH PREPAID HEALTH PLANS.—Section 222 of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 is amended by inserting "and before January 1, 1990," after "December 31, 1988," each place it appears.

(4) NOTICE OF CHANGES.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall provide, in the notice of medicare benefits provided under section 1804 of the Social Security Act of 1990, for a description of the changes in benefits under title XVIII of such Act made by the amendments made by this section.

(5) MISCELLANEOUS TECHNICAL CORRECTION.—Section 221(g)(3) of Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 is amended by striking "subsection (f)" and inserting "subsection (e)".

(6) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The provisions of this subsection shall take effect January 1, 1990, except that the amendment made by paragraph (5) shall be effective as if included in the enactment of Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988.

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I see my distinguished colleague from California, with whom I have spent a great deal of time in the last several days and the last several weeks. He is on the floor. I think and I hope he is ready to proceed with his amendment. If that is the case, I am delighted to yield to him so he and I can leave before midnight.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I thank my friend, the distinguished manager. He is quite correct. We have spent much time together. I consider it good company, but, like him, I am willing to give up a little of it so that both he and I might seek some rest and company of our families.

AMENDMENT NO. 951

(Purpose: To prevent the defiling of the American flag)

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRAHAM). The clerk will report:

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from California [Mr. WILSON], for himself and Mr. SYMMS, proposes an amendment numbered 951:

On page 2, line 1 after the word "defaces" add the words "physically defiles".

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, as you are able to tell from the clerk's reading, this is a very short and very simple amendment. It seems to me it is an important amendment, because the definition contained in the statute, as it is presently before us, is seriously lacking. What we are trying to regulate is conduct of a kind which has aroused concern, because it affects what is a national symbol, and by that we mean not simply a symbol of nationhood or of national unity but, as has been expressed repeatedly on this floor, expressed with great eloquence in the opinions, perhaps best expressed in my view by the dissent of Mr. Justice Stevens, this is an intangible asset, a national asset that is virtually unique. That is symbolized by the American flag.

What we are seeking by this amendment is to prohibit conduct of a kind that does injury in a variety of different ways to that unique symbol of the United States of America.

The present prohibited conduct deals with a number of different forms, but it does not deal with defilement. It is said by some that mutilation or defacement would necessarily include within their meaning what we are intending to proscribe by adding the words "physically defiles."

I do not agree, and I think that common understanding from most dictionary definitions would indicate that "physically defiles" fills a serious omission which would otherwise exist in the statute. The first definition is "to make filthy" and what we have in mind is obviously the kind of conduct that would result if someone were to throw dirt upon a flag, if someone were to throw grease upon a flag, if someone were to drag it through grease, if someone were to soil it in a way that does not perhaps permanently damage it, as does defacement, or which does not render it in pieces as does mutilation.

If I, Mr. President, were to throw dirt in your face, apart from being offended, to which you would certainly be entitled, I do not think you could charge me with having mutilated your face. Most people, if they heard I had been charged with that heinous act, would assume I had done something far more serious, that I had physically disfigured you, that I had in some manner scarred you at the very least. So what we are talking about is a kind of conduct that I think we do intend to proscribe, that we should, that we are entitled to proscribe because of the importance and the seriousness of this unique national symbol, the American flag. We are talking about a kind of conduct that is not proscribed or prohibited by the word "defaced" or by the word "mutilated."

Defacement again suggests something permanent. It suggests that perhaps the stars had been ripped off the field. It suggests a more permanent kind of and actual disfigurement, but what we are talking about is conduct which most definitely does give offense.

I am not going to get into the language of the Johnson decision unless, of course, my friend wishes to do so. Then I will be happy to do so. But the point is, what we are doing with the statute, as he has offered it to us, is to proscribe conduct that definitely is offensive, offensive because it does violence of some kind to a unique national symbol. If that were not the case, then we would, in fact, not even be bothering with this statute or later on with a constitutional amendment. But the point really is that we are entitled—indeed, most of us think we are obliged—to prohibit that kind of conduct.

It is quite true that the framers of the first amendment had in mind providing very clearly a freedom of speech, a freedom of expression, that would encourage political dissent. It would encourage ideas, criticisms, certainly criticisms of government, and criticisms of governmental policies.

What they had in mind, of course, was sort of specific content, intellectual content, argument that in many times and in many places prior to the existence of the first amendment had been proscribed. Of course, one of the reasons we all prize the American flag is that it is a symbol of freedom, freedom of expression.

But what we are seeking to do here is to impose some reasonable limits upon conduct, conduct of a kind that does violence to that unique intangible asset. What we are doing, I think, is perhaps more easily captured by certain analogies, certain metaphors. I note some contained in the eloquent dissent of Mr. Justice Stevens. He points out that, for example, allowing the posting of bulletins or the kind of bumper stickers that we see on bumpers—if we are to allow that instead upon the Washington Monument, it might, in the view of some, encourage free speech but at a rather obvious cost.

If we were to permit, to take a more extreme case, the painting of slogans in spray paint upon the facade of the Lincoln Memorial, that would, I think, be offensive but a good deal beyond that. It would be conduct of a kind that deals with another symbol and one that many Americans hold sacred.

Here we are talking about the American flag. I suppose that in dealing with the basic concept so as to justify what I think is an entirely justifiable action on the part of Congress, an effort to proscribe conduct injuring the flag as a symbol of the United States, what we are really seeking to do, I think, is perhaps to do the kind of thing that we would understand if we said, yes, it is perfectly fine to speak ill of the dead. It may be tasteless. It may be offensive but it is permitted clearly under the first amendment.

It is one thing to speak ill of the dead. It would be quite another though to spray a cemetery with a can of spray paint, deface or disfigure or even simply defile on a temporary basis the headstone of that same deceased.

That is the kind of distinction that I think is quite legitimate because we are not proscribing intellectual content, argument, criticism, but what we are doing is proscribing conduct, conduct of a kind that is not just offensive but which does violence to that unique American symbol, and a symbol that I think is not just deserving but I think is one that obliges upon us the duty of protection.

Mr. President, the language is I think simple enough. We are talking about physical defilement. So there is no need to be concerned with simple phrases. We are not talking about someone addressing an oath or a profanity to the flag. What we are talking about is conduct that is expressive by virtue of its being conduct but expressive of no importance than hostility, devoid of other intellectual content.

And it is because of the unique status as a symbol of something more than national unity and nation that we are here at all. It is because this conduct is not of a kind that in fact in the context of that unique symbol is deserving of the broad latitude otherwise given by the first amendment that we are here about. We are not just justified in my judgment. We are obliged to accord for millions and indeed hundreds of millions of Americans who value that flag as a unique national symbol, as a symbol of what they believe America to be, the kind of protection, the simple protection that this amendment will give.

Without the amendment, Mr. President, I think there is a serious omission and one that people seeking to do violence to the flag will find, and I do not think we should waste our time or seek to confuse the American people. We should have a simple and understandable and straightforward prohibition upon conduct of this kind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who seeks recognition?

Mr. BIDEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. I seek recognition, if the distinguished Senator from California yields the floor.

I will not keep the Senate long. I understand the concern of the Senator from California. I do not want to sound like a broken record here but I feel compelled to once again state the rationale for why I drafted the statute in the first instance, and why I support the particular statute we have before us.

The intention of the Senator from Delaware is to see to it that—without having to invoke the majesty of the Constitution, the constitutional process, and convene the legislators of the requisite number of States—that we settle a problem, and we fix a problem.

What is the problem? The problem is in the mind of the Senator from Delaware that that magnificent flag sitting to the right of the Presiding Officer's shoulder is protected, physically protected, done so in a way that it does not do violence to the first amendment, and does so in a way that by statute we can meet our objective which is to protect the physical integrity of that flag and not interfere in any way with the first, probably among equal amendments of the Constitution.

So the Senator from Delaware, and others, Senator ROTH, Senator COHEN from Maine, and our colleagues in the House who share this view have been as scrupulous as we could be and as precise as we could be so as to ensure that we would meet any potential objection by the Supreme Court of the United States as to the constitutionality of a statute that we are proposing that would result in the protection of that flag.

The one thing we are required to avoid doing, or giving the Court the excuse to suggest we are doing, is to proscribe any communicative notions, any ideas, any speech for we are not allowed to do that. By the way, even though we are allowed to do that by constitutional amendment, I would strongly object to us doing that, to say that we can pick and choose among individuals as to what they can say, what they can do to communicate an idea relative to the flag or any other notion they wish to communicate.

I will not go into the detail again because the hour is late. But the Court decision seems to me and to the vast majority of the constitutional scholars—which I am not—that Court decision says we are telling you the way you can remedy the situation, so Mr. Johnson cannot stand on the steps of the Capitol and burn the flag. The way to do that is to come up with a content neutral statute.

So the burning of the flag or defacing the flag, doing something that physically damages that flag becomes illegal. And so the words knowingly mutilates, defaces, burns, tramples upon or puts upon the floor for display, maintains on the floor for display, were chosen because they connote, if you will, content neutral intent.

Everything that the Senator from California wishes to protect against, I respectfully suggest, is covered by the word "deface," which is in the statute now. It can be argued that, as it has been, that somehow the word "defile" has a broader net. The fact is that if you look at the things that the Senator wishes to deal with, if you talk about defacing, according to Webster's Dictionary, it is "to mar the face or appearance, or disfigure; to deface, obliterate or injure the surface as to make illegible, invalid."

Now, defile is "to make foul or unclean, pollute or taint, to violate the chastity of." Obviously, we are not worried about the chastity. "To make impure for ceremonial use, to desecrate, to sully a person's reputation." Defile, arguably—and I do not want to provide the Court with any arguments along these lines—goes to speech. "To ruin the reputation of." You do not deface the reputation. You can defile the reputation. To desecrate—you must be able to consecrate before you can desecrate—but "to desecrate, to violate the chastity of." It connotes that there is a communicative, a verbal injury that you can inflict upon somone or something when you say defile.

Everything that the Senator worries about physically being able to be proscribed or prohibited relative to the flag is covered by deface. I do not want to give, God bless them all, anyone in the High Court the excuse to suggest that we have moved into the realm of speech by attempting to prohibit or proscribe a particular action.

I understand, and I respect, the Senator's attempt to add "physically" to the word defile. So I assume the reason for the word "physically" being added, unlike the Senator from Idaho, who did not add "physically" today when he debated this issue with me, is to attempt as a recognition of the fact that defile, on its own, carries with it the notion of communication of an idea. You defile someone's reputation; you communicate an idea. The idea is through speech that this person is bad. We are not all concerned about, in this amendment, whatever idea is communicated relative to the flag. We are worried about the physical integrity of that flag.

The example the Senator gives—and they are good examples—about headstones and the like in graveyards, all are covered by deface. As a matter of fact, the Senator inadvertently used the word deface, when he was talking about headstones, as his example of the kind of thing he wanted covered.

So everything the Senator, I respectfully suggest, wishes to proscribe relative to the flag is covered by the word deface. "Defile" arguably encompasses everything that deface encompasses and means, but clearly, literally by definition, goes beyond that to cover notions of speech in communication.

The one thing that the Court has made abundantly clear is that a State, a Federal Government, any entity in this Nation, is incapable by any law they pass from limiting communication. You cannot do that. They made it absolutely clear. They have also, in the minds of the Senator of Delaware and many others, made it clear that there is room to legislate against actions that do physical damage to something.

For example, we always hear the use of examples of the Washington Monument and the Lincoln Memorial and so on and so forth. I do not think they are particularly appropriate, because they are public property. You can have laws against doing physical damage to them, because you do not own them. The American people own them, and you cannot do damage. But if the Presiding Officer owned a home that was on the Historic Register, he could not go home tonight and say, you know, honey, I have never liked that mantlepiece. I am going to remove that mantlepiece and put up a beautiful $8,000 marble mantlepiece and make this room look much better. He cannot do that, even though he owns the property, it is his. This is because we made a judgment. It is clear that we are able to make the judgment. We want to physically protect certain properties.

On the other hand, if we pass the law and say, anyone who owns a certain kind of property that was built prior to 1750 cannot desecrate it, what does desecrate mean? Or one cannot take an action relative to that property that casts contempt upon the pilgrims or the Founding Fathers, because they lived in those kinds of houses. The Senator, Presiding Officer, could go home, if that was the law, and burn down his house, and while it is burning, say I am burning down this house to make the point that the Founding Fathers were for slavery, and they were not for the emancipation of women, and, therefore, they were bad. I am burning down this house, which is the type of home they used to live in to make the point. And so on and so forth. Burn it down if you want to.

It depends on the fire code, depending on whether or not you are endangering someone's life; just like, by the way, when Gregory Johnson burned the flag. He could have been arrested for burning the flag in a building if it sets off a smoke alarm, because he has violated the code. In burning the flag on the marble steps, under the Texas statute, Gregory Johnson was protected because he violated no law but the Texas law, which was unconstitutional relative to casting contempt upon, and so on and so forth, which was the Federal statute.

The point I want to make here, and I will cease, is that I genuinely respect the Senator's attempt to strengthen this amendment, but I respectfully suggest that it is an ill-founded attempt, that a careful reading of the Court case and the dissenting opinions and concurring opinions as well will, I think, lead us to the inescapable conclusion that the further away we get from any language that even by implication connotes a communicative restriction, the more in trouble we are. And the language we have here in this statute protects everything that the Senator is concerned about.

I cannot think of anything, and maybe he can give me an example of something he would not like done relative to that flag that is not covered by the existing language. You deface a flag when you mar the face of it. The concern about whether or not someone would drag it through the mud or whether or not someone would walk up and put a Nazi swastika on it or someone would rip off a star, or any other thing you can conjure up, all of that is covered by defacing.

So I ask the Senator whether he would consider withdrawing his amendment, and if not could he give me an example of some physical act to that flag that he would like to proscribe that is not already covered by the language that is in the statute. I am not trying to be argumentative. I am sincerely inquiring.

Mr. WILSON. The Senator has every right to be argumentative. That is perfectly all right; the Senator has to respond to the question.

Mr. BIDEN. I yield the floor for purposes of the Senator responding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California is recognized.

Mr. WILSON. Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. President, I think the answer to my friend from Delaware is to go back to the definition which he offered for "defaced" that is to be found in most conventional dictionaries. "Deface: To destroy or mar the face of or looks of; to disfigure."

Mr. President, that is why in my opening remarks I went to some pains to make the semantic distinction between defacement as defined with the definition that he has quoted and I have just used again, between that act and the act of defilement, which is not nearly so permanent nor so violent.

You can defile something, I would suggest, by throwing dirt upon it. You would not destroy it. You would not mar it in the sense that marring the face or looks of permanently would require something far more serious than that. It would require perhaps paint or dye, or something of that kind. You could, I think, with a handful of dirt or for that matter a handful of grease, soluble grease, which arguably could be washed from the flag with no permanent damage to it, engage in a defilement, because the judgment that we are talking about here is or the definition we are talking about is one of physical defilement, and we are talking about an act of making something dirty.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. WILSON. Certainly.

Mr. BIDEN. Who we really need is former Senator S.I. Hayakawa back in this body for a moment, because he was a semanticist, and he was the only one I think to ever serve in the U.S. Senate.

Mr. WILSON. If he were here what I think he would tell you is that defacement might in your judgment include defilement, but what you are setting up in the statute is a situation in which defilement would not be a violation of the statute. It would require the greater, more serious, permanent act of defacement.

Mr. BIDEN. If the Senator will yield, I think were he here he would agree with the Senator there is nothing in the word "defacing" that implies or connotes permanency; nothing, not a single thing.

Mr. WILSON. "To destroy." That is rather apparent.

Mr. BIDEN. But to mar the face of does not require anything permanent. That does not require it.

Mr. WILSON. I think on the contrary that it does, or at least would require repair. If you are talking about marring the face, that was the example and the distinction I have used. I said that were I to throw dirt in the face of the distinguished President, he would have every right to be offended but not to charge me with mutilation or not to charge me with having defaced him. I would have offended him; I would have dirtied him; arguably, I would have physically defiled him but I would not have defaced him, nor would I have mutilated him. That is the distinction, and I think it is a proper one.

So I would say to my friend that first of all to address the semantic argument, there is a distinction between defacement and physical defilement. There has to be certain further meaning to the word "defile" when it is not modified by the adverb "physically." It can mean, as the Senator has pointed out, in an archaic sense the taking of chastity.

In this case clearly we are talking about a physical act, an act which is not the same as defacement. In other words, if you read the statute with defacement, then you would be requiring permanency. You would be requiring destruction or marring the face or disfigurement.

Those things I think clearly connote a far more serious injury in terms of its being lasting, or organic, in a way that throwing dirt upon a flag would not. But that would, nonetheless, be an act which should be proscribed because it is, along with the other things that the Senator has offered, an injury, though a temporary one, to this unique national symbol.

So much for semantic distinction. Let me go further and say that argument that my friend has made, and incidentally, before we leave the semantic distinction, my use of the word "deface" was not inadvertent. I would be, I think, derelict not to point out that the Senator has in his choice of the other words, that there are many ways to do injury, and what I was talking about was there is a distinction between speaking ill of the dead, going into a cemetery, or either going in and defacing or defiling a headstone, and I think this is a clear difference.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WILSON. Yes.

Mr. BIDEN. Is the thing the Senator is trying to get to someone throwing dirt on the flag?

Mr. WILSON. Or doing something else that would make it filthy as the definition is given.

Mr. BIDEN. Can the Senator think of anything else?

Mr. WILSON. Sure, I gave another a while ago—soluble grease, that would be to defile, if you would wipe off the grease, anything you throw on which could be washed out.

Mr. BIDEN. That is not in the Senator's view defacing?

Mr. WILSON. It is not in my view defacing.

Mr. BIDEN. I understand the Senator's point of view. I think he understands mine. I am ready to yield back. We have no time to yield back. I am ready to listen to the Senator if he wishes to speak. I have said my piece.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I will not take much longer, but I do think there is another point to be made, and that is in this list whether it includes my addition of the phrase "physically defiled", or only those words which presently are offered by the Senator from Delaware.

In each case, what is proscribed is an action which he thinks, in the case of the words he has offered, are not communicative, or to use the phrase that he has used repetitively, these are actions that are content-neutral.

Mr. President, the phrase "physically defile" is no more or less content-neutral than defaces or disfigures or multilates. These are obviously all actions which are pretty much content bereft beyond signifying some vague and unexplained hostility.

So I would have to say to my friend that if he is correct in his assertion that the phrase "physically defiles" is somehow content laden in a way that will offend the standard proposed under the Johnson decision, then I have the bad news for him that so will deface, so will mutilate, so will the other words because they are similar in character despite the semantic distinction between the actual physical actions involved.

And if he is correct, then I will tell him that I think what he has done is portend the necessity of a constitutional amendment. If he is wrong, the statute will be constitutionally sound with physically defiled as well as without it. But if it is without physically defiled, we will have provided an opportunity for someone to one day come and throw dirt upon the flag, do temporary injury to it, and I do not think that is our purpose here. I think our purpose is to proscribe a kind of conduct and it includes all the words that he has given us but it includes more. It includes physical defilement, as well.

So, Mr. President, if he is right, then the entire statute is flawed, fatally flawed. If he is wrong, then I may have given him the offense of some surplusage in his understanding of the words "physically defiled." But since I now hold the chair and immediately succeeded the distinguished semanticist, Senator Hayakawa, I will have to tell my friend that I think his understanding of the distinction is insufficient. There is a distinction. And knowing that he loves the language as much as I do, I will be happy to debate it further, but perhaps we should do that on our time and not on the part of the public or that of the distinguished Republican leader, who I see here on the floor, I assume, in anticipation of our stopping this so that he may present his own amendment.

Mr. BIDEN. I obviously strongly disagree with the assertions made by the Senator from California that if I am right about defile, then knowingly mutilate, burn, deface, falls as well.

But just so that we do not frighten those who work the night shift and just got up and turned on C-SPAN and hear this argument and think that maybe they have gotten to Saturday Night Live early and they are late for work, I will no longer try to explain the difference. I say that in no way to reflect upon the Senator from California. It is reflecting upon the Senator from Delaware. I just wonder how people feel who woke up at home and turned on the television and heard this debate.

29-059 O-90-45 (Pt. 16)

I realize that it is a sincere debate, sincere on both our parts. But the way it sounds on both our parts, it makes it seem—well, at any rate, I think we have exhausted the area.

I disagree with the Senator. We will have a chance to vote on it tomorrow. I respect his opinion. I thank him for taking the time to propose the amendment.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I thank my friend. He may flatter us both by thinking we have a television audience.

However, he is correct in saying that we have publicly given this sufficient attention and should move on to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

Before relinquishing the floor, Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

AMENDMENT NO. 952

(Purpose: To require the desecration of the flag be public in order to be a criminal act)

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, amendment No. 951 is now laid aside until the hour of 10:30 a.m. tomorrow.

The clerk will report the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE] proposes an amendment numbered 952.

On page 2, line 1, after "Whoever" insert "publicly and".

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, before I discuss the amendment, I want to make a comment. I appreciate the Senator from Delaware saying during the debate tonight that we have a lot of work to do this week. I think we have tried to accommodate the requests of the majority leader.

But I was asked earlier if we were trying to prevent this from going to the House tomorrow. I want to remind people that had we not given unanimous consent to take it up, we would not be on it until the last thing before we go out for recess, and since there may not be a recess, I do not know what that would have done to the unanimous-consent request.

But I wanted the record to show that those are not my motives. In any event, the record should show the only reason we are on this is because we got unanimous consent to take it up, contrary to the agreement which said it would be the last thing we would take up before the recess.

Mr. BIDEN. Will the Republican leader yield?

Mr. DOLE. Yes.

Mr. BIDEN. I think it is a very valid point. I want to acknowledge that it is obviously on its face correct and I do not doubt the motivation of the Senator.

Mr. DOLE. I know the Senator does not. I think there were some who thought we were stalling.

Mr. BIDEN. If the Senator will yield further, I was the one who thought that. I want to go on the record to say that if I had thought a step further, I would have realized what the Senator from Kansas just stated. I do want to acknowledge that that was one thought that did not cross my mind. Had I thought a step further, I would have realized exactly what the Senator said.

Mr. DOLE. I agree with the majority leader that we have a lot of work to do and we would like to get it all done by Saturday evening and not be here on Sunday. We are not there yet. We are working on trying to get an agreement on everything to be done.

Mr. President, the amendment I have sent to the desk simply adds a single word. I suppose we could call it a technical amendment, technical on this side. I am not certain how it is viewed on the other side. The word that we add is "publicly."

In its current form, the bill passed by the House last month prohibits both public and private acts of flag desecration. The fact that the bill covers both public and private acts is a perfect example of the statute's overbreadth.

I understand the reason why the bill's sponsors have intentionally deleted the word "publicly" from the Federal flag desecration statute. They want to make this statute content neutral.

I must say I am not as well versed on constitutional law as is the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee. I commend him for the hearings he had on both the constitutional amendment and the statutory approach. I do not know how many hours were spend on it. I know what happens generally is that after the first day the cameras are gone and there is nobody there but the chairman and the witness and it gets to be hard work. So I appreciate that.

I appreciate the fact that I was permitted to speak and also a new friend of mine named Gary Freeman of Hutchinson, KS, was able to come back here and appear before the committee. It could certainly be the highlight of his life. But he was also, as I viewed it, an average American out there minding his own business, doing what he thought he should be doing. He was also collecting signatures for a constitutional amendment.

So, as I said, I understand the reason why the bill's sponsors have intentionally deleted the word "publicly" from the Federal flag desecration statute. They want to make this statute content neutral—they want to make sure that the statute does not punish anyone's speech or anyone's point of view.

Senator BIDEN has ably pointed out that a public act of flag destruction could represent a form of speech—symbolic speech—thereby running afoul of the Texas versus Johnson decision and unconstitutional.

But it seems to me if we do not put in the word "publicly" then, in effect, we are in the business of prohibiting private conduct of this nature—simply in a mad rush to conform with a Supreme Court decision with which many of us disagree. You can ask yourself all kinds of hypothetical questions. Frankly, I do not know what harm it does to insert the word "publicly." I think what we want to punish is public desecration. That is the point I would make. Private acts of flag destruction, it seems to me are not things we would want to punish. I am not certain I want somebody roaming around and looking at what we may be doing privately with the flag or with anything else.

Let us take the case of the mother who accidentally tears the flag in her living room. Is that going to be punishable under this statute? The statute deletes the word "publicly", so it must apply to private conduct.

Do we really want to punish the child who spills something on the flag in the family kitchen? Do we really want the flag protection police snooping around in the privacy of our homes?

The flag statute as it is currently drafted could cover these kinds of activities by covering private conduct. Simply because it would delete the word "publicly" from the flag descration statute.

So, a lot of Senators who support this statute are the first ones to step on this floor and express deeply held concerns about privacy protections, they are the first ones to argue that police do not belong in our homes unless they have a valid search warrant. I think this amendment addresses these concerns and would help remedy the overbreadth problem of the statute now before the Senate.

I know we are going to hear a lot about overbreadth when we get to talk about the constitutional amendment and I think it also may be evident here.

Also, I would include in the RECORD additional minority views of Senators HATCH and GRASSLEY, which are the following: The Court there noted, in Texas versus Johnson, that if a State were to forbid:

flag-burning wherever it is likely to endanger the flag's symbolic role, but allow it wherever burning a flag promotes that role—as where, for example, a person ceremoniously burns a dirty flag—we would be saying that when it comes to impairing the flag's physical integrity, the flag itself may be used as a sympol—as a substitute for the written or spoken word * * *—only in one direction.

This, the Court indicated, is impermissible. While the Court did not make this remark in the context of an otherwise blanket ban on flag desecration, we are deeply concerned that such a rationale would be used to invalidate just such a blanket statute.

Indeed, this constitutional flaw is present in H.R. 2978, the House-passed flag statute, which is also pending in the Senate. Its ban on flag desecration includes an exception for "any conduct consisting of the disposal of a flag when it has become worn or soiled."

Further, S. 1338 and H.R. 2978 reach private conduct, such as that undertaken in the home. It is the public casting of contempt on the flag, however, whether to make a political point or no point at all, which we believe should be outlawed.

That is simply the argument in favor of this amendment. I know the distinguished chairman of the committee has an entirely different view and I would rest my case with those remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I thank the Republican leader for his attempt to strengthen this statute. I must say when I first drafted the statute I had the word "publicly" in the statute. I had the word "publicly" in because, quite frankly, what I was thinking about were the circumstances where this would usually occur. It would be in public, just automatically.

Then I thought about it. I should not say that. Let me be more precise.

It was called to my attention by, roughly, half a dozen constitutional scholars that if we make a distinction between public and private, what we are doing is no longer just dealing with the physical integrity of the flag. We are dealing with the physical integrity of the flag only in circumstances where it would have an effect upon people who were watching. "Publicly," requires another person.

If you go out in the middle of a public park tonight, with no one there, and burn a flag or do something bad to the flag, it is not "publicly." There is no one there. There is no one to see it.

You can have a public encounter if you have your neighbors in your house for coffee and you burn the flag. Then it is public if you do it in your living room.

So, it gets down to whether anyone else is there observing this. Again, the import of that is that it then gets back to the motion of appearing to deal with the communicative impact of the action; of doing something to physically injure the flag.

The Senator from Kansas says, to him it is a technical amendment. It may be more over here. I am afraid it will be a technical amendment to the Court. They will point out technically that as a consequence of inserting the word "public" we may be in a position where it is no longer content-neutral and it no longer is devoid of an attempt to restrict communicative notions or have a communicative impact.

This notion of private conduct: The fact of the matter is, I suspect if we walked out of here, any one of us, just think of the reflex action we would have if on the way back to the office there was a flag just burning in the trash can. No one is around; just the flag burning in an incinerator.

I suspect all of us would have the instinct immediately to try to put the fire out. It almost sounds ludicrous to say that, but think about that. The instinct would be to immediately protect the integrity of the flag. Not because it was burning; because someone had thrust it in there and first said, "Red white and blue, we spit on you." Someone said that, threw it in the trash can, and left.

We would pick it out of there because it was physically being damaged. The notion of whether or not a woman in her home who spilled something on the flag—or whatever the example was given—would be subject to prosecution implies several things. It implies, one, that we have a flag patrol out there going around looking in windows, and/or an officer of the law or someone else happens on that occasion to be there; and, second, that she did it knowingly. The statute requires knowingly: knowingly mutilates, knowingly defaces, knowingly burns, knowingly tramples upon.

So, if there is an accidental defacing of the flag, no one is guilty of anything.

The idea of the young child in the kitchen who spills something on the flag, that child would only be guilty of breaking the law under the Wilson amendment. If the Wilson amendment were law, that child may be guilty. Because Senator WILSON would like to get at temporary damage as well as permanent damage. That is the distinction he makes.

But, again all kidding aside, it would require "knowingly," intent to do damage.

With regard to the issue raised at the tail end of the comments, reading from the minority report, this idea that we were making a distinction between burning a flag when it is done under military rules, et cetera, and in burning one when it is done in protest—the distinction rests upon the point that is, now I am employed in the rules that exist for burning flags. We are burning flags because they are no longer worthy symbols. They are no longer flags. They no longer are flags, as we mean them and intend them and define them to be in the law.

So it is a distinction with a significant difference. Not a distinction without a difference.

I will not drag this out, but not because it is not worthy of debate. I do not mean to imply that. But I think the point is very clear that to add the word "publicly" in my view gains us nothing in our effort to deal with protecting the flag; and only brooks a significant possibility of an argument from court that what we are really intending to do is get at speech. Otherwise, they may very well argue, why include the word "publicly"?

Let me go back to the example. I do not know how I got off on this but I think it is appropriate. Let me get to the example of the home protected under the historic register. People do not run around to determine whether or not they have the ability to go in without warrants or without probable cause—that is how you get a warrant—and check whether or not someone is taking out the interior library of an old home and replacing it with mirrors, which would be against the law for them to do. They do not do that. It is against the law, whether it is done publicly or privately because we want to protect the physical object.

Well, it is against the law. It is the intention of the Senator from Delaware to make it against the law, whether it is done privately or publicly, to protect that physical object. It is not the intention of the Senator from Delaware to protect that physical object only in circumstances where someone else will witness whether or not it is being defaced or in any way multilated.

But, again, I have a friend I went to high school with. He is a fine businessman. He lives just across the line in Pennsylvania. When you get into a discussion or argument with him and you go on, at one point you will look at him and say, "Do you understand?" He will look at you and say, "I not only understand, I overstand." I suspect I am debating this to the point where my point is "overstood." There is no such word, obviously, but I would conclude by saying that, again, I do not know what it adds by adding the word "publicly" in terms of the intention of the statute what it adds, and I only know what it may detract, and that is, it may diminish the overwhelming possibilities that this will be viewed as a constitutionally valid statute.

Therefore, I respectfully urge my colleagues when the time comes to reject the amendment. I yield the floor. I will be happy to respond further if the Senator wishes to speak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Republican leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I think we have a fundamental difference of opinion here between the Senator from Delaware, who certainly worked very hard on this. I do not take issue with what he has done. We just happen to have a different view on how we want to protect the flag. He wants to protect the flag as a physical object; I want to protect, the important symbols that the flag represents. That is why I tried to restore the word "publicly" to the bill before us. And if we want to protect the symbolic value of the flag, I think then that the Texas versus Johnson decision tells us that we will need a constitutional amendment.

I do not think we can do it this way. I do not think people are concerned about the red, white, and blue dye, the cloth, things of that kind, the flag as a physical object. We are concerned about the symbolic value of the flag. We are all concerned about the symbols, what it symbolicly means to the American people, what it symbolicly means to someone at a graveside service or somebody in uniform, what it symbolicly means to somebody overseas when they see the American flag. Did he notice the colors, notice the cloth, or notice the symbol? By inserting the word "publicly," then you have that protection.

Mr. President, I would like to take the time now to commend the efforts of my friend and colleague, Senator BIDEN. His proposed amendment to the Federal flag desecration statute is a serious effort—and one that deserves serious consideration by the Senate today.

I would also like to commend the Senator from Delaware—and his distinguished colleague on the Judiciary Committee, Senator THURMOND—for the fine committee hearings that they have chaired over the past 3 months. These hearings were comprehensive, fair, and extraordinarily well managed.

THE SYMBOLIC POWER OF THE FLAG

Now, my colleagues in the Senate do not need me to tell them about the symbolic importance—and power—of the flag. And you do not need me to tell you how revered the flag is by the overwhelming majority of Americans. Just ask your constituents.

The flag is the one symbol—the one symbol—that unites us as a nation. It is the one symbol that transcends the diversity of America and brings us together as a people—a people with vastly different—but vastly rich—cultural, religious, and social heritages.

Even Justice Brennan recognized the unique symbolic power of the flag when—in the Johnson decision—he speaks of the "flag's deservedly cherished place in our community." He also speaks of the "flag's special role," and of the "feelings it inspires."

Justice Brennan is right on target—and his words echo my views and the views of millions of Americans. For it is precisely because of the flag's cherished place in our community, it is precisely because of the flag's special role, it is precisely because of the feelings that the flag inspires among Americans, that I believe that the flag—our flag—deserves protection. And I believe that the overwhelming majority of my Senate colleagues would agree with me.

So the question we must answer today—and during the week of October 16—is simply this: "What kind of protection does the flag deserve?" Should we give the flag statutory protection or should we give the flag more permanent, more lasting protection—constitutional protection?

A STATUTE WILL NOT DO THE TRICK

I have come to the conclusion—regretfully—that a statute, rather than a constitutional amendment, will simply not do the trick—that a statute will simply not guarantee the flag's safety from physical desecration. And that is why I am prepared to vote against the statute proposed by the distinguished Senator from Delaware and the House flag statute.

THE REAL PURPOSE OF THE STATUTE

During the committee hearings, Senator BIDEN asserted that Americans want to protect the flag "because it is the flag, period, and that the message attached to the flag's destruction is not very relevant to most Americans."

With all due respect to my friend and colleague, I completely disagree with his statement—and with his representation of the attitudes of Americans toward their flag. The American people want to protect the flag from destruction not because it is the flag, period. Americans want to protect the flag because they want to protect it as the symbol of our Nation. Americans do not care so much about the flag as a physical object. They are not concerned about the cloth, the fabric, the red, white, and blue dye, the physical components of the flag.

But Americans do care—they care very deeply—about the cherished principles that the flag has come to symbolize. And they do care when irresponsible people desecrate these principles by desecrating Old Glory.

So—it seems to me—that the legislative motivation behind a so-called content-neutral statute and a statute aimed at contemptuous conduct is identical: Protecting the symbolic value of the flag. And I know that the hearings on the content-neutral statute have made this abundantly clear.

Unfortunately, the Supreme Court in the Texas versus Johnson decision taught our Federal and State governments some lessons—it taught them that protecting the symbolic value of the flag is an impermissible governmental objective. It taught them that a person's so-called right to desecrate Old Glory outweighs—and always outweighs—the Government's interest in protecting the values that the flag represents.

These lessons are clear—and it is clear to me that a statute—even though content-neutral—will not survive constitutional analysis. I am not alone in this view. The Justice Department testified that a statute will not work. Judge Robert Bork testified that a statute will not work. Former Solicitor General Charles Fried of Harvard has testified that a statute will not work. And even those who testified in support of the statute admitted that the statute's constitutionality was not airtight.

THE STATUTE'S OVERBREADTH

Now, I have heard a lot about the alleged overbreadth of the constitutional amendment endorsed by President Bush last June and introduced by Senator DIXON and myself. But the real problem of overbreadth—it seems to me—lies not with the constitutional amendment, but with the statute before us today.

By removing the words "cast contempt upon," "publicly," and "defiling" from the Federal flag desecration statute, this statute would criminalize event acts of patriotism—all under the guise of something called content-neutrality.

But do we really want to punish the mother who, while mourning the loss of her dead son, pins her son's medals on the flag? Do we really want to punish the movie producer who depicts the destruction of the flag in a patriotic film? Do we really want to punish the child who innocently tears the flag? Do we really want the flag protection police snooping around in the privacy of our homes—perhaps in our bedrooms?

The answers to these questions is, of course, a resounding "no." But the statute—as currently drafted—could cover these types of activities.

THE "GREATER DANGER" TO THE FIRST AMENDMENT

I have also heard a great deal about how the flag amendment will somehow tamper with the first amendment. But let's tell it like it is here: This content-neutral statute—which prohibits flag destruction in all circumstances—is more of a threat to first amendment values than a constitutional amendment that would prohibit flag destruction only in some circumstances. And, in fact, the content-neutral statute would ban more conduct than the Federal flag desecration statute that is currently on the books.

So, I have to wonder which is the so-called greater danger to free speech—the content-neutral statute or the flag amendment?

CONCLUSION

Now, I would be the first one to admit that I am not a constitutional scholar. I am a politician—and I have been one for some time. But I have listened to the legal experts, I have listened to the constitutional scholars, and I have listened to the American people—and the message is loud and clear. The American people do not want a quick fix, they do not want a statute, and they especially do not want a neutral statute that may or may not work. The American people are not neutral when it comes to flag desecration.

So, I regret to say that I will vote against the statute. And I urge my colleagues to support the constitutional amendment that the Senate will consider on October 16.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I will take only 30 seconds more of the Senate's time. I would argue that the way the statute is written it protects everything the Senator wishes to protect, including the symbol, and it does no violence to additional protections that the Senator is worried about being overly broad. So it is either overly broad, which means it protects everything he wishes to protect, or it is not overly broad, and it does not protect everything he wishes to protect.

I would respectfully suggest it does both, but, again, the hour is late. The point has been made, and I respect the Senator, and I respect the point of view of the Senator from Kansas. No one who I know has demonstrated more and has a greater right to speak to the importance of this symbol than the Senator from Kansas. I respect his effort. As he said, we just disagree.

Mr. DOLE. I thank the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROCKEFELLER). Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

NATIONAL DRUG STRATEGY

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a detailed description of the forfeiture and public corruption amendments (923 and 926) adopted by the Senate yesterday be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the analyses were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ANALYSIS OF AMENDMENT NO. 923 TO S. 1711

FORFEITURE

Uses of asset forfeiture fund to purchase guns for police. Section 1201 amends the statute governing the uses of the Justice Department Asset Forfeiture Fund, 28 U.S.C. 524(c), to allow up to $10,000,000 in each fiscal year to be disbursed from the fund to purchase firearms, ammunition, protective body armor and other personal safety equipment for Justice Department law enforcement agents. This use is in keeping with other currently authorized disbursements from the Fund which include the equipping of government-owned vessels, vehicles and aircraft for use by federal agents. Section 524(c)(1)(F).

Such disbursement would not diminish the amount available for any other purpose authorized in section 524(c) except to the extent that any disbursement from the Fund diminishes the amount left over in the Fund at the end of the fiscal year. Under section 524(c)(9), up to $150,000,000 in unobligated funds remaining in the Fund at the end of the fiscal year is to be transferred to an account controlled by the Director of National Drug Control policy for use in carrying out the priorities of the National Drug Control strategy.

Section 1201 also includes a number of technical amendments. The first is made necessary by the enactment of the Chemical Diversion and Trafficking Act of 1988. Pub. L. 100-690, 102 Stat. 4312-20. Currently, section 524(c)(1)(A)(ii) permits disbursements from the fund to be used to defray expenses associated with the storage, protection and destruction of controlled substances. The amendment expands this to cover precursor and essential chemicals.

A second amendment authorizes the payment of reward money for information relating to money laundering offenses. This conforms clauses (B) and (C) to clause (G) which already permits the use of money from the Fund to purchase evidence of money laundering violations.

Finally, a technical amendment in subsection (b) allows the Attorney General to warrant clear title to forfeited property.

Restoring Equitable Sharing. In 1984, Congress amended section 511 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 881) to permit the Attorney General to share the proceeds of any civil or criminal forfeiture with any state or local law enforcement agency that participated in the forfeiture. If the seizure was the result of a wholly state or local law enforcement operation, the statute permitted the federal Drug Enforcement Administration to take over or "adopt" the seizure, forfeit the property under federal law, and return it to the state or local agency under the sharing provision. 21 U.S.C. 881(e)(1)(A).

A provision in the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 amended the forfeiture statute to prohibit such "adoptive" forfeitures in cases where state forfeiture statutes apply. 21 U.S.C. 881(e)(3)(B) enacted by Pub. L. 100-690, Sec. 6077, 102 Stat. 4324-25. State and local law enforcement officials from a number of states have complained that this provision, which is due to take effect on October 1, 1989, would adversely affect their ability to retain forfeited property for law enforcement purposes, and would unnecessarily curtail a program that has fostered cooperation between state and federal agencies and has proven beneficial to all parties involved.

Section 1202 would repeal Section 6077 of the 1988 Act to allow the adoptive forfeiture program to continue as it has since 1984.

Removal of ceiling on administrative forfeitures of cash. Current law permits forfeitures involving certain property worth $100,000 or less to be handled administratively by the respective law enforcement agencies. Forfeitures involving more valuable property must be processed through the judicial system. In 1988 the Senate passed an amendment to raise the limit on what could be handled administratively to $500,000, but it did not pass the House. (Sec. 2951 of H.R. 5210, as passed by the Senate October 14, 1988.)

The General Accounting Office has found that approximately one-third of all drug forfeitures involves cash. Fourteen percent of this is forfeited administratively because the amount in question is $100,000 or less; the remaining 86 percent is subject to judicial forfeiture. Judicial forfeitures of cash are almost always uncontested, however, and therefore could be handled administratively without jeopardizing property rights. For that reason, GAO has recommended making all forfeitures of cash administrative.

Section 1203 adopts this recommendation, making forfeitures of all monetary instruments administrative regardless of the dollar amount involved. The term "monetary instruments" is defined, as in 31 U.S.C. 5312(a)(3), to include currency and bearer instruments only. See 19 U.S.C. 1401(c). Section 1203 also raises the limit on administrative forfeitures for other types of property to $500,000. These changes will shorten the time it takes for seized property to be shared with state and local law enforcement or deposited into the respective asset forfeiture funds for other purposes. The amendment does not alter the existing provision whereby anyone who desires to contest an administrative forfeiture may post a bond and have his property rights adjudicated in a judicial forum.

The amendment in Section 1203 applies to forfeitures handled by the U.S. Customs Service under the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1607) as well as to forfeitures handled by Justice Department agencies since the procedures for such Justice forfeitures are governed by cross-reference to the Tariff Act. 21 U.S.C. 881(d).

Minor and technical forfeiture amendments. Currently, the forfeiture provisions relating to the commission of a foreign drug offense permit the forfeiture only of property constituting or traceable to the proceeds of such an offense; unlike under 21 U.S.C. 881, relating to forfeiture for domestic drug violations, no authority exists to forfeit the instrumentalities of foreign drug crimes. Section 1204 would create such authority, subject to the same limitations, concerning the rights of "innocent owners" of conveyances, set forth in 21 U.S.C. 881(a)(4)(C), as enacted by section 6075 of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988.

Closing of loophole regarding criminal forfeiture and bankruptcy. Section 1205 is designed to prevent the unjustified use of bankruptcy proceedings to thwart a federal criminal forfeiture through the payment of a violator's unsecured, general creditors from forfeitable assets. The limitation to those bankruptcy proceedings commenced after or in contemplation of criminal proceedings for which criminal forfeiture sanctions exist safeguards against interference with legitimate bankruptcy filings.

Nonabatement of criminal forfeiture when defendant dies pending appeal. Section 1206 would overturn the questionable decision of the Ninth Circuit in United States v. Oberlin, 718 F.2d 894 (1983), which held that a criminal forfeiture proceeding abated upon the post-verdict suicide of the defendant. Compare United States v. Dudley, 739 F.2d 175 (4th Cir. 1984) (order of restitution does not abate with defendant's death). See also United States v. Miscellaneous Jewelry, 667 F. Supp. 232, 245 (D. Md. 1987). The Solicitor General's Office in the Oberlin case, supra, and in a later Ninth Circuit case (United States v. Mitchell), while deeming the issue not to warrant Supreme Court review, has written memoranda criticizing the courts' reationale for abatement in the criminal forfeiture context.

Forfeiture of personal property used to facilitate a drug offense. Section 1207 would close a gap in the controlled substances forfeiture statute and permit civil forfeiture of certain personal property—a weapon, computer or an electronic communications device (e.g. a mobile telephone)—that is commonly used to facilitate drug violations. The amendment has been suggested by a number of persons, including the Los Angeles County Sheriff, Sherman Block.

Forfeiture of proceeds traceable to conveyances used to facilitate drug violations. Due to an apparent anomaly in the controlled substances civil forfeiture law, which normally and properly reaches the proceeds of forfeitable property in addition to the forfeitable property itself, 21 U.S.C. 881(a)(4), relating to the forfeiture of conveyances used to facilitate a controlled substance violation, does not extend to the forfeiture of the proceeds traceable to the sale of such conveyances. Not infrequently, for investigative reasons, facilitating conveyances are not immediately seized. Thus, the owners are able to sell the conveyance and the proceeds of that sale are outside the purview of the statute. This result would be changed by the proposed amendment in Section 1208 so as to permit forfeiture of proceeds traceable to forfeitable conveyances. The other aspects of the amendment insure that proceeds will not be forfeitable under the three so-called "innocent owner" exceptions to section 881(a)(4), where the conveyance itself would not be forfeitable by virtue of those provisions.

Equitable transfer to a participating foreign nation of forfeited property. Sections 6074 and 7366 of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 amended 21 U.S.C. 881(e) and 19 U.S.C. 1616a, respectively, in an identical manner to provide for the equitable sharing with a foreign nation of forfeited property or the proceeds therefrom where the foreign nation participated in the seizure or forfeiture of the property. Under the Anti-Drug Abuse Act amendments, transfers of property to participating foreign nations may be made where three conditions are satisfied: (1) the Secretary of State concurs, (2) the transfer is authorized in an international agreement between the United States and the foreign country, and (3) the country has been certified under section 481(h) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961.

In thus amending the law to permit sharing of forfeited property or proceeds with foreign nations, Congress neglected to make a conforming amendment to 18 U.S.C. 981(i), which before the enactment of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 was the only statute authorizing transfers of forfeited property to a foreign country. Under 18 U.S.C. 981(i), however, such transfers could only be made "to the extent provided by treaty"—a restriction which rendered the provision virtually useless from a practical standpoint and which was the reason for seeking the amendments in the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 that relaxed the requirement so as to permit such transfers pursuant to an international agreement.

Section 1209 would conform the provisions of section 981(i) to the recently amended provisions of 21 U.S.C. 881(e) and 19 U.S.C. 1616a. Moreover, elimination of the introductory language now in section 981(i) is appropriate because the language is misleading. The introductory language appears to render the entire subsection applicable only to forfeitures that occur "under subsection (a)(1)(B)" of section 981—that is, forfeitures of the property or proceeds of a foreign drug offense—but the first sentence of paragraph (i)(1) is clearly applicable to all property forfeited under the Controlled Substances Act. Thus, deletion of the introductory language enhances the clarity of the subsection and the applicability of the first sentence to all foreign-sharing-of-forfeited-property statutes.

Clarification of Attorney General's forfeiture sale authority. Other than providing that the Attorney General may "sell" forfeited property, the principal existing controlled substances forfeiture statute, 21 U.S.C. 881(e)(1)(B), and the child pornography civil forfeiture law, 18 U.S.C. 2254(f)(2), are silent as to what means may be used to effect the sale. By contrast, the RICO and other forfeiture laws, 18 U.S.C. 1963(f), 1467(h), and 2253(g) provide for the disposition of property by sale "or any other commercially feasible means".

Section 1210 would add similar clarifying language to 21 U.S.C. 881(e)(1)(B) and 18 U.S.C. 2254(f)(2), thus providing clear statutory authority for the use of commercial auctioneers, brokers, and other techniques to sell forfeited property.

Clarification of civil forfeiture seizure warrant authority. 18 U.S.C. 981 deals with civil forfeiture relating to money laundering offenses. The means of seizing the property alleged to be forfeitable are set forth in subsection (b) and include obtaining a warrant "pursuant to the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure". That language is inartful, however, since the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure are expressly inapplicable to civil forfeiture proceedings. Rule 54(b)(5). Accordingly, 18 U.S.C. 981(b) is amended in Section 1211 to clarify that the warrant is to be obtained "in the same manner" as provided for the securing of a warrant under the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. This tracks the language used in another civil forfeiture statute, 21 U.S.C. 881(b).

Forfeiture and destruction of dangerous, toxic, and hazardous materials. Section 1212 amends 21 U.S.C. 881(f), which authorizes the summary forfeiture and destruction of schedule I and II controlled substances seized for violation of the Controlled Substances Act. The proposed amendment adds to the category of property that may be summarily forfeited and destroyed all dangerous, toxic, or hazardous raw materials or products subject to forfeiture under 21 U.S.C. 881(a)(2) and any equipment or container subject to forfeiture under section 881(a) (2) or (3) if the equipment or container cannot be separated safely from the dangerous raw materials or products.

The amendment is needed because law enforcement agents investigating illegal laboratories are placed in a position of danger in seizing and transporting hazardous substances. For example, the substances may emit toxic fumes or cause an explosion when in contact with certain other substances. Ethyl ether is an example of a dangerous substance which law enforcement agents encounter in investigating clandestine laboratories.

Raw materials, products, equipment, and containers used or intended for use in the manufacture, delivery, import, or export of controlled substances in violation of the Controlled Substances Act are subject to forfeiture under 21 U.S.C. 881(a)(2) and (3). However, they are not subject to the summary forfeiture and expeditious destruction provisions applicable to schedule I and II controlled substances under section 881(f). These raw materials, products, and equipment must be forfeited according to the provisions of the customs laws relating to the seizure, summary and judicial forfeiture, condemnation, and disposition of property involved in a violation of the customs laws. 21 U.S.C. 881(d). The customs procedures, involving either judicial or administrative forfeiture, are time-consuming and necessitate the handling and storage of property. Hazardous substances used or intended for use in the manufacture of controlled substances should be exempt from these procedures because of the dangers they create for law enforcement agents.

The amendment reaches both the dangerous substances themselves and equipment or containers from which the substances cannot safely be separated. If law enforcement agents were not authorized to destroy such equipment and containers, the purpose of the amendment would be defeated since the agents would be forced to extract the dangerous substances from their containers or other equipment to which they may be linked for purposes of destroying the substances.

Elimination of restriction on disposal of judicially forfeited property. 18 U.S.C. 981(e) governs the disposal of property forfeited by the Attorney General, the Secretary of the Treasury, or the Postal Service. The subsection provides, among other things, that the property may be retained, may be transferred to another federal agency, or may be transferred to a State or local law enforcement agency which participated directly in any of the acts which led to the forfeiture. The three federal departments or agencies are directed equitably to share the proceeds of forfeitures with such participating State and local law enforcement authorities.

Section 6469(b) of the Anti-Drug Abuse Act of 1988 added a sentence to 18 U.S.C. 981(e) which limited the authority of the Treasury Department and the Postal Service under that subsection to "property that has been administratively forfeited." No rationale for this limitation is stated and none is apparent. Prior to the 1988 Act, Treasury enjoyed the authority to dispose of property it seized irrespective of whether the property was later judicially forfeited in a proceeding conducted by the Attorney General. Possibly, the last sentence of subsection 981(e) was inserted because in some manner it was believed necessary to protect the litigating authority of the Attorney General. However, such litigating authority is not implicated by subsection 981(e), nor is there any other reason why Treasury and the Postal Service should not be able to dispose of property seized within their respective jurisdictions, as to which a judicial forfeiture proceeding is later brought. Accordingly, section 1213 would repeal the last sentence of 18 U.S.C. 981(e) to give those agencies that authority.

ANALYSIS OF BIDEN AMENDMENT NO. 926

Biden Anti-Corruption Act. Sections 1251-54 comprise S. 327, a public corruption bill introduced by Senator Biden. A section-by-section analysis of the bill appears in the Congressional Record, February 2, 1989, at S1064. The version of S. 327 included in this bill, however, contains the following changes.

The penalty provision has been changed to a maximum penalty of 10 years. S. 327 provided for a maximum 20 sentence in certain circumstances. The change was made for the sake of simplicity. The current version has also been modified to apply to the corruption of officials of Indian tribal governments. The election fraud provisions have been amended to include paying a person to vote in an election. The basis for federal jurisdiction has been amended by adding as a separate ground that the offense involved an official who, if elected, would have authority over federal funds. Federal jurisdiction would also apply if the offense involving the intrastate use of a facility of interstate commerce. Finally, the amendment to 18 U.S.C. 1343 is modified to include an attempt provision in that statute.

Narcotics-related public corruption statute that passed the Senate in 1988 drug bill. Section 1255 is derived from the narcotics related public corruption bill passed by the Senate in the 100th Congress as section 2151 of H.R. 5210. It would make it a federal crime to bribe any public official, including a law enforcement agent, in connection with drug trafficking activity.

This section is modeled on 18 U.S.C. 201, relating to bribery of federal officials and witnesses, and it is intended that the case law interpreting the elements of a section 201 offense will be directly applicable to the new offense. The new section, however, differs from section 201 in two important respects.

First, whereas section 201 is limited to offenses involving federal officials, the new section 220 would pertain to the corruption of any official at any level of government. This is intended to permit federal prosecution of offenses involving corruption of state and local law enforcement personnel by narcotics traffickers. Such instances have, unfortunately, become commonplace in many parts of the country. The involvement of the federal law enforcement apparatus is necessary in such cases, of course, because local authorities are hampered in their ability to prosecute corruption in their own ranks.

Second, federal jurisdiction under section 220 would be limited to offenses connected to drug trafficking. It is not intended for this section to become a general purpose public corruption statute; it is intended to be an important tool in the federal government's effort to combat narcotics trafficking.

CORRECTION OF AMENDMENT NO. 923, AS MODIFIED

NOTE.—In the RECORD of October 3, 1989, at page S12463, in Biden amendment No. 923, as modified, certain provisions of the amendment do not appear in print. The following is the full text of Biden amendment No. 923, as modified:

At the appropriate place in the bill insert the following:

Subtitle B—Forfeiture

SEC. 11. USES OF JUSTICE FORFEITURE FUND.

(a) PURCHASE OF FIREARMS.—Section 524(c)(1) of title 28, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by striking "and" at the end of subparagraph (G);

(2) by redesignating subparagraph (H) as subparagraph (I);

(3) by inserting a new subparagraph (H) as follows:

"(H) for any fiscal year, not to exceed $10,000,000 for the purchase of firearms, ammunition, protective body armor, and other personal safety equipment for investigative and enforcement personnel of the Drug Enforcement Administration, Federal Bureau of Investigation, United States Marshals Service, and the Immigration and Naturalization Service who devote a substantial amount of their time to drug law enforcement activities; and";

(4) in subparagraph (A)(ii) by—

(A) inserting a comma after "forfeitable assets";

(B) inserting "or listed chemicals (as defined in section 102 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802))" after "storage, protection, and destruction of controlled substances".

(5) In subparagraph (S) by inserting before the semicolon ", or the money laundering offenses set forth in sections 1956 and 1957 of title 18 and sections 5313(a) and 5324 of title 31"; and

(6) in subparagraph (C) by inserting before the semicolon "or the money laundering provisions in sections 981 and 982 of title 18".

(b) DEFINITIONS AND PROCEDURES.—Subsection 524(C) of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraphs:

"(11) For the purposes of this subsection, the term 'firearm' means any rifle, handheld pistol or revolver, or other weapon that is authorized by the Attorney General, or his designee, to be carried by personnel of the Drug Enforcement Administration, Federal Bureau of Investigation, United States Marshals Service, and the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

"(12) Following the completion of procedures for the forfeiture of property pursuant to any law enforced or administered by the Department, the Attorney General is authorized, at his or her discretion, to warrant clear title to any subsequent purchaser or transferee of such property.".

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 524(c)(9) of title 28, United States Code, is amended by striking "and (G)" and inserting "(G) and (H)".

SEC. 12. RESTORING EQUITABLE SHARING.

SEC. 23. ELIMINATION OF RESTRICTION ON DISPOSAL OF JUDICIALLY FORFEITED PROPERTY BY THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT AND THE POSTAL SERVICE.

Section 981(e) of title 18, United States Code, is amended by striking "The authority granted to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postal Service pursuant to this subsection shall apply only to property that has been administratively forfeited.".

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I rise to express my support for the national drug control strategy bill, which expands critical support for treatment and support programs that address the human costs of the drug war. I particularly want to thank Senator BIDEN who has worked hard to ensure that all aspects of the drug problem are considered.

My remarks today will focus on provisions in the bill directed at children. When we add up the costs of poverty and drug abuse in this country, we find that our children pay the highest price today through abuse, neglect, and homelessness. But the consequences to our society in the future are alarming.

Children are often the victims of the current drug epidemic, because women particularly seem to be drawn to smoking crack cocaine. Child welfare agencies around the country are overwhelmed by cases of children abused and neglected as a result of their parents' drug abuse. Often these children, many of them quite young, are invisible to our society until tragedy strikes. Although historically between 30 and 40 percent of abuse and neglect cases nationally have involved substance abuse, individual jurisdictions report much higher proportions. In my own State of Connecticut, 65 percent of referrals on seriously abused children involve parental substance abuse.

Homeless children also contribute to the growing child welfare caseload. Children have come to represent a major proportion of the homeless in many areas. In Fairfield County, CT, almost two-thirds of the homeless in 1988 were children.

These pieces add up to an alarming picture of a lost generation: children with no time for childhood, growing up in fear and confusion amidst poverty and violence. What does the future hold for these children as they reach adulthood? Children of substance abusers become callous and hardened at an early age to hide their pain and anxiety. Child abuse and substance abuse often are transmitted among generations. Homelessness deprives a child of security, privacy, and consistency, thereby interfering with education and personality development.

This legislation provides a start to help reach these very vulnerable children. I have sponsored a provision to help overburdened child welfare agencies cope with the increase in drug-related abuse and neglect. The emergency protective child services grants, an amendment to the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act, would provide $40 million toward protecting these very vulnerable children.

Agencies could use these grants to hire more staff, creating manageable caseloads so that children can receive the attention they need. The grants also could pay for staff training in dealing with the special problems confronted in substance abusing families. Some families could be preserved if only the resources and the time to work with them were available.

Unfortunately, many children must be removed from their families, some of them permanently. The grants would help agencies recruit foster and adoptive parents to give these children the caring homes they need and deserve. Finally, the grants could promote coordination among the many agencies that affect the lives of these families rather than addressing problems piecemeal.

I also would like to comment, Mr. President, about the need for appropriations for this important initiative. The appropriations bill for the Department of Health and Human Services [HHS] currently contains no provision for the emergency grants. I urge the distinguished Appropriations Subcommittee chairman, Senator HARKIN, and the other conferees on the bill to fully fund this critical effort.

Another provision which I have sponsored authorizes the Secretary of Health and Human Services [HHS] to make grants available for local agencies and institutions—public or nonprofit—to provide primary pediatric outreach care. Such care could include immunizations, acute care, health screenings, assessments, as well as referrals to other services. To be eligible, the programs would have to demonstrate the ability to actively reach disadvantaged children.

The inspiration for this provision, and a potential model for other programs, is the New York Children's Health Project. Based in the department of pediatrics at the New York Hospital-Cornell Medical Center, the project delivers health care to homeless children via mobile medical vans. This concept of providing care is flexible and superbly adaptable to local conditions, from inner-city neighborhoods to Appalachia. The initiative I am sponsoring provides $10 million to support similar efforts. No Federal bureaucracy is established. We simply foster and encourage worthy local initiatives and the exchange of information and experiences among them.

In conclusion, the predicament of many American children parallels that of refugees in the Third World—dislocated, destitute, and victimized. We must do more than shudder and turn away at the stories of these sad young lives. We must give our child welfare agencies the tools to protect these children even as we expand treatment for their parents. We must give our children what American relief agencies have long provided children abroad: decent health care, food, and shelter. Surely, no group in our society is more deserving of our compassion and our support.

Mr. President, I urge passage of this legislation.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President, late last night the Senate approved an extremely important amendment to S. 1711, the President's national drug strategy bill, which preserves and improves the Federal Asset Forfeiture Program. The amendment was offered by Senator BIDEN, the author of the Federal forfeiture law.

During a hearing that I held in Connecticut this summer, I received compelling testimony from law enforcement officers, including the head of Connecticut's Statewide Narcotics Task Force, Capt. James Mooney, about the benefits of the Federal Asset Forfeiture Program.

Under current law, if the State or local police, acting on their own, seize money or property during a drug bust, they can turn them over to Federal authorities to be processed in forfeiture proceedings. This is known as an "adoptive forfeiture," with the Federal Government "adopting" the assets seized. If the assets can be retained by the Government, 90 percent of the funds are returned to the State or local law enforcement agencies that were involved in the drug bust.

Section 6077 of last year's drug act, however, would prohibit adoptive forfeitures whenever a State forfeiture statute might apply. The theory behind section 6077 was that Federal law should not interfere with or override State forfeiture statutes. But the existence of forfeiture statutes in some States is no reason to eliminate a Federal forfeiture procedure that has already proven to be effective and vitally important to the narcotics law enforcement efforts of State and local police. The amendment approved last night would repeal section 6077 and thereby preserve the adoptive forfeiture program.

At the Connecticut hearing, police officers testified that the money received from Federal adoptive forfeiture proceedings provided funds that were crucial to successful narcotics law enforcement. From fiscal year 1986 until April of this year, Connecticut law enforcement agencies have received $6.4 million in Federal forfeiture funds, including over $2.3 million during the first 7 months of this fiscal year. Most of these funds have come from adoptive forfeitures. The funds have been used to finance large-scale narcotics investigations—to pay for undercover cars, communications and surveillance equipment, bullet-proof vests, and the large quantities of cash that are necessary to make big drug purchases and follow the trail up to the big-time drug dealers. Just a few years ago, I was told, drug dealers in Connecticut could sniff out undercover police simply by upping the ante: cops never had the money to make large scale buys. In short, forfeiture funds have led directly to better and more effective narcotics police work.

Following that hearing, I conveyed the concerns of Connecticut police to Senator BIDEN and his staff, who were receiving similar complaints from police throughout the country. I am pleased that these concerns have been addressed by the amendment approved by the Senate last night. That amendment would not only preserve adoptive forfeiture, it would also facilitate the processing of forfeiture claims. In essence, these changes mean State and local police will be able to receive forfeiture funds much more quickly. Finally, the amendment would permit up to $10 million from the Justice Department Asset Forfeiture Fund to be used to fund the purchase of firearms and safety equipment for Federal law enforcement agents.

As more and more money is needed to fund prevention, education and treatment initiatives, it is more important than ever to preserve programs, like adoptive forfeiture, that create funds for law enforcement. And there is something particularly appropriate about using money and property obtained from drug dealing to fund continued narcotics enforcement.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, it seems to me that it comes down to this: A statute will not work, because the Court will overturn it the first time a case comes along that involves desecration clearly meant as political expression. Therefore, I will vote against the bill.

That leaves a constitutional amendment. The founders meant for the Constitution to be amendable. But amending must always be viewed as a radical remedy. There have been radical wrongs that demanded such a radical remedy. For example, slavery. For example, denial of equal protection of the laws. For example, denial of the right to vote on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. For example, denial of the right to vote on account of sex. For example, denial of the right to vote by reason of failure to pay any poll tax or other tax. These were radical wrongs demanding a radical remedy.

But does the comparatively rare desecration of our flag merit the radical remedy of amending the Constitution? Further, does desecration merit amending the first amendment—that precious bedrock of our freedom? Not in my view. It doesn't even come close.

Judging by the hyperactivity of politicians from the President, to Members of Congress, to State legislators to members of city councils, you would think America was aflame with burning flags. That is not the case. Americans revere our flag. Every day, there are millions—millions—of acts of reverence for our flag. Schoolchildren salute our flag and pledge their allegiance. Citizens raise the flag at their homes and their places of business. The flag is displayed at ceremonies of every kind. These are everyday acts that number in the millions every day. They number in the billions every year. Measure that against an occasional burning of the flag. How many cases of desecration are there, 10 or 20 a year? So few, no one bothers to keep count.

So, I say, enough hyperactivity. Enough breastbeating. Enough political one-upsmanship. Amending the Constitution is serious business, not a ploy for gaining an advantage in the next election.

There are radical wrongs crying out for an amendment to the Constitution. If we are so passionate about an amendment, how about an amendment to balance the Federal budget? Last year, this very committee had an opportunity to send a balanced budget amendment to the floor, but certain of the members of the majority party on this committee contrived to strangle it. Senate Resolution 11 had 31 cosponsors, from both sides of the aisle. It was reported favorably by the Constitution Subcommittee on May 25 of last year. But it never reached the floor, because the committee leadership bottled it up. If we are panting to amend the Constitution this year, let us amend it to require a balanced budget. Budget deficits year in and year out, budget deficits that have run our national debt up to $3 trillion do far more injury to our country and to our fellow citizens that an occasional flag burning by a crackpot.

And there is a radical wrong far worse than fiscal irresponsibility that cries out every day for a Constitional amendment. Desecration of the flag is wrong, but it is nothing compared with the desecration of human life that takes place in abortion clinics every day in this country. When you talk about abortion, you are not talking about an occasional act of desecration, you are talking about an everyday desecration. You're not talking about a handful a year, your talking about thousands every day of the year—a million and a half every year.

Flag desecration is wrong, but killing the offspring of human beings is far more wrong. The offspring of human beings are human beings. They are not dogs or pigs. It's self-evident that the offspring of human beings are human beings, and every abortion kills a human being, so let's amend the Constitution to prevent the desecration of human life, except in those rare cases where the life of the mother is threatened.

Unfortunately, such an amendment is not the subject of today's hearing. So, I return to the matters before us. Burning the flag is distasteful. Showing disrespect of any kind toward the flag is disgusting and highly offensive to nearly every American citizen, including this one. And if the majority rules in this case, we shall have a new law or a new provision of the Constitution.

A new law will not last. It will last only as long as it takes for a case to reach the Supreme Court involving political expression. Then that law will be overturned.

It is interesting to note why this is the case. It is so, because the first amendment forbids the enactment of law which abridges the freedom of speech. The framers of the Bill of Rights in effect withdrew from the legislatures authority to legislate in a way that would limit free speech.

Of course, the right of free speech is not absolute, nor was it meant to be. No one has a right to endanger public safety by means of intemperate speech. No one has a right to injure another through slander or libel. No one has the right to injure or destroy the property of another, while expressing himself under the first amendment.

But apart from these restrictions, based on upholding the rights of others, there are no restrictions on our right to free speech, nor should there be. Except to ensure public safety and to protect the rights of others, speech must never be restricted simply because the majority want it restricted. The right to free speech must always be just as broad and far-reaching as the rights of others will permit. However, obnoxious and offensive flag-burning might be, it does not constitute grounds for restricting the right to free speech. It does not constitute grounds for amending the first amendment.

The Republic is in no danger from the isolated few, often demented, persons who burn the flag. Their tiny sparks of hatred are quickly extinguished by a vast ocean of love for our flag. Those few who dishonor the flag are but specks in the huge throngs of Americans who honor and uphold our flag.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a period for morning business with Senators permitted to speak therein.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DEATH OF JOHN T. WALKER, EPISCOPAL BISHOP OF WASHINGTON

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, last Saturday, John T. Walker, the Episcopal Bishop of Washington, died. He was a man of principle, a man of determination, a man of gentleness, and a man of justice. Those who had the privilege to know him are grieving over his loss, but they are rejoicing in the light of his ministry.

John Walker was determined to show that racism has no place in the church or in society. Accordingly, he subjected himself to the trial of endless firsts. He was in the front rank of blacks to join the Episcopal Church in America. He was first to integrate the Virginia Theological Seminary. He was the first black rector of St. Mary's Church, Detroit. He was the first black on the faculty at St. Paul's Preparatory School in Concord, NH. He was the first black canon of the Washington Cathedral. In 1971, he was elected suffragan bishop, and in 1976, he was elected to succeed the Right Reverend William F. Creighton as Bishop of Washington. His was a pilgrimage of great risk. His was a path of loneliness. Bishop Walker never flinched. Yet, he brought a gentle, soft-spoken kindness to his journey. There was sparkle in his eye and tolerance in his heart as the indomitable force of his personality came to bear on those who felt threatened by his reforming life.

Bishop Walker was insistent on justice. In fact, he had a prophetic sense of justice. When he became bishop, the Washington Cathedral carried an enormous debt. He mobilized a fundraising drive that paid off the debt and financed the remaining construction. It was a draining and daunting task. Completion of the cathedral should have been a crowning success in its own right. But Bishop Walker had a different vision. He wanted the cathedral to be a place where the national conscience was rallied. Indeed, the cathedral did become such a place. There, the problems in South Africa were held up for us to see. There, people dedicated their lives in the fight against world hunger. There, Americans first gathered in Days of Remembrance of the Holocaust.

Notwithstanding John Walker's prophetic sense of justice, he believed fervently in the separation of church and state. Several years ago, Congress was considering the reintroduction of school prayer. Bishop Walker stood in the driving rain on the steps of the Capitol patiently waiting his turn to speak out in favor of preserving our traditional separation of church from state.

But if there was a central theme to his ministry, many think it was his deep belief that we are all responsible to be ambassadors of reconciliation. What a miraculous ambassador of reconciliation was John Walker. He gathered into the daily life of his diocese the whole spectrum of God's creation. Women and minorities were ordained. The laity was empowered. Under his leadership, parish life has begun to move beyond the passive voice of worship to the active voice of service to those who are in need.

In a recent interview with the Washington Post, Bishop Walker said this:

When you look at conditions in black Washington today—the poverty, infant mortality, shootings and drugs—we've got a thousand years to go, we're not there. And I know some people want to throw in the sponge and give up, but I can't do that. My feeling is too strong that it is God's will that we live together in harmony and peace.

So now, Mr. President, it is up to us. We must honor the life of this remarkable man by taking up his banner. We must become ambassadors of reconciliation. And we should start by breaking down the terrible wall of separation that continues to exist in Bishop Walker's own beloved city of Washington, just as he broke down the barriers that existed in his church. We must gather the people of this city, this country, and indeed, the whole world together, just as John Walker has taught us how to do.

CEASE-FIRE IN LEBANON

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I rise today to address my concern over the recent tragic violence in Lebanon. The fighting between the Lebanese forces and the Syrian troops in that country has forged a war zone filled with the death and destruction wrought by 7 months of fighting. Fortunately, the current cease-fire has halted the senseless destruction which has killed more than 830 people and injured over 3,000 since the fighting began in March. We must move to ensure a permanent cease-fire between these countries.

Since March, when Maj. Gen. Michel Aoun blockaded illegal militia ports used by the Syrian-backed Moslem militia, Lebanon has been bombarded with its most savage battles in 5 years. The fighting which has ensued since Aoun blockaded the ports has instilled fear in the people of Lebanon. Beirut now stands as a hollow shell of its former glory. Civilians have fled the capital city by the hundreds of thousands and now only about 150,000 of the 1.5 million residents remain in Beirut. Until this cease-fire, these people were forced to huddle in basements and bomb shelters to hide from the long-range shelling. Most of the city's buildings stand damaged or gutted.

I remain hopeful that the cease-fire negotiated by the Arab League will bring an end to the fighting in Beirut. The current cease-fire raised hope that a peaceful solution to this conflict can be found. The United States must act to show our support of this cease-fire. Our Government must show that we will not stand idly by and allow the Syrians to inflict such violence and death upon the Christians and Moslems of Beirut. In my judgment, the time has come for the United States to press for a halt to the Syrian involvement in Lebanon.

While I deplore the Syrian involvement in Lebanon, I cannot accept the actions of any group which threatens United States diplomats with terrorism. If lasting peace is to prevail, all violence and terrorism must cease. I believe the United States should still press for the removal of the Syrian occupation forces and an end to the 14-year civil war. I encourage the Department of State to take action to discourage any further Syrian attacks on Lebanon. These actions could include an economic boycott of the Syrian regime as well as political pressures.

Mr. President, it is my hope that the violence in Lebanon has drawn to a close. In my judgment, we should work to ensure that this becomes a permanent cease-fire which will save countless lives and bring peace to this ravaged nation.

Currently, the remaining members of Lebanon's last Parliament in 1972, are seeking to restructure the government to reconcile differences between Moslem and Christian citizens. Although the powers of the Christian presidency might be trimmed through these negotiations, the Parliament should not relent on General Aoun's demand that all Syrian troops be removed from Lebanon.

Thank you, Mr. President.

TERRY ANDERSON

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, Terry Anderson will be 42 at the end of this month. He has been held in captivity in Beirut for over 4½ years. In fact, today is the 1,663d day that he has been held.

I ask unanimous consent that a short article on this subject be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Los Angeles Times, Oct. 27, 1987]

40TH BIRTHDAY SALUTE FOR HOSTAGE

WASHINGTON.—Under gray skies and in a driving rain, a somber 40th birthday salute was held today for American hostage Terry Anderson, held in the Middle East longer than any of 22 foreign captives.

"This is for you, Terry," Anderson's sister, Peggy Say, told a gathering outside the Jefferson Memorial of about 100 people, including 22 schoolchildren, each with a cardboard star embossed with the name of a hostage. "I don't know hardly what to say to you anymore. Happy birthday doesn't seem appropriate," said Say, noting that Anderson probably spent his 40th birthday as he has his 955 earlier days as a hostage—in a tiny, barren room.

BUDGET RECONCILIATION

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, late last evening or, if you like early this morning, the Committee on Finance reported out a budget reconciliation bill which includes as an amendment a bill (S. 1627) which I offered on the floor September 14 on behalf of myself and Senators DANFORTH, BOREN, CHAFEE, PRYOR, HEINZ, and DASCHLE.

The amendment restores to colleges and universities, as 501(c)(3) organizations, the right to issue bonds in the same manner which present law treats governmental units. Specifically, it repeals the present $150 million limitation on outstanding tax-exempt indebtedness, and the 2 percent limitation on financing costs of issuance. This restores to colleges and universities their status prior to the Tax Reform Act of 1986.

The provision was contained in the "chairman's mark" offered at the outset of our markup session by Senator BENTSEN. The accompanying description of revenue reconciliation proposal, part 3: Miscellaneous tax provisions prepared by the Joint Committee on Taxation reads:

c. Conform treatment of 501(c)(3) bonds to governmental bonds.

PRESENT LAW

Present law permits tax-exemption for interest on bonds to benefit section 501(c)(3) organizations (qualified 501(c)(3) bonds). Qualified 501(c)(3) bonds are defined as bonds which would not be private activity bonds if section 501(c)(3) organizations were treated as governmental units with respect to their exempt activities (sec. 145). Qualified 501(c)(3) bonds are classified as private activity bonds and such bonds are generally subject to several of the limitations on qualifying private activity bonds. In addition, no more than $150 million of qualified 501(c)(3) bonds (other than hospital bonds) may be outstanding with respect to any section 501(c)(3) organization at any time.

EXPLANATION OF PROPOSAL

The proposal would repeal section 145 and generally treat bonds issued by 501(c)(3) organizations in the same manner in which present law treats bonds issued by governmental units. The proposal thereby would: (1) repeal the $150 million limitation on outstanding tax-exempt indebtedness of 501(c)(3) organizations; (2) repeal the two percent limitation on the financing of costs of issuance with bond proceeds; and (3) other changes.

EFFECTIVE DATES

The proposal would generally be effective for bonds issued after December 31, 1989. The proposal would not apply to certain bonds issued after December 31, 1989, if such bonds are subject to any transition rule under subtitle B of title XIII of the Tax Reform Act of 1986.

The committee also approved an amendment offered by Senator CHAFEE which for 1 year exempts gifts of appreciated property from inclusion in the calculation of the alternative minimum tax.

Senators will recognize that these measures, entirely in the one case, partially in the other, undo the very considerable disadvantage imposed on private institutions of higher learning by the 1986 act. Supporters must now consider how to ensure that the provisions of the committee bill become law.

In this regard I must report that the Treasury representative, present on the occasion, declared that the administration opposes both measures.

I could wish for more time to expand on what is at issue here, which, in my view at all events, is quite simply the long-term viability of the private sector in American higher education. I think it may be said that ours is the only nation on Earth which has, in any considerable measure, such a private sector. I believe it is in jeopardy. I have spoken of this on a number of occasions, and would ask permission to include in the RECORD at this point addresses given at Marymount Manhattan College in 1986, and at Columbia University in 1987.

There being no objection, the addresses were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HONORS CONVOCATION MARYMOUNT MANHATTAN COLLEGE

(Address by Daniel Patrick Moynihan)

Temple Sharaay Tefila, New York, NY, November 12, 1986

For some years I have kept a watching brief, as lawyers like to say, on Joseph Schumpeter's proposition that the political and economic arrangements of capitalism would be transformed by the "conquest" of the private sector by the public sector.

This, surely, is one of the great hypotheses of twentieth century social science, subsuming all manner of previous speculation ranging from Karl Marx to Leo XIII.

Matters proceed much as Schumpeter forecast, or such is my reading. Witness for example the steady absorption of international trade into the realm of state policy. But the best evidence for the hypothesis comes in areas where it is clear that a society has options, which is to say is under no pressure to change its arrangements, but does so anyway. Such evidence is most compelling when the events take place under a political regime vociferously, or at least doctrinally, opposed to just such a transformation, and, finally, when almost no one notices.

I believe such an event took place in the course of the recent tax legislation in Washington. The 99th Congress rewrote the Internal Revenue Code: quite the most radical revision in half a century, which is to say roughly from the time marginal tax rates began to move from quite low to exceptionally high levels. (High levels routinely avoided, but that is another matter.) I had a share in this enterprise. I was one of the "core group" of Senators which drafted the main outlines of the bill in a brief but intense period last spring, and was on the Committee of Conference with the House of Representatives which fashioned the final legislation.

Obviously, the Congress played a large and determining role in the legislation. But the initiative was the President's. He proposed tax reform in his State of the Union Address of January 1984, and a full and detailed proposal, which came to be known as Treasury I, was made public the following November. Before it was all over Treasury I was changed in many ways but one proposition persisted which affects in the most profound manner the private sector of higher education.

And this is my tale.

First some details; well enough known. Higher education begins in America as an extension of organized religion. (And for that matter unorganized religion, the Quakers, for example, being prodigious founders of academies.) The founders of Harvard College dreading, as they put it, to leave posterity to an "illiterate ministry" commenced instruction in Hebrew. It was almost two centuries before state sponsored institutions appeared. In time state institutions would enroll the greater proportion of students, but private colleges and universities continue to be vigorous and typically growing institutions. American higher education is unique in the degree to which its major research institutions are "private"—about an even split—and to the extent that the private sector contains so many of the most sought after small undergraduate institutions.

Now these institutions are not private in any significant sense that conflicts with our notion of things public. New York University describes itself as "a private university in the public service," and that gets it nicely.

And the law so recognized.

That is to say, the tax law. The one that mostly matters most!

I now enter a realm which not one professor in ninety will know of. Certainly I never knew it in my days as a teacher. But those denigrated and buffeted trustees and treasurers have known about it in great detail, in consequence of which the rest of us have had classrooms in which to teach and something like a pension to look forward to.

In a word, private education was tax exempt. In practical terms this had its largest significance in the ability of private colleges and universities to issue tax exempt bonds to build dormitories and laboratories, and yes, football stadiums. The holders of such bonds did not pay federal income tax on the interest they received, in consequence of which borrowing was much less expensive which in turn meant there were more, or at least sufficient, dormitories and laboratories and such.

This provision constituted elemental recognition of the public interest served by such private institutions.

In the language of the Internal Revenue Code they were known as "Section 501(c)(3)" institutions. In 1968 Congress placed some restrictions on the issuance of tax exempt bonds to finance commercial activities, something state and local governments had begun to do in the usual competition for investment. These were termed industrial development bonds and it was specifically provided that the new restrictions would not apply to any "exempt person." An exempt person was thereupon defined (in Section 103(b)(3) of the Code) as:

(A) a governmental unit, or

(B) an organization described in section 501(c)(3) . . .

Now here we have something important. Private institutions of higher education are said to be imbued with a public purpose such that they were specifically equated in the tax code with sovereign institutions of government. This was an immunity, if you like, of the largest consequence.

Until, that is, Treasury I, followed by Treasury II. These documents proposed to eliminate all tax exempt bonds for "nongovernmental persons," to include private colleges and universities, declaring that this was an undeserved "subsidy." State and local governments would "retain the ability to finance projects with tax-exempt obligations if the proceeds are not used by nongovernmental persons." But 501(c)(3) institutions could no longer do so.

Treasury I stated: "The proposal would virtually eliminate . . . the Federal subsidy currently made available to nongovernmental persons through tax exempt financing." (p. 292).

The House of Representatives, specifically of course the Committee on Ways and Means, while continuing some tax exempt bonds for nongovernmental persons, nevertheless accepted the general proposition that access to tax exempt financing by nongovernmental persons, including 501(c)(3) institutions, should be substantially restricted. It fell to me to contest this in Conference (always with the complete support of Senator Packwood of Oregon, Chairman of the Senate Finance Committee.) In the end we reached agreement that private colleges and universities could each issue up to $150 million in tax exempt bonds, and could advance refund bond issues on the same basis as governmental entities, but even so the bonds of these institutions were to be classified under the rubric of "private activity bonds." The status of private institutions of higher education as "exempt persons" quite disappeared from the tax code.

I did win agreement to one provision, Sec. 1302 of the new law, which states that future legislation affecting "private activity bonds" will not automatically affect private colleges and universities unless "expressly provided." But that is all. Under the new law, the bonds of private colleges and universities have the same status as those used to construct sewage treatment plants and small scale industrial development projects.

And so this is where we are. Under the new law tax exempt financing is available in unlimited amounts for any public institution of higher education, but in strictly limited amounts for private institutions. (In New York, Columbia, NYU, Rochester, and Cornell are already well above those amounts.) The level playing field that once existed between the two sectors is now emphatically tilted toward the public sector. In this era of capital intensive research, to use David A. Spence's term, the consequences over one or two generations could easily lose us a legacy of two and three centuries.

It would be comforting to think that this all came about because of a super rationalist document drafted by career officials of the Treasury having nothing more in mind but to strip the tax code of hidden "subsidy" (as they choose to call anything that costs the Treasury revenue, or is thought to).

It started there, but it didn't stop there.

In the final days of the Tax Bill Conference, beginning specifically with a summary of the proposed bill prepared by the Joint Committee on Taxation ("August 16, 1986, 8:30 PM") I raised this issue with the utmost specificity. We were, I asserted, making a profound change in education policy, grievously impairing the opportunities of institutions in the "private" sector. It does not speak well for my advocacy that the more I insisted on this as a fact, the more the House conferees insisted on it as a policy.

I repeat, told that this would grievously injure private higher education, the House conferees grew if anything more attached to the idea. I do not wish to exceed the bounds of courtesy to respected colleagues but I have the firm impression that the more it became clear that private colleges and universities would be hurt, the more the idea appealed to some members.

There is no mystery to this. We were seeing old resentments against the Yales and the Harvards transmuted into a generalized bias against the Bible colleges of South Carolina, the Yeshivas of the Bronx, and the Catholic junior colleges of Iowa.

The representatives of private institutions did their best. This I attest. (This the Speaker of the House could attest!) Those normally responsible for education in the Administration did nothing, but then they would have had little influence on the tax writing committees, and are in any event oriented toward elementary and secondary schooling. Higher education has no spokesman in government and shouldn't have to have: it should be everyone's concern. It ends up no one's.

On the first day of the 100th Congress, I will introduce legislation to restore the ancient liberties of our private colleges and universities. I don't know how I will do, but do know that an issue of great consequence is at stake.

Schumpeter would have agreed.

ROAR, LION, ROAR!

(By Daniel Patrick Moynihan)

Charter Bicentennial of Columbia College, Low Memorial Library, Columbia University, New York, NY, April 25, 1987

One measure of the morale of a civilization is the manner in which it observes the notable dates of its history. On this score Columbia College has acquitted itself well over the centuries. The festivities of 1837 emerge by every account as admirable and aspiring: speeches, poems, and Latin odes. 1887, as befitted that gilded age, saw a stately procession to the old Metropolitan Opera House and a veritably Wagnerian three score honorary degrees. In 1937, busy with the affairs of the nation, the College let the sesquicentennial slip by. Given the state of those affairs, this was not the worst thing, especially now that the bicentennial makes such handsome amends.

The trick is to combine a respect for the past without too much reverence; indeed intimidation. There is enough of the latter in Western civilization just now: thinking ourselves outthought and outperformed by predecessors. Yet surely the greater danger is to suppose ourselves too well-endowed, the benefactors of some perpetual, compounding trust. The art historian Robert Byron observed how in the latter half of the nineteenth century, the disease of complacency fastened on Englishmen. "Misfortune comes to the complacent," he wrote, "brought not by some moral law, but because complacence is the parent of incompetence."

Let me take this for my text as I speak about the condition of our universities, and especially our private universities.

Here we encounter an extraordinary legacy which is unmistakably beginning to be threatened by complacency.

A first fact. The United States is the only nation on earth in which there are truly private universities. Elsewhere the state, be it benevolent or coercive, reigns supreme. It is no accident that ours should be a plural arrangement. This is the deepest of our constitutional and societal impulses. The balance is indeed quite exceptionally just that. If you will accept the judgment of the Association of American Universities that its 56 members represent the ranking research facilities of North America, then note that 28, exactly half, are private, and the other 28 are public.

This is not to say that private universities do not receive public support. Most received some early on. In 1784, just as the University of the State of New York was being established, with its Chancellor and Board of Regents, and Columbia College its only charge, John Jay set it down that: ". . . universities . . . ought no longer to be regarded in the light of mere private corporations. The government should extend to them their constant care; and the State treasuries afford them necessary supplies."

But this, mind, in the context of the 1784 legislation, the title of which reads: "An Act for granting certain Privileges to the College heretofore called King's College, for altering the Name and Charter thereof, and erecting an University within this State."

In the main these privileges—across the nation—continue unimpaired, but not wholly. It is possible to see them as threatened, and seriously so, because so many of those who should know better choose not to be concerned, which is the most conspicuous feature of complacency.

I think here of the events of the Tax Reform Act of 1986, concerning the issuance of tax exempt bonds by private universities. The details will not much interest faculty, and will verge on the incomprehensible to students, but I am here to argue their importance. In an age of "capital intensive science" (and declining Federal support), such bonds make possible the libraries and laboratories and infrastructure of a research university. More, the status of the bonds defines the status of the institutions. Praise God and Alexander Hamilton that the President of this institution agrees.

In 1968 Congress enacted the first statutory limits on what are known as "industrial development bonds." These were defined as bonds used in the trade or business of any entity that was not an "exempt person." An "exempt person" was further defined as either a unit of government—shall we say the State of New York—or "an organization described in Section 501(c)(3)" of the Internal Revenue Code—shall we say Columbia University.

A nice equivalency, you will agree, and an indispensable one, you would think.

Or such was the case until the fall of 1984 when the present administration in Washington proposed a massive restructuring of the tax code which effectively stripped universities of the status of "exempt persons." The House of Representatives, where tax legislation must originate in the Congress, accepted this change. The House bill classified all tax-exempt bonds as either "governmental" or "nonessential function" bonds. Bonds for universities (and private hospitals, and suchlike institutions) were placed in the "nonessential" category.

We drew a bill in the Senate which specifically and deliberately preserved the exempt person category shared by governmental units and universities. We argue that it was profoundly mistaken public policy to relegate the private universities and colleges of the nation to the status of solid waste disposal plants. (And, of course, hospitals, and similar institutions.)

We lost. Oh, in conference with the House, we got fairly generous allowances in terms of the amount of tax exempt bonds private institutions can issue, but we lost the principle that these are unique institutions with privileges not unlike the immunities of government units in a Federal system. Money was not the issue with the administration. The issue was changing the status of the likes of Columbia.

Let me say I do not think this would have happened save for the silent acquiescence of the Secretary of Education. The Department of Education was created, of course, in 1979. If it is now in the hands of conservative Republicans, it was wholly the creation of liberal Democrats who assumed that bringing all the education activities of the Federal government together in one place would increase support for education. The Senate vote was 72 to 21, with a mere five Democrats in opposition.

The debate that April was not long, but it had moments of some intensity. It fell to me to ask David Riesman, the most eminent commentator of higher education of the present age, if we might have his judgment in the matter. This came in a brief letter which belongs on tablets somewhere.

I read it to the Senate:

"Education, contrary to people who speak of it as an "establishment," is a weak power, subject to whims and fashions in the country at large, and these show up in the attitudes of individual members of Congress and their aides, assistants and others. Therefore education is best served by being part of a much more powerful coalition in which it is joined with the rest of H.E.W. with its labor union and medical and other affiliations. Furthermore, education is, because of its weakness, vulnerable to attack because something done in one of the three thousand accredited postsecondary institutions by somebody may offend somebody or get in the papers. It therefore needs to have many diverse sources of support, combined with a certain precious obscurity.

"Once it is separate, its target quality and actual weakness will be visible and this is a weakness not only vis-a-vis potential critics but potential lobbyists—captors—in the country. Education is best served by decentralization, not only in this huge and diverse country, but also within the federal government and its many agencies." [1]

I went on to state that, that in creating a single agency, we risked the politicization of education itself, "and . . . it will come about in ways that the system of education itself will not be able to resist." [2]

As for example in the tax code.

If the Secretary of Education was silent when the private institutions of higher education were being stripped of their previous status in the tax code, what of the representatives of higher education when the post of Secretary of Education was being created?

Silent, also. That is to say the Association of American Universities, under pressure from the White House, no less political for being Democratic as against Republican pressure, said nothing. Its executive committee knew better.

The mood of the moment will pass. The distemper of the 1980s, is in most ways a delayed response to the disorder of the 1960s, that "sum of a decade" to cite Dick Hofstatder. It is about spent. One can almost imagine a certain reasonableness descending on the capital, rippling outwards. Yet that is but another invitation to complacency and to the incompetence it breeds.

A generation ago Schumpeter warned us that the transformation of liberal society would come not through some Marxist convulsion but rather from the steady "conquest" of the private sector by the public sector. This is now commencing in higher education and will continue unless understood and overcome.

The men who gave Columbia College its name knew something of taking destiny into their own hands. Cannot their successors learn? Ought they not? Must they not?

Let me suggest a good beginning. The candidates now running for their party's nomination for President should be asked to state in writing that if successful, whatever the politics of their administration their Secretary of Education will be expected to stay out of them. From Martin C. Barell back to John Jay, the Chancellor of the University of the State of New York has done as much here, where the Federal government began. Let Washington learn by our example.

Further, the candidates should be asked to promise, win or lose, to support the restoration of the tax exempt status of universities and comparable institutions. If enough do, we can almost surely get a bill through this Congress. The power to tax is the power to destroy and candidates should so state.

And so, Lion—Roar!

Mr. MOYNIHAN. There is, I believe and hope, a theme to both these addresses. It is Schumpeter's great thesis of the conquest of the private sector by the public sector. It is that which he thought would transform modern society, not some Marxist convulsion or recidivist repression. On September 14, I spoke of this subject to the annual leadership conference of the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities. On this occasion I brought up the most recent of our troubles, the decision by the Department of Justice to commence a civil investigative demand, a process of documentary subpoena, concerning the possibility that various colleges and universities are in violation of the antitrust laws by virtue of collusion in setting tuition rates.

Think back a century ago to 1890 when Senator John Sherman of Ohio carried his famous antitrust legislation. Do you suppose that he could even have imagined that this law, designed to restrain unethical and undesirable business practices, could ever have conceived that the law might one day be turned against institutions of learning? He was concerned with corporations that make and sell things, not institutions that conserve and advance the culture. Yet here we are. Universities and colleges reduced to the statutory condition of factories.

One university president wrote to me recently: "I believe that the fundamental question is the constitutional status of nonprofits." He is right. For does anyone in the nonprofit sector have any idea how far can be the reach of government investigation? Item. A small liberal arts college in Virginia has recently been asked—required—by the Justice Department to produce 60,000 documents.

I have the honor to have been associated in academic pursuits with a scholar whose special interest has been the decision to prosecute within the Antitrust Division of the Justice Department. I sought her advice as to what was going on. She enquired and got back to say that there was no "politics" here. The Bush administration has not set out to harass the Ivy League, much less the 4-year liberal arts institutions of the Nation. It all seemingly began with an article in the Wall Street Journal, a publication no doubt read with some regularity in the Antitrust Division. There had in any event been a growing interest in the subject. Next thing: Send us 60,000 documents so that we might get to know you better.

Magna Carta speaks of the "ancient liberties and free customs" of various institutions of England in that distant time. The right to issue bonds as a "exempt person"—which was the law before 1986—fits very well into a definition of liberty from Black's Law Dictionary: "a franchise or personal privilege, being some part of the sovereign power. * * *"

And there were such. And there were those who were prepared to insist upon and to defend them. Not long ago we had that very document on display in the rotunda of the Capitol. I would stop from time to time to look at it and wonder. Are we fit heirs to those "bishops, abbots, earls, barons, justiciars, foresters, reeves, servants"? Let us hope. And not be too certain. The next 10 days will be critical. But more than that: This generation will be critical. Our cause is not understood. Deep tendencies in modern society oppose us. We have lost more than we have gained of late. Still, at 3 o'clock this morning there was a small victory.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Kalbaugh, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

12TH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF BUILDING SCIENCES—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 65

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with the requirements of section 809 of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 (12 U.S.C. 1701j-2(i)), I herewith transmit the twelfth annual Report of the National Institute of Building Sciences for 1988.

GEORGE BUSH.

THE WHITE HOUSE, October 4, 1989.

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

At 3:11 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives announced that the House has passed the following joint resolution, without amendment:

S.J. Res. 122. Joint resolution to designate October 1989 and 1990 as "National Down Syndrome Month."

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3026) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of said District for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990, and for other purposes; it agrees to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. DIXON, Mr. NATCHER, Mr. STOKES, Mr. AUCOIN, Mr. HOYER, Mr. CARR, Mr. WHITTEN, Mr. GALLO, Mr. GREEN, Mr. REGULA, and Mr. CONTE as managers of the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the Speaker specified sections 828 and 829 as additional portions of the Senate amendment for consideration by the additional conferees from the Committee on Government Operations in the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 2461) entitled "An Act to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1990 for military activities of the Department of Defense, for military construction, and for defense activities of the Department of Energy, to prescribe personnel strengths for such fiscal year for the Armed Forces, and for other purposes.".

The message also announced that the House has passed the following bills and joint resolutions, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 1335. An act to amend title 38, United States Code, to increase rates of disability compensation and dependency and indemnity compensation for veterans with service-connected disabilities and survivors of such veterans, and for other purposes;

H.R. 1358. An act to amend title 38, United States Code, with respect to the Montgomery GI bill, and for other purposes;

H.J. Res. 392. Joint resolution designating October 1989 as "Italian-American Heritage and Culture Month"; and

H.J. Res. 401. Joint resolution to designate the month of October 1989 as "Country Music Month".

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

At 8:39 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Ms. Goetz, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker has signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution:

H.R. 2358. An act to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1990 for the Civic Achievement Award Program in Honor of the Office of Speaker of the House of Representatives, and for other purposes; and

S.J. Res. 122. Joint resolution to designate October 1989 and 1990 as "National Down Syndrome Month".

MEASURES REFERRED

The following bills and joint resolutions were read the first and second times by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

H.R. 1358. An act to amend title 38, United States Code, with respect to the Montgomery GI bill, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

H.J. Res. 401, Joint resolution to designate the month of October 1989 as "Country Music Month"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MEASURES PLACED ON THE CALENDAR

The following bill was read the first and second times by unanimous consent, and placed on the calendar:

H.R. 1335. An act to amend title 38, United States Code, to increase the rates of disability compensation and dependency and indemnity compensation for veterans with service-connected disabilities and survivors of such veterans, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE AND OTHER COMMUNICATIONS

The following communications were laid before the Senate, together with accompanying papers, reports, and documents, which were referred as indicated:

EC1738. A communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual Horse Protection Enforcement Report; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

EC-1739. A communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture, under certain conditions, to release the public purpose reversionary clause contained in deeds for land conveyances made under the provisions of the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

EC-1740. A communication from the General Counsel of the Department of the Treasury, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation entitled "The Government Losses in Shipment Act Amendments of 1989"; to the Committee on Appropriations.

EC-1741. A communication from the Chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, transmitting, pursuant to law, the FDIC's annual report for the calendar year 1988; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

EC-1742. A communication from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report entitled "The U.S. Automobile Industry, 1986-1987"; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

A communication from the Deputy Associate Director for Collection and Disbursements, Minerals Management Service, Department of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on the refund of certain overpayments of offshore lease revenues; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

EC-1748. A communication from the Deputy Associate Director for Collection and Disbursements, Minerals Management Service, Department of the Interior transmitting pursuant to law a report on the refund of certain overpayments of offshore lease revenues; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

EC-1749. A communication from the Secretary of Energy transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual report on the progress by state authorities and non-regulated utilities in complying with the Public Utility Regulatory Policies Act of 1978; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

EC-1750. A communication from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on the independent certified public accountants' audit of the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Liability Fund's financial statements; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

EC-1751. A communication from the Deputy Associate Director for Collection and Disbursements, Minerals Management Service, Department of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on the refund of certain overpayments of offshore lease revenues; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

EC-1752. A communication from the Chairman of the Culture Property Advisory Committee, U.S. Information Agency, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of findings and recommendations as to how the U.S. Government should respond to a request from the Government of Peru regarding import restrictions; to the Committee on Finance.

EC-1753. A communication from the Chairman of the United States International trade Commission, transmitting, pursuant to law, the fourth annual report on the impact of the Carribean Basin Economic Recovery Act on U.S. industries and consumers; to the Committee on Finance.

EC-1754. A communication from the Auditor of the District of Columbia, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report entitled "Review of Payments Payment Standards and Internal Controls of the Tenant Assistant Program"; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

EC-1755. A communication from Executive Director of the National Mediation Board, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report of the Board under the Government in the Sunshine Act for the period of January 1, 1988 through December 31, 1988; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

EC-1756. A communication from the Auditor of the District of Columbia, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report entitled "D.C. Auditors's Evaluation of the Tenant Assistance Program Administration and Operations"; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

EC-1757. A communication from the Secretary of Transportation, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on the valuation of the United States Coast Guard Military Retirement System; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

EC-1758. A communication from the Director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to implement the President's 1989 National Drug Control Strategy, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EC-1759. A communication from the Chairman of the Interagency Council on the Homeless, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Assistance Act; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

EC-1760. A communication from the Secretary of Labor, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend the Steward B. McKinney Homeless Assistance Act to make a technical change; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

EC-1761. A communication from the President and Chief Executive Officer of the College Construction Loan Insurance Association, transmitting, pursuant to law, the first annual report on the operations of the Association; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following executive reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. JOHNSTON, from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources:

John M. Sayre, of Colorado, to be an Assistant Secretary of the Interior;

Dennis B. Underwood, of California, to be Commissioner of Reclamation;

David Courtland O'Neal, of Illinois, to be an Assistant Secretary of the Interior; and Curtis Virgil McVee, of Alaska, to be Federal Cochairman of the Alaska Land Use Council.

(The above nominations were reported with the recommendation that they be confirmed, subject to the nominees' commitment to respond to requests to appear and testify before any duly constituted committee of the Senate.)

By Mr. RIEGLE, from the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs:

John T. Martino, of Pennsylvania, to be Superintendent of the Mint of the United States at Philadelphia;

Barbara E. McTurk, of Colorado, to be Superintendent of the Mint of the United States at Denver; and

Richard C. Breeden, of Virginia, to be a Member of the Securities and Exchange Commission for the term expiring June 5, 1993.

(The above nominations were reported with the recommendation that they be confirmed, subject to the nominees' commitment to respond to requests to appear and testify before any duly constituted committee of the Senate.)

By Mr. KENNEDY, from the Committee on Labor and Human Resources:

David George Ball, of Connecticut, to be an Assistant Secretary of Labor;

Gerard F. Scennell, of New Jersey, to be an Assistant Secretary of Labor;

William James Tattersall, of Pennsylvania, to be Assistant Secretary of Labor for Mine Safety and Health;

Jerry M. Hunter, of Missouri, to be General Counsel of the National Labor Relations Board for a term of four years;

Clifford R. Oviatt, Jr., of Virginia, to be a member of the National Labor Relations Board for the remainder of the term expiring August 27, 1993;

Donald F. Rogers, of Maryland, to be a member of the National Labor Relations Board for the remainder of the term expiring December 16, 1992;

Dennis M. Devaney, of Maryland, to be a member of the National Labor Relations Board for the remainder of the term expiring December 16, 1989;

Dennis M. Devaney, of Maryland, to be a member of the National Labor Relations Board for the term of five years expiring December 16, 1994;

Jane A. Kenny, of Virginia, to be Director of the ACTION Agency;

Daphne Wood Murray, of Texas, to be Director of the Institute of Museum Services;

Leonard L. Haynes, III, of Louisiana, to be Assistant Secretary for Postsecondary Education, Department of Education;

Christopher T. Cross, of Maryland, to be Assistant Secretary for Educational Research and Improvement, Department of Education; and Thomas E. Collins, III, of Mississippi, to be Assistant Secretary of Labor for Veterans Employment and Training.

(The above nominations were reported with the recommendation that they be confirmed, subject to the nominees' commitment to respond to requests to appear and testify before any duly constituted committee of the Senate.)

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The following bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. GRAHAM (for himself and Mr. GORE):

S. 1723. A bill to provide that the exception from the hospital insurance tax for service performed by an election official or election worker shall apply where renumeration for such service is less than $600 in a calendar year; to the Committee on Finance.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. GRAHAM (for himself and Mr. GORE):

S. 1723. A bill to provide that the exception from the hospital insurance tax for service performed by an election official or election worker shall apply where renumeration for such service is less than $600 in a calendar year; to the Committee on Finance.

EXEMPTION FROM HEALTH INSURANCE TAX FOR CERTAIN ELECTION WORKERS

● Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, one of the most effective means of access to our governmental decisionmaking system is the election process. If there are strains placed on this system and access is limited, then efforts must be made to eliminate them. That is why I have introduced legislation to exempt election officials and poll workers earning less than $600 per year from the hospital insurance tax.

The collection of the hospital insurance tax places an unreasonable burden on election supervisors whose key responsibility is ensuring each citizen access to our decisionmaking process. In my State, as many as 35,000 citizens assist at poll sites on each election day. It is common for districts to have more than two elections and in some areas to have up to six.

For some districts, it will mean the processing of an additional 1,000 W-2 forms each year for what often amounts to less than a $5 contribution to Medicare from each employee. Some supervisors are considering reducing the number of election workers to ease the burden of processing additional forms and, consequently, risking the smooth operation of election day activities.

This administrative task exacerbates an already difficult situation created by the limited budget allowed election supervisors. Because of their modest budgets, supervisors must rely on community members to work at polls for a small stipend. This stipend can exceed $540 if the poll worker works as many as six elections in a calendar year. Under current tax laws, the poll worker and supervisor must pay a 1.45-percent hospital insurance tax on all earnings of $100, therefore, creating a financial as well as administrative burden.

Florida's election supervisors have been administering the collection of these taxes and have consequently redirected funds and energy from their primary responsibility of ensuring each citizen's right and opportunity to vote. It is my hope that this legislation will alleviate the burdens placed on election supervisors and on the election process.

The estimated revenue loss for this exemption is insignificant. The increased cost to election offices and the strain placed on the election process is not.

Mr. President, I am pleased to be joined by my colleague, Senator GORE, in introducing this bill.●

By Mr. DOMENICI (for himself and Mr. BINGAMAN):

S. 1725. A bill to establish a commission in the Department of the Interior to provide compensation to individuals who lost their land or mining claims to the U.S. Government for the establishment of the White Sands Missile Range; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

WHITE SANDS FAIR COMPENSATION ACT

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation to remedy a wrong committed by our Government over 47 years ago. Since White Sands Missile Range was created in the early days of World War II, the Federal Government has consistently refused to provide adequate compensation to the loyal Americans whose land was taken from them to form the missile range.

The act that I am introducing today, the White Sands Fair Compensation Act, will provide the ranchers and miners who were displaced from their land when White Sands Missile Range was created with the compensation to which they are entitled.

At the outbreak of World War II, President Franklin Roosevelt issued an Executive order that temporarily withdrew all public lands in the area that was to become White Sands Missile Range from the operation of the public land and mining laws and reserved the land for use by the War Department as a bombing range. The lands were to be returned to the Department of the Interior when they were no longer needed as a bombing range.

Within the withdrawn area were a number of ranches. The Government acquired these properties either by entering into voluntary lease agreements with the ranch owners or by condemnation. As compensation for the use of these lands, the ranchers received annual payments that took into account the grazing lands associated with each ranch, as is normal when determining the value of ranches.

Although the Government's original intention was to retain possession of the ranches only for the duration of the war, after the war the military determined that it had a continuing need for the missile range. It continued to lease the ranches until 1975, when it condemned the ranches in fee.

The compensation awarded to the ranchers after the 1975 condemnations failed to pay the ranchers for the full value of their ranches, as the compensation was determined according to a formula that specifically excluded taking into account the grazing lands associated with the ranches. Thus, the ranches were valued as if the grazing lands that were part of the ranches did not exist, contrary to the normal procedure for appraising the value of ranches.

Since that time, the ranchers have sought unsuccessfully to obtain fair compensation for the full value of their ranches through the courts. Their only recourse for compensation now is the U.S. Congress.

The Congress, as a matter of simple justice, should provide this compensation.

The White Sands ranchers were denied their constitutional rights to just compensation when the Government refused to compensate them for the full value of their ranches, including associated grazing lands, when the Government acquired their ranches in fee.

Similarly, a number of individuals who had mining claims on White Sands Missile Range argue that they were not adequately compensated when the Government condemned their mining claims in 1975.

The White Sands Fair Compensation Act will remedy this sad situations by providing ranchers and miners with the compensation to which they are entitled.

Specifically, the act would provide an administrative mechanism for the expeditious payment of compensation to ranchers and miners and their heirs who have not been fully compensated for the ranches and mining claims that the United States took to create White Sands Missile Range.

The act will establish a 7-member White Sands Fair Compensation Commission appointed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The Commission will evaluate the claims of White Sands ranchers and miners or their heirs who seek compensation for their ranches and mining claims and make payments to those individuals that the Commission finds have not been fully compensated for their ranches or mining claims.

In evaluating claims, the Commission will determine the value of the ranches or mining claims taken in 1975 on the basis of established precedents for the valuation of comparable ranches or mining claims in the State of New Mexico. The payments to the ranchers and miners shall be equal to the difference between the payment that they received in 1975 and the payment they would have received had the ranch or mining claim been valued in this manner.

If a claimant disputes the finding of the Commission, he may appeal the Commission's ruling to the Secretary of the Interior, whose decision shall be final.

The act authorizes up to $17.5 million for the payment of these claims, as that is the amount of the outstanding claims.

There is precedent for this legislation in the Aleutian and Pribilof Islands Restitution Act, title II of Public Law 100-383. That act recognized that residents of the Aleutian Islands had not been adequately compensated for losses caused by American military occupation of the islands in World War II. Congress acknowledged that the Aleutian Islanders had no remedy except an act of Congress providing appropriate compensation and proceeded to provide that compensation.

Mr. President, the White Sands ranchers and miners made great sacrifices for our Nation. They gave up their lands, their homes, and their livelihoods to help our country win World War II. The war ended 44 years ago, but the destruction and disruption to the lives of these patriotic men and women has yet to end. Justice delayed is justice denied. The White Sands ranchers and miners have waited too long for their Government to pay them what they deserve. Let us not delay any longer. Let us provide these men and women with the compensation to which they are entitled, and let us do it quickly.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to discuss legislation introduced today by my colleague from New Mexico, Senator DOMENICI, regarding compensation to individuals who lost their land or mining claims to the U.S. Government for the establishment of the White Sands Missile Range.

I strongly support creating a mechanism to properly evaluate the claims of these individuals and to provide appropriate compensation. The United States established the White Sands Missile Range during World War II, temporarily displacing ranchers and miners working on land in the area and then, in 1975, permanently taking the land. These individuals have not yet been fully compensated by the Government for their loss of land.

The legislation establishes within the Department of the Interior a Commission to evaluate the claims submitted by landowners relating to their property, and to authorize payments to these landowners determined by the Commission to deserve compensation.

I strongly support an effective mechanism to resolve this longstanding issue and I think the legislation today provides such a mechanism.

However, I do not support prejudging the decision of the Commission by authorizing in this bill a specific level of appropriations. I would prefer to first see what determination the Commission makes with respect to the compensation issue. At that time, we would know the amount of compensation required. I don't think it is good public policy to assume a particular level of compensation before the Commission considers the individual claims.

I look forward to working with my colleague to resolve this issue.

By Mr. MCCAIN (for himself, Mr. GRAMM, Mr. BOSCHWITZ, Mr. COATS, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. HELMS, Mrs. KASSEBAUM, Mr. MCCLURE, Mr. PRESSLER, Mr. SIMON, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. WARNER, Mr. WILSON, Mr. GORTON, Mr. GARN, Mr. HATCH, Mr. LOTT, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. MACK, Mr. MCCONNELL, Mr. MURKOWSKI, Mr. NICKLES, Mr. BOND, Mr. BURNS, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. GRASSLEY, Mr. RUDMAN, Mr. SYMMS, Mr. WALLOP, Mr. LUGAR, Mr. SPECTER, and Mr. STEVENS):

NOTICES OF HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE, NUTRITION, AND FORESTRY

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I wish to announce that the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry will hold a hearing on fish inspection: pending legislation. The hearing will be held on October 24, 1989, at 2:30 in 332 Senate Russell Office Building.

For further information, please contact Bob Young, chief economist, of the committee staff at 224-5207.

Mr. President, Mr. JOHNSTON and I would like to announce for the public that a joint hearing has been scheduled before the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry and the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

The hearing will take place in Washington, DC, on October 25, 1989, beginning at 2 p.m. The exact location of the hearing will be announced in the near future.

The purpose of the hearing is to receive testimony on issues relating to the national forest planning process as provided in the National Forest Management Act of 1976.

Because of the limited time available for the hearing, witnesses may testify by invitation only. However, anyone wishing to submit written testimony to be included in the hearing record is welcome to do so. Those wishing to submit testimony should send two copies to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry, or the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC, 20510.

For further information regarding the hearing, please contact Tom Tuchmann of the Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry Committee staff at (202) 224-2035, or Beth Norcross of the Energy and Natural Resources Committee staff at (202) 224-7933.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

TRADE WITH THE SOVIET UNION

● Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, United States-Soviet relations have entered a new era. Over a period of only months, United States-Soviet relations have gone from being dominated by the arms race to being dominated by a peace race. President Bush and General Secretary Gorbachev have been practicing one-upmanship in conventional and nuclear arms control arena with offering larger concessions.

If this trend is sustained, it will profoundly change the world we live in. Already, it has changed the way we look at the Soviet Union.

There are other changes afoot as well. Just a few years ago, military and diplomatic concerns dominated our relationship with the rest of the world—allies and adversaries alike. But a shift is underway. Economic concerns are rising on our agenda.

Now we spend nearly as much time talking with our allies about trade concerns as we spend talking about military and diplomatic issues. But this transformation has been much slower coming with regard to the Soviet Union and the East bloc.

With the Soviet Union, military and geopolitical disputes have so dominated the agenda that trade and economic issues were seldom if ever raised. But with the military threat seemingly receding, it is time to take a new look at the potential trade and economic relationship between the United States and the Soviet Union.

THE JACKSON-VANIK PROVISION

On May 12, President Bush signaled that he was willing to work with Congress to grant a waiver of the Jackson-Vanik provision for the Soviet Union—opening the door for an expanded trade relationship between the Soviet Union and the United States.

The Jackson-Vanik provision links the issue of emigration from the Soviet Union to favorable tariff treatment and access to credit. Essentially, Jackson-Vanik prohibits granting most-favored-nation tariff treatment or extending Government loans to the Soviet Union until it liberalizes its emigration policy.

The President may waive Jackson-Vanik for the Soviet Union or the other countries affected by the provision by certifying to Congress that the Nation has liberalized its emigration policy. Congress can then disapprove the President's waiver with a concurrent resolution or allow it to go into effect.

The Soviet Union has been liberalizing its emigration policy. The statistics tell the tale. In 1973 at the peak of détente, the Soviet Union allowed almost 35,000 Jewish emigres to leave. In the years after passage of the Jackson-Vanik provision, Jewish emigration declined to a low of just over 13,000 in 1975. In the late 1970's, Jewish emigration increased sharply. In 1979, more than 51,000 Jewish emigres left the Soviet Union.

But the United States failed to respond and superpower relations deteriorated in the wake of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. The flow of emigres dwindled. At the low point between 1984 and 1986, only about 1,000

Jewish emigres were allowed to leave each year.

But Soviet emigration levels have climbed sharply. In 1989, a record number of emigres may be allowed to leave the Soviet Union. Already more than 100,000 refugees—Jews, Armenians, Germans, and Evangelicals—have left the Soviet Union. By the end of the year, a total of 150,000 may be allowed to leave and next year the total may climb to 250,000.

The Soviet Union is now drafting permanent changes in its immigration laws. As the Washington Post has reported, the flow of Soviet emigres is already straining the capacity of the United States to absorb them.

Debate on waiving the Jackson-Vanik provision has already begun within and among emigre advocacy groups. One major group supports an immediate waiver for the Soviet Union. Others, such as the National Conference on Soviet Jewry, have noted that important problems remain to be resolved.

Certainly, the ball is still in the Soviet's court. The Soviet Union must come through on its promises to reform emigration practices and address some of the longstanding emigration cases. The United States must not back away from its commitment to Soviet emigres.

But it is time for the President and the Congress to begin working directly with Soviet officials to establish clear and detailed criteria for an acceptable Soviet immigration policy.

The best way to cement the progress we have made and ensure further progress is to establish economic ties with Moscow—ties that give the Soviets a tangible reason to proceed with glasnost and continue to liberalize its emigration policy.

ECONOMIC IMPLICATIONS OF TRADE WITH THE SOVIET UNION

In the short term, the trade implications of a Jackson-Vanik waiver may be limited. The Soviet Union and the United States have never been significant trading partners. Neither has ever accounted for more than 1 percent of the other's total trade.

In 1988, United States-Soviet trade totalled only about $3.3 billion up from $2 billion in 1987. Interestingly, the Soviet Union is one of the few nations with which the United States runs a trade surplus. In 1988, the United States exported about $2.7 billion in goods—mostly agricultural products—to the Soviet Union. The Soviet Union exported only about $650 million to the United States.

Jackson-Vanik has been part of the reason for low trade flow, but there have been other reasons—the shortage of hard currency in the Soviet Union, United States export restrictions, and the lack of competitive Soviet exports.

Even if the Soviet Union was granted lower most-favored-nation tariff rates and access to United States credit, there would be no surge in Soviet exports to the United States. Soviet sources have estimated that exports to the United States might increase by only about $30 million in the first year if Jackson-Vanik were waived.

But the Soviets would certainly be able to export a few products to the West. And the opening of western markets would encourage the Soviet Union to develop some competitive export industries. These export industries could help the Soviet Union earn some hard currency and, in turn, import products from the West to satisfy Soviet consumers.

The Soviet Union is badly in need of everything from food processing technology to medical devices. We can be almost certain that the dollars the Soviets earn exporting to the United States would rapidly be used to purchase United States exports. Eventually, a strong trade relationship could be established between the United States and the Soviet Union. United States-Soviet economic ties are already blossoming in two areas: United States agricultural exports and corporate joint ventures.

U.S. AGRICULTURAL EXPORTS

The Soviet Union has long been an excellent customer for United States agricultural exports. The agricultural trade relationship was temporarily disrupted by the grain embargo, but it has recovered.

The United States is once again a major source of Soviet agricultural imports. Last year, the Soviet Union was the largest overseas market for United States wheat—importing more than three times as much as the No. 2 customer. In total, the Soviet Union imported about $2 billion worth of United States agricultural exports in 1988. Soviet representatives have made it clear that they view Jackson-Vanik as a major political barrier to further increases in United States agricultural exporters.

Most major grain exporting companies and major agricultural groups advocate repealing or waiving the Jackson-Vanik provision because it dampens Soviet demand for United States agricultural exports. If Secretary Gorbachev continues on his course toward glasnost and perestroika, Soviet agricultural imports are likely to increase.

As a recent White House study noted: "There are very real possibilities of expanding trade with the Soviet Union. Opportunities exist in many areas, but agriculture, food, and related industries hold particular promise." Thus, waiving the Jackson-Vanik provision would help the United States build upon its already strong foothold in a major growth market for U.S. agricultural exports.

The administration just announced that it plans to begin negotiation on another long-term agricultural trade agreement with the Soviet Union. Perhaps linking possible negotiations to extend MFN status to the Soviet Union with the long-term grain agreement is the best way to ensure that the agricultural trade between the superpowers expands in coming years.

JOINT VENTURES

The United States business community has been much quicker to respond to changes in the Soviet Union than the United States Government. A number of United States businesses, including Honeywell, McDonald's, and Combustion Engineering, have already opened successful joint ventures in the Soviet Union.

These joint ventures are the beachheads that the U.S. business community can use to get access to a $2.4 trillion annual market of 286 million people. They open the door to United States exports to the Soviet Union and build a long-term United States commercial presence in the Soviet Union.

Unfortunately, the United States will face stiff competition in the Soviet market. Japan and Europe have also been working to build ties in the Soviet market. In fact, both have a larger presence in the Soviet Union than the United States.

United States firms have about $23 million invested in Soviet joint ventures. But Japan now has $30 million invested in the Soviet Union, West Germany has $64 million, Italy has $62 million, and France has $43 million.

As is the case with agricultural exports, the United States business community believes that waiving the Jackson-Vanik provision would significantly improve the atmosphere for developing further joint ventures and help it meet the Japanese and European competition head on. A Jackson-Vanik waiver could also have direct benefits to joint ventures by opening U.S. credit programs to joint ventures.

WAIVING JACKSON-VANIK

Some have said that we should be cautious. We should not waive Jackson-Vanik until we are sure that changes in the Soviet Union are permanent. They point to China and note that we can never be sure if changes in the Communist world will last. Even if refugees are being allowed to leave the Soviet Union now there may be a crackdown at some future date.

The lesson of China is well taken. But it is worth noting that the United States already extends MFN tariff treatment to China, Iran, Syria, Iraq, and a number of other nations known to violate human rights, support terrorism, or engage in other abhorrent behavior. Does it really make sense to treat the Soviet Union less favorably than China, Iran, Syria, and Iraq—especially in light of the progress made in the Soviet Union? If the emigration policy of the Soviet Union continues to improve, it surely does not. Further, economic ties with the Soviet Union encourages the Kremlin not to resort to a crackdown.

It is a way of encouraging the Soviet Union to continue to liberalize emigration, improve respect for human rights, move toward democracy, and improve ties to the west. And, if worse comes to worse, and the Soviet Union does slide back toward repression and totalitarianism, the waiver can always be terminated leaving us no worse off than we are now.

But if we don't act, we could miss a truly historic opportunity to promote emigration and human rights while opening a tremendous new market for U.S. farmers and businessmen.

Some are fond of saying that we should not be paying for perestroika. That may be true. But nor should we continue a policy of economic sanctions against the Soviet Union. A two way trade relationship is in both countries best interest.

The President has already said he is ready to work with the Congress, the business community, emigre advocacy groups, and the Soviet Union to fashion an acceptable waiver of the Jackson-Vanik provision. Its time for us all to roll up our sleeves and get down to work.●

DAVE DRAVECKY, SAN FRANCISCO GIANTS PITCHER

● Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I rise today to honor one of our Nation's most inspirational sporting figures. This summer, I joined millions of Americans in following the miraculous comeback story of San Francisco Giants pitcher Dave Dravecky.

Thirteen months ago, Dave and his wife Janice, went to the Cleveland Clinic to have tests completed on a lump in his pitching arm. Dave thought initially that the lump was probably a buildup of scar tissue, but his doctors informed him that a cancerous tumor had formed on his deltoid muscle. As he and his wife prayed in the clinic, they realized they were no longer dealing with an end to just his baseball career, but to his life as well.

After further tests, the doctors determined that half of his deltoid muscle would need to be removed. During the 8-hour surgery, his doctors had to freeze the bone near the deltoid muscle to remove the tumor. After the surgery, the doctors told Dave that he had almost no chance to pitch again, and would be lucky if he could even play catch with his children, Tiffany and Jonathon.

But Dave did not quit. Dave knew that if it was God's will, he would pitch again.

Slowly, Dave progressed. Last January, he was able to toss a football. In March, he picked up a baseball for the first time since the surgery. By June, he was able to pitch batting practice to his teammates. Finally, after pitching three games in the minor leagues, the Giants told him to pack his bags for his return to the major leagues.

On August 10, Dave made his triumphant return. I am sure I was not the only one who was touched by the sight of Dave taking the mount against the Cincinnati Reds. And after 8 strong innings, giving up only 4 hits and 3 runs, Dave left the game to a standing ovation.

Then, during one of his windups in his second start, Dave went down as if he had been shot. In fact, Dave would say later that it felt as though his arm had come off. The freezing process used in the surgery to remove the cancerous tumor had weakened the bone so much that the stress from his throwing motion broke his arm.

During his comeback, we all were inspired not only by his pitching effort, but also by his relationship with a 6-year old luekemia patient, Alex Vlahos. Using the press exposure from his story, Dave was able to share Alex's story with the entire country, and help him in his attempt to find a suitable bone marrow donor. Along with a local radio station, Dave has also raised $100,000 for Alex's operation.

Dave's story has also given other cancer patients the hope and will needed to fight this deadly disease. Through his miraculous comeback, Dave has shown that the fight against cancer can be won.

Will Dave be back again next season? The doctors believe not only that his arm will heal, but that it actually will be stronger than prior to its fracture in August. I have every confidence that No. 43 will return next season to the delight of the Giants organization, millions of endearing fans, and all those who suffer from cancer across our Nation, who must find his recovery an inspiration to their own.●

FORTY YEARS OF COLD WAR

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, recently, the novelist, John le Carré, spoke to a New York Times luncheon, and his remarks were printed on the editorial page of the New York Times.

He basically calls for a much more realistic asessment of where we are vis-a-vis the Soviets and that we ought to be working with them to make sure Stalinism doesn't return and that all of us can achieve our dreams.

His remarks make eminent good sense, and I urge my colleagues who may not have seen the article, to read what he has to say.

At this point, I ask that his remarks be printed in the RECORD.

The remarks follow:

WHY I CAME IN FROM THE COLD

In "The Russia House," his newest novel, John le Carré introduced glasnost into espionage. On Sept. 17, while Washington wrestled with the problem of responding to the Gorbachev upheaval, he examined U.S.-Soviet relations at a New York Times luncheon. His speech is excerpted here.

That day, George J. Mitchell, the Senate majority leader, accused the Administration of feeling "almost nostalgic about the cold war." He was responding to a speech by Deputy Secretary of the State Lawrence S. Eagleburger, who said, "For all its risks and uncertainties, the cold war was characterized by a remarkably stable and predictable set of relations among the great powers."

(By John le Carré)

It is in America that my good luck and reputation have been made. So if I seem to address myself to that tiny and no doubt unhappy band of social misfits who did not welcome "The Russia House" as a pearl of modern literature, do not think I am here to peck away at sour reviews, but rather to respond to a general point—call it political, philosophical.

In "The Russia House," the voyage to America has been, in my experience, unique. The unhappy readers choke on what they discern as the book's political message. The word "naive" looms large. They are angry with me for taking away their cold war toys. "For 30 years," they seem to be saying, "this guy has been selling us honest-to-God political despair. Now he turns round and gives us hope. Who does he think he is?"

"The book," warns one distinguished reviewer, "has an ideological slant not every reader will agree with." Another gave the devil its name: "le Carré willingness to accept at face value the premise that the millenium is at hand is, at least, credulous." A third, alluding to kind words the book had attracted in the Soviet Union wrote: "Why should Americans care whether Russians like this book or not?"

Which, when you pause a moment, is a pretty startling thing to ask. Why shouldn't Americans throw their hats in the air at the thought that Russians are allowed to read this, or any other contentious Western novel, and that when they do they get a buzz from it?

But no, it seems we are not to be pleased by the notion that Russians should be enjoying the same book as ourselves. Books aren't meant to join nations, apparently—spy books least of all. They should remain this side of the Wall. Spy books should celebrate our incompatibility, specialness, insularity, superiority. Anything else—that's just treating with the enemy.

And if that sounds more like a Soviet attitude than an American one, I can't help wondering whether the 40 years of cold war have bred a silent affinity between the forces of intolerance on both sides.

Who is the enemy now? And who are we, the Western alliance, and who is America, if we can no longer unite against the Great Satan of Communism? And who is the Soviet Union aligned against, if aligned at all? "Why, against America!" say the tough guys. "Forget the cosmetics. They're still out there. Even if Gorby is on the side of the angels, what about those hardliners, those Stalinists waiting to step into his boots? Give 'em a coupla years, glasnost will be as dead as the Charleston."

But their argument runs deeper. And darker: "Even if we could help the Soviet Union with its reforms, why do it? Why should we, in the very hour where our adversary of 40 years is reaping the whirlwind for his wicked ways—why should the alliance and United States, who have sweated blood and money to bring him to this pass—lift a finger to help him up? So the Soviets are fragmenting? Let them fragment! Took us 40 years to get them there!"

The tough guys are not impressed that the Soviets have made concessions in arms reduction which a few years back would have been dismissed as Utopian wish-dreams. Or that a Soviet leader is conducting a hair-raising and perhaps impossible crusade to implement reforms we have been urging upon his predecessors for decades: "He's still a Communist. He's still a Russian," they say. They add that it falls to us and not to our defeated enemies to decide when the war is over.

As if we knew.

So they are content, even merry, these tough guys, to watch the Soviet Union sink and perhaps drown in the mire of its misdeeds, on the good old principle that the worse things are for them, the better they must be for us. They say, "It's all a sham: Beneath the cunning Russians smile, the old order scowls away. And besides," they say, "Gorbachev will never make it."

Are they right? Or is it possible that after 40 years of being locked into the ice of the cold war, some of us in the West have lost the will, even the energy, to climb out and face a more hopeful future? That after believing so long we could improve nothing inside the Evil Empire, we have to pinch ourselves before we can accept that we really can write tomorrow's script, and help to make it play?

But even supposing we can get what we want, what do we want?

Do we want an independent Azerbaijan—with the probability of an Armenian massacre? If Russia disintegrates, that's not an idle fantasy.

Do we want a rise of Islamic extremism in the Soviet Asian states—to the reviving trumpet sounds of traditional anti-Semitism in Poland and European Russia?

Do we want a return to Stalinist levels of arms production? Not only the Soviet people would be enslaved, we, too, would be locked back inside the iron walls of an ever-mounting military budget and the ever-mounting risk of war.

Do we want the reimprisonment of writers, painters, musicians, dissidents, refuseniks and Jews?—the renewed suppression of free speech, free newspapers?—the restoration of the suffocating party apparatus?

Naïve I may be, though I doubt it. But I am not naïve enough to believe that the danger of such a backlash is over. The agressive passivity of the Soviet people, hardly woken from serfdom, could still make them accomplices in their own destruction. The new spirit of freedom will insure that the backlash, if it does come, will be ferocious, even by the dreadful standards of Soviet repression.

These things are on offer to us if we want them—or if, by apathy or neglect, we can think of nothing we want more.

Do we want to assist in the shaping of a Soviet market economy? Or is it more convenient to forecast its collapse and watch the prophesy fulfill itself?

Do we want to grab the chance to treat hard and effectively for a balanced arms reduction—and thereby allow the Soviet Union to divert its economic resources to peaceful purposes? Or do we want Russians to go on eating guns not butter into the 21st century, while their leaders cast round for foreign adventures to distract them from the domestic misery?

Have we now entered a new time, where we need the old divisions to justify our galloping materialism? If so, it is no wonder that half of Western Europe, and sections of America, look to Gorbachev for their dreams.

What are our Western dreams? Shall we go on dreaming about more refined ways to kill each other—or do we prefer to dream of a partnership of superpowers that could address itself to tomorrow's enemies rather than to yesterday's? Such enemies as drugs, terrorism, poverty, bush fire wars, the pollution of our air, sea, beaches, rivers, forests?

I do not believe the millennium is upon us. But I do believe we are witnessing an hour in history as momentous as 1917, and that we have yet fully to wake from the morbid confinement of cold war beligerence and seize the brave opportunities waiting on us—though for how long?

So no, not the millennium. Not yet. Just a unique moment in history—perhaps no longer than the blink of a star—when to be a realist it is necessary also to be an idealist, when the improbable is happening every day and the impossible every week, and where imagination and creativity, unleashed in time, may yet sweep us above the slough of hopelessness to which we have been condemned too long. That sounds like a pretty American sort of dream.●

WYCKOFF HEIGHTS HOSPITAL CENTENNIAL

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to a hospital which over the last 100 years has served the Brooklyn communities. This month, Wyckoff Heights Hospital is celebrating its centennial anniversary.

In 1899, Wyckoff Heights Hospital—then named German Hospital—opened its doors to serve the sick and maimed irrespective of creed, color, or nationality. During the last 100 years, the hospital has continued to serve its community through two world wars, Vietnam, and financial difficulties in New York City.

While serving Bushwick, Williamsburg, Greenpoint, and Ridgewood Queens communities, the hospital has also managed to expand and include new programs to its facilities. Among such programs, Wyckoff Heights Hospital became one of the lowest cost teaching hospitals in New York State. Furthermore, the hospital has instituted a community advisory board to keep the lines of communication open between the hospital and the communities it serves.

Mr. President, I offer Wyckoff Heights Hospital my congratulations and commend them on their 100 years of excellent service to the surrounding Brooklyn communities. I wish them continued success in another 100 years of operation.●

CRIMES OF HATE

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, as chief sponsor of the Hate Crime Statistics Act, I urge my colleagues to support my legislation to direct the FBI to keep statistics on so-called crimes of hate. I have written a column on the growing incidence of these detestable acts. I ask to have it reprinted in the RECORD.

The column follows:

CRIMES OF HATE

The other day I picked up a copy of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch and there were two prominent stories: One of a black couple passing through a largely white area, being suddenly pulled from their car and roughed up; and the other a story of a black family living in a white area facing a variety of forms of harassment.

My impression is that racism is on the rise. I am sponsoring a bill to direct the FBI to collect information on crimes of hate and violence against people because of the group to which they belong. I hope it can pass soon.

My instinct is that if we had such statistics today they would show a rise in such incidents, and not just against blacks.

Part of the reason is that our national leadership has too often failed to appeal to the noble in each of us. When there is no understanding between groups, that vacuum too often is filled by fear. And fear too easily leads to hatred and violence. One of the functions that political leaders—as well as other leaders—have, is to lead people down the path of understanding.

One factor in our problem is that we are increasingly separating ourselves as Americans on the basis of economics. If you are wealthy, you live in certain areas; if you are middle-income, you live in other areas; and if you are poor, you are increasingly isolated in certain parts of urban America.

And there is far too little communication between groups. The wealthy do not understand the problems of middle-income Americans, and the middle-income Americans do not understand the problems faced by the poor.

And while the majority of the poor are white, the percentages of blacks and Hispanics who fall into this category are high.

And since we are increasingly isolated from each other, it becomes easier and easier to ignore the problems of others, and even to fear and hate them.

Recently, Jack Valenti, head of the Motion Picture Association of America, spoke about President Lyndon Johnson's efforts to help the poor. He said the need to fight against poverty and prejudice has increased and that we are failing to win this fight.

And then he added, "The champion who will lead this charge [against poverty] must care, care so very much, so very deep in his gut, about the vacancy of hope and opportunity."

What he said about national leadership is true of all of us. We must care more.

When we repeat the pledge of allegiance of the flag, we talk about "one nation under God, indivisible."

That means we are one family.

And when anyone in that family hurts, ultimately we all hurt.

We have to learn to care about one another more and when we do, the twisted minds that want us to hate one another will find few takers.

A great America must be a tolerant and understanding America.●

REMOVING MARITIME TRANSPORTATION FROM GATT

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to consponsor Senate Concurrent Resolution 63, a resolution urging the administration to remove maritime transportation from General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade [GATT] services-in-trade negotiations.

A strong and vigorous maritime industry is central to America's industrial base. The absence of an ability to ship American goods overseas could make such shipments subject to the competitive whim of foreign nations. Clearly, any great nation must have a significant domestic shipping capability.

To allow GATT negotiations in this sector would likely undermine the health of this delicate industry. Allowing unfettered foreign intervention into the maritime industry would invite a further reduction in an American made, owned, operated, and serviced merchant fleet.

The maritime industry plays a central role in assuring America's national defense. In times of mobilization, an ability to ship men and materiel is essential. If we allow our maritime transportation capability to fade away, a palpable security crisis would loom on the horizon. Prudence demands, therefore, that we take adequate steps to avoid any further contraction of this industry.

During negotiation of the United States-Canada Free Trade Agreement the question of maritime services was raised. The administration at that time recognized the importance of not negotiating away in the name of free trade an integral element of our national defense and fundamental component of our industrial base. The wisdom of those arguments are no less compelling today.

I urge my colleagues, Mr. President, to join in this effort by cosponsoring this necessary resolution.●

BISHOP JOHN WALKER—A GOOD SHEPHERD

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, on Saturday afternoon, September 30, 1989, the Washington community and people of faith everywhere lost a good friend and a good shepherd. The Right Reverend John T. Walker, Bishop of the Washington diocese of the Episcopal Church, died of cardiac arrest in the Georgetown University Hospital following triple bypass heart surgery. We lost more than a leader in several reform movements in the Episcopal Church, a civil rights advocate in Washington, DC, since the 1960's, a strong voice against apartheid practices in South Africa, and a man who loved people—even those he disagreed with—the Nation has lost a man of reconciliation and a true shepherd of his flock.

I first met John Walker in the early 1980's while I was a Member of the other body. We were introduced by one of my former staff members, Bud Blakey, who knew the bishop through his membership in St. Stephen and the Incarnation Episcopal Church. The bishop loved St. Stephen's because it was always challenging the limits of its faith and challenging the Episcopal Church to fulfill its obligation to the poor, the hungry, and those in prison. Because I was then very interested in the whole issue of world hunger and especially starving and malnourished children in Africa, the bishop and I talked about that. I was struck by the sheer warmth of the man and his personal interest in his work, in world hunger efforts.

Bishop Walker has counseled many present and former Members of this body. Our former colleague, Charles McC. Mathias talked with the bishop frequently. My friend, the senior Senator from Oregon, knew John Walker well. I found John Walker's advice and counsel on the subject of South Africa to always be wise and just. He traveled to Africa frequently, on church business and as chairman of AFRICARE, and was one of the first persons arrested in the antiapartheid protests at the South African Embassay. He did not go alone. He led many Episcopalian parishioners from around the diocese to protest as well. Yet, his views on South Africa were not always popular. Although he fought valiantly against the racist system of apartheid, he opposed American companies withdrawing from South Africa. He supported efforts to get them to train black South Africans for the work and the roles they will inevitably inherit.

John Walker was first in a lot of things in his life. In addition to being the first black Episcopal bishop of the diocese of Washington, he was also the first black seminarian at Virginia Theological Seminary, and the first and only black faculty member at St. Paul's School in Concord, NH. Importantly, although he was first among black Americans in many of his endeavors, he was never the last. He always set the proper example, blazed a widened trail, and opened doors for blacks who would surely follow. He raised money to rebuild the Washington Cathedral, but he also raised money to eliminate human misery in Washington. More importantly, he encouraged his parishes to get involved in local programs to help people who really need help. The Samaritan Ministries of Greater Washington is one small example of the effectiveness of John Walker's diocesan ministry.

He never forgot his role as a black bishop in a predominantly white church. As the Washington Post recalled on Tuesday, in John Walker's own words "We must discover how we make racial minorities in a predominantly white church feel at home." Father Timothy S. Healy, former president of Georgetown University, summed John Walker's life up quite well the other day, when he wrote:

Over the years he became for me a living bridge across that gap in the city's life. On one hand he was the prelate who rules its great cathedral, moved with ease among its potentates, married their kids and buried their parents. On the other, he was a man who could walk in every area of the city and know its pain and fear. He could move from Northwest to Southeast without changing smile or rhythm. He was always the priest, always used the fact of his blackness to console and strengthen and bring together, as if both halves of our 10 square miles were bonded somehow in his own person.

Mr. President, we will miss this good shepherd. I ask that the October 2, 1989, Washington Post editorial and the October 3, 1989, Post article by Father Healy, "Remembering John Walker" be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The material follows:

BISHOP JOHN T. WALKER

Like most good priests, John T. Walker was out of tune with his times. As the Episcopal bishop of Washington, he placed himself firmly in a great tradition of reform, but it wasn't the style of reform that most of his generation adopted. He lived in a time when the fashion was to rely on confrontation, litigation, non-negotiable demands and public demonstration. A soft-spoken man, Bishop Walker preferred to appeal to charity and reason—in that order. But for 23 years, from his arrival here until his death on Saturday, he was a powerful and effective force for change in his church and in this city.

When he was ordained more than three decades ago, the Episcopal Church was largely segregated by race and social class, not officially or formally but as a reflection of the larger segregation of the society. Its membership tended to be securely upper middle class and descended, like the church itself, from English ancestry. A black priest was not unprecedented, but he was uncommon. Currently it's a very different church, with the lines of race and class blurred and the commitment to social concerns much more visible. A great many Episcopalians worked on that transformation, but none more productively than Bishop Walker.

Like most American blacks, he was seized by the outrages committed by a racist government in South Africa, and he was arrested in one of the early protests here at the South African Embassy. But it was characteristic of him that, instead of concentrating on forcing all American corporations out of South Africa, he called on them to begin training blacks there for the leadership they would one day win. That brought him much reproach. But he always regarded himself as the man in the middle—the mediator.

He was also in the middle of every serious question of conscience that gripped his church in those decades. He pushed consistently for a larger role for women, and especially women priests, although it once brought him into collision with his presiding bishop. He raised money efficiently for the completion of the Cathedral but also for the relief of the poverty and misery that lived not far from it. He pressed the principle that, as he once put it, "We must discover how we make racial minorities in a predominantly white church feel at home."

Washington Cathedral is the great symbol of the Episcopal Church's presence here, but the nature of that symbol has changed over the years. There was a time when a bypasser could have been forgiven for thinking that the Cathedral on its hill seemed to look down on the city with the disdain of accustomed wealth and social position. Today it sends a different message, one of concern for the city and an active involvement in its daily life. That change owes much to the remarkable man who was the bishop.

REMEMBERING JOHN WALKER

The death of Bishop John Walker brings sadness and a sense of loss. Both are personal, of course, but both are very much more. For me he was a friend, but also a major part of this city as I had come to know it. He touched my life, and Georgetown University, and in a great, many more ways, the life of the city itself.

I first met him on his own ground at the National Cathedral, where I was struck by his grace of movement. Despite the voluminous and heavy trappings of a bishop's regalia, he carried them rather than letting them encase him. Beneath the robes was a self-possessed gentleness. It's a rare gift, and having so very little of it myself, I can envy it in others. It argued to no weakness either of perception behind those quick-appraising eyes or of resolve: he could end a discussion with a determined smile that dropped the temperature notably.

His too the quicksilver of humor. Years ago we robed together at St. Paul's School in New Hampshire, where he, an alumnus, and I, a guest, shared a chapel ceremony marking the school's 125th anniversary. His robes were episcopal, mine academic. Both of us had a red, almost floor-length scapular, his from Canterbury, mine from Oxford. As I wriggled into mine and he recognized it, he took his miter, held it out to me and said, "Try this on for size; you've already got the rest of the outfit,." Much to the annoyance of the master of ceremonies, we both processed out chuckling.

He told me of his tough and lonely years at St. Paul's, where he was the only black student. But he also praised and cared for the school because of the training it gave his mind. He had a feel for schools, and seemed to understand by instinct the edgy balance of a university such as Georgetown, where, in John Courtney Murray's words, the church meets the world across an uneven and ever-shifting frontier. I told him of my fear that the university's belief in God and in His laboring presence in creation could become a distraction or, worse, a memory. His comment was typical: "God seems to weigh more in this century than in earlier ones."

During Georgetown's bicentennial I asked him to let us use the National Cathedral for an ecumenical "celebration of freedom." We talked it over, and both of us wanted not to vaunt but to render thanks for the 200 years of freedom that our fellow citizens had granted both our churches. At one point he laughed at the irony of the site and the celebrant; a cathedral of the one church that had to give up its colonial "establishment" and a university that by its very being in the 1870s was the first great test of the new republic's willingness to carry out its principles about religious neutrality, John Walker not only lent us the cathedral, but came himself and spoke from his heart that same commitment to respect and comity.

Most of the time we shared events and activities that had to do with the city itself, Georgetown's front yard and his diocese. The problems always seemed insoluble; homelessness, AIDS, drugs and the battle to protect and yet armor the young. He knew in his bones the irreducible gap between the cuckoo in Washington's nest—the federal establishment—and the real city. Both of us feared being locked in the cuckoo's half of the nest, with its banks and lawyers, lobbyists, think tanks and universities. He ached over how separate the intellectual and social life of the capital was from the lives and pains of the people who make it work, who in their poverty hold it all together with wiring and roads, with shops and stores, with service and humor and hard work.

Over the years he became for me a living bridge across that gap in the city's life. On one hand he was the prelate who ruled its great cathedral, moved with ease among its potentates, married their kids and buried their parents. On the other, he was a man who could walk in every part of the city and know its pain and fear. He could move from Northwest to Southeast without changing smile or rhythm. He was always the priest, always used the fact of his blackness to console and strengthen and bring together, as if both halves of our 10 square miles were bonded somehow in his own person.

That, of course, was his secret strength, one that tied him in friendship to Cardinal Hickey; his priesthood, it is so easy for prelacy in the 20th century to be what it was in the bad old days of the 16th: more princely (in preoccupation if not in style) than priestly. Both men, despite the fleshpots of the world's most powerful capital, never yielded to power's blandishments, never yearned after its rewards. John Walker knew the Apostle's hunger and thirst: "I am in labor until Christ be built up in you." His whole life and work in the city looked to that end and that end alone.

Now, just as the city prepares to celebrate its completion, he lies in state under the soaring cathedral he labored to finish. For all who knew him, the great arches will seem empty, haunted by a comfortable ghost who was in quiet and love the heart and life of the building itself, Cathedral and city are the poorer for his loss, but all of us are richer for the years we spent with him. "The Lord had given," and we have known a modest and good man. "The Lord has taken away" too soon, and left all of us with the hurt of his loss. John Walker would have been the first to join us in ending the ancient prayer, "Blessed be the name of the Lord,"●

FEDERAL FISH INSPECTION ACT, S. 1245

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to join my distinguished colleagues in cosponsoring the Federal Fish Inspection Act. This legislation will provide the certainty to ensure the wholesomeness and safety of fish and fish products.

There is widespread public concern over the health of our coastal waters, and rightly so. I remember last summer, in my home on Long Island, people were deathly afraid to eat the local fish. This had an adverse impact upon the local fishing industry as well as local seafood restaurants. Even now that Congress has passed a law ending ocean dumping of sludge, people are still very concerned about their seafood.

According to an analysis of recently released data from the Centers for Disease Control and the Department of Agriculture, From 1982 to 1986, seafood was 25 times more likely to cause an illness outbreak than beef and 16 times more likely than poultry.

In recent years, the American public has become very conscious about nutrition and the promotion of public health. Less red meat is being consumed and more people are turning to fish and fish products. This awareness is reflected by the fact that consumer per capita consumption of seafood increased over 20 percent in this decade.

I believe it is extremely important that an effective regulatory program is implemented so that our consumers are adequately protected.

As it stands, the Department of Agriculture currently conducts inspection programs for all meat products other than fish and has the technical expertise and work force capacity necessary to rapidly expand meat inspection programs to cover fish and fish products. It is obvious that the Government inspection programs currently in place do not provide the quality assurances demanded by the public. We need to enhance public confidence in the safety of fish and protect markets through a comprehensive inspection program specifically designed for fish. American consumers are concerned and we must make sure that the food on our supermarket shelves is safe and nutritious.

My home State, New York, is the largest seafood market in North America. In 1988, the Fulton Street Fish Market alone sold 91 million pounds of seafood with a commercial value of $250 to $300 million. We must remind ourselves that these figures are low due to the recent concerns about the safety of domestic seafood as a result of our coastal pollution. As we all remember, 1988 was the year public officials closed several beaches in the New York area after medical wastes or high bacteria levels were found in coastal waters. We monitor water quality for the benefit of swimmers. Shouldn't those consumers who eat fish be given the same assurances as to the quality of the food they eat?

The Federal Fish Inspection Act will provide the consumer with the confidence needed to continue to enjoy nutritious and healthy seafood. I urge my colleagues to act on this important legislation.●

A TRIBUTE TO JOHN LEMLY MORRISON

● Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, I would like to ask my colleagues to join with me in paying tribute not only to an exceptional Alabamian, but a great American as well. John Lemly Morrison of Greensboro, AL, is a compassionate and caring man, a good friend and a concerned citizen. Lem recently published his autobiography a book entitled, "Best in the Land: Lem Morrison Story."

Born on June 6, 1903, in the hills of Hale County, Lem has been a lifelong resident of Greensboro. Lem is the son of the late William and Henrietta Morrison. He married Beatrice Harrison in 1930, is the father of two children, Lemuel and John Lemly, Jr. His children are a tribute to their parents.

As a World War II combat veteran, Lem possessed a deep love for his country and a strong commitment to our Government. He served 2 years in the South Pacific and retired as a lieutenant colonel.

On August 26, 1983, Lem was awarded an honorary doctorate of science from Auburn University. He has had a tremendous impact on the programs of Auburn University, particularly 4-H and the Cooperative Extension Service. He has served as chairman of the Alabama 4-H Foundation since 1964.

In addition to his work as chairman of the board of the Dairy Fresh Corp., Lem's commitment to his community has extended in the realm of civic and charitable endeavors. He is a member of the Huntington College Advisory Committee, the board of directors of National Disabled Amateur Artists, the Goodfellows of Mobile College, and the First United Methodist Church of Greensboro.

John Lemly Morrison embodies the characteristics that identify the American spirit—faith, courage, and determination. It is my pleasure to serve as his Senator in Washington. I salute Lem as a man of great personal character.●

ARKANSAS ABLE, COWINNER OF THE 1989 NATIONAL ALLIANCE OF BUSINESS DISTINGUISHED PERFORMANCE AWARD FOR ADULT PROGRAM OF THE YEAR

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to an outstanding nonprofit organization which since 1982 has provided valuable employment training and placement services to older Arkansans. On October 2, Arkansas ABLE—Abilities Based on Long Experience—received a National Alliance of Business [NAB] Distinguished Performance Award for Adult Program of the Year.

As a cowinner of this award, along with Operation ABLE of Chicago and Operation ABLE of Greater Boston, Arkansas ABLE adds to the impressive list of honors and awards it has received over the years. These include the regional Department of Labor award for Outstanding Older Worker Program in 1986 and 1987, and one of the first 10 Job Training Partnership Act [JTPA] Presidential Awards ever given in 1988.

Mr. President, the list of accomplishments of this fine organization is impressive, and I would like to quote from the tribute to Arkansas ABLE contained in the NAB Distinguished Performance Awards program:

Since 1982, more than 4,866 older Arkansans have found jobs through the ABLE program. For the last two years, ABLE has exceeded its placement goal by an average of 82%, cutting participant and placement costs by over 40%. In 1987-88 alone, more than $3 million was added to Arkansas' economy through salaries earned by the older people put to work, exceeding by 450% ABLE's annual JTPA budget of $668,331.

Arkansas ABLE was the first non-profit in the country to administer statewide the 3% set-aside under JTPA, the first to establish a statewide toll-free number to provide resources to the older population and to businesses, and the first to conduct in-depth market research into the problem of minority recruitment through focus groups and telemarketing.

Arkansas ABLE presents Distinguished Senior Employee Awards every year. Eight seniors were honored in 1989, ranging in age from 58 to 81. The 81-year-old performs multiple jobs for women's apparel store, where she functions as a sales clerk, a hosiery and lingerie buyer, and a window decorator. In addition to her full-time job, she is active in her church and in several civic clubs.

She is an inspiring example of the success of Arkansas ABLE's mission "to strengthen and expand employment services for older job seekers, to promote public awareness of older workers and their value to employers, and to develop job opportunities for older persons in the public and private sectors."

In particular, I want to congratulate the executive director of Arkansas ABLE, Phyllis Haynes, and her staff for a well-deserved honor. More important than that, I want to thank them for their dedicated service to the people of Arkansas.

S. 543, a bill to amend the JTPA, will soon be considered by the Senate, and I understand that the bill drastically changes the nature of the title II older worker program. Department of Labor data shows that older workers are one of the fastest growing and most important segments of our country's work force. I strongly believe that in changing the 3-percent set-aside for older workers we cannot afford to lose the institutional knowledge of Arkansas ABLE and other programs which have been successful in serving older individuals for years, and I have been working with the sponsor of the bill, Senator SIMON, to ensure that older individuals will continue to be adequately served under the JTPA.

Mr. President, once again I want to congratulate Arkansans ABLE and express my confidence that older Arkansans will continue to receive the best employment services available in the country from this great organization.●

TRIBUTE TO WPDQ RADIO IN JACKSONVILLE AND MAYOR GULLIFORD OF ATLANTIC BEACH

● Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, today I rise to offer a tribute to WPDQ Radio in Jacksonville, FL, which was the lifeline for many South Carolina and Florida residents during the wrath of Hurricane Hugo.

I also commend Mayor William I. Gulliford of Atlantic Beach, who symbolizes the selfless dedication of many Americans to help others during this relief effort. Americans are a generous and compassionate people, and the actions of people like Mayor Gulliford and the broadcasters at WPDQ make us all proud.

From September 21 through September 26, WPDQ broadcast nonstop hurricane coverage to help listeners in the Carolinas and in Florida-Georgia. The station broadcast information about the well-being of friends and relatives in the Carolinas, providing timely information in the finest tradition of broadcast journalism.

I would like to recognize these individuals: Bruce Maduri, station manager; Jerry Smith, operations manager; Alan Sands, on-air personality; A.J. Davis, on-air personality; Larry Browdy, on-air personality; Jack Ingram, news director; Leroy Cumbie, traffic reporter; Rufus Hafer, weather reporter; Lee Pearce, news reporter; Sandra Simmons, receptionist; Cathy Salmon, secretary; Jeanine McGinn, office manager; Larry Stevens, program assistant; Debbie Perez, account executive; and Bob Cunningham, account executive.

I know my colleagues Senators HOLLINGS and THURMOND join me in thanking the many Floridians who have offered their time, their energy, their resources and their prayers to those in need in the Carolinas.●

A TRIBUTE TO REGGIE HAMNER

● Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, it is with great pleasure that I ask my colleagues in the Senate to join with me in paying tribute to a great Alabamian, Reggie Hamner of Montgomery, AL.

On April 8, 1989, Reggie took office as the president of the University of Alabama National Alumni Association. Reggie was elected to this post because he characterizes all of the qualities that presidents of the National Alumni Associations possess. Reggie has an extraordinary sense of loyalty to the University of Alabama, a willingness to devote time and energy to the highest office of the alumni association. His joy at being able to serve in such an important position on behalf of his alma mater is readily noticeable.

Reggie's connections with the University of Alabama began literally at birth. Reggie, a native of Northport, AL, was born at Druid City Hospital, located only a parking lot from the University of Alabama School of Law. His closeness to the university continued throughout his childhood, as a student at the University of Alabama and the University of Alabama School of Law.

As executive director of the Alabama Bar Association, Reggie now lives in Montgomery. A dedicated husband and father, Reggie married Anne Ellen Young on November 8, 1969. Their two children, Patrick and Chris, are a tribute to their wonderful parents. Patrick entered the University of Alabama this fall.

Reggie is known to us all as a compassionate and caring man, a good friend and a concerned citizen. In addition to his roles with the Alabama State Bar and the University of Alabama, Reggie is an active member of the First Baptist Church in Montgomery. The American Judicature Society, Alabama Council of Association Executives, and the Alabama Law Institute are just a few organizations that benefit from his participation.

Mr. President, I know I join Reggie's wife, Anne, his two children and their families in sharing their pride in Reggie's accomplishments at the University of Alabama. I am proud to serve as one of Reggie's Representatives in Washington and even prouder to call him my friend.●

CHESS

● Mr. KOHL. Mr. President, we are hard at work here trying to resolve a number of difficult problems: passing all the appropriation bills, avoiding a sequester, dealing with the changes in the Soviet system, responding to events in Poland—the list goes on. And because we are involved in those events, we may not have noticed that quietly, almost secretly, an important era in the history of mind may be coming to an end—an era in which man was the unchallenged master of the chessboard.

Now some might not think of this as significant. But they would be wrong. Chess, Mr. President, represents more than a game that challenges the intellect; it also represents a movement in human history away from physical warfare to symbolic combat. When the game of chess was invented in ancient Hindustan, conflict began to move from the battlefield to the chessboard. Great leaders came to be acclaimed for their ability to move knights rather than kill them; strategic geniuses were praised for their ability to make pawns of marble rather than men. Castles could be protected, knights could campaign recklessly, a queen's honor defended, an enemy's king deposed—all without the loss of life or the shedding of blood.

The game has a complexity that has challenged great minds for centuries. It has been said that there are more possible moves in a chess game than there are individual atoms in the entire universe. Yet now this greatest test of mental power has been challenged by the nonhuman intellect of the computer. It was once thought that no computer program could match the inituitive judgment of human masters. But the march of our own technical progress, at which we all marvel, is pushing us backward in the final moves of a tragic endgame.

According to the New York Times, researchers at Carnegie Mellon University have developed a computer chess program that has defeated several grandmasters. Mr. President, I ask that the article from last week's New York Times which describes this ominous turn of events appear in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

But Mr. President, there is still hope. Next month, this chess program will challenge world champion Gary Kasparov. Now I want the record to show that I approve of advancements in computer technology, but I still like the idea of humans defeating computers. I like even more the fact that in this battle for supremacy against the machine, it does not matter that Kasparov is a Soviet citizen; what matters is that he is a human being.

If we could adopt the same perspective when we react to other challenges which we as human beings face—the challenges of war, environmental destruction, poverty, and the rest—we might elevate the game of government beyond a simple struggle between Democrats and Republicans, First World and Third World, Communist and free. We might recognize the value of an individual human being in an increasingly complex world. We might begin to find a new strategy that would see us all working in concert to force our common enemies to resign.

Let us root for Kasparov, Mr. President. He is our mate.

The article follows:

CHESS-PLAYING COMPUTER CLOSING IN ON CHAMPIONS

(By Robert Byrne)

The time when a computer wrests the world chess championship from a human being may be approaching. Last Thanksgiving, Deep Thought, which won the world computer chess championship in May, defeated a grandmaster, Bent Larsen of Denmark, who is ranked 96th among all chess players in the world. And just recently, this same computer defeated another grandmaster—me.

Deep Thought, developed by researchers at Carnegie-Mellon University in Pittsburgh, beat Mr. Larsen in the Software Toolworks Open Tournament in Long Beach, Calif., a competition featuring several grandmasters. Though it lost its only other game with a grandmaster, Deep Thought went on to tie for first place in the event, the first time a computer had shared the top prize in a mixed field of humans and machines.

Deep Thought, combines enormous speed and computational power with sophisticated analysis, itself developed by computer, of the relative values of the chess pieces depending where they are and what stage the game has reached. The computer has also been trained to judge the relative merits of differing lines of attack.

COMPUTER VS. CONTENDER

The accomplishment is extraordinary. Last fall Hitech, another computer developed at Carnegie-Mellon, defeated the 74-year-old grandmaster Arnold Denker in a match. But Mr. Larsen, a regular championship contender in the 1960's and 1970's, is still playing near his top strength. He has a rating of 2580 from the International Chess Federation, whose ratings are computed by weighting tournament results by the strength of their participants. Mr. Denker's rating is 2295 and mine is 2465; the world champion, Gary Kasparov of the Soviet Union, has a rating of 2775, 5 points below the all-time high, Bobby Fischer's last rating of 2780.

After playing Deep Thought, I would say it is not yet ready to mount a serious challenge to Mr. Kasparov, though they are scheduled to play two exhibition games Oct. 22 at the New York Academy of Art at 419 Lafayette St. in Greenwich Village.

Deep Thought was constructed by five graduate students in the Computer Science Department of Carnegie-Mellon who often play against one of the best commercial chess programs, Mephisto. They win some and lose some against Mephisto, but they are unable to give their own creation any kind of opposition at all.

Deep Thought calculates incomparably faster than any human, speeding along to view 720,000 possible arrays of chess pieces on a board every second. The key to its speed are two custom processors, each with a very large integrated chip. The chip was invented by Feng-Hsiung Hsu of Taiwan, who devised it as part of his work toward a doctorate and who also designed the circuit board, which has about 100 other standard chips.

"BRUTE FORCE" AND OTHER VIRTUES

There is nothing special about the host computer, a Sun 4, and Deep Thought can be adapted to run on any powerful work station or computer. But "brute force" calculation, as computer experts call it, is not Deep Thought's only virtue. It can also evaluate the signal features of chess positions, like whether pawns are blocked by other pawns. This was the contribution of Andreas Nowatzyk of West Germany.

Chess pieces move in different ways and some are more powerful than others. Bishops move only on diagonals; rooks move only horizontally or vertically. The queen, which can move in all directions, is the most powerful piece, but the most important is the king. When an opponent's piece threatens to capture the king, the player must move the king, capture the threatening piece or interpose one of his own pieces; if he cannot, he is defeated—checkmate.

In evaluating the individual pieces, introductory chess books rate the pawn at 1, a knight or a bishop at 3½, a rook at 5 and the queen at 9. But a piece may have a radically different value depending on its position relative to other pieces. For example, a pawn in a phalanx may be stronger; a doubled pawn, one directly behind another, is vulnerable. Other factors include the number of pieces in play and the space your pieces control. Deep Thought continually evaluates these positional values.

Mr. Nowatzyk started with rough values worked out by chess experts, but only after they had been improved by the intuitive adjustment of the best chess player of the five—Murray Campbell of Canada. Mr. Nowatzyk applied his tuning process to the positional values as adjusted by Dr. Campbell to obtain more exact values.

He did this by running 900 games played by grandmasters and the next lower class, international masters, through a computer. By analyzing the play of these experts, the computer figured out the relative value they gave to various pieces in various positions. In effect, the method made Deep Thought a pupil of some of the best human players in the world.

DIFFERENT KINDS OF KING

Mr. Nowatzyk produced a matrix of nearly 100 evaluations of chess pieces and positions. For example, a knight out on the board has a value of 6,274, whereas a knight in a corner, with fewer possible moves, has a value of 4,738.

The stage of the game also alters the evaluations. For example, it is foolhardy to bring the king to the center early in the game—it would be like marching naked into enemy cannon fire. But in the endgame, when few pieces remain, the king is generally quite safe and could play an important part in supporting the other pieces. Deep Thought gives negative values to the king in the center early in the game and positive values later.

Besides Mr. Hsu's chip and Mr. Nowatzyk's and Dr. Campbell's creation of the evaluations matrix, Deep Thought employs a process called singular extension to evaluate the vast number of possible moves in a game of chess and determine which are most likely to be successful. The number of moves in a game is estimated as at least 10^{120}; the estimated number of atoms in the universe is only 10^{80}

Another team member, Thomas Anantharaman of India, contributed the singular extension work. Deep Thought, starting from a given position, typically determines its move by making an exhaustive search of all possible moves in 10 plies, or five moves by each player. This takes it three minutes. As soon as it turns up a move worth roughly half a pawn more than the alternatives, the probe is extended further down that line. Often it will go 15 plies deep and has been known to go as deep as 40 plies. It thus gives its maximum attention to the critical lines of play, as the human grandmaster does by judgment, intuition or what is sometimes called "positional sense." And it avoids wasting time and energy on all the poor or even idiotic moves that abound.

The fifth team member, Peter Jansen of Belgium, helped Dr. Campbell install a data base of endgame analysis. He also assisted with the evaluation function. These two were also responsible for providing Deep Thought with its opening book, the list of preferences for playing the beginning stage of the game.

GOING FOR THE GOLD

Chess is such a subtle and complicated game that even Deep Thought, a computer of immense power and sophistication, cannot always beat a grandmaster. The computer can look many moves in advance along a line of strategy; but it cannot do this as well as a Fischer or Kasparov.

What would it take for Deep Thought to contest for the world championship?

"First, more power," said Mr. Hsu. He would like to increase its probing power to one billion positions a second, which would bring its standard search to 14 plies or 7 moves. To achieve this, he plans to work on a newer, more efficient and speedier chip.

Deep Thought's evaluation ability is being improved all the time. For example, the researchers are now increasing the machine's ability to evaluate such strategies as blockading pawns that do not have an opponent's pawns in their path in this area, it is already stronger than it was at Thanksgiving in its game with Bent Larsen.

Also, its opening book is weak, tending to give it passive positions it must work laboriously to improve so it can move to the attack. Moreover, for reasons that are not clear, it occasionally plays eccentrically in the opening stage. For example, it may mount elaborate attacks on pawns that are easily defended.

Besides taking on the world champion next month, Deep Thought is scheduled to play a four-game match with David Levy of Scotland in London in mid-December. Even though Mr. Levy is only a comparatively low-ranked international master, the Deep Thought team takes him very seriously—and rightly so.

Mr. Levy is a programmer, and he has made an avocation of defeating the best computers over the years. If there is a hidden flaw in Deep Thought, they would expect him to ferret it out and exploit it.

So it will be fascinating to see what he finds. Deep Thought plays a conservative, at times almost sluggish game, but it is quick to pounce on the opponent's mistakes, and it makes very few errors itself. It also spots checkmate possibilities faster than any human player, and once it recognizes the opportunity for any kind of attack, it proceeds relentlessly.

Mr. Hsu and Mr. Anatharaman are finishing their doctorates and expect to go to work soon at I.B.M., where Dr. Campbell is already working. Mr. Jansen has another year of graduate study, and Mr. Nowatzyk, also finishing his studies, has not decided where he will work. But the five intend to stay in touch.

Mr. Hsu says I.B.M. is eager to have them continue the development of their creation so that it might one day boast of having the first machine to defeat a human world chess champion. He added, "Deep Thought is heavily chess-specific and we don't evision any spinoffs."

Besides its games against grandmasters, Deep Thought served as a sparring partner for Kevin Spraggett of Canada before his quarterfinal world championship match with Arthur Yusupov of the Soviet Union in Quebec in February. The computer found a flaw in an opening analysis by Mr. Kasparov. This neat feat caused Mr. Spraggett to revise his choice of opening for Match Game 1, which ended in a draw.

Mr. Spraggett also turned to the computer for help in a postgame analysis, and it turned up some interesting alternatives. He called Deep Thought "a very powerful tool" and told Mr. Jansen, who operated the computer at Quebec, that he would like to use it again in the future.

Mr. Anantharaman said their was no need to keep the program or its hardware secret. "We think it's too hard to figure out," he said. Mr. Jansen added, "We cannot explain each other's contribution." and Mr. Hsu is so confident that the wall of his office has a poster-size blueprint of his chip.●

TERESA McBRIDE, SBA MINORITY BUSINESS PERSON OF THE YEAR

● Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, today I rise to recognize the Small Business Administration's [SBA] Minority Business Person of the Year. New Mexico has many minority businesses that contribute to the economic stability of our State and serve as examples for the rest of the country. This year I am especially proud that the SBA has honored a young, vibrant, assertive, and capable businesswoman from the State of New Mexico.

SBA has named Ms. Teresa N. McBride from Albuquerque, NM, as the 1989 Minority Business Person of the Year. Ms. McBride serves as a strong role model to aspiring young minority businesswomen throughout the country. Her success represents an ability to overcome the obstacles of being a young person involved in the competitive world of business. As founder and owner of McBride Micro Source, she has proven her resourcefulness and ability in developing a high-technology computer business.

McBride Micro Source began operation in 1985 with a single full-time employee and mere $5,000 in cash. In a very short time this firm has grown to 22 full-time employees with annual sales in excess of $8.6 million—an impressive accomplishment.

McBride Micro Source is a successful business today because Teresa has overcome numerous obstacles by strategically planning and using her business skills and resources to build her company. McBride Micro Source is a certified SBA 8(a) business. This program has provided Teresa with the needed assistance to develop a business to effectively compete in the rapidly changing world of high-technology computers.

To add to her credit, Teresa has been very active in local business and woman's groups, and participates in charitable projects. In 1987, her firm received the Los Alamos National Laboratory Subcontractor of the Year Award and the New Mexico Minority Supplier Development Council Supplier of the Year Award. The firm has won several other awards and is considered one of the top computer businesses in the southwest region.

Mr. President, Teresa is a fine example of the caliber of businesswomen in my State and this country. I applaud her for her hard work and dedication.●

IN HONOR OF CYPRUS: ON THE VISIT OF PRESIDENT VASSILIOU AND THE 29TH ANNIVERSARY OF CYPRUS INDEPENDENCE

● Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, this week marks both the 29th anniversary of the establishment of the Republic of Cyprus and the visit to this country of the President of Cyprus, George Vassiliou. It is therefore a most appropriate time to reflect on the courage of the Cypriots in the face of adversity, their abiding commitment to justice, freedom and democracy, the travails visited upon them in the 15 years since the Turkish occupation of the northern region of the island nation, and their hopes and aspirations for the future.

Although the history of the Republic of Cyprus dates back barely three decades, the history of civilization on Cyprus can be traced back through the ages to the seventh millennium B.C. and the neolithic settlement of Khirokitia. It has come to us indirectly, through references in the Homeric hymns and through the archaeological discoveries of modern times; the earliest historians remain mute witnesses, for to this date the script in which they wrote remains undeciphered.

This ancient civilization, buffeted for centuries by the cross-currents of great power rivalries and imperial domination, achieved international recognition as a sovereign state in 1960, in that year becoming a full-fledged member of the community of nations. The early years in the history of a new republic are inevitably years of trial and challenge, and such was the experience of Cyprus. Then, in 1974, the young Republic was dealt a terrible blow. After just 14 years of independence, the Turkish invasion and military occupation, which continues to this day, left hundreds of thousands displaced, homeless in their own land.

With the passing years, a whole generation has grown up in the shadow of the military occupation as the effort to restore peace and justice has been unavailing. In his May 1988 report to the U.N. Security Council, Secretary General Perez de Cuellar observed:

> The Cyprus problem, in its various manifestations, has been before the Security Council for a quarter of a century. There has been a natural tendency for both sides to become entrenched in long-held positions. It will require statesmanship of a high order to break free from these positions and to make, in good faith and with a readiness to compromise, a new attempt to bridge the wide differences that exist.

Since the election of President Vassiliou in May 1988 the efforts to restore the integrity of the Republic of Cyprus, in a manner consistent with the principles of peace and justice, have been redoubled. The world has indeed seen, in his leadership, the "statesmanship of a high order" called for by the Secretary General, and a bold new attempt to bridge at last profound and longstanding differences.

Mr. President, on the 29th anniversary of the establishment of the Republic of Cyprus, the people of Cyprus deserve our congratulations and respect. But they deserve as well a chance to live peaceful and prosperous lives, to raise their children and care for their families without fear of assault and aggression in a nation living peacefully under the rule of law. At this important moment in the history of the Republic of Cyprus, we welcome President Vassiliou to this country. We salute his courage and wisdom in working ceaselessly toward a just and workable solution to the Cyprus impasse, and affirm once more our own commitment to that important goal.●

EXECUTIVE SESSION

EXECUTIVE CALENDAR

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to executive session to consider the following nominations:

Calendar No. 247, J. Michael Davis, to be an Assistant Secretary of Energy;

Calendar No. 248, Stephen A. Wakefield, to be General Counsel of the Department of Energy;

Calendar No. 249, John J. Easton, Jr., to be an Assistant Secretary of Energy;

Calendar No. 250, Jacqueline K. Brown, to be an Assistant Secretary of Energy;

And the nomination reported today by the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs: Richard C. Breeden, to be a Member of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

I further ask unanimous consent that the nominees be confirmed, en bloc; that any statements appear in the RECORD as if read; that the motions to reconsider be laid on the table, en bloc; that the President be immediately notified of the Senate's action; and that the Senate return to legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The nominations considered and confirmed en bloc are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

J. Michael Davis, of Colorado, to be an Assistant Secretary of Energy (Conservation and Renewable Energy).

Stephen A. Wakefield, of Texas, to be General Counsel of the Department of Energy.

John J. Easton, Jr., of Vermont, to be an Assistant Secretary of Energy (International Affairs and Energy Emergencies).

Jacqueline Knox Brown, of the District of Columbia, to be an Assistant Secretary of Energy (Congressional and Intergovernmental Affairs).

SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION

Richard C. Breeden, of Virginia, to be a member of the Securities and Exchange Commission for the term expiring June 5, 1993.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I want to take this opportunity to thank our colleague, Senator BRYAN, for his courtesies, and willingness to work with me and my staff, the Department of Energy, Senator MCCLURE, and others in reaching an accord to release the four nominees in the Energy Department. I appreciate his courtesies, and I thank him for it.

STATEMENT ON THE NOMINATION OF J. MICHAEL DAVIS TO BE ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR CONSERVATION AND RENEWABLE ENERGY

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, on July 26, 1989, the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources favorably reported the nomination of J. Michael Davis to be Assistant Secretary for Conservation and Renewable Energy of the Department of Energy by a unanimous vote.

Mr. Davis has a strong educational, technical, and business background which makes him well qualified for the position of Assistant Secretary for Conservation and Renewable Energy. Since 1986, Mr. Davis has served as the president of Glowcore Colorado, Inc., and from 1982 to 1986 was vice president of Sunbelt Energy Corp. Prior to joining the private sector, Mr. Davis worked in various management positions at the Department of Energy's Solar Energy Research Institute as well as serving as a division manager in DOE's solar-thermal program. He is a registered professional engineer and served on the advisory board for the Colorado office of energy conservation.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting Mr. Davis' confirmation as Assistant Secretary for Conservation and Renewable Energy of the Department of Energy.

STATEMENT ON THE NOMINATION OF STEPHEN A. WAKEFIELD TO BE GENERAL COUNSEL

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, on July 26, 1989, the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources favorably reported the nomination of Stephen A. Wakefield to be general counsel of the Department of Energy by a unanimous vote.

Mr. Wakefield has excellent qualifications for the position of general counsel of the Department of Energy, with experience in both the public and private sectors. Mr. Wakefield is a former Assistant Secretary of the Interior for Energy and Minerals as well as the former Assistant Administrator for DOE's predecessor, the Federal Energy Office. He currently is a senior partner with the law firm of Baker & Botts in Houston, TX.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting Mr. Wakefield's confirmation as General Counsel of the Department of Energy.

STATEMENT ON THE NOMINATION OF JOHN J. EASTON, JR., TO BE ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS AND ENERGY EMERGENCIES

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, on July 26, 1989, the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources favorably reported the nomination of John J. Easton, Jr., to be Assistant Secretary for International Affairs and Energy Emergencies of the Department of Energy by a unanimous vote.

Mr. Easton has had an extended career as an attorney both in private practice and in State government. He served as attorney general of the State of Vermont from 1981 to 1985 and as assistant attorney general for that State from 1975 to 1978. Mr. Easton was in private practice for approximately 8 years. He currently serves as a principal Deputy Assistant Secretary of Energy.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting Mr. Easton's confirmation as Assistant Secretary for International Affairs and Energy Emergencies of the Department of Energy.

STATEMENT ON THE THE NOMINATION OF JACQUELINE KNOX BROWN TO BE ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR CONGRESSIONAL AND INTERGOVERNMENTAL AFFAIRS

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, on July 26, 1989, the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources favorably reported the nomination of Jacqueline Knox Brown to be Assistant Secretary for Congressional and Intergovernmental Affairs of the Department of Energy by a unanimous vote.

Mrs. Brown has had an extended career in public service. She served in a variety of staff positions in the Congress from 1972 to 1988. Following her position as minority staff director of the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee's Subcommittee on Aging, she joined Secretary Watkins as a senior policy analyst for the President's AIDS Commission. Mrs. Brown's familiarity with the Congress and the legislative process, as well as her experience with the executive branch of Government, will serve her well in the position of Assistant Secretary for Congressional and Intergovernmental Affairs.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting Mrs. Brown's confirmation as Assistant Secretary for Congressional and Intergovernmental Affairs of the Department of Energy.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will return to legislative session.

APPOINTMENT BY THE VICE PRESIDENT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, on behalf of the Vice President, in accordance with 22 U.S.C. 1928a-1928d, as amended, appoints the following Senators as members of the Senate delegation to the North Atlantic Assembly Meeting during the 1st session of the 101st Congress, to be held in Rome, Italy, October 6–10, 1989:

The Senator from Oregon, Mr. HATFIELD;

The Senator from Mississippi, Mr. LOTT; and

The Senator from Florida, Mr. MACK.

ORDERS FOR TOMORROW

RECESS UNTIL 10 A.M.; MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until 10 a.m., Thursday, October 5, and following the time reserved for the two leaders, there be a period for morning business not to extend beyond 10:30, with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS UNTIL 10 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, if the distinguished Republican leader has no further business and no Senator is seeking recognition, I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess until the previously ordered time of 10 a.m., Thursday, October 5.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 9:07 p.m., recessed until Thursday, October 5, 1989, at 10 a.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Wednesday, October 4, 1989

The House met at 10 a.m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Teach us, we pray, O mighty God, of the gifts of the spirit—of tolerance and understanding for both friend and adversary, for people of our tradition and those whose background is alien to ours. As we have faith in our own beliefs and hold to our own ideals, so may we also continue to be open to growth in grace and appreciation of another's heritage. May not our limited faith, O God, keep us from the bounty of Your spirit that we may be filled with Your truth that indeed makes us free. In Your holy name, we pray. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. SCHIFF] please come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. SCHIFF led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks announced that the Senate had passed a bill, joint resolutions and a concurrent resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

[Applause, the Members rising.]

The SPEAKER. Members of the Congress, it is my great privilege, and I deem it a high honor and personal pleasure to present to you His Excellency, Carlos Salinas de Gortari, President of the United Mexican States.

ADDRESS BY THE HONORABLE CARLOS SALINAS DE GORTARI, PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED MEXICAN STATES

(The following is an English translation of the address delivered in Spanish by President Salinas before the joint meeting:)

President SALINAS. Mr. President, Honorable Speaker of the House, distinguished Senators and Representative, ladies and gentlemen: I very much appreciate this opportunity to address the Congress of the United States of America. To the house of citizen representation of this great Nation I bring the greetings of the people of Mexico and the desire to open a new chapter of respect and friendship in our relations. We have a spirit of exchange, not only material, but also of ideas and cultures. We aspire to a more fruitful cooperation between our two countries and a more harmonious coexistence among the world's nations.

MEXICO, A LIVING PRESENCE OF DIVERSE HERITAGES

Mexico does not conceive of its presence in the modern world in purely economic terms, nor even only in political terms, but as a cultural and historical presence. We are the bearers of an experience that spans age-old Indian civilizations, our Spanish heritage and the strength of the mixture of those two races. Our nationality cost us the struggle and the blood of generations. That is why we value it so highly. Sovereignty, freedom, and justice identify the three great movements of the Mexican people: Independence in 1810, reform in 1857, and revolution in 1910. That is the source of our pride and the origin of our moral strength to face the future.

Today the world is abandoning absolute discourses and totalitarian temptations. Mexico participates in the world with its enormous cultural wealth and the singularity of its history. Those who seek uniformity in today's world do not know what we Mexicans have learned: The living presence of very different heritages that have become united within us: The Indian cosmogonies, the humanism of the ancient Mediterranean, the creative energy of the Renaissance, the Age of Reason's faith in progress and the critical spirit of modern times. All this acts on our paintings and poems, on our music and architecture, on our universities and museums, on our communities and cities. It is, quite simply, our lifestyle.

A WORLD OPEN TO BOLDNESS OF THE IMAGINATION

Our culture tells us that there are many ways, not just one, of being creative and free men and women. Our history is permanent awareness of our sovereignty in an interdependent world. It demands that we be loyal to our traditions so as to participate productively in today's very rapid changes. We live in a world almost without distances, in the present instant: that is inevitable. But we believe that true interdependence can only take place among independent nations.

A new world awaits us on the threshold of the 21st century, open to the boldness of the imagination. Bipolarity is being overcome and the specter of war is growing more distant. We are witnessing a speedy increase in communication between people. The technological revolution opens up new prospects for development. Mexico joins the aspirations of many people who see, in the coming century, a horizon of material and spiritual liberation. To that new world we Mexicans say: Our hope is bright and our participation generous.

Aware of this, Congressmen and friends, I come to this honorable forum bearing the desire of men and women of good faith to inaugurate an era of new friendship. [Applause.]

LET US BUILD A RELATIONSHIP FREE OF MYTHS AND MISTRUST

The time has come to build a new relationship free of myths and mistrust, abuses and recriminations; a relationship of ongoing dialog between our two nations, respectful of our inherent differences, imaginative, to find the cooperation that benefits us, inspired in the ideals of democracy, justice, and freedom which we share. My country's aim is to make this new relationship a respectful and mature process, at once valuable and useful.

It is time to recognize dispassionately, objectively, that anything that affects the one will soon have repercussions on the other; that problems on one side of the border have an impact of the life and well-being of the people who live on the other side. As in any border relationship, but particularly in this highly dissimilar one, it is natural that differences should exist. Nevertheless, it is now time to accept that over and above such differences, there are many points in common to aid us in working together.

The strength of our nation, the vigor of our culture and the desire to participate in our own right in the great world transformation that is underway, allow us to offer this new relationship without fear or mistrust, with no restrictions and without hesitation.

That, in essence, is the spirit that has prevailed in the meetings I have had with President Bush. In them, a positive, cordial climate has been established. It expresses the new content of the relations between our respective governments. That has also been the spirit between Mexican and American Congressmen. The recent interparliamentary meeting attests to this. What is occurring between our governments is simply clear evidence of a deeper pattern of relations in the daily lives of our people. It is our task to learn from them; to encourage and stimulate our rapprochement.

WE ARE CHANGING TO BECOME STRONGER

Congressmen and friends: All nations are committed to change, a change that brings hope of freedom and justice. We all have the obligation and moral duty to support it. This Nation's greatness has been its spirit of work and its commitment to freedom. Today, while experiencing an unprecedented economic expansion, it can enrich cooperation and solidarity with other peoples who also love work, freedom, and justice.

The subject that is most discussed in Mexico today is modernization. Mexico lives by its principles but has no dogmas. Today we look at the world with different eyes. A new spirit and a new optimism prevail in Mexico. Faith in the future moves us to undertake profound reforms in the economy, in politics, and in society. [Applause.] We do this by own sovereign decision. That is what we want: To decide, autonomously, the direction of our own path. It was Lincoln who said that if there is one thing that is the duty of each nation, it is never to leave to others the preservation and perpetuation of its own freedoms and institutions.

We are prepared to change because we want to preserve what interests us most: freedom; and because we want to attain what is most pressing: justice.

Mexico is a united country which lives under the rule of law. We enjoy stability and social peace. Our political system is increasingly pluralistic. We are a nation with principles that is able to promote relations of respect and cooperation with other countries. Our solid institutional life is our principal political heritage. It is what allows us to introduce the changes that a more open, complex, and pluralistic Mexican society is demanding.

Mexico is transforming itself precisely in order to preserve its unity and national stability. We Mexicans do not want a change that goes against our roots or that causes discord and dispute amongst ourselves. We change to become stronger, to fulfill the aims that we have set ourselves in our history: So that individuals and families, communities and villages may have opportunities for well-being. The aim of modernization is to extend social justice in our country: Only thus will we be able to assure our democracy and the sustained growth of the economy. It is to preserve our institutions and freedoms.

The challenge my country is facing is enormous. To the backlogs already accumulated has been added almost a decade of economic stagnation and a 50-percent drop in the population's living standards. My nation is required to meet the demands of 85 million Mexicans; despite the drop in population growth there will be 10 million more in the next 5 years. This means the need for more food, urban services, housing, education, a clean environment, and ways to make an honest living. Every year 1 million young people will enter the employment market. They aspire to a decent job and a secure future.

Over the last 7 years Mexicans have made enormous sacrifices. During that period we could not count on external flows of financing; oil revenues dropped by an amount equivalent to 6 percent of the GDP; the terms of our trade evolved negatively; excessive indebtedness because one of the most significant obstacles to development; we suffered devastating earthquakes and natural disasters.

Faced with this extraordinary challenge, we applied in depth, with discipline, a consistent economic strategy to attack the causes of the crisis and recover growth. The solidity of our political institutions and the strength of our people were put to the test and have been proved. A very high price was paid; that is why our fundamental commitment is the seriousness of our policy.

Mexico has put its public finances on a sound footing with an effort equivalent, in relation to the GDP, to more than three times the size of the Gramm-Rudman amendment. Inflation has gone from almost 200 percent in 1987 to 17 percent this year. The economic recovery is underway, and growth this year will be higher than population growth. The Government's actions are more agile and effective. Today we have an open, export-oriented economy. Private companies have considerable financial strength. The productive plant is more efficient and in better conditions to face the healthy competition from abroad.

This stategy also included privatization of activities which previously were almost considered taboo; deregulation of entire areas of economic activity, such as transportation and telecommunications; indepth revision of the policy of subsidies in order to eliminate all those that concealed inefficiency and even corruption; new regulations for foreign investment which eliminate bureaucratic redtape, introduce automatic procedures and transparency, and provide greater legal security; and a process of trade liberalization which today makes Mexico one of the countries most open to trade in the world, with direct benefits for our people.

MORAL RIGHT IN DEBT NEGOTIATIONS

This effort shared by the great majority of Mexicans gave us the moral right and the strength to renegotiate the foreign debt with international banks. Therefore we have always preferred firm negotiation to unilateral confrontation. The arrangement reached is satisfactory. The reduction of the amount of the debt, the lowering of interest rates, the availability of fresh funds on a multiannual basis, are three options that make it possible for us to reduce the transfer of resources abroad and thus provide certainty to investors and continuity to the economic recovery.

The value of the renegotiation of the foreign debt should not be measured only by its direct contribution to the balance of payments. Its additional effects, in qualitative and dynamic terms, on domestic confidence, repatriation of capital, which so far this year has reached $2.5 billion, and foreign investment, are also highly important. Therefore, in the 2 weeks following the announcement of the arrangement, domestic interest rates fell 20 points, which signifies savings equivalent to $10 billion on servicing the domestic public debt.

We know that the arrangement on the foreign debt is not going to make domestic problems disappear; these can only be solved with work and more work; but my country is in a better position for its effort to produce more and allow growth without inflation to be resumed.

I feel that this is an appropriate occasion to express to the Government of the United States, and in particular to you, distinguished Congressmen, my personal appreciation and that of my fellow countrymen for the understanding and solidarity shown in the important chapter of the renegotiation of the foreign debt. [Applause.]

DEMOCRACY FOR GROWTH AND WELL-BEING

The changes in the economy have been matched by changes in our political institutions, changes that are necessary to strengthen our democratic life. Just as freedom does not flourish in stagnation, development is not continuous unless it is supported by the energy, vitality, and participation of the people. The future of all societies today must necessarily be democratic. Democracy is essential to promote economic growth and satisfy the requirements of social well-being.

For us, just as for any modern society, democracy begins with unrestricted respect for the will of the citizen; it occurs in conditions of observance of the law and it demands responsible exercise of authority. Mexican democracy has gradually become stronger by embracing the broader social plurality that exists, through a more open public debate, a more intense political party life and more competitive elections. There is a consolidation of the conditions that give citizens security in exercising their freedoms and rights, the conditions of social peace and stability and of respect in the dissemination of ideas and civilized treatment in political competition. But democracy does not end there. Full democracy requires the material conditions and the conditions of social justice to guarantee equality of opportunity for all.

To that end, Mexico must grow, create well-paid jobs and forge a new spirit of solidarity. A healthy economy and a greater capacity to conduct politics are instruments to construct a broad, promising horizon of opportunities for Mexicans. The well-being of the people is the higher purpose of my administration. This is why we have undertaken an all-out struggle against extreme poverty through a National Solidarity Program, whose objective is to deal with the social demands of the neediest, gradually consolidate the productive capacity of the poorest groups and promote their full incorporation into the benefits of progress. In Mexico, today, the Government works more for those who have the least. [Applause.]

A NEW REALISM IN WORLD RELATIONSHIPS

Our relationship with the rest of the world is founded on this spirit of internal transformation. Coexistence amongst ourselves and with the other nations of the world is based on respect for the rights of others. That is the lesson we inherited from Benito Juárez. Mexico, therefore, is loyal to the principles that govern its coexistence with the rest of the world: Self-determination of peoples and nonintervention; cooperation and solidarity among nations; peaceful coexistence for growing development that translates into more and better freedom, and a better quality of life for all. These are ideals I am sure our societies share.

For Central America, Mexico wishes the reestablishment of peace, the consolidation of democracy, and the resumption of development. In this we join the wishes of the peoples of the region. Central America today is registering the highest population growth rate but is mired in economic recession: Growth and job creation are needed to stem the migrations toward the south of Mexico or their passage toward the United States. The international atmosphere of détente, the exhaustion after years of war, the despair over economic deterioration, the good sense of peoples and the current political will of governments have created a new climate of dialog and reconciliation. The Central American countries themselves are taking their destinies fully into their own hands, establishing commitments, timeframes, and responsibilities. We encourage that process without trying to mediate from outside. [Applause.]

By the same token, we respect the sovereign rights of Panama and the validity of the canal treaties, but we distinguish the defense of those principles from support for those who have become the obstacle to the democratic progress of their people. [Applause.]

We have priority relations with Latin America: We are joined to Latin America by common origins and sensitivities. Still fragile from the hardships caused by the economic crisis and the awakening of enormous social demands the democracies of the region are struggling to promote well-being, not poverty. The hopes of millions lie in these democracies. All in all, we expect better prospects for the democracies in our hemisphere.

There is a new realism among us all. New opportunities are opening up for dialog between Latin America and the United States. Today the Brady plan offers a promising framework for solving the debt problem in an orderly manner and a beginning of hope for the region; it would strengthen the social viability of economic policies aimed at financial stability and structural change. Democratic elections will take place in many of the Latin American countries in the next 2 years. These are sensitive times, but they are also replete with opportunities and points of convergence. Mexico seeks agreement with the other countries of the Rio Group. The world and the hemisphere will benefit from a prosperous, stable, and democratic Latin America. A united, clear, and constructive Latin American voice is not a call to confrontation, but the best path to productive and effective dialog on the common problems that concern us all.

Mexico, together with the rest of the world, promotes cooperation and friendship. We seek new and strong relations for trade, investment, and technology transfer with an integrated Europe and with the Pacific basin. We are a sovereign society that is open and participating in world changes.

Esteemed Members of the Congress, four topics now dominate the agenda for our bilateral relations: trade, migration, drugs, and environment.

Trade is the most promising area in which substance can be given to our new era of bilateral friendship. In order for Mexico's economic modernization to be lasting, we must grow; but growth requires greater and more secure access to the world's largest market, the United States. We already have a suitable legal framework in which to establish consultation principles and procedures on the trade and investment relations between our countries. The intensity and diversity of trade made an agreement of this nature essential. Mexico is the United States' third largest export market, which creates a significant number of jobs for United States citizens. We conduct 65 percent of our trade with the United States. Trade between the United States and Mexico already amounts to nearly $45 billion. Nevertheless, the amount of Mexican goods on the American market is still insufficient.

RECIPROCAL TREATMENT IN TRADE

To ensure that Mexico will continue to be one of the most open economies at the international level, we need greater reciprocity. In a framework of understanding and cooperation, there is no place for nontariff barriers that prevent or hinder the free flow of goods between the United States and Mexico. Our country is already practically free of such barriers, but we continue confronting them in the United States. Let us resolve this inequitable paradox. We seek greater access to the textile and steel markets and to the generalized system of preferences. We want a bilateral agreement that will break down trade barriers, sector by sector. We want a positive attitude toward consolidation of a dynamic in-bond assembly industry. I believe that you, friends and Members of Congress, could contribute to the strengthening of trade relations between our countries. Between neighbors, reciprocal and equitable treatment makes friendships lasting, creates an atmosphere of trust and encourages solidarity and stronger ties. The United States Congress knows that the best interests of its nation lie in a growing and dynamic Mexican economy that is open to United States exports and whose goods have broad access to the American consumer.

MIGRATION, A PROBLEM OF ELEMENTAL HUMAN DIGNITY

The migration of Mexican workers to the United States is a harsh reality. These population movements meet a demand created by United States production activities in the border States, but they are also the result of the complex economic situation affecting Mexico. The absence of growth is naturally reflected in a shortage of jobs and employment opportunities. By allowing for greater growth in my country, a trade agreement would enable Mexicans to find jobs in Mexico rather than seeking work in the United States.

Let's get rid of myths: Mexican workers do not push anyone out of a job; they work efficiently and with dignity for wages, in many cases, below the market wage, doing jobs that are not done by American citizens. Mexico does not ignore its responsibility and will meet it one day when the children of our country find, in their own homeland the well-being that they deserve and seek on crossing the border. However, we fail to understand why the "American dream" must be harsh for the Mexican immigrants who have decided to share it, and why the productive and cultural potential of the ever-growing Mexican-American community is not taken advantage of to benefit the United States and, unquestionably, our bilateral relations. They seek to better themselves through education and abide by the laws, thus giving prestige to their country of origin. The law should also protect them and prevent discrimination. The abuse and exploitation of Mexican workers is intolerable in all cases. [Applause.]

Migration is a problem that involves more than economic or legal causes. It is a problem of fundamental human dignity which must be confronted in a realistic manner. Current U.S. legislation has made it possible to regularize the situation of many undocumented workers, but it has not altered the basic dynamics of the problem.

Over the next few years, increased demand for labor in the United States may be expected in employment sectors and regions that have traditionally hired and will continue hiring Mexican workers. A far-reaching solution should be based on a long-term political understanding. With pragmatism and foresight, we should consider the viability of new mechanisms that could include the participation of workers' organizations and State governments on both sides of the border in order to meet the labor demand in the United States, protect human and labor rights and do away with the network of corruption and illegality surrounding the migration of my fellow countrymen.

DRUG TRAFFICKING: A COMMON ENEMY

Mexico intends to eradicate drug-trafficking at its very roots in the sphere that falls under its responsibility. [Applause.] This world fight is also our own. We have left behind the times of blaming others and of reciprocal recrimination between producer, transit and consumer countries, which, instead of attacking the common enemy, wasted time and efforts. Today, there is a mature and responsible understanding of the links in the drug chain of terror in the United States; there is greater acceptance regarding the importance of fighting consumption and distribution. I recognize the courage of President Bush in expanding understanding of the drug problem and his interest in gaining allies in the fight against drug trafficking.

In Mexico, we now affirm that drug trafficking is a threat to national sovereignty and to the security of the state because in our country, as in all other nations, it corrupts whatever it touches. Mexico views the fight to end drug trafficking as a matter of national security, a concern for the health of Mexican youth and an act of solidarity with the community of nations. Consequently, greater cooperation among governments is indispensable. We will cooperate, but the responsibility for the fight in our country is exclusively ours, and therefore, there will be no joint military operations on our soil. We are demonstrating, however, that coordination and cooperation are effective as regards information and evaluation. We can also work together to make law enforcement more effective and attack money laundering.

Over the past few months, we have seized 22 tons of pure cocaine, which once cut, would sell for $30 billion on the streets of New York. This represents more than one-third of the consumption of this drug in the United States and is equivalent to half of the drugs seized over the past 10 years. The destruction of 6,000 hectares of marijuana and poppies, together with other seizures of these substances, has prevented the distribution and consumption of 2.5 billion marijuana cigarettes and 1.13 billion doses of heroin. These actions have been followed by the disbanding of 153 criminal organizations and the arrest of 8,000 people, including the major drug traffickers and producers in the country. We have seized goods and properties from drug traffickers and distributed ranches with a total land coverage of over 50,000 hectares among peasants. To achieve these results, in addition to political determination, we have substantially increased budget resources to combat drugs. These resources are almost three times greater than they were last year. Half of the resources of the Attorney General's Office and one third of the Army's are used to fight drugs. We have increased penalties and sanctions. We have ratified the Vienna Convention and play an active role in international forums. The field in which drug traffickers may become involved is so broad and the Government's current fight so intense that, when investigating a seizure, we recuperated invaluable archeological pieces which had been stolen from our National Anthropology Museum in 1985.

The successful efforts of our institutions in the fight against drug trafficking, even at the cost of the lives of many of their members, are not merely a source of pride and satisfaction.

I make mention of them here as a source of distress and concern. When we see the magnitude of the fight against drugs, we must honestly ask ourselves: Are we winning or losing the war? I think that, at the world level, we are losing, and that is unacceptable. More cooperation, more effectiveness in each territory and, particularly, greater firmness will, I am certain, put an end to this terrible scourge of modern times. [Applause.]

ECOLOGY, A PRIORITY AREA FOR BILATERAL COOPERATION

In defending the environment, Mexico shares a commitment with the United States and the entire world, since it is a universal humanitarian cause. Overcoming the problem of excessive indebtedness is gradually providing us with greater leeway for putting into action the new priority that we are placing on ecological issues. First, to control and reverse air, water, and land pollution along our borders, thus eliminating a source of poor sanitation and irritation for the inhabitants of the region. Second, to attack problems that are now worldwide, such as the greenhouse effect and the depletion of the ozone layer. Third, to directly tackle the problems of Mexico City, the most populated and polluted city in the world: experience gained and the technology developed by the United States to deal with similar problems in transport, water treatment and waste management is significant in this regard. Finally, to conserve the enormous wealth of our flora and fauna, tropical forests, rivers and lakes, which are the heritage of the Mexican people also enjoyed by all mankind. We intend to take action, determined action, to protect the environment and we shall support all international initiatives that lead to decisive cooperation to benefit the world's ecology. [Applause.]

Distinguished Members of Congress, more than 200 years ago, in this Congress, the most modern and enlightened assembly of its time laid down for posterity the promise that all men in this land are born free and have a right to the pursuit of happiness. In essence, it is a premise that has given shape to the American soul. It is the soul of the common people, and therein lies its greatness; of a people that love their rights, and are sensitive to human suffering and to the value of liberty; of an ingenious and creative people who are pioneers in human association and espouse mankind's highest values.

The Mexican people recognize these virtues because they in turn have upheld them throughout a rich, heroic history of courage, love of liberty and a unique sensitivity to justice and beauty. This truth is what counts between our two nations, the truth that unites us and that must prevail, although, on occasion, our political and social organizations do not seem to understand this.

THE SPIRIT OF THE NEW ERA

The time has come to give the men and women of our nations the place they deserve in the reign of justice. It is the spirit of a new friendship that does not attribute the cause of the problems to others. Now, it is a spirit that seeks to tackle, hand in hand with others, the concrete problems to be solved, promptly and properly, because human well-being is the higher consideration. It is the spirit of the Founding Fathers of this great Nation. It is the lesson bequeathed to us by the men who built Mexico.

This is the essence of a new friendship that seeks to permeate all spheres of contact between Mexico and the United States of America.

It is up to us to ensure that these words are put into action. We are two vigorous nations with pride in their past, the vitality to build their future in a sovereign manner and the desire to speak forthrightly and act both truthfully and cordially.

The greatest privilege of freedom does not lie in eliminating the discrepancies that its exercise involves. The infinite capacity to learn is what makes it the most human of social virtues. Where it does not resolve differences, it respects and learns to live in recognition of the freedom of others. This, and no other, is the spirit that prevails at the outset of this new era in our relations: a new era of cooperation and friendship.

At 11 o'clock and 43 minutes a.m., the President of the United Mexican States, accompanied by the committee of escort, retired from the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The Doorkeeper escorted the invited guests from the Chamber in the following order:

The members of the President's Cabinet.

The ambassadors, ministers, and charges d'affaires of foreign governments.

JOINT MEETING DISSOLVED

The SPEAKER. The Chair declares the joint meeting of the two Houses dissolved.

Accordingly, at 11 o'clock and 46 minutes a.m., the joint session of the two Houses was dissolved.

The Members of the Senate retired to their Chamber.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER

The SPEAKER. The House will continue in recess until 12:15 p.m.

□ 1220

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 12 o'clock and 20 minutes p.m.

PRINTING OF PROCEEDINGS HAD DURING RECESS

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the proceedings had during the recess be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER

The SPEAKER. The Chair has an announcement concerning rollcall 264 of October 3, 1989. Two votes by electronic device were conducted on that question. Due to an irregularity in the electronic voting system, the first vote was aborted. The Chair vacated that first vote and initiated another 15-minute vote by electronic device. However, five Members who had been recorded on the first, aborted vote were not recorded on the second vote on the same question. The irregularity in the electronic voting system should not prejudice the Members concerned. Therefore, the Chair will direct the Clerk to record the Members concerned on rollcall 264 in conformity with the first, aborted vote and to enter those proceedings in the Journal and RECORD.

INADVERTENTLY OMITTED FROM THE CONGRESSIONAL RECORD OF TUESDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1989

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the Members will bear with the Chair, we have had some problems with the electronic voting machine and the Chair is attempting to decide at this point whether to vacate the previous vote and to begin again, so if the Members will hold for just a moment, the Chair is trying to find out if the machine has been restored.

The Chair would like to advise the House that that machine was not working properly. The Clerk is not certain that all the votes were recorded.

So it is the intent of the Chair to vacate the vote at this point and to direct a new record vote by electronic device on the previous question on the motion to instruct conferees.

The voting machine is now working. So we will begin the voting process again. The Chair is informed that some Members have left the Chamber, so this will be a full 15 minute vote in all fairness to give all Members an opportunity to vote.

This vote is on ordering the previous question.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were yeas 198, nays 222, not voting 12, as follows:

OMNIBUS BUDGET RECONCILIATION ACT OF 1989

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to House Resolution 245 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 3299.

□ 1221

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 3299) to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 5 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for the fiscal year 1990, with Mr. MAVROULES in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee of the Whole House rose on Tuesday, October 3, 1989, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OXLEY] had been disposed of.

It is now in order to consider amendment No. 6 printed in section 2 of House Report 101-261.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. DONNELLY

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DONNELLY: Amend part F of subtitle B of title X (relating to revisions to the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988) to read as follows (and conform the table of contents of such subtitle accordingly):

PART F—REPEAL OF MEDICARE PROVISIONS IN THE MEDICARE CATASTROPHIC COVERAGE ACT OF 1988

Subpart 1—Provisions Relating to Part A of Medicare Program and Supplemental Medicare Premium

SEC. 10181. REPEAL OF EXPANSION OF MEDICARE PART A BENEFITS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) GENERAL RULE.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), sections 101, 102, and 104(d) (other than paragraph (7)) of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 (Public Law 100-360) (in this part referred to as "MCCA") are repealed, and the provisions of law amended or repealed by such sections are restored or revived as if such section had not been enacted.

(2) EXCEPTION FOR BLOOD DEDUCTION.—The repeal of section 102(1) of MCCA (relating to deductibles and coinsurance under part A) shall not apply, but only insofar as such section amended paragraph (2) of section 1813(a) of the Social Security Act (relating to a deduction for blood).

(b) TRANSITION PROVISIONS FOR MEDICARE BENEFICIARIES.—

(1) INPATIENT HOSPITAL SERVICES AND POST-HOSPITAL EXTENDED CARE SERVICES.—In applying sections 1812 and 1813 of the Social Security Act, as restored by subsection (a)(1), with respect to inpatient hospital services and extended care services provided on or after January 1, 1990—

(A) no day before January 1, 1990, shall be counted in determining the beginning (or period) of a spell of illness;

(B) with respect to the limitation on such services provided in a spell of illness, days of such services before January 1, 1990, shall not be counted, except that days of inpatient hospital services before January 1, 1989, which were applied with respect to an individual after receiving 90 days of services in a spell of illness (commonly known as "lifetime reserve days") shall be counted;

(C) the limitation of coverage of extended care services to post-hospital extended care services shall not apply to an individual receiving such services from a skilled nursing facility during a continuous period beginning before (and including) January 1, 1990, until the end of the period of 30-consecutive days in which the individual is not provided inpatient hospital services or extended care services; and

(D) the inpatient hospital deductible under section 1813(a)(1) of such Act shall not apply—

(i) in the case of an individual who is receiving inpatient hospital services during a continuous period beginning before (and including) January 1, 1990, with respect to the spell of illness beginning on such date, if such a deductible was imposed on the individual for a period of hospitalization during 1989;

(ii) for a spell of illness beginning during January 1990, if such a deductible was imposed on the individual for a period of hospitalization that began in December 1989; and

(iii) in the case of a spell of illness of an individual that began before January 1, 1989, and has not ended as of January 1, 1990.

(2) HOSPICE CARE.—The restoration of section 1812(a)(4) of the Social Security Act, effected by subsection (a)(1), shall not apply to hospice care provided during the subsequent period (described in such section as in effect on December 31, 1989) with respect to which an election has been made before January 1, 1990.

(3) TERMINATION OF HOLD HARMLESS PROVISIONS.—Section 104(b) of MCCA is amended by striking "or 1990" each place it appears.

(c) TERMINATION OF TRANSITIONAL ADJUSTMENTS IN PAYMENTS FOR INPATIENT HOSPITAL SERVICES.—

(1) PPS HOSPITALS.—Section 104(c)(1) of MCCA is amended by inserting "and before January 1, 1990," after "October 1, 1988,".

(2) PPS-EXEMPT HOSPITALS.—Section 104(c)(2) of MCCA is amended—

(A) by inserting "and before January 1, 1990," after "January 1, 1989,"; and

(B) by striking the period at the end and inserting the following: ", without regard to whether any of such beneficiaries exhausted medicare inpatient hospital insurance benefits before January 1, 1989.".

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The provisions of this section shall take effect January 1, 1990, except that the amendments made by subsection (c) shall be effective as if included in the enactment of MCCA.

SEC. 10182. REPEAL OF SUPPLEMENTAL MEDICARE PREMIUM AND FEDERAL HOSPITAL INSURANCE CATASTROPHIC COVERAGE RESERVE FUND.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Sections 111 and 112 of MCCA are repealed and the provisions of law amended by such sections are restored or revived as if such sections had not been enacted.

(b) DELAY IN STUDY DEADLINE.—Section 113(c) of MCCA is amended by striking "November 30, 1988" and inserting "May 31, 1990".

(c) DISPOSAL OF FUNDS IN FEDERAL HOSPITAL INSURANCE CATASTROPHIC COVERAGE RESERVE FUND.—Any balance in the Federal Hospital Insurance Catastrophic Coverage Reserve Fund (created under section 1817A(a) of the Social Security Act, as inserted by section 112(a) of MCCA) as of January 1, 1990, shall be transferred into the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund and any amounts payable due to overpayments into such Trust Fund shall be payable from the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund.

(d) EFFECTIVE DATES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in this subsection, the provisions of this section shall take effect January 1, 1990.

(2) REPEAL OF SUPPLEMENTAL MEDICARE PREMIUM.—The repeal of section 111 of MCCA shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1988.

Subpart 2—Provisions Relating to Part B of the Medicare Program

SEC. 10185. REPEAL OF EXPANSION OF MEDICARE PART B BENEFITS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) GENERAL RULE.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), sections 201 through 208 of MCCA are repealed and the provisions of law amended or repealed by such sections are restored or revived as if such sections had not been enacted.

(2) EXCEPTION.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply to subsections (g) and (m)(4) of section 202 of MCCA.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Section 1905(p) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396d(p)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (3)(C)—

(A) by striking "Subject to paragraph (4), deductibles" and inserting "Deductibles", and

(B) by striking "1813, section 1833(b)" and all that follows and inserting "1813 and section 1833(b)."; and

(2) by striking paragraph (4) and redesignating paragraph (5) as paragraph (4).

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The provisions of this section shall take effect January 1, 1990.

SEC. 10186. REPEAL OF CHANGES IN MEDICARE PART B MONTHLY PREMIUM AND FINANCING

(a) IN GENERAL.—Sections 211 through 213 (other than section 211(b)) of MCCA are repealed and the provisions of law amended or repealed by such sections are restored or revived as if such sections had not been enacted.

(b) 1-TIME TRANSFER OF NET ADDITIONAL PREMIUMS.—There shall be transferred, as of January 1, 1990, from the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund to the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund an amount equal to—

(1) the amount of the premiums collected pursuant to section 1839(g) of the Social Security Act, minus

(2) the amount of administrative expenses incurred under part B of title XVIII of such Act relating to implementation of MCCA, plus

(3) the amount of interest accrued to the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund attributable to balance described in paragraphs (1) and (2).

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The provisions of subsection (a) shall take effect January 1, 1990, and the repeal of section 211 of MCCA shall apply to premiums for months beginning after December 31, 1989.

SEC. 10187. AMENDMENT OF CERTAIN MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

(a) REVISION OF MEDIGAP REGULATIONS.—

(1) Section 1882 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395ss), as amended by section 221(d) of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988, is amended

(A) in the third sentence of subsection (a) and in subsection (b)(1), by striking "subsection (k)(3)" and inserting "subsections (k)(3), (k)(4), (m), and (n)";

(B) in subsection (k)—

(i) in paragraph (1)(A), by inserting "except as provided in subsection (m)," before "subsection (g)(2)(A)"; and

(ii) in paragraph (3), by striking "subsection (1)" and inserting "subsections (1), (m), and (n)"; and

(C) by adding at the end the following new subsections:

"(m)(1)(A) If, within the 90-day period beginning on the date of the enactment of this subsection, the National Association of Insurance Commissioners (in this subsection and subsection (n) referred to as the 'Association') amends the amended NAIC Model Regulation (referred to in subsection (k)(1)(A) and adopted on September 20, 1988) to reflect the changes in law made by part F of substitle B of title X of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989, subsection (g)(2)(A) shall be applied in a State, effective on and after the date specified in subparagraph (B), as if the reference to the Model Regulation adopted on June 6, 1979, were a reference to the amended NAIC Model Regulation (referred to in subsection (k)(2)(A)) as amended by the Association in accordance with this paragraph (in this subsection and subsection (n) referred to as the 'revised NAIC Model Regulation').

"(B) The date specified in this subparagraph for a State is the earlier of the date the State adopts standards equal to or more stringent than the revised NAIC Model Regulation or 1 year after the date the Association first adopts such revised Regulation.

"(2)(A) If the Association does not amend the amended NAIC Model Regulation, within the 90-day period specified in paragraph (1)(A), the Secretary shall promulgate, not later than 60 days after the end of such period, revised Federal model standards (in this subsection and subsection (n) referred to as 'revised Federal model standards') for medical supplemental policies to reflect the changes in law made by part F of subtitle B of title X of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989, subsection (g)(2)(A) shall be applied in a State, effective on and after the date specified in subparagraph (B), as if the reference to the Model Regulation adopted on June 6, 1979, were a reference to the revised Federal model standards.

"(B) The date specified in this subparagraph for a State is the earlier of the date the State adopts standards equal to or more stringent than the revised Federal model standards or 1 year after the date the Secretary first promulgates such standards.

"(3) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section (except as provided in subsection (n))—

"(A) no medicare supplemental policy may be certified by the Secretrary pursuant to subsection (a),

"(B) no certification made pursuant to subsection (a) shall remain in effect, and

"(C) no State regulatory program shall be found to meet (or to continue to meet) the requirements of subsection (b)(1)(A),

unless such policy meets (or such program provides for the application of standards equal to or more stringent than) the standards set forth in the revised NAIC Model Regulation or the revised Federal model standards (as the case may be) by the date specified in paragraph (1)(B) or (2)(B) (as the case may be).

"(n)(1) Until the date specified in paragraph (4), in the case of a qualifying medicare supplemental policy described in paragraph (3) issued in a State—

"(A) before July 1, 1990, the policy is deemed to remain in compliance with the standards described in subsection (b)(1)(A) if the insurer issuing the policy complies with the transition provision described in paragraph (2), or

"(B) on or after July 1, 1990, the policy is deemed to be in compliance with the standards described in subsection (b)(1)(A) if the insurer issuing the policy complies with the revised NAIC Model Regulation or the revised Federal model standards (as the case may be) before the date of the sale of the policy.

"(2) The transition provision described in this paragraph is—

"(A) such transition provision as the Association provides, by not later than December 15, 1989, so as to provide for an appropriate transition to reflect the changes in benefits under this title made by part F of subtitle B of title X of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989, or

"(B) if the Association does not provide for a transition provision by the date described in subparagraph (A), such transition provision as the Secretary shall provide, by January 1, 1990, so as to provide for an appropriate transition described in subparagraph (A).

"(3) In paragraph (1), the term 'qualifying medicare supplemental policy' means a medicare supplemental policy which has been issued in compliance with this section as in effect on the date before the date of the enactment of this subsection.

"(4)(A) The date specified in this paragraph for a policy issued in a State is—

"(i) the first date a State adopts, after the date of the enactment of this subsection, standards equal to or more stringent than the revised NAIC Model Regulation (or revised Federal model standards), as the case may be, or

"(ii) the date specified in subparagraph (B), whichever is earlier.

"(B) In the case of a State which the Secretary identifies, in consultation with the Association, as—

"(i) requiring State legislation (other than legislation appropriating funds) in order for medicare supplemental policies to meet standards described in subparagraph (A)(i), but

"(ii) having a legislature which is not scheduled to meet in 1990 in a legislative session in which such legislation may be considered, the date specified in this subparagraph is the first day of the first calendar quarter beginning after the close of the first legislative session of the State legislature that begins on or after January 1, 1990. For purposes of the previous sentence, in the case of a State that has a 2-year legislative session, each year of such session shall be deemed to be a separate regular session of the State legislature.

"(5) In the case of a medicare supplemental policy in effect on January 1, 1990, the policy shall not be deemed to meet the standards the standards in subsection (c) unless each individual who is entitled to benefits under this title and is a policy holder under such policy on such date is sent a notice in any appropriate form by not later than January 31, 1990, that explains—

"(A) the changes in benefits under this title effected by part F of subtitle B of title X of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989, and

"(B) how these changes affect the benefits contained in such policy and the premium for the policy.

"(6) In the case of an insurer which had in effect, as of December 31, 1988, a medicare supplemental policy with respect to an individual, for which the individual terminated coverage as of January 1, 1989 (or the earliest renewal date thereafter), no medicare supplemental policy of the insurer shall be deemed to meet the standards in subsection (c) unless the insurer—

"(A) provides written notice, by January 15, 1990, to the individual (at the most recent available address) of the offer described in subparagraph (B), and

(B) offers to the individual, during the period beginning on January 1, 1990, and ending on March 1, 1990, continuation of coverage under such a medicare supplemental policy (with coverage effective as of January 1, 1990), under the terms respecting treatment of pre-existing conditions and group rating of premium which are at least as favorable to the individual as such terms as existed with respect to the policy as of December 31, 1988.".

(2) It is the same sense of Congress that States should respond, at the earliest practicable date after the date of the enactment of this Act, to requests by insurers for review and approval of riders and premium adjustments for medicare supplemental policies in order to comply with the admendments made by paragraph (1).

(b) ADJUSTMENT OF CONTRACTS WITH PREPAID HEALTH PLANS.—Section 222 of MCCA is amended by inserting "and before January 1, 1990," after "December 31, 1988," each place it appears.

(c) NOTICE OF CHANGES.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall provide, in the notice of medicare benefits provided under section 1804 of the Social Security Act for 1990, for a description of the changes in benefits under title XVIII of such Act made by the amendments made by this part.

(d) MISCELLANEOUS TECHNICAL CORRECTION.—Section 221(g)(3) of MCCA is amended by striking "subsection (f)" and inserting "subsection (e)".

(e) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The provisions of this section shall take effect January 1, 1990, except that the amendment made by subsection (d) shall be effective as if included in the enactment of MCCA.

Subpart 3—Miscellaneous Amendments

SEC. 10191. OTHER MISCELLANEOUS AMENDMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 421 through 425 and 427 of MCCA are repealed and any provision of law amended or repealed by such sections is restored or revived as if such sections had not been enacted.

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The provisions of this section shall take effect January 1, 1990, except that—

(1) the repeal of section 421 of MCCA shall not apply to duplicative part A benefits for periods before January 1, 1990, and

(2) the amendments made by subsection (b) shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

Subpart 4—Provisions Relating to Budget Waivers

SEC. 10195. EXCLUSION FROM CALCULATION OF DEFICIT OF AMENDMENTS MADE BY PART.

The changes in outlays and revenues resulting from the amendments made by this part shall not be counted for fiscal year 1990 for purposes of calculating—

(1) the deficit in each budget of the Federal Government submitted by the President under title 31, United States Code, for purposes of comparison with the maximum deficit amount in section 3(7) of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974;

(2) the deficit under section 3(6) of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 for purposes of comparison with the maximum deficit amount in section 3(7) of such Act; and

(3) the deficit and excess deficit for purposes of sections 251 and 252 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DONNELLY] will be recognized for 30 minutes and a Member opposed will be recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that 15 minutes of my time be yielded to and controlled by the distinguished cosponsor of the amendment, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER].

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to join my colleague, BRIAN DONNELLY, in sponsoring this amendment to repeal the Medicare Catastrophic Act. I recognize that it is unusual for Congress to enact a major program one year and repeal it the next—but regardless of the best intentions of my colleagues who framed this law—I see no other alternative. The Congress should admit it made a mistake and vote today to repeal.

Every since the Depression years, Americans have been told to save for their own retirement. Now—as a result of the catastrophic surtax—senior citizens who sacrificed during their work lives to provide for their own retirement needs have been singled out to pay the highest marginal tax rates borne by any Americans.

Proponents of catastrophic contend that those who receive new benefits and can afford it should pay for the benefits. That sounds fair—but in fact, under the law senior citizens who have saved must pay not only the cost of their own benefits—but also the cost of benefits for six other people—including those who paid no premiums for the coverage, such as those disabled by AIDS.

That last point deserves special attention. People under 65 who are disabled are also eligible for catastrophic benefits—and this flawed law subsidizes the cost of their benefits by taxing our Nation's elderly.

This is just plain bad economic and social policy. In effect, we've told the American people—don't save any more for your own retirement needs—because if you do, your savings and pensions will be penalized when you reach 65.

What seniors get in return is benefits that few needed or wanted—and which only a few will ever receive. When this program was enacted, 80 percent of all senior citizens already had some form of catastrophic coverage. But the new law preempts both private insurance—which cost an average of $420 a year—and Medicaid coverage for the poor—which was paid for by the general treasury. In their place, it will tax each senior citizen up to $1,500 a year by 1993.

And the surtax will only go up and up to pay the mushrooming costs. When Catastrophic was enacted, CBO estimated it would cost $32 billion over 5 year. The most recent estimates are now $48 billion. Estimates for drugs alone have almost doubled. And given our experience with Medicare cost estimates over the past 20 years, you can be sure that even these latest estimates are still grossly low.

Mr. Chairman, repealing Medicare Catastrophic is the only way to assure that we will eliminate the unfair surtax. Any hastily prepared approach, such as the Stark-Gradison amendment would give the surtax an opportunity to rise again—because a vote for Stark-Gradison would leave it up to a House-Senate conference to bargain on Medicare Catastrophic—and the deal would be wrought by those who still believe in the surtax.

If you want to see the surtax repealed, pure and simple, vote for Donnelly-Archer. It's the only vote you can be sure of.

The repeal of Medicare Catastrophic is not the end, but the beginning of a comprehensive effort by a wiser Congress to reform our Nation's health and long-term care system. Only repeal will let us work from a clean slate.

I urge Members to vote for Donnelly-Archer.

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, it has been said here by my distinguished friend from Texas, "Repeal the surtax." That is going to happen anyway.

There was a problem with the financing of catastrophic. The surtax hit middle-income taxpayers and seniors too heavily. The answer was to fix that, not to fracture the whole program.

What we are seeing here, I am afraid, is a paralysis in government. Last week, in terms of the capital gains tax, we had paralysis by polarization. This week on catastrophic we have a different form of paralysis. It is government by default, a government by passiveness.

In terms of Congress, we are responding to misinformation, and we are responding to pressure. In terms of the President, where is he? he is the invisible executive. Instead of a bully pulpit, we have an empty chair.

Some are saying, and my distinguished colleague from Texas has said so, "Let us take another look," but I do not think that is what repeal means. Repeal means a continuation of the old problem. Repeal is not reexamination by Members of this body. It is retreat.

□ 1230

Is it likely that as the budget crisis worsens and an election nears we are going to act on thorny health issues? Will failure to meet any part of a $10 billion need as in this program truly enhance the chances to tackle a $50 billion program?

Full home and nursing care. Is it likely that the repeal of any semblance of relating benefits to income will enhance the chances of a broad attack on this problem? Not at all. Not at all.

In a word, repeal is not reexamination, it is going to be retreat.

Let me add, what might seem like a popular vote today is going to appear less and less appealing as the population ages and Washington equivocates.

There was a problem with the catastrophic funding mechanism. It did hit seniors, especially middle-income seniors, too stringently. The answer is to fix that problem, not throw out the whole program. It is retreat.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, as a respected member of our committee, the gentleman from Michigan knows that our committee spent 3 weeks attempting to "fix" the problems in catastrophic, and the unsatisfactory end result is what is in the reconciliation bill which passed on a 19-to-17 vote.

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman knows, the Ways and Means Committee cut the surtax in half, and we did so in a way that increased the flat rate. If that is unsatisfactory, let us on this floor or in the other ways in conference work at that. But what the gentleman is proposing today is a full-scale retreat, and what he is saying is we have a commission and we will do it another day.

What I am saying is with all the budget pressures and with all the election pressures, as sure as I am standing here, a vote today for repeal and nothing else is turning our back on the seniors of America, and it is not going to be wait until next year, it is going to be like some of those Brooklyn Dodgers teams, I am afraid, it is going to be closer to a decade before we readdress it.

For that reason, while I very much favor reform, I oppose repeal.

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Chairman, I intend to close debate, so I yield 2½ minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. KENNELLY], cosponsor of my amendment.

Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Chairman, what a difference a year can make. I, like many of my colleagues, am surprised to find myself standing here as an original cosponsor with the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DONNELLY] for repeal.

However, I came to the conclusion that this catastrophic health care resembled very much a car that we commonly called a lemon. You buy the car, you are so excited, all good things are going to happen, you are going to get places on time. But then the car breaks down and breaks down. Eventually you realize you have to turn the car in and start all over again.

The members on the Committee on Ways and Means tried to fix this bill almost all summer. We tried so hard and we could not do it. Catastrophic health care is a lemon.

We had some options that we have before us today. The option was the option to spread the tax, take it away from older Americans and spread it around, maybe raise the payroll tax. The payroll tax right now is already too high. Finally, a new option. lower that surtax which was much too high. But how did we do it? We raised the basis on those that didn't have very much. So we come to repeal. I think that is the only answer.

I would say, Mr. Chairman, I have never seen anything like the outcry, yes, across this country from the elderly. But as a former secretary of the State of Connecticut, this is all right. This is the Democratic way. Government is there to help those that cannot help themselves. Obviously this does not apply here.

More importantly, we are not in business to pass laws that people do not want. To put it more bluntly, we are not in the business to ram something down somebody's throat. The people told us they already had the benefit in their retirement plans, that they did not want this piece of legislation. The people told us they liked their Medigap. The people told us they wanted long-term care.

Let us not say today that that is not something we will pay attention to, because we will. They did not want catastrophic. The people wanted long-term care. We did not have the money at the moment for long-term care. We have got to find that somehow.

Mr. Chairman, today one thing is in place, repeal. I wish we did not have to do it, but we made a mistake.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PICKLE].

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment repealing the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act.

If we vote to repeal, it will not be a proud day for this House. It has taken 25 years to pass a law to provide protection for older Americans against the catastrophic cost of either a lengthy acute illness or long-term care.

Last year we finally took the first bold step in enacting the catastrophic coverage law. We recognized at that time that the bill wasn't perfect, but it was an important beginning—the first step to providing comprehensive protection for the elderly.

Now we stand on the brink of repealing this law. And yet I think most of us still believe that there is a need for this protection, perhaps not for all the elderly but certainly for many who will lose everything they have because of the crippling cost of a lengthy illness. We will decide whether to repeal this law, not because it isn't needed, but because we cannot agree on how to pay for the coverage.

It is appropriate that we consider changing the financing of the law. In fact, I proposed an amendment in the Ways and Means Committee to make this coverage truly voluntary and to spread the cost of the protection over a broader population by slightly increasing the Medicare hospital insurance tax. This approach would maintain the traditional approach of the Social Security System and assure that those most in need of coverage would have access to it. I believe this is the best approach for an overall solution, and I think something like it will be the ultimate answer.

However, Mr. Chairman, we will throw away the opportunity to preserve these benefits and to correct the financing if we vote to repeal the law today. We will take an embarrassing step backward and strip older Americans of protection which many are using today. The inpatient hospital benefits and skilled nursing coverage now in effect have been a godsend for many. The fact that thousands of elderly beneficiaries are already using this coverage is silent proof which should speak loudly about the great need for the law.

Mr. Chairman, to repeal catastrophic coverage today is to deny older Americans crucial protection when the need is proven. What will we say to those in hospitals and nursing facilities? Will we tell them to be patient—we will start over from scratch, and one day we may be able to pass another law? That is a poor answer, Mr. Chairman, because once we repeal this law we will have fallen to the very bottom and the climb back up the mountain will be much harder and much longer.

So, Mr. Chairman, I ask the House not to repeal. Let us not go backward. Let us correct it in conference in a way that can be done in conference so that we can retain the program.

How embarrassing to look back years later and say we repealed this bill. If we do that, we send this catastrophic illness program back to the bottom of the hill. We will kill it not for 1 year or 2 years, but indefinitely, and if we do that we are going to find, though our intentions are good, that the climb up the hill is going to be harder and longer. Let us not be embarrassed by our vote.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes and 30 seconds to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FAWELL], chairman of the Republican Task Force on Catastrophic Coverage.

Mr. FAWELL. Mr. Chairman, today I rise in strong support of the Donnelly-Archer amendment to repeal the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988.

Congress has made a mistake in passing the Cat. The Cat went in the wrong direction. It provided benefits seniors did not want nor need. In fact, rather than allow seniors the right to choose this coverage, we mandated they take it.

A senior's highest priority still has not been recognized—long-term custodial nursing home care. This is a benefit all Americans, young and old alike want, and this law does not even address it in the most minimal of ways.

Instead, we provide coverage most seniors already had. In fact, 70 percent of seniors had the coverages provided under Cat through their former employers or Medigap insurance policies. Another 10 percent were already covered for these costs by Medicaid.

Another key problem the Cat created was it relied upon senior financing of not only themselves, but to also subsidize others as well. If that alone were not enough, we created the most unfair way for them to pay. We created a special open-ended income tax on a special group of people. Then we euphemistically named that income tax a supplemental premium.

Who would be hurt by this? Not the poor—they are protected by Medicaid. The rich are also protected by the caps included in the law. It is the middle-income seniors who are hit hardest by the surtax. The very people who did all that we asked them to do; they saved, they invested, and they don't rely on Social Security. They are not rich and they live on a fixed income. This law penalizes them for doing all that Congress ever asked them to do.

Now we face an opportunity to lift this unfair burden and to repeal a program that is currently falling apart under its own weight. The program's costs have exploded. The initial cost estimate of Cat has increased by $18 billion, a 60-percent increase for a program that has not even been fully implemented. That is a fact we cannot ignore and a consequence we cannot overlook because the same middle-income seniors will have to pay the difference.

If we are going to create new benefits and use a senior's own money to finance these benefits don't you think we owe it to them to ask them what benefits they would be interested in paying for.

I think we should. Support the Donnelly-Archer amendment and give seniors the right to choose.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAYES].

Mr. HAYES of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to express my concern about efforts to repeal the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988. As we are all aware, just 1 year has passed since the enactment of the new law and now we are back again trying to determine who should pay for the cost of these needed services.

Rising health care costs faced by our Nation's elderly is of crucial importance to me, especially for those elderly that are attempting to survive on very low, fixed incomes. I strongly believe that the catastrophic care program created last year fills a very real need for older Americans, but the obvious problem is the financing mechanism. Today, it is my hope that we will retain the positive aspects of the program while at the same time correct the problems in its financing.

I am entirely opposed to the complete repeal of the act. While it is clearly an answer for those that are able to afford to pay for their own catastrophic coverage, I think there are some that too quickly forget about those that are in need of help, those that cannot afford to pay for this service. I know for a fact that my constituents are in need of this legislation.

For those of my colleagues who today support a repeal, believing that in a few years the issue will again be considered, I ask that you consider what might happen to those elderly and disabled that are in need of catastrophic health coverage now and that are barely financially able to make ends meet.

Are we not tired of deliberately making survival more and more difficult for those that are economically disadvantaged? We have been unsuccessful in defeating the capital gains exclusion, which only benefits the wealthy—we have been unsuccessful in passing a much needed minimum wage increase, which would clearly benefit those trying to rise above the poverty line—and we have failed to halt the exploitation of pension plans by corporate interests.

Today, I encourage my colleagues to support the interests of those elderly that are most in need of some protection against catastrophic expenses by not totally repealing the law, but by making the necessary changes and improvements to the law while retaining the positive and much needed benefits.

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ROWLAND], one of only two physicians in the House of Representatives.

Mr. ROWLAND of Georgia. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, last year we made a mistake. Let us face it. Let us admit it.

Now we have a chance to correct that mistake. Let us not correct that mistake through a partially thought-out provision in order to get to where we think we ought to be.

But let us correct this mistake completely.

You know we have with this legislation which we passed last year churned up a lot of hostility out there. Mr. Chairman, we have been churning up hostility now for many years, some 20-odd years.

It seems that we never learn from our mistakes.

Shortly after we enacted Medicare in 1965, the cost went up much more than anticipated, so we put a fee freeze in place in the early 1970's just on medical fees.

Imagine what price controls did in just one area. In 1974, then, we passed a National Health Planning and Resources Development Act. We created all these HSA's around the country, creating more hostility.

Then, in 1983 we passed an amendment to the Social Security Reform Act, the prospective patient system; the DRG's. What we did with that was to close down several hundred rural hospitals and some 90-odd hospitals in urban areas that treat mostly Medicare and Medicaid patients, the very people we are trying to help.

What that did was to begin to shift some of the cost of the Medicare program over to the private sector, so now we have industrialists who are finding that the costs of health care insurance is going up and they are calling for a federally funded national health program.

Isn't that something? Can you believe that? Industrialists are doing this, people who have profited under our free enterprise system.

At the town meetings that I have, almost everyone tells me, the elderly citizens, how much they are concerned about whether or not they are going to have access to health care and whether or not they are going to be able to pay for that care.

Then we did something else.

We are going to Medicare, looking for money to meet the Gramm-Rudman targets, $5 billion in fiscal year 1988 and 1989, $2.8 billion of that in the next fiscal year. There's some terrible inconsistency about that. In fact, we have been floundering around with an incremental approach in trying to address the problems in our health care delivery system and we are just making it worse.

We have not even looked at the young people trying to get started, to raise their families, some 30 million-odd people that do not have any insurance. What about long-term health care?

In reconciliation for 7 to 8 years now we have been tinkering with our health system, micromanaging it, creating more hostility.

Medical science is moving incredibly fast in developing new technologies that improve health care and the quality of life, and we are moving just as fast in Congress, tearing down the system that delivers that care.

We must stop this incremental approach in addressing the problems in our system. We must make fundamental changes, we must restructure the system to provide comprehensive care for all cities of our country.

The best part of the catastrophic bill was the bipartisan commission that was created. Let this commission look at the problems, look at some of the proposals to restructure the system and make recommendations to the Congress. We must stop this myopic approach.

The whole health care delivery system is in danger. We must act to save this system that provides the best quality of care of any in the world.

Vote "yes" on repeal and stand firm.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. STARK].

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, I think that we may see in the next half hour or so the conclusion of one of the shortest legislative victories in my career in this House. But I would like those of you, particularly those among the 302 of you who voted for this bill last year, to know what you are doing when you allow the most well-to-do, highly organized minority of senior citizens to turn you away from the 20 million seniors you are about to expose to catastrophic financial ruin.

There are 20 million seniors without prescription drug benefits, and you are going to deny this valuable benefit to them—perhaps for all time.

There are 20 million seniors who will pay no surtax. As a matter of fact, there are 28 million who will pay way below the $800 that has been touted by the hysteria-mongers that have turned you away from the majority of your senior constituents.

Seventy-seven percent of the Americans do not want repeal, and almost two-thirds of the seniors do not want repeal.

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARK. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts who is about to do in the poor in his district.

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is incorrect on that statement as he was on the prior one.

I think the gentleman is referring to numbers in a poll that appeared on ABC News last night. I think it is important for the edification of the Members that they understand exactly what the poll said. When you read the poll but what did not appear on television, 80 percent of the people over 65 say they wanted the program repealed, and that is a fact.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, I am sure that as many Members have read the poll as there are Members who read the bill when they voted for it, and have read the amendment of the repealers.

What I am suggesting is that we are being stampeded by a group, representing a small group of the wealthiest seniors, to deny needed benefits to a majority of seniors. This is tragic, but this is exactly what is happening.

It is not my intention to try to protect this body from itself. That is a job for those with far more experience than I have.

When you repeal, you should understand what you are doing. You are going to cause the death of 4,000 elderly women next year, 9 in each of your districts, by denying them mammography screening.

You are going to deny extended hospital or doctor care to the 20 million seniors who would pay no extra surtax for these benefits.

Think about it carefully. Repeal would eliminate respite care for families that need it. Repeal would eliminate benefits for those without employer-based coverage.

Let me suggest for all of the seniors who said, "I already have those benefits," those who have the benefits of the auto companies and the airlines, they may have benefits until the next leveraged buyout when they will disappear more quickly than this legislation.

I urge you to do the right thing and to oppose the Donnelly amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will notify the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DONNELLY] that he has 10 minutes remaining, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] has 19 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER] has 8½ minutes remaining.

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 seconds.

In all due respect to the chairman of the Subcommittee on Health, on which I serve, I think that some of the statements that were made in the gentleman's presentation should be corrected for the record. I think the level of debate should not be lowered to what I consider to be demagogic statements that were made in the gentleman's statement. To say that voting for repeal causes elderly women to die is outrageous, and this institution deserves better debate.

Therefore, I hope over the course of the next hour we debate facts and not demagogic statements.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MOODY].

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, I want to make just two points about catastrophic health care insurance, and why it is important not to repeal it. In doing so, I want to respond to the claims that are often made: First, that this bill only benefits a few; and second, that it is unfair to charge an income-based premium.

First, catastrophic coverage benefits everyone who is potentially eligible, just as fire insurance benefits everyone who is covered. Individuals do not have a benefit from fire insurance only when they have a fire. They benefit from fire insurance if they are covered at all, even if no fire ever occurs. And the benefits are enormous under catastrophic insurance.

The second point I want to make relates to the income-based premium. Specifically, I want to respond to what the Members of Congress, who say "Why should my upper-income constituents subsidize 5 others or 4 others who are not upper income, when my wealthy constituents pay the income-based premium?" In response I would say that catastrophic is not just a health care program. It is a program to insure savings, to shield life savings of the elderly from being wiped out by the cost of serious illness. In a sense, we already insure the health care of poor people, but then shift the cost onto someone else, either private insurance payers or onto local taxpayers. What this program is, is an asset protection program. It protects people from being wiped out. It protects their life savings. Now, if a person is wealthy, if a person is fortunate enough to be wealthy and have a high income, that person benefits—not by the same amount, but more. It is only fitting, therefore, that that person pay a premium that is more. To insist, as many Members and some senior citizen organizations do, that everybody pay the same, would be like saying everybody should pay the same premium for fire insurance, whether or not they are insuring a mansion or a shack. That would be unfair. It would be equally unfair to insist that everybody pay the same premium for catastrophic health care coverage.

So this program is basically asset protection, and for the many Members who have stood on this floor and said we should scrap catastrophic care and move to long-term care, which they say our constituents really need instead of catastrophic, let me remind those Members that a long-term would really be asset protection, clear and simple. Hence it would truly benefit the well-off the most. If we shrink from the concept of paying for catastrophic coverage with some of income-related premium we will never be able to do that for long-term care.

I would, at this point, like to place in the RECORD my full statement as to why catastrophic health care coverage should not be repealed:

I rise in strong opposition to the Donnelly-Archer amendment to repeal the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act. The amendment by my colleagues on the Ways and Means Committee is the epitome of the old adage that "when you're being run out of town get out in front and make it look like a parade." But this is not a parade that any of us should rush to join.

The pressure to "just get rid of this issue" is undeniable. To yield to it is wrong.

None of the major senior citizen groups advocate repeal of the MCCA. Not even the National Committee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare—which has gone out of its way to mislead seniors on the MCCA—wants the coverage or the benefits repealed.

Your constituents are not going to thank you for voting for this ill-conceived and hasty amendment. You will not be making a good public policy choice.

Let me address just a few of the major misconceptions about the MCCA.

First, only a minority of seniors benefit: This is just plain wrong. Every single senior citizen benefits from the coverage. Above all, the MCCA is a Federal Medigap insurance program. The protection offered by the insurance is a benefit to every single senior citizen in this country. We don't argue that fire insurance is of benefit only if your house burns down. The benefit of the insurance is clearly in the peace of mind that the protection provides from financial ruin. So it is with the MCCA.

Second, the cost outweighs the benefits: This is just plain wrong. Just briefly, here are the main benefits of the MCCA, beyond the insurance value:

Hospital coverage: Single annual deductible, no coinsurance, 365 days of care per year.

Nursing coverage: one hundred fifty days of coverage, coinsurance cut by two-thirds, elimination of the 3-day prior hospitalization requirement.

Home health: seven days a week of care for 38 days.

Respite care: eighty hours a year of respite care.

Prescription drugs: A major new benefit.

Doctor's bills: Real out-of-pocket limits on the fastest growing health care expense facing seniors today.

Mammography: A major new benefit which will save thousands of lives.

These are just a few of the benefits which will be eliminated by adoption of the misguided Donnelly-Archer amendment.

Third, the financing is unfair: This is just plain nonsense. Who is really paying for catastrophic coverage? Of the 33 million Medicare beneficiaries, 19.2 million will pay $0—nothing—in the supplemental tax. That's 58 percent of beneficiaries who won't pay a penny in the surtax for the MCCA. Another 4 million—12.8 percent—will pay less than $100 per year—less than $10 per month—for the coverage. Altogether, nearly 90 percent—9 out of 10—seniors will pay less than $400 per year for this coverage. And the majority will not pay one single penny in surtax for it.

On the other end a grand total of 1.8 million seniors—just 5.5 percent of all Medicare beneficiaries—will pay the $800 cap under current law. Barely 10 percent of all seniors will pay $400 or more for the coverage.

Under the changes adopted by the Ways and Means Committee that are now part of the reconciliation bill, an even smaller fraction of seniors will pay the $800 maximum. In fact, a couple would have to have a retirement income of $80,000 to $100,000 per year to pay the maximum premium—clearly among the wealthiest taxpayers in the country, and certainly among the very wealthiest of senior citizens.

Is it sound public policy to repeal the MCCA when more than 95 percent of beneficiaries will not pay the $800 cap, and when 90 percent won't pay even one-half the maximum?

Who is benefiting from the repeal? It is not going to be the 25 percent of seniors who cannot afford Medigap. It is not going to be the 58 percent of seniors who won't pay a penny in surtax for the coverage. It is not going to be the seniors in nursing homes who will lose the expanded Medicare nursing benefit. It is not going to be the millions of seniors who will lose the prescription drug benefit.

The principal winners will be the wealthiest senior citizens in the country.

(4). We should repeal catastrophic and enact a long-term care bill: A long-term care program will cost $60 billion a year, minimum. Proponents of repeal know this. Who do they think that they're kidding. If we are not going to hold fast on a $10 billion catastrophic coverage program, where are we going to find the courage to enact a $60 billion long-term care program? If your seniors are angry about a catastrophic program where the costs are so modest and borne by so few, how do you think they will react to a bill that is six times as large? Advocating repeal in exchange for the promise of a long-term care program is a hoax.

Mr. Chairman, the easy solution to the MCCA problem is to push for repeal. But we are not elected to make the easy choices. We are not elected to make the wrong choices. And repeal is both. I urge my colleagues to reject this rush to judgment.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman makes an interesting point about fire insurance.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 seconds.

Mr. Chairman, surely the gentleman would not say that the elderly who have saved should pay the insurance premiums for six others, so they get insurance on their home, would he?

I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. MOODY. No.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, so actually there is no real comparison, and the subsidy is to six people to pay their insurance premiums, from a person who has saved and is elderly.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MOODY].

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, my point is only this: For those who say this program should be scrapped in favor of something that is not income-based in its cost structure, or in its premium structure, I say remember that the beneficiaries benefit very differently, depending on their own income status. Those who have more, have more at stake and therefore more that is insured. They should pay more. Those without any assets or savings do not need catastrophic health care insurance as much. They are going to be covered, basically, through Medicaid or uncompensated care or charity that shifts the cost to private insurance, or is borne by public tax dollars. It is those who have assets, those who have appreciable life savings, who are the ones that benefit the most. The more a person has, the more a person benefits.

So it would be grossly inappropriate and inequitable for all people to pay the same. Different people have an enormously different benefit from the program, depending on their income level. Thus high retirement income people should pay more than folks with little or nothing.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 seconds.

I hope the gentleman understands, irrespective of what assets a person has, this coverage is limited to 1 year of hospitalization care. Therefore, it does not protect all of one's assets, and if it is truly to be an insurance concept, then it certainly should be based on people paying their own premium, if they can afford to pay it, and not dumping that burden on those who have saved to pay not only their own premium but that for six other people.

Mr. MOODY. If the gentleman will yield, it goes on forever, I will remind the gentleman. It is not 1 year.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume, to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS].

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Donnelly-Archer amendment.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PORTER].

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Chairman, as 1 of 27 who voted "no" on the legislation originally, I rise in support of the Donnelly-Archer amendment.

Mr. Chairman, last week I attended a reception at which Senators from both parties spoke on the topic of catastrophic. They asked themselves what are the lessons that we, as legislators, have learned from the outpouring of senior opposition to this law? Why are seniors so mad at us when all we tried to do was help them?

The answer they all agreed, was simply that Congress had failed to properly educate the public about how good the benefits are and how little they really will cost the average senior.

Mr. Chairman, I was shocked to still be hearing this kind of analysis. There are two lessons we can learn from catastrophic: First, don't give people benefits that they didn't ask for; and second, don't make people pay the Government for benefits that the vast majority of them already have.

Mr. Chairman, the fact is that seniors did not ask us to give them the kind of coverage that we gave them in the catastrophic law. Why should they? Eighty-five percent of them already have similar coverage through Medicaid, Medigap, or employer-provided insurance coverage. What seniors really wanted was long-term care coverage.

But we had an election coming up. We knew we could not afford a long-term care entitlement, but we did not want to appear to be ignoring seniors. So we gave them a lot of benefits they didn't want and we couldn't pay for.

That to me seems reason enough to repeal this legislation. But beyond that, there are good practical reasons for repeal. Mr. Chairman, everyone now agrees that the catastrophic program is going to add billions of dollars to the deficit over the next several years, as the costs of benefits exceed revenues.

Everyone from the GAO to CBO to the White House knows that catastrophic is a budget buster. Mr. Chairman, it's time to repeal this nightmare and face up to the American people. If we cannot afford long-term care for the elderly, we ought to tell them so. We certainly shouldn't be giving them this catastrophic sham.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. KOLBE].

Mr. KOLBE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Donnelly-Archer amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have heard from over 1,500 seniors from my district about the Catastrophic Act, twice as many as wrote concerning the congressional pay raise. This issue has also been raised at every townhall I have held since the first of the year. Out of all this outcry, I can count on one hand the voices that have spoken in favor of the Catastrophic Act. This is not a few displeased constituents; this is the public yelling its outrage.

The defenders of the act also suggest that all seniors care about is the surtax or don't understand the benefits of the act. Sure they are upset about the surtax, but they are upset because it doesn't cover the care, the cost of which can truly lead to financial catastrophe—long-term nursing home or custodial care. It has been estimated by the Congressional Research Service that only 4 percent of Medicare beneficiaries will utilize the provisions and benefits of the Catastrophic Act.

Congressman STARK is proposing that we scrap most of the Medicare benefits while retaining the Medicaid benefits and the new prescription drug benefit. What we are left with is the Stark amendment that was tacked on to the Catastrophic Act in 1987. Essentially, the Stark amendment takes the catastrophic out of the Catastrophic Act.

To sweeten the pot, this amendment eliminates the onerous surtax and keeps the $4 a month part B premium increase to cover the costs. The problem is, the Stark amendment does not come close to paying for itself. If the Stark amendment prevails the new prescription drug benefit will cause the part B premium to rise an additional $16.75 a month by 1993 or face falling seriously in the red.

I know many of my colleagues are going to be tempted by this amendment. Many will also be tempted to vote for total repeal and then turn around and support the Stark amendment to save some of the benefits. Such an action would be hypocritical and wrong. And don't for 1 minute think that our seniors won't figure out what "King of the Hill" means.

Millions of seniors have exercised their most basic right: They've petitioned their Government to protest a law that they feel is unjust. They have written or called their Congressman and Senators, many for the first time ever. They've signed petitions. They've attended townhalls. They've waited long enough. It is time to repeal the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act and start from scratch. Support the Donnelly-Archer amendment and reject the Stark amendment.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BUNNING].

Mr. BUNNING. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Donnelly-Archer amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it is always hard to say you were wrong. It is difficult to admit that you made a mistake.

That is why this vote today is so hard for so many people. Because this vote today is an admission that Congress made a mistake last year when it passed the catastrophic health care bill. A very big mistake.

Last year the AARP and other senior citizen groups made a mistake and misread what their membership wanted. Last year, Congress made a mistake and misread what its constituents wanted. And together they passed a landmark piece of legislation—a landmark disaster.

As soon as the senior citizen community across this country got a basic understanding of what this law which was dumped in their laps really did and really cost, it generated a storm of outrage that made Hugo look like an autumn breeze.

Some people—who don't like admitting they made a mistake—are now trying to tell us that it is only wealthy retirees, only the rich retirees who are complaining about the catastrophic bill. That is nonsense. Any one of you who has been out and about in your district knows that is not true.

You don't generate a storm this size with just a few isolated elderly people. Virtually every older person who mentioned the issue to me was opposed to the catastrophic health bill and not just a little bit. It didn't matter where I met them, at nursing homes or senior citizen housing; at church picnics or political events; out in rural Pendleton County or in the suburbs of Louisville. They were virtually unanimously opposed to the Catastrophic Health Care Act. It was not just the rich. It was the overwhelming majority.

This law was well intentioned—no one disputes that. But it was off target. The major concern of senior citizens is long term nursing home and home health care—things that this bill did not provide.

It is easy for me to say Congress made a mistake because I was 1 of the 72 who voted against it the first time around. But it is time for everyone to recognize that when you do something to help someone and they all get angry about it, you probably did not do a very good job the first time.

It is time to repeal catastrophic and start over.

For this reason, I also urge my colleagues to reject the Stark-Gradison amendment. It slices the catastrophic health pie up a good bit and eliminates the most odious portion of catastrophic—the income tax surcharge. But it leaves intact the costly drug benefit program which benefits so few.

When Congress was working on the catastrophic health bill, it promised the elderly an apple cobbler but gave them a cow pie instead. And no matter how you slice a cow pie, it is still the same old manure.

We need outright repeal so we can start over with more wholesome ingredients.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DUNCAN].

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Archer-Donnelly amendment to repeal.

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased that today indications are that the House will act to repeal the Catastrophic Coverage Act.

I have received more mail, phone calls, and personal contacts on this issue than almost any other.

Out of several thousands communications, I have had only two people from my district to speak in favor of this law as it was written.

This Catastrophic Coverage Act is not wanted or needed by the overwhelming majority of our senior citizens—the very people it was designated to help.

It should be repealed today by this House.

I have said many times that all legislation sounds good on the surface. All bills have good titles.

But just because a bill has a good title does not mean that it is a good bill.

I support the Donnelly-Archer amendment to repeal the Catastrophic Coverage Act, rather than the proposed Stark-Gradison alternative, for the following reasons:

The Stark-Gradison amendment repeals the supplemental premium, but it retains the significant increase in the Medicare part B flat rate premium that all part B participants must pay.

By 1993, this increase goes to $10.20 per month, which makes for a total monthly premium of $42.60. Only those senior citizens with extremely high prescription drug costs will see any benefit from this increase.

Under Stark-Gradison, Medicare will spend more than $2 billion to set up the administrative system for a drug benefit which will help only 5.9 million of the 34 million beneficiaries in 1993.

The prescription drug benefit is likely to explode in cost. CBO estimated when catastrophic was signed into law that the drug benefit through 1993 would cost $5.7 billion. However, by this past July, CBO had doubled this estimate to $11.8 billion.

While Stark-Gradison claims that its program will pay for itself, its initial year premiums will only pay for the benefits if the CBO estimates are correct. However, both the drug and respite benefits are new and the estimate are far from certain.

Moreover, a Wall Street Journal editorial of September 20, 1989, points out that catastrophic coverage was estimated to cost $30 billion through 1993 and to run a $9 billion surplus. CBO updated its projections last month to a cost of $48 billion and a deficit of over $6 billion.

The editorial goes on to say that miscalculations of past entitlement programs have contributed to their growth over the past 30 years. It says, "* * * Medicare spending is now nearly $100 billion a year, and is growing at twice the rate of medical costs and 2½ times the rate of inflation."

The Catastrophic Coverage Act is part of that growth and, what is more, it will greatly increase our deficit. Our senior citizens at home do not want it. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I support repeal of the Catastrophic Coverage Act.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. JAMES].

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to express my full support of the Donnelly-Archer amendment to repeal the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988. Although well-intentioned, this program has not only fallen short of its purpose of meeting seniors' catastrophic health care costs, the program's so-called supplemental premium has created a catastrophic expense for the very people it was meant to help.

More than 5,000 of my constituents have contacted me to express their opposition to the current form of the Medicare Catastrophic Program. They have numerous reasons for their views which I understand and share. One reason is that many seniors already have private coverage of catastrophic health care expenses. A second reason is the supplemental premium which can cost as much as 1,600 per couple per year.

My constituents want this program repealed, and they want their Congress to craft a program to meet the Nation's long-term care needs. This important task should not—and cannot—be achieved on the House floor. Let's not do a cut and past job on such an important program. Let's support an outright repeal of the Catastrophic Program so we can meet our constituents pleas and move on to crafting a true workable program.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Goss].

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Donnelly-Archer amendment.

Mr. Chairman, my constituents—and the senior citizens across this country—have waited for this day for a very long time. Today, thanks to an incredible grassroots effort on the part of thousands of older Americans, this House will vote on whether to repeal the badly flawed Catastrophic Health Care Act.

When a handful of my colleagues and I began this battle almost 10 months ago it was something like David staring at the boots of an imposing Goliath.

Catastrophic health care was a done deal, we were told. It's only a small, vocal minority that dislikes the measure, we were told. We need this bill to meet our deficit targets, we were told.

But the senior citizens refused to buy that. They continued the drumbeat for repeal—the thousands upon thousands of cards, letters, petitions, and phone calls—the well-organized protests and personal appeals. And it worked.

Mr. Chairman, we cannot shy away from our responsibility to take this faulty law off the books once and for all. There is no point in trying to save face with a so-called compromise.

This is not time to compromise. Today we have a tremendous opportunity to do the right thing—to demonstrate to the American people that we can and do listen to their concerns.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to cast their votes for complete repeal of the Catastrophic Health Care Act—a law that is unfair, unwanted and economically unsound.

And then Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to make their repeal vote count by opposing the Stark alternative.

It's time to clean the slate on this issue and start again by developing a large-term health care program that works and that is fairly funded.

Mr. RUSSO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RUSSO].

Mr. RUSSO. Mr. Chairman, just to correct the record for all my colleagues who are asking to support the Donnelly-Archer amendment, I would like to inform them that it was originally the Donnelly-Russo amendment, and we are more than happy to welcome the gentleman from Texas on board. I would like the RECORD to reflect whose amendment it was.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I am happy to. It could be called the Donnelly-Archer-Russo amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The unanimous-consent request has taken up 1½ minutes. Let the Chair bring Members up-to-date. At this point the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DONNELLY] has 9½ minutes remaining, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] has 15 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER] has 7½ minutes remaining.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FIELDS].

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Archer-Donnelly-Russo provision.

Mr. Chairman, I was 1 of just 72 Members who voted against this legislation last year. I did so because I was doubtful that the benefits promised by this legislation would ever reach our Nation's elderly. Today, I can say that my worst fears have been realized.

The Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act does not provide health care for senior citizens; rather it merely levies harsh and burdensome income taxes on the middle-income elderly. It does not protect older Americans from the most common catastrophic health care costs, such as long term care. Rather, it imposes a significant income surtax on the elderly, many of whom will never receive the benefits for which they are being taxed.

The new income tax primarily hurts middle-income retirees, not the affluent, as its supporters claimed last year. As the representative of the 8th Congressional District of Texas, older men and women have approached me and asked, "Why? Why did Congress do this to us? Don't they know we're hurting enough already?"

Since the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act was enacted, I have received over 2,000 letters in opposition to this plan. My constituents are angry and they demand that we eliminate this well-intentioned, but fatally flawed program. Mr. Chairman, older men and women in my district are not well-to-do retirees looking for a free ride. They're retired refinery workers, truck drivers, teachers, and dockworkers. And they pay enough taxes without this additional burden being placed upon them. The surtax imposed on middle-income retirees by the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act represents an unacceptable financial burden for them. They simply cannot afford this legislation.

Mr. Chairman, the men and women in my district who have been hurt most by this proposal—at least most of them—have saved for a lifetime so they will not be dependent on the Government or their children. The only problem is that increasingly, they realize that they might become dependent on both the Government and their children—they might have to ask their children for money to pay these outrageous taxes to the Government.

Perhaps the biggest reason that this new law has provoked a storm of outrage by older Americans is that they are upset that their financial futures can be so jeopardized by a Congress who does not understand their needs and has forced them into accepting a bad financial deal.

While I originally supported legislation to delay implementation of the law for 2 years, I have concluded that the only sensible answer is for Congress to repeal the whole Medicare Catastrophic Act and rethink its basic assumptions.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to support the Donnelly-Archer amendment to repeal the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act. Simply restructuring the law—as the Ways and Means plan or the Stark-Gradison-Waxman proposal would do—does not begin to address the law's fundamental problems. Repeal is the only alternative.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I am for repeal of the catastrophic health care provisions that hurt the seniors in this country.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Donnelly-Archer amendment and in opposition of the Stark-Gradison amendment.

My vote against catastrophic coverage last year wasn't very popular at the time. I'm pleased to see that my position has been vindicated. I have never seen so many senior citizens so upset about any single piece of legislation.

The basic problem with the Catastrophic Coverage Act is that it costs seniors too much and gives them too little. Only 7 percent of the Medicare recipients will receive any of the new benefits this year for hospital stays or doctors' bills. Only 17 percent will receive any prescription drug benefits. At the same time, the surtax the elderly have to pay makes them one of the highest taxed groups in America. This just isn't right.

The No. 1 health-care concern for the elderly is long-term nursing home care and long-term in-home care, and the Catastrophic Care Act didn't offer any solutions to these serious problems. We should go back to the drawing board now to work on solutions to these serious problems.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RITTER].

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Chairman, as the Member who introduced the first repeal bill on the first day of the 101st Congress, I rise in strong support of the catastrophic repeal.

Mr. Chairman, as the first Member of Congress to introduce a bill to repeal the Catastrophic Act in the 101st Congress, I rise in strong support of the Donnelly-Archer repeal amendment.

At a recent senior citizens gathering in my district this weekend, I heard once again from the people who count.

And they are counting on us to repeal the catastrophe we gave them.

The good news out of all of this is that the House has listened to the people and is about to act.

Now, I say to my colleagues, that seniors do not want us to put a facade on a decrepit building.

They don't want a Jerry-built quick fix. They want us to put our efforts into something constructive that would truly help them: long-term care.

When asked to choose between the current Medicare catastrophic coverage or a new long-term care program, only 10 percent of the respondents of the Wirthlin survey preferred the catastrophic coverage as it now exists.

Sixty-five percent of the respondents preferred long-term care coverage and 14 percent where undecided.

That's the message we have been hearing.

The Stark revision, however, continues to move us in the wrong direction.

It attempts to put a good face on the catastrophic bill, but it retains the most expensive and most unpredictable provision, the drug prescription benefit.

Seniors do not want to pay an increase of $16.90 per month in 1994 for an additional drug benefit that they haven't asked for. That is the estimate, too, and we all know what happens to health care cost estimates.

And it makes no sense to shift the cost for this unwanted program to the lower-income seniors as the reconciliation package requires.

What we have before us uses up both seniors' capital and their patience.

Long-term care will never get to the drawing board as long as the catastrophic bill remains on the table.

Vote for repeal and against revision.

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Nevada [Mr. BILBRAY].

Mr. BILBRAY. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of the amendment offered by Mr. DONNELLY and Mr. ARCHER to repeal the Catastrophic Act. There is absolutely no doubt in my mind that my constituents want total, outright repeal of the act. More than 15,000 of my senior constituents have signed petitions calling for repeal of this law, and a group formed to advocate repeal of the act regularly draws in excess of 1,000 seniors to its meetings in Las Vegas, which is located in my district.

In the thousands of letters that I have received from my senior constituents on this act, there was one consistent theme—senior citizens already, through their Medigap policies, have the benefits that the catastrophic law provides. In fact, my constituents often obtained these benefits at a lower cost through the private sector than they did under the catastrophic law.

It is clear what we must do—repeal the Catastrophic Act now, and then get to work on a comprehensive health care package that will address the needs of all Americans, especially our senior citizens, and the 37 million Americans who have no health insurance.

One of the newspapers from my district, the Las Vegas Sun, stated the case for repeal very well in a recent editorial, and I now insert this editorial in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

[From the Las Vegas Sun, Sept. 24, 1989]

CATASTROPHIC HEALTH CARE ACT HAS MANY COSTLY FLAWS

The Catastrophic Health Care Act, which was designed to expand Medicare coverage to protect seniors from the rising costs of hospitalization and prescription drugs, seemed like a good idea when it was approved by Congress barely a year ago.

But in practice, the new senior health plan has proved too costly for many senior citizens, who often have to stay within strict budgets to simply buy food and make mortgage or rent payments. In addition, it has forced some seniors to pay for benefits they already receive through private insurance programs.

As a result of these negative effects, elderly people across the nation have joined a Las Vegas-based lobbying group in seeking repeal of the well-meaning but flawed catastrophic act.

Senior citizens, following the lead of the grassroots Senior Coalition Against Catastrophic Act have garnered the support of hundreds of congressional officials, including Nevada's delegation, which originally voted for the bill.

The act is now being examined closely by congressional committees, which have proposed various ways of altering the act to give the hardest-hit seniors some relief. More hearings are scheduled.

Unfortunately, many of the proposed modifications appear to only make matters worse. Changes recently approved by a House committee, for example, would raise costs for nearly 60 percent of beneficiaries, with the biggest losers being seniors with incomes just above the poverty line.

The only real answer to the problems created by the Catastrophic Health Care Act is repealing the act in its entirety. While the act's benefits surely would be missed, most seniors believe they would be better off without them. Most seniors would rather have enough money in their pockets to pay the bills than fork out hundreds of dollars for benefits many of them don't use.

Congressional leaders should listen to America's growing senior population, which has spoken loudly and clearly on this issue. They want the catastrophic act repealed.

If the catastrophic act were repealed, it may be possible at some future date to consider enacting legislation that expands Medicare coverage. But thorough studies are needed first to determine the best formula for a fair and equitable catastrophic coverage plan.

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GLICKMAN].

Mr. GLICKMAN. The passage of the Donnelly amendment repealing this catastrophic health insurance bill should not be the end of the debate on health care policy. Rather, it should be the beginning, giving us the opportunity to examine health care in America in a more comprehensive, less piecemeal way. That is why I will vote for the amendment.

The health care problems in America are immense. We have five examples.

First, 15 percent of our population, mostly young, have no health insurance at all;

Second, millions of our elderly have no nursing or long-term security;

Third, we have one of the highest infant mortality rates of any civilized nation in the world;

Fourth, our health care costs are escalating dramatically; and

Fifth, hospitals in urban and rural America are in deep trouble financially because of uncompensated care, and many physicians are leaving medicine for similar reasons.

I disagree with those who say that repeal is abdication or retreat by this Congress on health care policy. The American people want major comprehensive changes in national health policy, but they want it financed fairly, and they also want it for all Americans, young and old.

Mr. Chairman, that is the message of the voters today.

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. MARTINEZ].

Mr. MARTINEZ. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Russo-Donnelly-Archer amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of repealing the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act. Congress obviously enacted a law which was too burdensome for the participants in the program, those who have paid into Social Security for many years, relying on their Government to provide needed cash and medical coverage. In effect we let them down by enacting a law which cost many of them more than they could afford.

Today I will be supporting the Donnelly-Archer amendment to repeal this act although if I had my choice, I would be here supporting a measure to cover catastrophic care costs by including it in a long-term payment, which people would pay into throughout their lifetime, as included in the combined employer/employee contribution to Social Security, of which there is 2.90 percent which is for Medicare part a hospital insurance. Through these payments we are able to cover many of the costs of the hospital insurance. A small increase in that would go a long way in providing the extended benefit of catastrophic health care.

To me there exists a fundamental idea of Americans paying smaller premiums throughout their life for coverage by a program. For instance, we also pay taxes for school services before and after we have children who benefit. Some pay without ever having children because its important to our society. The same principle is in Social Security and this same principle should be extended to any social program, especially in health care for our elderly citizens.

Because the proposals we have to choose from today do not address the problems of comprehensive long-term health care in a reasonable way I sincerely believe that we should repeal the act and make a sincere commitment to finding a proper solution to the problems that will start us on the road toward providing the needed benefits to America's seniors without over burdening them at the same time. But I will vote for the Waxman-Stark-Gradison amendment hoping that this will open the door for more discussion and more legislation that will provide our seniors with a sense of security when they are faced with long-term health problems.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman fron New York [Mr. BOEHLERT].

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to repeal.

Who says that Congress is not concerned with minority rights? We are now in the process of listening to and responding to the demands of thousands while we are turning our backs on the needs of millions.

I think Charlie Osgood of CBS had it right yesterday in his commentary. Here is what he had to say when considering the plight of those who need health and catastrophic insurance:

When there's money on the table, lots of folks will reach and grab. But the reaching that's missing is the reaching for the tab.

Lots of folks will reach and grab, but the long and short of it is this: Who is going to pay?

Let us not walk away from that crisis. Let us face it squarely. If we do not like the surtax, let us revise it, but let us not scrap this whole program. We have thousands and thousands of Americans who every day lose everything because of catastrophic illness. Are we going to walk away from them because we have a boxfull of postcards from people who say, "We demand repeal" when in many instances they are arguing against a surtax they are not even going to pay?

Mr. Chairman, I urge opposition to repeal.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER].

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Chairman, I thank my friend for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, as one of the 72 who proudly voted against this bill when we had it up last year, I naturally stand here in strong support of the effort to repeal.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Donnelly amendment to repeal the Medicare Catastrophic Protection Act, and want to commend the author for his diligent work in bringing this historic amendment to the floor. It is, indeed, historic because we have before us today the opportunity to reverse the momentum of those advocating nationalization of our Nation's health care industry. It is a policy that has failed the American people, and it should be repealed.

Many of my colleagues seem to be surprised by the reaction of the senior citizen community to the catastrophic health care law, in spite of the fact that we were forewarned of its consequences. Thousands of pages of testimony were presented to Congress providing evidence that passage of the Medicare Catastrophic Protection Act would be expensive, unnecessary, and overly burdensome to our Nation's elderly.

Senior Americans throughout the country told us that the program duplicates health care services already provided in the private market. They told us that it imposes massive premium and income tax increases on the elderly for benefits that as many as 97 percent may never receive, and for coverage that most already have available through supplemental insurance. They told us that it neglects the most catastrophic costs associated with long-term care—expensive nursing home care for the chronically ill. Congress chose to ignore this advice and today, we are trying to undo the biggest catastrophe ever afflicted upon our Nation's elderly.

In supporting repeal of what is obviously a bad law, I also want to express one major concern. Mr. Chairman, I have seen press reports indicating that there may be some animosity directed toward those senior citizens that opposed the catastrophic surtax, and that they can forget about future legislation to address the more pressing problem of long-term custodial care. I hope that is not the case.

I eagerly await the recommendations of the Pepper Commission, which would continue to be authorized under the Donnelly amendment. I hope we can then move forward to develop a comprehensive long-term health care program, recognizing, of course, that any future solution must include a viable private sector delivery system.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. ROUKEMA].

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Donnelly-Archer amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I was one of the first in my party, if not the first, to support Dr. Otis Bowen, the Secretary of Health and Human Services, when he first advanced this proposal to cover catastrophic illness. His proposal grew to encompass a wide array of services and was adopted with overwhelming support from the general public, the senior citizens and their lobbying groups, and with good reason.

There are millions of working people who, no matter how hard they worked, how much they save for a rainy day, they cannot afford the medical costs when illness strikes in their old age.

And so we adopted this catastrophic illness bill—well-intentioned and in many respects well-devised.

But it seems Dr. Jekyll has turned into Mr. Hyde or some other fiscal monster we cannot describe accurately at this point. We simply do not have the hard cost projections we need.

In short, this program is a catastrophe!

And so it is with great reluctance and regret that I rise in support of this amendment to repeal the Catastrophic Coverage Act.

Let me state for the record that our Nation's elderly deserve better. They deserve thoughtful deliberations by both bodies of Congress to determine what expansion of Medicare coverage is most needed and the fairest way to pay for it. It seems that instead of thoughtful deliberations, we have gotten political maneuvering and much backing and filling. This is not Congress' finest moment.

I have come to the conclusion that repeal of this law is necessary because there is no reasonable alternative before us. Yes, I, too, have received the thousands of letters from my constituents asking for repeal, but this is not the reason for my decision. Since debate over catastrophic coverage has begun, much new information has come to light which has exposed the faults of the program. For instance, the Congressional Budget Office has issued revised estimates of program costs that reveal the deficient nature of original cost estimates upon which every Member of Congress based his or her vote regarding this law last year. I am bewildered by these revised estimates that take the cost of catastrophic benefits from the original estimate of $32 billion over the next 5 years, up to $48 billion for the same period. How can our original cost projections have been so grossly underestimated? And for that matter, how can we be sure that $48 billion is correct?

The new cost projections are enough to convince me that something is seriously wrong with the program. Can you imagine the outrage, and rightly so, of senior citizens 5 years down the road if Congress say "Oh, sorry, our cost projections were off by $16 billion. We'll be sending you a tax bill for the difference." This is ludicrous.

But program cost is not the only reason which forces me to choose repeal. New information also reveals that medical treatment and research is making great progress in prolonging the life of AIDS patients. While I am hopeful that those affected with AIDS will see effective treatment and possibly a cure in the near future, I am concerned that those with AIDS that are surviving longer will become eligible for Medicare catastrophic benefits. If this should happen, the cost overruns just presented to Congress will pale in comparison to the increased cost that treatment of AIDS patients will place on the Medicare Program. This is a sensitive subject, and I do not want to be misunderstood. We need to do all we can to help those suffering with AIDS. However, it is unconscionable to have the elderly Medicare beneficiary pay for the cost of treating AIDS patients. This is the responsibility of the Government and the Nation as a whole and is properly paid for out of general revenues. No single group should be saddled with this expense.

I am firmly convinced that repealing this law will be as controversial and damaging as enacting it has proven to be. There are millions of senior citizens who need the benefits provided by this Law. Perhaps their voices have not been heard, yet their needs are real. However, there is no alternative before us—one that can give the coverage and gain the support of our constituents.

There has been too much misinformation. Too much disinformation. We cannot put Humpty-Dumpty back together again. It is time to start over.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. MCCANDLESS].

Mr. MCCANDLESS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Texas for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, as one of the original opponents of this bill, I rise in support of the Donnelly-Archer amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the amendment to repeal the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act [MCCA]. As 1 of the 72 Members of the House who voted against the act when it was before Congress, I actively opposed the MCCA before it became law, and have worked to repeal it after it became law. Today, we will have the opportunity to take a major step toward that goal.

In defense of my colleagues who voted for the MCCA, it should be remembered that the legislation did not suddenly or magically appear on the House floor. The legislation was the result of years of efforts on the part of groups and organizations who were supposed to be looking out for the interests of senior citizens. The MCCA was sold to Congress as something that seniors wanted, and sold to senior citizens as added Medicare benefits at a low cost. In fact, neither was true.

The MCCA was intended to protect retirees from having to pay more than $2,500 for acute catastrophic health care in a year. While well-intentioned, the act failed to provide any new benefits to a majority of senior citizens, and at the same time, imposed a higher income tax on retirees.

At the time the MCCA was being considered, about 70 percent of Medicare enrollees had purchased Medigap policies from private insurance companies. These policies covered most of the health care costs for which Medicare did not pay, and were tailored to meet the needs of the individual. Among those who purchased Medigap policies, fewer than one-half of 1 percent had out of pocket expenses over $2,500. Even these higher expenses, generally for prescription drugs and physicians' fees above Medicare-approved levels, could have been covered by expanded Medigap policies.

In addition, 10 to 15 percent of Medicare enrollees without Medigap coverage were eligible for Medicaid. The group at risk for acute health care costs was a portion of the elderly who did not buy Medigap policies and who were not covered by Medicaid. Among this group, only an estimated 5 percent had acute health care expenses in excess of $2,500. Some of those who did not buy Medigap policies considered themselves wealthy enough to cover their out-of-pocket medical expenses. Others were not able to afford the policies. It was this group—those who could not afford Medigap, but were ineligible for Medicaid—that the MCCA should have been designed to protect.

In spite of the need to protect a relatively small number of people, the MCCA created a broad program. However, every time the Government creates a program or adds a new benefit, somebody; that is, taxpayers, has to pay for it. The new program was self-financing—meaning that new revenues would pay for the new benefits. For good reason, Congress was reluctant to add this program to the tax burden borne by working Americans. Many working families already pay more in Social Security and Medicare tax than they pay in income tax. Payroll taxes have gone up by 50 percent since 1972, and have already increased six times since 1980, with another increase scheduled for January 1, 1990. Because nearly all of the benefits went to retirees, and since a majority in Congress seemed to believe that the MCCA was something seniors wanted, the bill for the program went to senior citizens. The monthly premium for Medicare was increased, and those eligible for Medicare, regardless of whether or not they had enrolled in Medicare, were assessed an income tax surcharge. The maximum surcharge in 1989 is $800 for an individual taxpayer, and $1,600 for couples. By 1993, the MCCA tax will increase to $1,050 for individuals and $2,100 for couples.

The reaction of senior citizens was easy to predict. To put it politely, they have told Congress, "Thanks, but no thanks!" I have received thousands of letters from angry constituents who have said that they do not want this program, and they do not want to pay for it. Those, such as Federal, civilian, and military retirees, who have adequate non-Medicare medical coverage as a retirement benefit were especially outraged by the new Medicare tax.

There are other problems with the MCCA. When Congress passed it, it was estimated that expenditures for the program during the first 5 years would be around $30 billion. According to a recent Congressional Budget Office [CBO] report, Congress underestimated the cost by 50 percent. CBO now estimates that the 5-year cost will be $45 billion, and others are estimating costs as high as $55 billion. This will far exceed the $42 billion expected to be collected to pay for the program.

The picture gets worse when the prescription drug benefit and payments for skilled nursing facilities are considered. The prescription drug benefit will not be fully implemented until 1991. However, because of its high out-of-pocket deductible—which CBO estimates may be as high as $1,224 per year within 5 years—only a small percentage of seniors will ever qualify for the benefit. Even so, the estimated 5-year cost of the prescription drug benefit has doubled from $5.7 billion when the MCCA was passed, to CBO's current estimate of $11.8 billion. The cost of the skilled nursing facility benefit for 1990 has soared from the original CBO estimate of $400 million, to the current estimate of $2.4 billion. In view of the current cost estimates, seniors may be facing the prospect of even higher taxes for a program they do not want.

In short, the Medicare Catastrophic Health Insurance Program is out of control. It was bad legislation when it was considered by Congress, and it is a bad law. It should be repealed.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Donnelly-Archer amendment to repeal the Medicare Catastrophic Protection Act of 1988.

Mr. Chairman, this is the third time that the issue of catastrophic health care for our Nation's older Americans comes before the House. Unfortunately, it also is the third time that the leadership of this House has limited debate on this important matter and has prohibited the majority of the Members of the House from being able to offer and consider substantive amendments to this legislation.

When this matter was first brought before the House in July 1987, the leadership made in order only one major alternative amendment to the bill. I supported that alternative to eliminate the unfair surtax on Medicare beneficiaries to fund this expansion of the Medicare Program. The amendment also would have eliminated the prescription drug benefit, which has been a primary reason for the high cost of this program. Finally, the alternative I supported 2 years ago would have initiated the first plan of action by the Congress to address the primary overriding concern of older Americans—that being the skyrocketing cost of long-term health care.

This proposal, however, failed and the House was faced with the decision of whether to reject the Catastrophic Health Care Act or approve it and send it to the Senate where some of the major problems I warned my colleagues about in a detailed statement during the debate could be rectified when it was brought back to the House. The legislation which emerged from a House and Senate conference committee 1 year later did not correct these serious flaws but the House leadership insisted on moving it through the Congress anyway because they believed this would be a good 1988 compaign issue.

Almost immediately after being enacted, Medicare beneficiaries throughout our nation expressed many of my same concerns about the new program, especially about its cost and about its lack of long-term health care coverage. As the representative of more Medicare beneficiaries than any other Member of this House, you can be sure I have had thousands of cards, letters, and telephone calls about this matter. Last fall and through the winter and spring of this year, I assured those who contacted me that the reform or repeal of this legislation would be a top priority of this 101st Congress.

Last January, I cosponsored legislation to delay implementation of this legislation to allow the committees with jurisdiction to hold hearings to determine if there was any way to correct the objectionable provisions of this legislation. Numerous hearings were held and the consensus emerged that nothing short of repeal would be able to eliminate from the program the major items of concern to older Americans.

The Ways and Means Committee attempted to fix the legislation last month with a number of amendments that are included in the 1,935 pages of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act that has been before us these past 2 weeks. That fix, however, fails once again to address the financing problems and the lack of any new long-term care initiatives. The committee's attempt to provide a patchwork solution to the problems of this act were doomed to failure because under the procedures by which this legislation is being considered, alternative amendments and suggestions by the majority of the Members of this House again are barred from any consideration.

Instead, we are faced with three options today. One is to approve the committee's quick fix solution which fails on virtually every count to take into consideration the concerns of millions of older Americans. A second option, which I will support, will repeal the act entirely and send the matter back to the House and Senate with the message that the committees should more carefully consider the real needs of our Nation's Medicare beneficiaries. The third option today, would be to approve the Stark-Gradison-Waxman substitute proposal which would retain but a shell of the important original catastrophic health care benefits; keep virtually intact the extremely costly prescription drug program that fewer than one in five beneficiaries would qualify for, and only after their annual prescription drug costs exceed almost $1,000 in any 1 year; and once again ignore the pleas of older Americans for Federal initiatives to provide assistance with long-term home health and nursing home care that is currently unavailable privately or through Government-sponsored or assisted programs.

It is with great disappointment that I will support the repeal of the Catastrophic Health Care Program that was initiated two years ago. Congress had the opportunity in 1987 and 1988 to establish an important new program to alleviate the fears of older Americans that the cost of catastrophic illness and long-term care would drain their life savings. The 100th Congress failed in that mission and the message we have heard in the past year and the message that we will take from this vote today is that the American people want us to try again to develop a program that addresses their concerns.

Those concerns are first, that the cost to the beneficiary of the program itself should not be as great a threat to their retirement savings as the cost of catastrophic illness. Second, that the Congress provide some leadership into the area of home health and long-term nursing home care coverage. And third, that the legislation be flexible enough to not force upon any beneficiary duplicative coverage they already receive under private health care or retirement plans.

Mr. Chairman, there is no quick fix to this problem. It will require the diligent work of the Congress and the input from all the Members of the House, not only during the hearing process, but also during the consideration of the legislation before the House. As so often happens here, the Congress attempted to pass off on the American people legislation with a title that sounded good, but which in the end cost too much and failed to meet their needs.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the highly regarded gentleman from Washington [Mr. CHANDLER], a member of the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out, for the historical record, that before the end of 100th Congress, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER] and this gentleman from Washington introduced legislation to repeal catastrophic.

In the 87th and 88th Congresses we were busy here listening to every senior group that purported to represent the interests of senior citizens, most notably the AARP. We overwhelmingly adopted a catastrophic health insurance law for this land. I want to point out that I was not among the 302 who supported that bill. Then we went home.

It took about 2 months for the seniors to understand what had happened. They were furious, and, I think, justifiably so. We had never bothered to listen to them.

I think Congress made two major mistakes when we adopted this bill. First, the benefits. We completely missed what seniors wanted. We essentially replaced with the catastrophic legislation what they had already provided themselves with Medigap insurance, covering their doctor bills and covering their hospitalization which Medicare did not cover. Most were satisfied with what they had provided themselves privately.

Seniors, however, did want long-term care coverage and security from that because long-term illness is the cost that does, can, and will wipe them out.

Second, I think a mistake was made on the financing mechanism. We put this on the backs of the middle-income elderly and, yes, on the rich, too. But it is the middle-income elderly who are the most adamant about repeal. These are people who came through the Depression determined never to suffer that again, people who have saved, sacrificed, and invested and now have some income—a finite source, yes, because they do not know how long they are going to live and they do not know what their requirements will be. But they do not want their ssvings to be taken away from them as we have tried to do with this legislation.

I am frankly tired of people telling me that it is only the rich who are complaining. I had in my office last week retired Federal workers who were saying, "Please go and repeal catastrophic health insurance." The message we are receiving from seniors is not that they want the benefits but they want someone else to pay. That is not the message we are receiving.

We need to start over. Yes, it will be embarrassing, but good heavens, it is not less embarrassing to admit a mistake and go back and restructure a program than to sit here and say, "Let's keep our pride and stuff something down the throats of people who have not accepted it and will not accept it"?

We should start over and structure a program that meets that real needs of the elderly and which, as my friend, the gentleman from Kansas, pointed out, meet the health care needs of the rest of the population.

Mr. Chairman, my hat is off to the gentleman from Texas for his leadership on this issue. It has been outstanding.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA].

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I think it is important today to focus on the decision of what we can repeal and what we cannot repeal. We obviously can repeal this law, catastrophic health care, and get rid of respite care for the elderly in order to have short-term political respite care for the Members of Congress.

But the fact is that in repealing this law, there are areas that we cannot repeal. We cannot repeal the need for catastrophic health care. The reason 328 Members voted for that bill is because there is a record to substantiate the need for catastrophic health care.

We are not going to do away with the 70-year-old woman who has cancer and cannot afford chemotherapy. We are not going to do away with the daughter of a stroke victim who needs respite care in order to try to provide for her mother. We are not going to do away with the 7 million people in this country who need catastrophic health care. And because we cannot do away with the need, we cannot really repeal the costs either. The costs are simply going to be transferred someplace else.

They are going to be put into increased premiums on Medigap insurance. They are going to be put into increased costs on Medicaid. They are going to be transferred to our patients, other taxpayers. To those of my colleagues who think we can simply come back with another law, let me remind them that somebody is going to have to pay for it, and when they complain, are we going to come back here and repeal it?

Mr. Chairman, the fundamental principle, the fundamental principle that we cannot repeal today, is our responsibility, as Representatives, to serve the public good even though it may be unpopular. Edmund Burke said it best of all:

Your representative owes you, not his industry only, but his judgment; and he betrays instead of serving you if he sacrifices it to your opinion.

Mr. Chairman, today we are in danger of sacrificing good judgment to the opinion of the few who are too angry to see the full implications of repeal, and the impact is going to be not just on the quality of care, but on the quality of our democracy.

My colleagues, vote against repeal.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOWNEY].

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the House of Representatives is running scared. A couple of hundred people at a town meeting can change the course of events here in the House of Representatives. Shame on us. We need to revise the financing of this program. But, Mr. Chairman, we are about to throw out the senior citizens with the bath water. It will be years, not months, before we come back and revisit this issue. Is there anybody here who really believes we are going to have national health care first and then take care of the needs of the senior citizens second?

Mr. Chairman, that is nonsense. Nonsense. We are about to make the second colossal mistake in 2 weeks. We responded to the rich on capital gains last week, and we are responding to the voices of a few this week in repeal of this bill. It is a mistake, and when the clouds of misinformation and dust settle in a couple of months, we are going to have to look at this in the cold dawn of reality, as the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] said, and recognize that the needs of the people have not gone away.

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Delaware [Mr. CARPER].

Mr. CARPER. Mr. Chairman, I did not vote for the catastrophic health care bill which President Reagan signed into law last year. As a result, I have not borne the brunt of as many angry constituent attacks as some of my colleagues. I have heard though, from hundreds—no, thousands—of angry senior citizens from throughout Delaware who don't like the law and want it changed or repealed.

As we debate the fate of catastrophic health care, I want to share with Members of this House the thoughts of one man at a townhall meeting of mine earlier this year. He spoke for many others in America when he said:

All my life I've worked hard. Sometimes two jobs at once. Our family didn't take expensive vacations. We didn't drive expensive cars. Our children did not go to the best colleges. We lived modestly, even frugally. We saved our money. I worked for a company which provided generous health insurance to its retirees. All of this I did to prepare for our retirement.

Now, because we were thrifty throughout our lives, because we husbanded our resources, my wife and I will have to pay an extra $1,700 in taxes next year. And for what? For benefits we neither want nor need. Benefits I've already worked most of my life to earn. It isn't fair, it just isn't fair.

Mr. Chairman, as it turns out, much in life is not fair, and there is little we can do about that. But today, Members of the House can restore a sense of fairness for that Delawarean and for millions of others like him from across the country. We can vote to repeal the catastrophic health care law, and replace it with something they want, need, and are willing to pay for.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. RINALDO].

Mr. RINALDO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Donnelly-Archer amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it is critical that Congress repair the mistake it made last year and repeal this program.

Nearly 4 years ago, President Reagan directed then-Secretary Bowen of HHS to report on ways to help Americans provide for their catastrophic health care needs. The Secretary's report outlined the problem, but instead of addressing seniors' long-term care needs, Congress adopted provisions dealing with acute care, physicians' services, and prescription drugs. On top of that, they imposed a 15-percent surtax on seniors to pay for the program.

Seniors are in an outrage and I do not blame them. I opposed this tax from the start and it must be repealed.

In my 17 years in the House, I have never witnessed anything like this senior revolution. As vice-chairman of the Aging Committee, I conducted a field hearing on the catastrophic care bill up in New Jersey.

The hearing was chaired by my colleague, HENRY WAXMAN. During the course of that hearing, Congressman WAXMAN requested a show of hands in support of the program. Not one hand went up. Of over 300 seniors, the majority supported outright repeal of the program.

However well intentioned, Congress should admit its mistake. We thought we were helping the seniors. We voted to expand Medicare for the first time in 25 years. But in doing so, we asked those living on fixed incomes to pay for it themselves. We increased their taxes to pay for benefits many already had. Moreover, the benefits provided by the Medigap policies were often better.

Regardless of the outcome today, we cannot lose sight of our original goal: to help older Americans with the costs of catastrophic illness. We should repeal the tax, and at the same time we should lay the groundwork for necessary health care reforms.

The truth is, we can accomplish our goal of helping senior citizens. But to do so, we must recognize that the Federal Government can't go it alone.

I will shortly reintroduce legislation that would establish a Federal-private partnership to provide long-term care.

My bill would clarify the Federal tax treatment of reserves—revenues raised by premiums—of private long-term insurance policies; liberalize the use of funds to purchase such policies; encourage employers to offer such policies; and it would underscore the Federal commitment to such a system through the establishment of a Federal National Reinsurance Corporation to protect private insurers against extraordinary losses in providing such coverage.

Under my plan, such insurance would be available at affordable rates. Preliminary estimates by the Prudential Insurance Co. showed that, in some instances, premiums for an individual at age 50 could be as low as $15 per month. Moreover, for those ineligible for such coverage, we would still have in place the nursing home benefit under Medicaid. But with more people providing for themselves, that system will be under less financial strain in the years ahead.

We cannot address these issues until we have cleared the air about the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act. I urge my colleagues to join me in voting for repeal so that we can get on with the real business at hand—providing long-term nursing and home health care to those in need.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HASTERT].

Mr. HASTERT. Mr. Chairman, I salute the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER], and I fully support his amendment as 1 of the 72 who voted against catastrophic in the first place.

Mr. Chairman, I rise this afternoon to voice my support for the Donnelly-Archer amendment to repeal the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988. As 1 of only 72 Congressmen to vote against this ill-conceived bill when it was first before the House, I am very happy that seniors throughout the country let their Representatives know how they felt about this program.

Although I am concerned about the availability and cost of health care for the elderly, the Catastrophic Act did little to address the real concerns of the elderly. Instead, it simply saddled the elderly with increased taxes for programs they would not have chosen for themselves.

In exchange for these increased bills, the Catastrophic Act did not even begin to address the issue of most concern to the elderly—long-term health care.

The Catastrophic Act needs to be repealed; it is so flawed that we have no recourse but to start over. If Congress is to address the real needs of seniors in our society, any future Government program should stimulate the private sector to provide affordable, nonduplicative insurance that seniors would choose for themselves.

Under the Catastrophic Act, all Medicare enrollees—not just those considered to be well-off older Americans—faced stiff increases in their part B premiums. Moreover, millions of retirees are being forced to pay hundreds of dollars in additional discriminatory and mandatory income taxes.

While other Americans find their total tax bill reduced for the bracket creep effects of inflation, senior citizens continue to face an increasing surtax to keep pace with the rising costs of medical treatment. Thus, the elderly would face much higher marginal tax rates than those paid by nonelderly individuals with the same income.

I urge the rest of my colleagues to join the 72 of us who originally voted against the Catastrophic Act and repeal this act.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW], a valued member of our committee.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I say to my colleagues, "If you are like me, many times you give your best speech on the way home from the event at which you spoke. How many times do you wish you had the opportunity to go back and relive a vote, to regive a speech?"

Mr. Chairman, 1 year ago the House of Representatives right here on the floor of the House laid an egg, and instead of fathering, or mothering, or parenting a beautiful swan, behold, we had a turkey.

The people of this country have spoken out, and they have written to us. Now we are going to have a rare moment and a rare opportunity to go back and relive that vote, to vote the way that the American people want us to vote.

My colleagues, let us listen to the people that we represent. They are calling for repeal. Let us be honest and face the fact that we made a mistake a year ago and go back and undo that mistake.

Please vote for repeal of the catastrophic health care plan. Support the Donnelly-Archer amendment.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN].

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak against this amendment.

I do so knowing I will not dissuade very many of those who are already committed to voting for repeal.

However, I do hope that I will persuade some of you to examine what we are doing and why.

The situation is one of double frustration. The call for repeal is born out of the confusion, misunderstanding and anger of the elderly over the bill we enacted last year. Almost all of the elderly think they are responsible for paying the maximum surtax. They are not. Almost all think they get these same benefits at less cost through their Medi-Gap policies. They do not. Many think there are no nursing home benefits. They are wrong. Many think they will be the lucky ones who will escape the need for catastrophic coverage. They are unfortunately wrong too.

These misunderstandings have led to a firestorm of protest by the elderly. And that in turn has given us a sense of frustration.

It has paralyzed us. But let us not let our frustration cloud our judgment.

The message from the elderly has been strong, but let's think about what they're saying.

What I have heard most clearly are two fundamental objections and one plea for help. The two objections are to the special "seniors only" income tax bracket used to finance most of the bill and the fact that many of the benefits are duplicative of those people already had under retirement plans or Medigap. The other features, including the increased monthly premiums for benefit improvements were not objectionable.

The plea I've heard is to preserve the benefits the elderly have asked for and don't get elsewhere—namely, prescription drugs and long-term care. That is what the amendment we will offer later today does.

Many have said but that amendment doesn't deal with the catastrophic costs we started out to address. That is correct. We simply cannot fashion a comprehensive and acceptable health program when the needs exceed the resources and no funding source beyond what the elderly contribute themselves is available. I believe we will rue the day if we repeal the full range of catastrophic benefits. But we will rue it even more if we refuse to salvage the prescription drug, mammography, and respite benefits that can be such a boon to effective and humane medical care for our elderly citizens.

I personally oppose repeal. I favor alternate funding. But that is not a choice we have today. The question is, can we salvage something. Do not act in anger toward the elderly. Save the benefits they are asking for.

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT].

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, it seems that each day Congress repeals another major law. It is getting so bad that there is a rumor going around outside. They are saying that today Congress may even repeal the sex act.

Mr. Chairman, the fact is this highlights our situation. We are going bankrupt, and we are presiding over the biggest bankruptcy in world history, and we are treating it with bandaids and aspirin.

Mr. Chairman, last year we passed a bad law. It is evident that we made a mistake. The American people in growing numbers have written to all of us and told us that. Today we should deal with that bad law by changing it.

Mr. Chairman, bad laws should be thrown out by Congress. I am going to vote to repeal!

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BROWN], a valued member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

□ 1320

Mr. BROWN of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Texas for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, catastrophic is a turkey. It is a huge tax increase. It denies a choice about the insurance they are required to pay for.

Mr. Chairman, it hurts the poor of this country. It should be repealed, because it has five fatal flaws.

One, it requires our seniors to pay for coverage that they may not want. That is right. Even if you do not want this program, you have to pay for it.

The second major flaw is that it requires you to pay for this coverage even if you do not need it. It is unbelievable! If someone already had the coverage—has earned it through their employment or has paid for it, they still have to pay for catastrophic, and that is ludicrous.

Third, it ought to be repealed because it is a devastating tax increase on our seniors. A 28-percent tax increase in addition to the monthly premium, and it does not even end at 28 percent. It costs above what they estimate it will be, the tax goes above ther 28-percent level.

The fourth flaw is that it is not the program that was advertised. It was advertised as being revenue-balanced, but the fact is this year it is a $4.2 billion tax increase, part of the money that is levied on our seniors does not even go to them this year. It goes to the general fund.

The fifth and the greatest flaw is one that I do not think the people have understood. They say it helps the poor. Anyone who has talked to the poor in this country understands that. Catastrophic does not help the poor of this Nation. The poor are not the ones who want the program. The facts are these: If you are poor and you get a catastrophic illness, you quickly slip into coverage under Medicaid. This program does not help you. All this does is prevent you from going into Medicaid as fast. If you are really poor, this program penalizes you. This program hurts the poor of this Nation, not helps them. It hurts because it levies a higher monthly premium on them. It levies a tax increase on the meager earnings that they have, and it holds out a false hope that they are really being helped.

The reality is anyone who thinks this is supported by the poor of this country has not taken the time to talk to them. I have talked to them. I have talked to them in meetings throughout Colorado. I have not run into a single one who does not favor the repeal of the catastrophic, and that is because they know what it does to them.

The real reason catastrophic ought to be repealed is because it violates a basic tenet of American philosophy. It says that if you have worked hard, if you have saved and prepared for your future, we are going to have a special penalty for you. That is not fair and that is not right.

It says that as an American you are not going to have a choice in the kind of health care that you pay for, and that is not American.

It says that we do not trust you enough to decide what is good for you. We are going to have government decide for you, and that is not American.

The fact is we believe in seniors and all Americans having a choice about their lives, having a choice about their health coverage, having a choice about their own future. Catastrophic violates that basic tenet of the American philosophy, and it ought to be repealed. It ought to be repealed because it hurts the poor. It penalizes the industrious and it denies choice to the working men and women of this country.

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois (Mr. RUSSO), a cosponsor of the Russo-Donnelly-Archer amendment.

Mr. RUSSO. Mr. Chairman, first I would like to take this opportunity to thank the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] for doing all that he could over the last several months to reach a compromise on this piece of legislation. He has given us opportunity in the committee, votes in the committee to deal with it, but there was just no way to fix this bill. It is unfair and it deserves to be repealed. It was created with the best of intentions, but with an onerous funding mechanism imposed on us by the President.

Health care coverage is a problem that faces not only senior citizens, but every citizen in our country. We have the most sophisticated health care system in the world, but the accessibility to our great health care system is a disgrace.

We spend more on health care than any other industrialized nation, yet 37 million Americans are uninsured, 7 million of whom are children. How can it be that we spend 11.2 percent of our GNP on health care and still have so many Americans uninsured and underinsured; when Canada, spending 8.6 percent of their GNP, and England, spending just 6.1 percent of their GNP, provide quality health care to all of their citizens? It is because we insist on dealing with health care in a piecemeal fashion. As a result, our health care system is needlessly complex, incredibly expensive, and fails to meet the needs of large numbers of our citizens. A recent report shows that 25 percent of the money we spend on health care is wasted, thrown down the drain. The health care system in the United States needs to be reformed. This reform should have as its goal universal access to health care for every citizen.

We should make the same commitment to health care that we made to putting a man on the Moon and developing a national highway system. Until we make universal health care a national priority, we will continue to have a health care system that the young cannot afford, that the old cannot afford, and that the poor cannot afford.

I appeal to every citizen in America, both young and old, to make a commitment to urge our leaders to start down the road to establishing a national health care system. We should demand that of our leaders. We should send our postcards, send our letters, call our Representatives, call our Senators and call the President, tell them we want universal health care coverage and we deserve no less.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues today to make this commitment. Repeal the Catastrophic Health Care Program. Vote for the Donnelly-Russo-Archer amendment and begin today the debate to establish a universal health care system that delivers the best quality health care to all citizens at an affordable cost. To do less would be a national disgrace.

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SAXTON].

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to express my support for the amendment to repeal the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act.

The time has come to wipe the slate clean, and to come to grips with the fact that this program—despite its good intentions—is fundamentally flawed.

Not to mince words, our older constituents are vivid about the cost of this program, and the prospect of paying a surtax up to $800 in the first year.

But, Mr. Chairman, it goes beyond that. They also see a future of uncontrolled, escalating costs for a program that does not even begin to deal with their most pressing concern—long-term health care.

Earlier this year, I wanted to find out just how strong the sentiment against the Catastrophic Care Program was. I circulated an informal survey in my congressional district.

Thousands of responses poured into my office, and no less than 96 percent emphatically said this health care program was not what they wanted.

Mind you, this was before the Congressional Budget Office issued its report saying the program was bankrupt before it has barely begun. It would be an exercise in futility to stand here today and try to justify a program which will run $9 billion in the red in the first 5 years alone.

The decision at this point is clear. Seniors say "the cat must go," and they are right. I urge my colleagues to support this repeal amendment. And I urge them to make this repeal measure stick by rejecting the reform amendment which will follow.

I can understand and appreciate the fine intentions of my colleagues who wish to retain the drug benefit, and in doing so, salvage some remnants of the Catastrophic Care Program. But now is not the time to be jumping for a quick fix.

Again, we must wipe the slate clean, and we should reopen the whole health care debate. We should be moving toward long-term, nursing home-type care. That is what our seniors want, and that's what they need.

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COLEMAN].

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Donnelly proposal for repeal of the catastrophic health plan.

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I rise in full support of the amendment to repeal catastrophic insurance, as someone who fought for this a long time ago.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GRADISON].

Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Donnelly-Archer amendment to repeal the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act. I appreciate that my colleagues do not offer this significant change lightly.

However, I take issue with arguments made by some in this Chamber that the public is only interested in outright repeal. Repeal may appear attractive today, but in the not too distant future, Members may regret taking such unprecedented action.

Mr. Chairman, as one of the framers of the Medicare catastrophic legislation, I thought we got it right the first time. Two years of thoughtful deliberation and hard work went into developing the program. Both the House and the Senate passed the measure by large majorities, and the Reagan administration embraced the effort.

While there certainly are valid reasons to oppose the current law, from the start, the new act suffered from a misinformation campaign. The elderly heard more about what was wrong with the program—what it did not do—than what it had to offer. Also, many of the elderly mistakenly believed that they would have to pay the $800 supplemental premium.

As did many of my colleagues, I took the message about Medicare catastrophic to the elderly of my district and tried explaining the program. On a one-to-one basis, or in small groups, the program seemed to make sense to them. But, for the majority of the elderly, their impressions about the act were already formed.

So, we are here today considering whether to "throw the baby out with the bath water," or roll up our sleeves and make the program more attractive for those it is meant to help. I firmly believe the House should take this opportunity to refine the act, not reject it.

If the supplemental premium is so unpalatable, let's change it or eliminate it. If the benefit package is unaffordable, let's reduce it.

I am confident that if the Congress repeals the program outright, we will soon hear from the majority of beneficiaries who will be angry about the protection they have lost. They'll have plenty of help from candidates challenging incumbents who vote for repeal. We'll also hear from others who are disgruntled by the significant increases in Medigap supplemental premiums which they are likely to experience with the rollback of Medicare catastrophic.

Mr. Chairman, in order to avoid this outcome, the House should work to recraft the act and we should do it now. Believe me, we will know no more a year from now than we do today.

The Senate is in the midst of reconsidering the program and is exploring a number of constructive alternatives. Some of these alternatives were considered in the Ways and Means Committee. Others reflect fresh approaches.

But, as we all know, on this issue the House will go first. Frankly, the Senate is looking to the House for leadership. If the House votes to repeal, the Senate is likely to follow. However, if this Chamber favors refinement, the Senate likely will join in such efforts.

An alternative to refinement of the act is included in the reconciliation bill now under consideration by the House, and another will be offered by me and my colleagues, Representatives STARK and WAXMAN.

The approach incorporated in the budget reconciliation bill by the Ways and Means Committee restructures the financing of the program, while leaving the benefits essentially in place. This proposal also allows beneficiaries to opt out of the catastrophic coverage and the supplemental premium.

The Stark-Gradison-Waxman amendment will eliminate the supplemental premium as well as the catastrophic hospital and physician coverage, leaving the drug benefit and other needed and popular benefits in place. Both of these alternatives maintain important aspects of the program and lay the groundwork for negotiations with the Senate.

Mr. Chairman, I thought Congress did a good job writing the catastrophic program as it now stands on the books. However, the tide is clearly against the current law. So, I believe the House should make one last effort to salvage what is worth keeping and eliminate what is politically unacceptable.

To repeal the act outright would unnecessarily tie our hands in conference with the Senate and likely lead to even greater disenchantment and unhappiness from millions of seniors when they realize what we have taken away from them.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the remainder of my time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to the Donnelly-Archer amendment which would repeal the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988. Just 16 months ago, this House passed the conference report by an overwhelming 328 ayes to 72 noes. Majority Democrats and majority Republicans supported the measure. The catastrophic health bill was a major initiative of President Reagan and strongly supported by him throughout the legislative process.

Mr. Chairman, I have no illusions of how this vote will come out today. But in my few minutes, I would like to hold up a mirror so we can take a long look at ourselves. Let me speak first to my colleagues on the other side of the aisle.

Catastrophic coverage was the major domestic initiative of President Reagan's 8 years in office. President Reagan has not yet been out of office 1 year, and yet, you are determined to repeal that major initiative. When you hear the screams of protest fromone well-organized constituency, you simply cannot stand the heat.

At your urging, the Ways and Means Committee crafted, on a bipartisan basis, conservative financing principles into this bill. We ensured that there would always be sufficient revenues before outlays had to be paid. That is no different than private insurance companies making sure that they have adequate reserves. Now the advocates of repeal have changed the budgetary rules by waiving Gramm-Rudman because you are unwilling to cut spending or raise revenues to offset the $4 billion increase in the budget deficit. You are abandoning all fiscal discipline under Gramm-Rudman in pursuit of, in my opinion, a misguided goal. This budgetary precedent will come back to haunt this House in the future.

Now let me address my colleagues on my side of the aisle. We thought that the original Reagan bill was not good enough and so we loaded it up with additional benefits. In so doing, Congress also converted President Reagan's proposed flat premium into a progressive financing system. In calendar year 1990, less than 5 million people will pay more than $500 per year. When those wealthy individuals screamed, we abandoned the democratic principle of progressive financing.

For the majority of the elderly, the additional insurance benefits exceed the flat premium cost. This bill was primarily designed to help those elderly who did not have additional insurance and whose income was just high enough to keep them from Medicaid eligibility. It gave them assurance and peace of mind that they did not have to go on welfare if struck with a serious illness. Because we in this Congress cannot take the heat from a wealthy few, all principles are being abandoned. The House is in full retreat.

With the benefit of hindsight, we might have all done some things differently. However, we have done one thing right. If the very individuals for whom the benefits were intended believe that it is not worth the price, I am glad we did not shift the costs to their children. If we are going to repeal, we need to repeal both the benefits and the financing simultaneously.

I do not like how our collective image looks in the mirror. While we have been elected to represent our constitutents, that does not mean we should be cowed or intimidated by every special interest group that spreads misleading information. In must instances, it does not mean we must succumb to the whims of a few and abandon our principles at the expense of many others. Five million senior citizens may be complaining about the supplemental premium. You may quench their thirst for repeal today. But in the process, make no mistake about it: You will be hurting many more millions of senior citizens whose voices have not been heard. But mark my words, those voices will be heard after you repeal the Catastropic Health Program today.

For myself, I do not want to be party to it. I strongly urge a "no" vote on the Donnelly-Archer repeal amendment.

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES].

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the Donnelly-Archer-Russo amendment to repeal the Medicare Catastrophic Protection Act of 1988.

I do so with some misgivings because there is unquestionably a seriuous need in this country for some type of assistance to those older Americans who suffer from uninsured catastrophic medical costs. I am especially concerned about long-term care for the chronically ill.

In fact, instead of repeal, I wish we had an option before us today to place the entire program on hold for 1 year, so that we would have time to refine the list of benefits and develop a new financing mechanism. I have cosponsored legislation to provide for just such a 1-year delay but, unfortunately, the appropriate committees have shown little interest in pursuing that option.

I frankly feel we need to devote a lot more effort toward fashioning a program that will avoid unnecessary or duplicative coverage, while meeting the long-term health care needs of seniors in a way that is both wanted and needed by older Americans, and that they are willing to pay for.

Unfortunately, that third option is not before us today and, accordingly, the only choice is to repeal or to adopt the Stark-Gradison amendment which, while very well intentioned, does not reflect the priorities which, in my judgment, are the most critical to older Americans. Given such a limited choice, repeal is the only viable option.

I just hope that, despite voting for repeal today, we will continue to work toward developing a program that will help offset the uninsured catastrophic medical expenses without singling out any one group to bear a disproportionate or unfair share of the burden of such a program.

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Chairman, this debate this afternoon has nothing to do with anything else other than health care policy in this country and the failure of a year-old initiative to respond to the needs of 32 million Medicare beneficiaries.

What we did not see a year ago, those of us who were authors and conferees and spoke in favor of this legislation, were the fatal flaws that 32 million beneficiaries saw. Let me point them out to the Members today. The real fundamental flaw in this legislation is that over half of the beneficiaries already had this coverage, some or all of the coverage. They had already paid for the coverage before we came along and said to them, "You take this coverage even though you already have it, and you pay an additional fee." They objected to that and rightfully so.

They also objected to not having the same right as every other American, and that is the right to choose their health care, the rights that you and I have as a Member of Congress, that our constituents, that our spouses have. The elderly object to that. They want the right to choose. They do not want to be told that they have to pay for something they already have.

The elderly have refused to pay. They have raised a storm of objection that this institution has not seen in years, and we must respond.

I have worked with the committee for over a year attempting to respond to the legitimate objections and concerns of the elderly of this country. What were our options? We could have transferred the cost of the program from the beneficiaries to the taxpayers. I think most Members would not agree that that is something that is possible, politically, to do under the present set of circumstances, nor is it correct policy under the present set of circumstances. We could take away benefits from the beneficiaries that they had already paid for or earned through a union contract or had given up pay increases to get so that they would be protected in their retirement years. That is not feasible and not fair.

We could allow the seniors to opt out. My friends, if we allow them to opt out, the program would fall of its own weight, because it has no support amongst the people that we purport to help.

Let me say one quick thing about the people that allude to the fact, the incorrect fact, that repeal will hurt the elderly poor. That is frankly not true. People who say that, I would suspect, have to be disingenuous or they do not understand how the health care delivery system for the elderly poor works in this country.

The program costs have skyrocketed. We were told by the Congressional Budget Office that the program was going to cost $30 billion. We are now told 1 year later it is going to cost $47 billion. We were told drug coverage was going to cost $6 billion. We are now told it is going to cost $12 billion. The SNF benefit, skilled nursing facility, we were told it was going to cost $2.5 billion. It is now going to cost $12 billion, a 650-percent increase in 1 year.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, let me say that repeal of catastrophic is not the end. It is the beginning. It is the beginning of a realization that we cannot deal with the health needs of Americans by putting patches over problems. It does not work. People are too sophisticated to allow it to happen, and this is a message to them that maybe they know about their needs better than we do.

Vote repeal. Take a hard look at where we are in health care in this country.

TECHNICAL DESCRIPTION OF AMENDMENT TO REPEAL MEDICARE CATASTROPHIC COVERAGE ACT

The purpose of the amendment is to generally repeal the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act—surtax, flat premium, and benefits—and to restore the Medicare Program benefit levels to those found in prior law.

The Medicare supplemental premium is repealed, effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1988, and premiums already collected are returned.

The flat monthly premium is repealed as of January 1, 1990, and premiums collected in 1989 are transferred, on a one-time basis, to the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund, the part A trust fund, to reimburse that fund for catastrophic benefits delivered in 1989. The Federal Hospital Insurance Catastrophic Coverage Reserve Fund and the Federal Supplemental Medical Insurance Trust Fund are abolished and any balance in these funds will be transferred to the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund.

The amendment repeals the expansion of Medicare part A and part B benefits. Transition provisions for Medicare beneficiaries are also provided in the amendment.

The specific provisions of the amendment follow:

(1) REPEAL OF MEDICARE CATASTROPHIC FINANCING

The supplemental Medicare premium is repealed with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1988, that is, as if never enacted. Any supplemental premium funds collected will be returned to individuals who have paid them when those individuals file income tax returns in 1990. Any balance in the Federal Hospital Insurance Catastrophic Coverage Reserve Fund will be transferred as a one-time transfer to the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund. The Federal Hospital Insurance Catastrophic Coverage Reserve Fund is abolished.

The flat monthly premium is repealed as of December 31, 1989. There will be a one-time transfer of net additional premiums from the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund to the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund. These funds will include any interest accrued to the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund. The Federal Supplementary medical Insurance Trust Fund will be abolished.

(2) REPEAL OF EXPANSION OF MEDICARE PART A BENEFITS

Inpatient hospital benefits return to the per-spell-of-illness concept of prior law, with a hospital deductible per spell of illness, 60 days of coverage, daily coinsurance for the 61st through 90th days, and 60 lifetime reserve days with a daily coinsurance rate.

Skilled nursing facility [SNF] services return to 100 days of posthospital care per spell of illness with no coinsurance for the first 20 days and a daily coinsurance rate of one-eighth of the hospital inpatient deductible for days 21 through 100. Thus, the prior hospitalization rule is restored.

Home health services return to a limit of 21 consecutive days of care.

Hospice coverage returns to a lifetime limit of 210 days.

The blood deductible remains at 3 units per year, reduced by any part B blood deductible.

(3) REPEAL OF EXPANSION OF PART B BENEFITS

The catastrophic limitation on beneficiary cost sharing for Medicare part B costs is repealed.

Mammogram screening services, respite care, and home intravenous therapy will not be covered.

The outpatient prescription drug benefit returns to coverage under prior law: coverage of immunosuppressive drugs for first year after an organ transplant.

No provision requiring the Secretary to change contracts with risk-sharing HMO's with respect to benefits required or payment rates established for contract year 1990.

(4) CHANGES TO MEDICAID EXPANSIONS

The amendment does not repeal the Medicaid benefit expansions enacted as part of MCCA.

(5) OBRA TECHNICAL CORRECTIONS AND BIPARTISAN COMMISSION

OBRA technical corrections found in the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act all remain in effect. Similarly, no changes are made to the Bipartisan Commission.

(6) TRANSITION PROVISIONS FOR MEDICARE BENEFICIARIES

For purposes of calculating an individual's balance of lifetime reserve days, hospital or skilled nursing facility days used during 1989 will not be counted.

For any individual receiving inpatient hospital services of extended care services on December 31, 1989, no day before January 1, 1990, will be counted in determining the beginning of a spell of illness and no additional inpatient hospital deductible will be charged other than that charged in 1989. A new spell of illness will not be considered to have occurred until an individual has had 30 consecutive days without inpatient hospital or extended care services.

(7) REVISION OF MEDIGAP REGULATIONS

Revision of the NATC Medigap regulations by no later than December 1, 1989, would be required and will reflect the changes in the law made by these amendments.

Medigap supplemental insurers will therefore be required to alter their policies, by Janaury 1, 1990, to adapt to the changes in law made by these amendments.

In addition, for those Medicare beneficiaries who had Medicare supplemental policies in effect on December 31, 1988, and who terminated coverage under the policies as of January 1, 1989, the NAIC model regulations will require Medigap policies to treat those individuals as having continued coverage under such policies for 1989.

(8) ISSUES RELATING TO REIMBURSEMENT FOR HOSPITALS

MCCA provided special payment rules for hospitals. With respect to PPS hospitals, the Secretary was directed to adjust DRG weighting factors and outlier cutoff points to reflect the increased Medicare payments to hospitals on behalf of beneficiaries. With respect to PPS-exempt hospitals, a similar adjustment to the target rate of increase was required.

Under the amendment, authority for the Secretary to make these adjustments expires on January 1, 1990. The amendment also contains a technical correction with respect to PPS-exempt hospitals providing services to Medicare beneficiaries during 1989. The technical correction is designed to overturn HCFA's policy with respect to interpretation of section 104(c)(2) of MCCA.

In enacting section 14(c)(2), Congress intended that the target rate of increases be adjusted for all beneficiaries receiving services in a PPS-exempt hospital. HCFA has taken the position that the adjustments should not be made for beneficiaries who had exhausted Medicare benefits prior to admission to a PPS-exempt hospital. HCFA's policy is incorrect and contrary to the intent of Congress.

Consequently, the amendment overturns that policy by requiring an adjustment to the target rate of increase in 1989 only for all Medicare beneficiaries, regardless of whether they had exhausted benefits prior to admission to the facility.

Mr. JONES of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the Donnelly-Archer-Russo amendment to H.R. 3299, the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989.

Many of my constituents in the Fourth Congressional District of Georgia have taken the time to share their thoughts on the Medicare Catastrophic Protection Act with me. As I have traveled throughout the district, I have had the opportunity to discuss the concerns many of them have with the act.

Mr. Speaker, Congress was focusing much-needed attention on the importance of health care to America's senior citizens when it passed the Catastrophic Act, and President Reagan signed it into law on July 1, 1988.

The premise of the act is commendable—place a ceiling on the out-of-pocket expenses of 33 million Medicare beneficiaries for such Medicare-covered services as physicians' care, hospitalization, and prescription drug costs. The hospital benefits began on January 1 of this year, physician benefits are scheduled to begin next year, and the drug benefits in 1991.

Judging from the mail which I received, most of my constituents have no objection to the benefits contained the act, but disagree with the way the act is financed.

At the insistence of then-President Reagan, the new coverage had to be financed entirely by supplemental premiums paid by those senior citizens eligible for Medicare. In other words, the new benefits under the act are funded exclusively by senior citizens.

The end result of this financing scheme is that one-third windup paying more for the new supplemental premium than they will, on average, receive in new benefits. I believe this to be inherently unfair. A better deal is available from private insurance organizations. Plus, many in this affected group already have insurance similar to the coverage contained in the act.

The premium hits many middle-income seniors, who are far from affluent, very hard. The act's current structure adds potentially $1,100 more in taxes for some seniors by 1993. Due to the financing structure, the level of the premium is simply too high, and too burdensome, on too many seniors.

Mr. Chairman, today the full House will vote on repeal of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act. After the vote on repeal, we will consider other alternatives to provide for the health-care needs of our senior citizens.

Mr. Chairman, the sad side effect of the backlash over the supplemental premium is to have made Congress hesitant about examining new long-term care benefits. Also, Congress lost its most visible and ardent advocate for a comprehensive long-term care policy with the passing of Congressman Claude Pepper.

Undoubtedly, long-term care promises to be a persistent issue. Americans are living longer. The nursing home population will double to 2.2 million in 10 years. The older than 85 group is the fastest growing segment of the population, and is expected to triple by 2025.

According to a University of Maryland study, a third of Americans report personal or family experiences with long-term care in the past 5 years. During the next two decades, the baby boomers will reach retirement age. As a result, there will be fewer workers supporting more retirees. Also, hospital costs are rising twice as fast as Medicare rates. These are problems which will have to be addressed.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to vote for the Donnelly amendment and to put an end to the burdensome supplemental premium. Then we must examine a more equitable means of providing catastrophic illness protection to our seniors.

Mr. MILLER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, the influx of mail and telephone calls that congressional offices have been receiving for the past several months from senior citizens indicates the depth of their opposition to the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act which was signed into law last year. Over and over they tell us that most of them already have insurance policies that provide the benefits that this coverage offers. What they really want and need is some kind of insurance to help with the truly catastrophic costs of nursing home care or assistance that would allow them to remain in their own homes when they are no longer able to care for themselves.

Early this year I cosponsored a bill that would delay the implementation of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act in order to give the Congress time to take necessary corrective action. Many alternatives have been suggested—from outright repeal, to the Ways and Means Committee proposal to cut the surcharge in half and increase the part B premium for the next 4 years, thereby spreading the costs to those who can least afford to pay. Furthermore, the Ways and Means Committee chose budget gimmickry to cover the costs of reducing the supplementary premium. Payments to health care providers would be delayed a matter of days at the end of the next 4 years, supposedly saving money each year by moving the charges into the following year.

Earlier rosy predictions of budget benefits from the catastrophic law have been discredited. In the past month, cost estimates for the skilled nursing facility benefit under the catastrophic law have increased 650 percent, and in the past year, the cost estimates for the drug benefit have increased 107 percent. Let's have the courage to admit our mistake and use this experience to craft legislation that provides care for the senior citizens who do not already have sufficient health insurance, as well as provisions for the real financial catastrophe most people fear—long-term care.

Mr. BRENNAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of repealing the unfair surtax placed on only 41 percent of senior citizens. I support repeal of the surtax and I support the return of all estimated taxes paid for the program in 1989. The Donnelly-Archer amendment does this. However, by voting for the Stark-Gradison-Waxman substitute I am going to support restoration of those benefits which are the most expensive and therefore the least accessible under private Medigap policies.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, I am voting to ensure that senior citizens of all incomes will be protected against the high costs of prescription drugs, respite-care, home health care, mammography screening and spousal impoverishment requirements. All of us, each and every person in this Nation, may one day require assistance with the devastating costs associated with catastrophic illness or injury and long-term disease.

I feel strongly about, not only talking about, but actually establishing a health care system in this Nation which provides everyone with accessible and affordable care, including long-term care for our Nation's increasing population of senior citizens. The Medicare Catastrophic Coverage program was intended to be a step toward long-term care coverage for Medicare beneficiaries. However, that plan contained serious flaws with its financing and surtax structure, and that part of the program must be changed.

I am supporting the Stark-Gradison-Waxman proposal in order to salvage at least a step toward providing long-term care. I am voting to continue home health care and respite-care services for chronically dependent homebound beneficiaries. I am voting to save 4,000 lives from preventable cancer deaths through mammography screening, and I am voting to continue coverage for those least able to purchase full Medigap plans, poor senior citizens.

I believe it is irresponsible to build a house for my family to provide shelter 1 year, and then upon discovering that the house has a faulty door, to completely destroy the foundation and remove my family from shelter. Similarly, I believe it is irresponsible to establish a comprehensive plan for Medicare coverage for our senior citizens in 1987, and upon discovering a faulty door, the surtax, completely destroy all of its protections, some of which are presently being realized. I am voting to fix the door, repeal the unfair surtax, and save the house, retain the significant protections for our senior citizens.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I voted against catastrophic Medicare insurance when it was adopted last year. A number of groups purporting to represent senior citizens advised me to support it. However, it was not long before Medicare beneficiaries made it quite clear, that they wanted the act repealed.

After voting against the bill, I sponsored efforts to repeal it. But, once its revenues were included in our fiscal year 1990 baseline, the job of repeal became fiscally more difficult. Because catastrophe was forward funded, cancellation requires about $4 billion in savings elsewhere, or it requires a waiver of Gramm-Rudman.

Gramm-Rudman is the last and only vestige of discipline in the budget process. Waiving Gramm-Rudman is an act to be undertaken only in the most extreme circumstances. For that reason, I voted for a repeal provision which was funded by other savings in committee, and I voted for other alternatives which did not require a waiver, including the version now in the bill.

Today we have three options. The first is the committee's version. It does not now seem able to command a majority, and it is not supported by any major group. It is better than current law, but inferior to repeal. I shall vote for the second, the Donnelly amendment, for repeal. The Stark-Gradison amendment, preserves the worst of the current law benefits and does not improve the tax problem much. I shall vote against it.

The Donnelly amendment is expected to pass. It will have a Gramm-Rudman waiver. The chairman of the Budget Committee, Mr. PANETTA, and I will offer an amendment to remove the waiver. I believe it is possible to find offsetting spending reductions so we can have repeal and keep Gramm-Rudman, too.

I am afraid we will be short of votes to pass the Panetta-Frenzel amendment. Whatever happens, I will do my best to see that Gramm-Rudman is preserved. A waiver requires 60 votes in the other body, so the issue may not be settled by what we do today.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Chairman, hundreds of senior citizens in my district are writing in telling me that Congress' catastrophic health care plan is a disaster. What was once hailed as a historic advance in providing long-term health care to the 33 million beneficiaries of Medicare has been reduced to a benefits package riddled with catches and loopholes. Our seniors are asking us to repeal this ill-conceived legislation.

For most, the program has brought a deluge of new taxes but only a drop of new protection. This package helps only 4 percent of all beneficiaries each year in paying for their benefits. New coverage for prescription drugs will help 16.8 percent of senior citizens per year, but no one will realize any benefit until an annual $600 deductible is paid. It duplicates benefits that many senior citizens already have from their former employers or through private insurance.

Furthermore, those who scrimped and saved for their retirement will be penalized the worst, while those who want to keep working past age 65 will be encouraged to quit. Critics say the surtax hits only wealthy retirees and they should stop complaining. Not true. It's a middle-class tax, kicking in this year for any individual with income over $17,285 and requiring payments from more than 40 percent of senior citizens.

I opposed the catastrophic health care plan when we voted on it last summer and I intend to oppose it again. It is a bad bill. Attempts to amend it will only compound the problems, not fix it. Our seniors are asking for repeal and after all, who knows better what long-term health care benefits they need and can afford than our seniors citizens.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, during the last Congress I voted against the catastrophic health care law. At the time of the vote, I was told by many of my colleagues that I would live to regret my "no" vote. Well, I am here to tell you I don't regret my vote. The catastrophic law is a mess and my constituents are very happy with my vote.

We are now presented with an opportunity to fix the mess we created in the 100th Congress. The time has come for this body to respond to the strong opposition to the catastrophic health care law expressed by our Nation's senior citizens. It's time to repeal this unfair surtax.

I have listened to proponents of the catastrophic law state that only those seniors who have to pay the surtax want it repealed. This has not been my experience. During senior meetings on this subject in my district—attended by seniors of all income levels—not one person spoke in favor of the law. Did they know the provisions? Yes, they did. I had representatives from the Health Care Financing Administration [HCFA] and the IRS in attendance to explain the catastrophic health care law. I asked for the opinions of my senior constituents after they had been educated.

I also received a large number of unsolicited opinions. I have received letters, postcards, and telephone calls against this law from over 2,000 individuals. Many of them contacted me two or three times. The overwhelming sentiment expressed in their communications was, Repeal the law. It is expensive, duplicates coverage we already have, and doesn't help us with the costs associated with long-term care."

No matter where I go in the 19th Congressional District of Pennsylvania, a major topic of discussion is the new catastrophic health care law and why it should be repealed.

Mr. Chairman, senior citizens do not want this law. They never did. My senior constituents, as well as senior citizens throughout our country, want protection from the high cost of long-term care. They want us to repeal the catastrophic law and start working on a program to provide them with assistance in meeting the high cost of long-term home health care and care provided in nursing homes.

We can show our senior constituents we are listening. The surtax will be collected in 1990. Time is running out for us to correct our mistake and repeal this unfair, expensive law. I urge my colleagues to support their senior constituents and repeal the catastrophic health care law.

Mr. LIPINSKI. Mr. Chairman, many of my colleagues remember when, in 1986, President Reagan came to these Halls and promised to have a catastrophic illness proposal to us by early the next year. That January, in his State of the Union Address President Reagan promised to have his Secretary of Health and Human Services begin developing a program that would protect elderly and disabled Americans from the high costs associated with a catastrophic illness. I remember President Reagan's promise because it came as a surprise. I was surprised because there had been 6 years of cutbacks in health care programs for the elderly under the Reagan Administration and now he was proposing what appeared to be an increase in health care benefits for our senior citizens.

As the President's proposal worked its way through Congress there were several points that he would not negotiate, the most controversial of which was that the next program must be paid for entirely by the beneficiaries, in other words, no new taxes. This restriction made developing an acceptable financing mechanism very difficult. In order to provide for a large enough pool of money to fund the new benefits we decided that participation must be mandatory. If this were not done then the younger, healthier senior citizens would not participate, leaving a small amount of resources to care for the most frail of our elderly. As our only financing option, we saw a need to base the amount one contributed on their income. If we relied on a flat rate fee, too many seniors would not have the resources to pay the new premium. As you can see Mr. Chairman, President Reagan's insistence on having our seniors pick up the tab for this new legislation made it very difficult to create a large enough pool of resources to cover the costs of the new program without putting too large a burden on the seniors of this country.

I believe the problems we had developing an equitable financing package within the parameters set by President Reagan, has led us to the unfortunate position we are in today. While this legislation was being developed I and my colleagues on this side of the aisle felt that President Reagan had not properly addressed the true concerns of America's seniors when it came to catastrophic illnesses. I believed then, and I still do today, that what seniors really wanted was financial protection from the runaway costs of prescription medicine. They wanted financial help with home health and hospice services. And they wanted respite care benefits. These benefits, although not in the plan Reagan sent to the Hill, were fortunately included in the final package. However, other concerns such as nursing home care were not included. By the time the legislation was ready for a final vote I felt compelled to support it. I figured that after speaking out on behalf of more health benefits for this country's senior citizens since I arrived in Congress, I could not defend a vote against any apparent expansion of benefits. And although some seniors would be asked to pay a larger share of the new program, the financial projections showed that the costs should not be too great.

Well, Mr. Chairman, as I and my colleagues have learned, the estimated costs were wrong. Originally around 40 percent of the seniors in the country were going to be required to pay the supplemental premium. But already in Illinois 690,550 or 47 percent of our senior citizens have been required to pay the supplemental premium. And well over half of these will pay more in new premiums than they will receive in new benefits. Because of this discrepancy and because there are still many benefits such as nursing home care that are not covered, many seniors in my district are looking for relief from this well intentioned but very expensive bill. Since it is obvious to me and many of my colleagues that this legislation is not achieving its intended goal I believe it must be repealed. I would prefer to see the act repealed than to chip away at it piece by piece. I believe that by wiping the slate clean and starting again with the real concerns and needs of this country's seniors in mind, we can best achieve our goal of providing health protection for our elderly.

Mr. Bush has restated Reagan's pledge that this is a pay as you go program that must be paid for by the seniors as they go it alone.

However this political rhetoric makes no sense. One of the greatest aspects of this Nation of ours is that no one goes with out at least some sort of a safety net below them. And whether we have catastrophic legislation or not, no ill senior citizen in this country will be thrown onto the streets just because he has no money. And when this happens the American citizen pays, not just that individual and not just seniors, but all Americans. I believe that the best way to approach our problem from here is to repeal our current program and work with this country's senior citizen groups to develop a program that addresses their true needs. It may not be easy to reach a compromise on a new proposal but we owe it to today's seniors, and tomorrow's as well, to try.

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the Donnelly-Archer-Russo amendment to the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1989. This amendment repeals the Medicare benefits created by the law and both the surtax and the increase in the Medicare part B premium by which the program was financed. However, it does leave in place several provisions of the law that will ensure that certain medically needy persons with incomes below the poverty level have access to Medicare and Medicaid and help to prevent impoverishment of the spouses of seriously ill people.

While I originally supported this program when it was enacted last year, I have come to believe that it is seriously flawed. Furthermore, none of the current reform proposals adequately address my concerns.

I regret that this is necessary. Many of the benefits included in the program would prove invaluable to Medicare recipients. These include a cap on out-of-pocket expenses for services covered by Medicare, expanded coverage for stays in skilled nursing facilities, and new coverage for prescription drugs and respite care. However, the combination of recent evidence that the cost of the program may have been underestimated by as much as half and the enormous public outcry makes repeal necessary.

I find the package of reforms now before the House to be unacceptable. First, while the package halves the income-based supplemental premium, it makes up the lost revenue by increasing the flat premium and increasing deductible for the benefits. Not only would the value of the package be lessened for all recipients, but the increasess in the flat premium would be particularly detrimental to people with low and moderate incomes. Second, while these reforms would make catastrophic coverage optional, those who chose not to receive this coverage would also lose Medicare part B benefits. These benefits are perhaps the best deal available to Medicare recipients. They are required as a condition of many Medigap supplemental insurance policies. Therefore, this provision would serve only to punish those who were so ignorant of the economics of Medicare as not to elect catastrophic coverage or too poor to afford it.

A third option before the House today is the Stark-Gradison-Waxman amendment. This option would retain the additional part B premium—paid by all Medicare recipients—and several of the benefits included in the original bill, including a reduced version of the prescription drug benefit. Although this amendment leaves the door open to the enormous expenses that the catastrophic coverage was designed to prevent, it is in many ways a desirable expansion of the Medicare program. However, it continues to dance around one of the greatest problems our country now faces: How to guarantee access to needed medical coverage to all Americans, regardless of income or age.

My experience over the last 2 years with Medicare catastrophic coverage has reaffirmed a belief I have long held. In my view, our entire system for providing health care is drastically in need of reform. The United States is the only major industrialized nation without a national health insurance system. As long as we continue to take a band-aid approach to the issue, dealing with problems by tinkering with Medicare and Medicaid and private health insurance programs, we will continue to have inequities in cost and access to care. And we will continue to waste billions on needless paperwork and red tape. Developing an efficient and equitable plan for broad reform of our health care system is one of my highest goals. Universal health insurance should now be the goal we seek, rather than continuing a piecemeal approach that is doomed to failure.

Mr. Chairman, I do regret that this vote has become necessary. However, we cannot shy away from either the problems of the Medicare Catastrophic Act or the need to address the entirety of our national health care problem.

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to support the amendment offered by the gentlemen from Massachusetts and Texas, Mr. DONNELLY and Mr. ARCHER. Their amendment would repeal Public Law 100–360, the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that elderly Americans should have to chase Congressmen down the street in order for us to get their message. On this subject their message is clear; they want us to repeal the Catastrophic Health Care Act.

When Congress passed the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act, it effectively raised the marginal tax rates for elderly Americans far in excess of even the wealthiest nonelderly taxpayers. According to a recent study by the National Center for Policy Research, elderly taxpayers now face the highest marginal tax rates ever imposed on middle income Americans in our Nation's history.

The Congressional Budget Office [CBO] has recently reexamined the costs to this catastrophe. CBO estimates that the cost of the program has soared 60 percent higher than was projected 15 months ago.

The law was supposed to cost $30 billion. CBO now believes that the 5 year cost (1989–93) will be $48.2 billion. Revenues are estimated at only $42 billion. Mr. Speaker, it seems that repealing catastrophic health would not be revenue neutral—it would create a net gain for the Treasury.

The Ways and Means proposal that is included in the reconciliation bill assumes program costs of $36 billion—over $10 billion less than the new projected costs. It is obvious that the program is confused and bankrupt.

The time has come for Congress to lift this burden off the backs of elderly Americans.

Mr. Chairman, Members of Congress cannot vote for the Donnelly/Archer amendment, to repeal the law, and then turn around and support the Stark/Waxman amendment to restore some of the program's benefits. In the past year, the cost estimates of the drug benefit have increased 107 percent—from $5.7 billion to $11.8 billion. The Stark/Waxman amendment retains this provision and makes all Medicare beneficiaries—rich and poor alike—to pay an increase in the flat part B premium. In fact, the Stark/Waxman amendment will cost each senior an additional $16.90 per month in Medicare premiums by 1994, according to the Congressional Budget Office [CBO]. For senior couples this amounts to $405.60 per year in increased Medicare premiums.

I urge my fellow members to support repeal of this catastrophic program. I also would like to submit for the RECORD at this point portions of a few of the thousands of letters that I have received from constituents on this issue:

DEAR CONGRESSMAN ROHRABACHER: I urge you to defeat this measure and drop the whole concept of "catastrophic health care." I have lost confidence in my Government's ability to play straight with its citizens on a wide variety of major issues * * * kill the catastrophic health care.

Mr. and Mrs. ROBERT BENEDICT.
PALOS VERDES ESTATES.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: Please vote to repeal the catastrophic health care law of 1988 which is effective in the 1989 tax * * * to put it more succinctly: repeal the Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 or lose our votes for your reelection in the House of Representatives.

Mr. and Mrs. BORIS RAYNES.
PALOS VERDES ESTATES.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE ROHRABACHER: I'm writing to you in regard to the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act. I would like you to put priorities on repealing this act.

Mrs. CATHARINE DOROTHY.
TORRANCE, CA.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN ROHRABACHER: This brief letter is in reference to the Catastrophic Coverage Act, one of the worst pieces of legisation ever enacted by the Congress. We wish to state, we do not want it, we do not need it, and we ask that it be repealed in its entirety. We are among the middle class senior citizens that are being severely penalized by this terrible act.

Mr. and Mrs. WAYNE F. LAUXMAN,
WESTMINSTER, CA.

Mr. SWIFT. Mr. Chairman, the catastrophic health care bill was certainly well named. It has been a catastrophe. The law we passed is poorly understood. The difficulties we faced in crafting the legislation were not adequately explained to the public. The alternatives we now face are still not made clear.

But it is certainly part of our job to see that the public does understand the intent of the legislation we draft, the limitations we face in drafting it and the limited alternatives we now have.

The normal complaint is that government is too slow. In this case, the biggest mistake we made was in moving too fast. President Reagan proposed this legislation and Congress then passed the bill so quickly that the public was not given the time to come to terms with the problems in this issue.

For example, most of the folks I talk with do not understand why we chose this particular funding method. There was not extended public discussion that would have focused on the reality that we simply could not load more payroll deductions on working people to fund this program. It is true that we all get old and helping the elderly will, in the long run, help all of us. Social Security is based on that concept. But people during their earning years have homes to buy, children to feed and college tuition to pay. There is a limit to how much we can withhold to help cover later costs.

Congress concluded, rightly I think, that we could not load the catastrophic program deductions on the pay check working people take home. It was decided instead that this program for seniors would need to be paid for by seniors. Then it was noted that low income seniors could not afford to pay all of their share of the costs. So we graduated the fee, just like income taxes have been graduated for decades. Also misunderstood is that even the people who would pay the most under this system—when you add up all of the contributions and subtract all of the benefits—would still have their health care partially subsidized. That point was never made clear.

What working person out there is aware that we did not pile more taxes upon them? Did any of you get letters from them thanking you for not loading on more payroll deductions?

What low income senior knows we tried to include them in the law at a cost they could afford? How many letters acknowledging that effort have you received?

The higher income seniors did not know of this either, but they learned about the tax surcharge right away. Without a chance to understand why we came to the conclusions we did; to discuss them and debate them, they just felt ambushed. I've talked to lots of seniors whom I know to be caring, concerned people—generous and supportive of efforts to help those less fortunate then themselves—who perceive this bill as a perverse Jack-in-the-Box—an unhappy surprise.

And that's where we went wrong. We broke one of the basic rules of politics: no surprises.

As we vote today, most Americans don't even know all the benefits included in the catastrophic bill. Frankly, the list is impressive. Among other things it would provide:

Unlimited hospital benefits after a deductible;

Unlimited physician benefits after a deductible;

Unlimited prescription drug benefit after a deductible;

Increased reimbursement for skilled nursing home care, while substantially reducing the copayments;

Increased home health care services;

Removal of limit on hospice care;

National spousal impoverishment protection;

For the first time, in home respite care; and

For the first time, mammogram testing.

What are our choices today? Well, we could adopt the alternative in the Ways and Means bill which would make catastrophic coverage voluntary, but tie it to part B of Medicare. That won't solve the discontent. Most seniors see that as merely relocating the site of the ambush.

Or we can adopt a much smaller program that offers some good benefits, but leaves many other important benefits behind in an effort to eliminate the need for the surcharge. I would support this as a stand-alone proposal, but we cannot now separate it from the catastrophic bill. My fear is that most people—who do not know all the benefits of the full bill—will assume the cutdown version is essentially the same as the original and conclude that we could have offered catastrophic without a surcharge in the first place. That is not the intent of the authors of the amendment, but I am afraid that will be the result. Again, there has not been time for people to understand what we are doing.

We do the public no favor by letting them think that a huge outcry about our action resulted in us finding a way to give them the same thing at lower cost. If we decide on legislation to give seniors much less coverage at less cost, then we should do that in a context where it will not be mistaken for a genuine catastrophic insurance measure.

Our other alternative, I have concluded reluctantly, is to repeal this law and start all over again.

There is a need for catastrophic insurance. There is a huge demand for an even more expensive program—long-term health care. But we must find a way to focus the public on the problems of paying for expensive health programs as part of developing them. We failed to do that with catastrophic. We need to back up and try again. We need to find a way to engage seniors and the rest of the public in the debate about how to fund health programs before we initiate a vastly more expensive program.

I have argued for nearly 6 years now that we have to be more courageous in laying out the alternatives. We need to talk about more effective ways of slowing the incredible escalation of health care costs if any program we devise is to be affordable. And in that context we need to discuss catastrophic, long-term and other forms of health care. Proposals to mandate employers to provide health insurance and other proposals to establish a national health care program do not address this prerequisite question and they need to.

I am going to vote to put the catastrophic bill out of its present misery. But I do so in the hope that we wll revisit this important issue, get more information to people about the realistic options we face. This should not be seen as the end of efforts to improve the health programs of this Nation, but as a reminder that Americans are used to thinking for themselves. And to do that, they need to be included in the information loop on an issue as important as this one. If we do that right, they will give us guidance—not unanimity, probably not even consensus—but valuable input about how we can address difficult problems of cost as we design programs to assure Americans a sound health care policy.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Chairman, today we must vote on a very critical issue, the repeal of the Medicare Catastrophic Care Program. While this program was designed to protect Medicare beneficiaries from the huge unexpected costs associated with catastrophic acute illness, the financing of this measure has been of great concern to many of the program's beneficiaries. With this concern in mind, I am casting my vote for the repeal of the Catastrophic Care Program.

It is not surprising that we are standing at this point today. When the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act was enacted, Congress was aware that there were problems associated with the financing of this measure.

Indeed, when this legislation was first brought to the House floor, I voted in favor of a less costly Republican substitute. After the substitute was defeated, I supported the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act because I believed that many of the program's benefits were important to Medicare beneficiaries. I did so, however, while noting that this vote was being cast despite my reservations about the bill's financing mechanism.

I still believe that the Catastrophic Care Program provides some important benefits to Medicare beneficiaries, and I regret that my vote today will eliminate these protections. However, I feel that given the concern which has been loudly expressed by the program's beneficiaries, including many from the Second District of Maine, a vote for repeal is the only responsible thing to do.

It is my hope that should the Catastrophic Care Program be repealed, it will not impede Congress' willingness to address the critical health care needs of our Nation's elderly. Rather, repeal should serve as a catalyst for the development of a comprehensive plan which more effectively addresses the health care needs of our older citizens and which has the backing of the individuals for whom it is designed to benefit.

Repeal provides us with an opportunity to eliminate the catastrophic care provisions which many beneficiaries have found to be unacceptable, to reconsider those provisions that are believed to be of particular value and to begin with a clean slate when reevaluating the real health care concerns of our elderly. As such, I am voting to repeal the program because I believe that in the end, Medicare beneficiaries will be better served.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Chairman, during the past year my office has been flooded with communications from my constituents expressing their justifiable outrage over the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act. In response to their concerns, I intend to vote for the Donnelly-Archer-Russo amendment to the Budget Reconciliation Act which would repeal this disastrous law.

Last year, when the Catastrophic Act first came to the House floor, I voted against it. It was clear that this legislation was going to have an enormous impact on the health and financial security of millions of seniors in a way that they did not ask for or want. Congress acted on the word of a few groups, like the AARP, which claimed to represent the interests of the elderly. Now those same folks have returned, in a mistaken effort to save as much as possible of the Catastrophic Act, to support the Stark-Gradison-Waxman amendment. I urge my colleagues, in considering their pleas, to consider the source, also.

Both the Ways and Means proposal, currently in the Budget Reconciliation Act, and the Stark-Gradison amendment are recipes for failure. If the House adopts either of these proposals, we will find ourselves revisiting this issue again next year after much greater damage has been done.

Proponents of the Ways and Means Committee proposal maintain that their provision will make the Catastrophic Act optional by giving senior citizens the chance to give up catastrophic benefits coverage. However, in order to do so, seniors must also abandon all of their part B coverage. This proposal is not optional at all; it is just plain blackmail.

The Stark-Gradison amendment keeps one of the most expensive benefits, the prescription drug benefit, and eliminates the genuine catastrophic coverage. The drug benefit is the most unpredictable benefit in the law as far as cost is concerned. Over the last year alone, the four-year cost estimates of the drug benefit have increased from $5.7 billion to $11.8 billion—an increase of 107 percent. Seniors should know that much of the cost increases for keeping this and other benefits will be reflected in an increased part B premium, reduced benefits, or higher deductibles.

Let me make it clear that I, too, would have preferred that we amended this act without repealing it outright. Since its enactment, several bills have been introduced, which I supported, to correct Congress' mistake by eliminating the senior surtax and scaling back the benefits. Even last year many Members were asking for a 1-year delay in the implementation of the law to assess it implications. That effort was stonewalled.

Now the time has run out. Further debate on this matter is a luxury we and 30 million older Americans can no longer afford. We are left with only one choice: repeal. If we want to change this dreadful law, we will have to start from scratch.

I urge my colleagues to support the Donnelly-Archer repeal amendment and to reject the other so-called compromises.

Mr. MANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Donnelly-Archer amendment to H.R. 3299, the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act. The catastrophic protection law was designed as the largest expansion of Medicare benefits since that program was created in order to protect senior citizens from high medical costs. However, since the bill became law, the seniors in my district have let me know they think this law is a catastrophe. They have told me they did not ask for this protection and don't want to pay for benefits they did not request. I have received more than 2,000 letters from my constituents expressing their discontent with this law and its financing mechanism. Today, I am listening to the seniors in my district and supporting the Donnelly-Archer amendment to repeal the catastrophic protection law.

Mr. Chairman, when we repeal the Medicare Catastrophic Protection Act today, we should not forget why the law was originally drafted. The catastropic law was conceived because Members understood that America's senior citizens need protection from the high costs of a long-term illness. This fact has not changed. Although the current catastrophic law has failed to effectively address this need, the Congress must continue to work toward this goal. Congress should consider long-term care legislation and work to improve the Nation's health care system. I urge my colleagues to view the repeal of the Catastrophic Act, not as the end, but rather, as a new beginning in the debate on our Nations health care needs.

Mr. GALLO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment to repeal the Catastrophic Insurance Act of 1989 and in opposition to the various plans to revise the current law.

Senior citizens in my district have carefully reviewed both the benefits and the cost of the current catastrophic Health Care Act. Upon review of this plan and in response to a survey I conducted in my district, the answer is clear—seniors don't want it—not, at least, as the plan currently stands and the way it is financed. Since seniors are the ones affected by the law, it is only right and fair that we listen to their concerns.

Frankly, I would have preferred a proposal to delay implementation of this bill for 1 year. By doing so, we could have salvaged the truly catastrophic benefit that this bill was originally intended to provide. This act was supposed to protect against financial devastation from a prolonged illness that requires an extended stay in the hospital.

Recently, I received a touching letter from a constituent who told me about her 89-year-old mother who had suffered a serious illness and has been in the hospital for over 8 weeks. Without this catastrophic coverage, the family would not have been able to continue to care for their mother. So, this insurance coverage is helping people. But, I agree with my constituents who wrote me this letter—save the important benefits and fix the financing.

Senior citizens are not unreasonable and are not asking for a free ride. What they are demanding, and rightfully so, is to be treated fairly.

Specifically, senior citizens in my district have raised three essential complaints against this law that demand the full attention of this House:

First, this plan is not optional. Seniors deserve freedom of choice, especially when they have taken steps for their own protection. Many people already have this insurance under pension plans and others are fully satisfied with the private insurance coverage they have purchased for themselves.

Second, the financing is unfair. Forty percent of the seniors should not be paying for 100 percent of the program. Congressman MICHEL the minority leader, originally proposed a catastrophic health care plan to be financed by a flat fee shared equally among all seniors. This plan focused on coverage of lengthy stays. With limits on deductibles, it was estimated that the entire program could be financed by an optional flat monthly fee of under $10.

Third, the benefits should be clearly defined and limited to the essential needs of all seniors. For instance, the law currently provides for a very costly drug benefit. In the State of New Jersey, we already have in place a drug benefit program for seniors to help limit the cost of prescriptions. Why should seniors in New Jersey have to pay for something they already have?

Mr. Chairman, I believe that these issues can be resolved. That seniors are willing to work with the Congress, but only if we communicate with them and respect their feedback. For the past 2 years when this proposal was originated, I established senior citizen task forces, and requested their personal views through surveys, newsletters and updates.

It is time now to reestablish a constructive dialog with senior citizens. I feel strongly we must have a direct dialog, not through national organizations claiming to represent their interests here in Washington.

Finally, I do not support the piecemeal approaches to remedying this bill that have been proposed by the Ways and Means Committee and by Congressmen STARK and WAXMAN. We need more than a bandaid approach.

None of the reform proposals make the plan optional.

None of the reform proposals address the duplication of benefits.

And, none of the reform proposals deal adequately with the income-based surtax. Decreasing the surtax while increasing the monthly premium is deceptive.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join with me in voting to repeal this act. Repeal is not my first choice, but it is a better solution than the proposal by the Ways and Means Committee or keeping the status quo.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Stark-Gradison amendment and in favor of the Donnelly-Archer amendment. Last year, the "Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988" was billed as being the much sought after solution to the elderly's long-term health care coverage concerns. However, since the implementation of this legislation, we have found that it contains unforeseen costs about services that do not meet the elderly's real concerns about long-term health care.

Speaking as a Member with former State legislative experience, I am highly opposed to bundling issues of this magnitude into budget reconciliation. These issues should stand on their own and be considered as such. By combining issues within budget reconciliation, we, as representatives of the American people, are not accurately and effectively doing our jobs, we are not serving the people. Although I strongly oppose this procedure, I am forced to abide by these rules.

I voice my opposition to the continuation of the "Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988." Reform, as Stark-Gradison and the Ways and Means proposal suggests, is not the answer. These alternatives are but bandaid solutions to the problem. The only way to accurately respond to our seniors' needs and to effectively solve this dilemma is to repeal this act.

Retention of the prescription drug benefit, as proposed by Stark-Gradison, will not only cost Medicare over $2 billion to set up the reporting and administrative system, but by 1993, the program will also actually only help 5.9 million of the 34 million beneficiaries. Furthermore, estimated costs are now expected to reach as high as $11.8 billion—twice as high as originally projected. Finally, the Stark-Gradison amendment will not ensure that the surtax is repealed.

The only way to make sure that this surtax is nullified, and that the long-term health care needs of the elderly are truly met, is to repeal the "Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988." That is why I support the Donnelly-Archer amendment. Piecemeal reform will not correct the problem. With repeal, we will be able to take a fresh look at the health care needs of our Nation's elderly. The Donnelly-Archer amendment will give us this opportunity.

Mr. SYNAR. Mr. Chairman, last year I joined a majority of my colleagues in the House and Senate in passing legislation making landmark improvements in Medicare coverage for the elderly. I knew that the legislation wasn't perfect. It had little to offer in the way of long-term care coverage. Many elderly opposed the financing mechanism. But given the narrow parameters imposed on the Congress by President Reagan and the budget deficit, and the competing interests of all the groups, I felt it was the best the Congress could do. In the immortal words of the Rolling Stones, "you can't always get what you want. But if you try sometimes, you just might find you get what you need."

That the elderly need catastrophic coverage is undisputed. On average, Medicare covers only 45 percent of an elderly person's health care bills. It doesn't provide coverage for prescription medicines. Every day low-income elderly decide not to get medicines their doctors prescribe because they can't afford them. Coverage for long-term care costs are almost nonexistent. Elderly couples must spend down all of their savings and become distitute to get help from the Government. Millions of elderly cannot afford private insurance to supplement Medicare's coverage.

The Catastrophic Coverage Act would have gone a long way toward meeting these needs by providing a package of benefits that pick up where Medicare now leaves off.

Congress obviously underestimated the strength of the opposition to a catastrophic program which was substantially self-financed. Regrettably efforts to educate beneficiaries about the new coverage were unsuccessful. Misinformation about who will pay what and what they will get for it abounds. The Joint Committee on Taxation has studied the incomes of the elderly and the catastrophic health insurance program. Based on their findings, only 5.6 percent of elderly will pay the maximum surtax; 60 percent of all seniors will pay no surtax.

Leaving the program as is is no longer an option. It would have been nice to authorize Medicare to undertake a comprehensive educational program on the merits of catastrophic coverage. The Congress has decided to respond to the complaints of the elderly by either modifying the program or repealing it.

Given the choice between the changes the Ways and Means Committee made in the program and repeal, I have to support repeal.

First, the Ways and Means proposal is unacceptable because it shifts the burden of paying for the catastrophic coverage to those least able to afford it. A recent study shows that 70 percent of Oklahoma seniors would pay higher premiums under this plan. Under the original catastrophic proposal, 70 percent of Oklahoma elderly would have paid nothing. Over 37 percent of Oklahoma seniors are at or below poverty level. The median income of Oklahoma seniors is just $13,343—only $3,000 above poverty for a single person. Oklahoma's elderly spend 13.3 percent of their incomes on medical costs.

Second, although the proposal claims to make the catastrophic coverage voluntary it is not. Volunteering to give up the catastrophic coverage also means losing Medicare part B coverage. This definition of volunteer gives new meaning to Orwellian doublespeak.

Even though I'm supporting repeal of the program, it troubles me. Repeal of catastrophic doesn't do anything to help the millions of elderly who are at great risk of financial ruin due to an unexpected, long-term illness. As I travel around the Second Congressional District elderly tell me that their biggest fear is their families. I receive letters from elderly Oklahomans in just this predicament every week. Some of the people qualify for Medicaid but still can't afford their medicines, like the elderly couple I heard from recently.

Their combined Social Security is $520 a month. One spouse's monthly drug bill is $207. She has high blood pressure; he had congestive heart failure. She writes that sometimes she skips buying her medicine because of the high cost. And, she concludes by saying that she's not asking for anything. "We learned long ago that the poor people, expecially the elderly, are going to be left that way."

I would like to say that these letters are rare. They aren't. It's true that the number of letters I get from low-income elderly pale in comparison to the stack of mail I've gotten in opposition to the Catastrophic Coverage Act. Perhaps if these elderly were better organized we would not be voting on this issue today.

My conscience won't let me vote for repeal for catastrophic without also supporting the Stark-Waxman-Gradison amendment which reinstates the prescription drug benefit and preserves some of the more important long-term-care benefits.

The Stark-Waxman-Gradison amendment eliminates the supplemental premium as well as all of the Medicare part A benefits, including unlimited hospitalization. Recent polls suggest this coverage is least needed by the elderly. It provides up to 38 days of home health care per illness and extends the hospice coverage for terminally ill elderly. It permits every elderly woman to receive a mammogram every other year and provides new respite care coverage to relieve unpaid care providers up to 80 hours a year. These benefits are paid for through a flat monthly premium of just $5 per month this year. For elderly that are 100 percent of poverty, the States will be required to pay for the deductibles and premiums.

The elderly who will benefit from this amendment haven't waged an organized campaign for this coverage. They don't expect any help from their Government. Many Members of Congress probably haven't even heard from them or know that they exist. It is for them that the Catastrophic Coverage Act was created and it is them that will suffer most as a result of its repeal. The modest expansion of Medicare as proposed in the Stark amendment is the least the Congress can do to ease their burden.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Chairman, today Members of this body have a unique opportunity to respond to the huge outpouring of dissatisfaction that has spread like wildfire across the country. Today this body can admit that it made a mistake last year when it passed the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act. Today this body can vote to repeal the Medicare catastrophic law and its onerous tax imposed on the Nation's elderly.

Let the record show that this Member intends to cast his vote to repeal this law. I have been pushing for this kind of action, as have many of you, because I am convinced that America's senior citizens are finally speaking for themselves through the Members of the House, not through senior citizen groups who have purported to represent them. A great many senior Americans clearly don't want the catastrophic coverage at the cost mandated; if they don't want it under those circumstances, it shouldn't be forced on them.

Today's debate and votes will send an important message to the millions of senior citizens who have been contacting Congress. We hear you. We hear your pleas and demands, and we have successfully convinced the leadership of this body to permit an up-or-down vote on repeal of the catastrophic program.

Like every single Member of Congress, this Member has received hundreds of letters from angry constituents who vigorously protest the imposition of the onerous surtax. In town meetings across my congressional district during the last several months, the No. 1 concern on the minds of most of the senior citizens constituents attending was the repeal of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act and the surtax that would fund what they see as useless or less than cost-effective benefits. They don't want the surtax, and often as not, they say they don't want or need the coverage it would bring. What many say they want and need is assistance on long-term care, not catastrophic care. Many already had catastrophic care insurance. In many cases, their private coverage was said to be superior to the benefits that would be provided under the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act.

Congress cannot turn its back on the Nation's senior citizens and other Medicare-eligible beneficiaries who say they do not want to reform a law they see as fundamentally flawed. We should return to the drawing boards and begin anew to discuss the need for long-term care and most important, to consider how it can be financed without creating further generational strife and inequities.

While the reforms offered by the members of the Ways and Means Committee in the pending reconciliation bill may have been well-intentioned, the catastrophic reform package contained in the committee's reconciliation proposal is flawed.

According to a study by Families United for Senior Action, under the tax panel's proposed catastrophic revisions, 58 percent of the Nation's elderly taxpayers will pay more under the committee's proposed changes, while only 25 percent will pay less. The remaining 17 percent will experience no change. Additionally, the study points out, 31 percent of those individuals who will have to pay more under the Ways and Means Committee's proposals have incomes between 100 and 149 percent of the poverty guidelines, while 79 percent of those individuals who will pay less than current law calls for have incomes at or above 300 percent of poverty.

Just as the committee reforms are flawed, so too are the provisions of the Stark-Gradison-Waxman substitute amendment. The substitute is unrealistic. Those who believe that modest flat-rate premiums will actually cover the drug benefits provided in the substitute are looking at life through rose-colored glasses. Just between February and July of this year, the Congressional Budget Office doubled its estimate of the cost of prescription drug benefits.

In closing, this Member says: We need repeal, not reform. This is the time to repeal the law before the benefits start. This action takes away no benefits presently being delivered. The repeal language provides a transition back to prior law governing Medicare supplemental—sometimes called Medigap—policies. It requires that insurance companies treat individuals who dropped such policies in anticipation of the Medicare catastrophic law be treated as if their coverage continued, if they want to resume their private plans.

America's elderly citizens are watching us and will not forget our actions. This is a historic moment for Congress and for the Nation's elderly. We now have the opportunity to undo a clossal mistake.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to take this opportunity to express my full support for repeal of Public Law 100-360, the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988.

I am proud to say that at the onset, I was one of 72 Members of the House of Representatives who voted against enacting this catastrophic health bill. From the beginning, I knew that this bill would penalize seniors who saved money for their retirement years. The so-called benefits of this law do not meet the majority of seniors' needs, nor address the real problems with long-term and custodial care.

Since the beginning of the 101st Congress, my office has received at least 2,000 letters and has received hundreds of calls from seniors who are in strong opposition to this law.

Clearly, the Donnelly-Archer amendment which repeals the Medicare catastrophic law makes the most sense. We can not make adequate adjustments to the law on the floor of the House of Representatives, we need to make a fresh start and provide seniors with true catastrophic health care which addresses the problems of home and long-term health care.

The Stark-Waxman-Gradison amendment is nothing more than a poor band-aid approach which contains no meaningful long-term care benefits or meaningful long-term custodial care features. Additionally, the Stark-Waxman-Gradison amendment retains the most expensive, unpredictable, and controversial prescription program which few seniors will benefit from and which many do not feel is really catastrophic in nature.

I urge my colleagues to support the Donnelly-Archer amendment. Seniors throughout the Nation have expressed their views and we must now take responsible action and repeal this catastrophic law.

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Chairman, today I cast a vote which reflects the sentiments of an overwhelming 77 percent of the seniors in my district. Although I voted in favor of the Medicare Catastrophic Protection Act last year, today I am compelled to vote to repeal that law.

When we passed this law last year, most of us believed we would protect senior citizens from the catastrophic costs associated with unexpected, serious illnesses and accidents. We voted on that law largely because of the recommendations of national groups, such as the American Association of Retired Persons [AARP], which we believed represented the views of the majority of older Americans, and which informed us that the new protections we offered were vitally needed. This year, we spent much time and energy explaining our votes for the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act to millions of very angry senior citizens.

These men and women do not simply write letters. They write hundreds of thousands of letters. They call. They send telegrams. They join organizations which mass mail mountains of postcards. They demonstrate, holler, and carry signs. One women has even turned herself into a folk heroine of sorts by throwing herself across the hood of a car in which the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, DAN ROSTENKOWSKI, was a passenger. These people are furious, and many of them have every reason to be furious.

Some have tried to dismiss this outcry as nothing more than complaints from a very vocal minority of wealthy seniors. Although there is no doubt that higher-income elderly are far more upset by this new law than are low-income elderly, I have also heard complaints from Federal and military retirees who are far from wealthy. While many seniors claim that the entire funding mechanism for the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act is unfair, if not unconstitutional, many of my constituents have presented convincing cases to show that regardless of the cost, the new coverage does not add anything to their existing benefits packages.

More than 6 million elderly men and women will go without catastrophic protection if we repeal this law today; however, millions will pay as much as $800 this year for benefits they already had if we do not repeal the law. Although I continue to believe that the Medicare Catastrophic Protection Act offers a good value for the benefits it provides, and continue to believe that many seniors need this coverage, the public response to this program makes it impossible for us to retain this law in its present form. I recently mailed a questionnaire to seniors in my district regarding this law. A decisive 77 percent told me they wanted to see the law repealed. Today, Mr. Speaker, I must cast a vote which represents the sentiments of my constituents.

I vote today for an amendment which will repeal the Catastrophic Coverage Act and the surtax which has raised such an outcry. In its place, we will offer a chronic and preventive care program, financed by a flat, monthy premium increase paid by all Medicare part B subscribers. This new program contains modified prescription drug coverage, and those benefits which are seldom, if ever, covered by private insurers. Most importantly, it retains important protections for the poor, and for seniors whose spouse must enter a nursing home.

This amendment has the support of every major senior citizens group in the Nation: National Council of Senior Citizens, National Commitee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare, National Council on Aging, AARP, United Auto Workers, Families USA, AFSCME, Service Employees International Union, Save our Security Coalition, and National Association of Retired Federal Employees. Members of these very groups have been largely responsible for the flood of mail which our offices have received on this issue. I believe a vote for this amendment is needed to stem the tide.

I would like to think that we are not merely backpaddling by repealing this law. I realize that we are undoing untold months of hard work which went into creating the Catastrophic Protection Act; however, we need not chalk it all up to wasted time and misguided effort. Rather, let us learn from this debacle, in order that we as a nation can move forward and address the truly catastrophic health care problems in America—namely, long term care, and health coverage for the uninsured.

Our constituents have told us loud and clear that those are the most pressing health needs facing our country today. Presently, the Pepper Commission, a group of health care experts and informed Members of Congress, is drafting a report which addresses both of those needs. I urge this body to take that report to heart, to learn from the lessons of the Medicare Catastrophic Protection Act, and move this country forward with a health policy that protects all Americans not only from the catastrophe of illness, but from the catastrophe of the cost of illness.

Mr. COMBEST. Mr. Chairman, today we have the opportunity to show senior citizens across this Nation that we have heard their cries of protest over the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act. My office like many of my colleagues have been inundated with over 3,000 letters asking for repeal of the this unfair and potentially devestating act. I voted against this ill-conceived legislation when it came before the House last year and I will vote today for the Archer-Donnelly amendment to repeal the catastrophic health care law.

My seniors have made it clear that they will except nothing less than total repeal. The Stark-Gradison-Waxman amendment, which would try to salvage the most fiscally unpredictable portion of the catastrophic act, the drug benefit, is like throwing a cement life preserver to a drowning man, it just won't work.

Let's repeal this truly catastrophic legislation and start from scratch to give seniors what they really want, long-term care.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Chariman, I rise in support of the Donnelly-Archer-Russo amendment. It's clear that we need to go back to square one and reconsider what kind of health care coverage the Government should provide and how it should be paid for.

It is unfortunate that the focus of opposition to this new program has centered on the surtax. As one of only a few Democrats who voted against this expansion of Medicare last year, I did not oppose it because of its financing—in fact, I thought, and continue to think, that progressive financing of the benefits was a positive aspect of the bill. I voted against it because there was a more fundamental flaw: it levied high fees for largely marginal benefits, except for hospitalization, rather than for truly catastrophic needs—that is, for long-term illnesses or disabilities which require lengthy stays in nursing homes or full-time care in a person's own home.

Neither the Ways and Means Committee provision, nor the Stark-Gradison-Waxman amendment, resolve this fundamental problem. Both are attempts to salvage at least part of the program by cutting or eliminating the surtax. But doing so necessarily means increasing the burden on a low- and middle-income elderly, either by raising their premiums or cutting their benefits. Furthermore, under either option, we would find it nearly as difficult to finance the long-term care benefits that should be our true goal as it would be if we kept the current program.

There is no way that the Federal Government can cover all the health care needs of the people in this country, elderly and nonelderly alike. We have to choose priorities. As I hope we have learned from the outcry over this bill, Congress made the wrong choice by approving a program costing tens of billions of dollars to increase coverage for physicians' fees and add coverage for prescription drugs and a host of other benefits. Those costs may cause some hardship, but they do not compare with the financial catastrophe of long-term care—a cost that bankrupts all but the very wealthiest Americans.

If we succeed in repealing the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act, I hope that the Ways and Means Committee will go back and look at what the unmet health care needs really are, and what people really want; I think they will find them to be helpful with nursing home and home health care costs. I also hope that our experience with the the 1988 law will not discourage the committee from pursuing a plan for progressive financing. If we provide the benefits people want—and probably thought they were getting when we first starting talking about catastrophic coverage—then we'll see a greater wilingness on their part to pay for them.

Mr. Chairman, repeal is the right choice. I urge our colleagues to vote for the Donnelly-Archer-Russo amendment, and against the Stark-Gradison-Waxman amendment.

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the amendment offered by my distinguished colleagues, Representative DONNELLY and Representative ARCHER, to repeal the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act.

I will cast my vote for this amendment with considerable reluctance. When President Reagan originally proposed legislation to expand Medicare to cover catastrophic medical expenses for the elderly and disabled, I welcomed the plan. Participants would have received up to 1 year of hospital care, with a $2,000 cap on out-of-pocket expenses, for the nominal cost of about $5 per month, or $60 per year. Unfortunately, what began as an actuarially sound, simple reform to Federal health insurance for the elderly has become a broad expansion of Medicare benefits financed through premium increases and an unacceptable surtax on America's elderly. As it stands, the program has become a gross caricature of itself and must be repealed.

Earlier this year, I joined with a number of my colleagues in introducing H.R. 2055, the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Amendments of 1989. This legislation would have repealed catastrophic and restored the Reagan-Bowen plan with some needed modification. I remain hopeful that one day, Congress will pass similar legislation. Regretfully, now is not the time. It is apparent that this program is beyond repair. Senior citizens have spoken with unmistakable clarity for repeal.

We must realize that the firestorm caused by the existing legislation will seem tame compared to the hostility and resentment that will result if we do not alter our course. New projections by the Congressional Budget Office [CBO], indicate that the costs of Catastrophic will be far in excess of those relied upon in enacting this law. Last year, CBO estimated that the 5-year cost of the bill would be $31 billion; now, just 1 year later, with many elements of the program not yet in place, costs are said to be $48.2 billion. The program is simply too expensive for participants, and for the Federal Government. It makes no sense for us to continue a program that is staunchly opposed by those we sought to help.

While repealing the major provisions of the Catastrophic Act, this amendment before us also offers transitional protections for the elderly which I believe are vitally important. Those senior citizens who had Medigap policies in effect on December 31, 1988, and who terminated coverage under the policies as of January 1, 1989, will be treated by insurers as having had coverage throughout 1989. Additionally, the amendment provides protection for individuals hospitalized or admitted to a skilled nursing facility in 1989. For these individuals, hospital or skilled nursing facility days used during 1989 will not be counted for purposes of calculating lifetime reserve days.

Mr. Speaker, the solutions to the problem of health care for the elderly are elusive and complex. We must, however, learn from our constituents, and have the courage to recognize the widespread unpopularity of the status quo. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting the repeal of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act.

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment by Mr. DONNELLY and Mr. ARCHER to repeal the major provisions of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act.

I take this step with a great deal of regret. When President Reagan proposed to expand Medicare coverage to include Catastrophic Health Care Coverage, I thought it was an excellent idea. However, the version signed into law bears virtually no resemblance to the President's original program. What began as a sound, simple reform to the Medicare Program for the elderly, expanded into a broad array of benefits which went far beyond the notion of catastrophic coverage. The Catastrophic Act financed the program through increases in the program's existing premium and by adding a new mandatory premium which is essentially a tax for nearly 40 percent of the elderly.

Before the ink was dry on the President's signature, senior citizens across the country were expressing their dismay, arguing that the surtax arbitrarily subjected older taxpayers to a higher Federal income tax than younger ones. This maximum surtax would reach $1,050 a year by 1993 for an elderly single individual.

While the benefits, such as the drug benefit, are certainly meritorious, they are benefits that the elderly did not want to pay with a surtax. And for other benefits, many elderly already have coverage through their Medigap policies.

Also, it has become very clear in recent weeks that the costs of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act were grossly underestimated at the time of passage. The Congressional Budget Office recently informed us that the 5-year cost of the bill has been underestimated by $17 billion in comparison to original estimates. The program is now estimated to cost $48.2 billion over 5 years instead of the original $31 billion. The country can ill afford to finance a program that costs so much and provides so little in substantive benefits.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting the Donnelly-Archer repeal amendment.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Chairman, as an original cosponsor of this repeal amendment, I urge my colleagues to vote for America's senior citizens by ending this legislative mistake. Although only small groups of us voted against the catastrophic bill last year, by now every Member of Congress has heard a clear message from our senior citizens: They do not need this law, they cannot afford this law and they do not want this law.

The American people are tired of paying the costs for the grand designs of the ivory tower social engineers in Washington who somehow think they have been anointed with the wisdom and power to tell the rest of us what health insurance we can and cannot have.

On September 20, a group of us held a special order in this House to discuss the problems with last year's law. My analysis has been based on the thousands of letters and calls from senior citizens across northeast Wisconsin who have provided the evidence that my opposition to this bill last year was what seniors want and need.

There are three basic problems. First, the cost of this program is very high. The seniors only surtax adds an extra 15 percent—as much as $800—to the tax bill of each senior citizen due next April. This burden rises each year, to $1,000 in 1994 and even higher thereafter. On top of this tax, each Medicare beneficiary pays a monthly premium, beginning at $4 this year and rising to $10 over the next 3 years, with no limit later on.

Second, very few seniors will ever use this insurance. Only 1 of every 15 seniors will actually ever benefit. Very few will use the drug coverage above the $600 a year deductible. And few will benefit from the physician coverage which is limited to paying only at government set rates.

Third and worst, seniors have no choice. Last year's bill wiped out all of the existing private insurance that seniors already had for catastrophic illness. All Medicare eligible seniors must pay the surtax, whether they want Medicare coverage or not. And all seniors already on Medicare must take the new coverage or give up their existing Medicare physician insurance. That is simply wrong.

There is another amendment today that some want to override our repeal effort. That amendment would keep a part of the Medicare insurance plan that supposedly covers prescription drugs. But the fine print shows that each senior would have to spend $800 out of their own pocket before getting any coverage. And for this benefit each senior would still pay the monthly premium, even though only a small group would ever benefit. This amendment only makes the problem worse, and I urge my colleagues to oppose it.

Today's votes go directly to a fundamental principle of our Government: The role of the Congress is to respond to the will of the people. For most of us, that is the watchword of our office, but some need to be reminded they are here to serve, not to rule. How else can one explain the last ditch attempt by a small group of diehards who want to override our repeal amendment with a pared down mandated health insurance plan? Could it be their hope is to preserve just enough of this Medicare catastrophic law so that later on in a closed conference with the other body they can resurrect their insurance scheme and bring it back as part of the final version of this budget bill?

America's senior citizens understand that we will not have finished the job today unless we have both voted for our repeal amendment and defeated the attempt to keep a part of the catastrophic insurance plan on the books. We must send this bill to the other body with the repeal amendment that our senior citizens have demanded.

In a few weeks, the other body will act on its version of this legislation, and a small group from each House will then meet to work out the differences. Since the likely House conferees are mostly fighting against our repeal amendment, we must send them to conference with a clear message: Repeal is the only acceptable decision for our senior citizens and for this House.

Repeal of the Medicare catastrophic insurance law is not the end of our work. Senior citizens need access to health care services and they need insurance that fits their budgets. But to make progress toward a better Medicare Program, we must wipe the slate clean, so we can move on to work on an insurance plan that really helps our senior citizens and does not bankrupt them. I look forward to the day when Congress can act on a plan that senior citizens want, and not what the self-appointed Washington spokesmen and social engineers seek. Ours must remain the Government of the people, by the people, and for the people.

Today, let the rest of the House join those of us who have taken the lead in bringing this repeal amendment to the House. I urge my colleagues to vote for our repeal effort.

Mr. OWENS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise in supoprt of the Stark substitute to overhaul the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Program the Congress enacted last year.

This substitute would eliminate the supplemental premium and most of the catastrophic benefits but would retain the monthly premium and some of the new benefits that many of my constituents have told me they consider to be most important. The new respite care benefit would be maintained, providing coverage for 80 hours a year of home health aide services to relieve families and friends who are helping to care for a homebound Medicare beneficiary. The expanded home health care benefit would also continue, providing coverage for up to 38 days of home care per illness. Also preserved would be the new, unlimited coverage for hospice care and coverage of mammograms, a critical service that experts estimate will help save the lives of some 4,000 Medicare beneficiaries each year. And most importantly, the Stark substitute would preserve the prescription drug coverage that our late colleague Claude Pepper fought so hard to get included in the act.

For these reasons, I join with the AARP, National Council of Senior Citizens, NARFE, the Gray Panthers, the Older Women's League, the National Caucus and Center on Black Aged, and the National Committee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare in supporting the Stark substitute.

When the House first debated the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act, I made clear my opposition to requiring senior citizens themselves to pick up the entire cost of the new benefits. It was and is a bad idea. We do not insist that parents of school-age children pay the cost of elementary and secondary education in this country. We all contribute because we believe that access to education is a basic prerequisite for the kind of just and decent society we want to live in. And so it is also with health care. The burden should not fall exclusively on the ill or the elderly; it is something all of us must share.

Last year I also noted that the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act was not the kind of legislation my constituents most wanted to see. Their chief concern—then and now—is long-term health care, an issue that the act did not address at all. Claude Pepper supported the act, but he described it as the "step of a dwarf." He was right—and, in the judgment of many of my constituents, it was not even a step in the right direction.

I am pleased that the House is finally acting to address these and other concerns seniors have about the act. But I am disturbed by some of the talk going on behind the scenes. Privately and also publicly, we hear from some of those who both support and oppose repeal complaints that older Americans are greedy and selfish. Others suggest the problem is that seniors are confused and do not really understand the issue. And more and more, you hear people say the Congress is going to teach senior citizens a lesson by refusing to take action to confront the problem of long-term health care.

How idiotic.

The older Americans in my district are not greedy and they are not confused. From the day I first came to Congress to the present, their message to me has been the same: Something must be done now to guarantee quality, affordable health care to all who need it. No bill excites more interest when I meet with seniors in my district than Representative RON DELLUMS' U.S. Health Service legislation—H.R. 2500—and other similar bills. People in Brooklyn simply do not understand how it can be that the Governments of Libya and Luxembourg and dozens of other nations can provide more generous health care coverage to their people than the Government of a wealthy and powerful Nation like the United States. They are sick and tired of seeing Medicare slowly bled to death by a thousand cuts; sick and tired of the mounting monthly premiums and deductibles; sick and tired of paying more and more for less and less; and sick and tired, most of all, of the endless string of excuses they are given for Washington's inaction. They want action now. Not minor, piecemeal reforms, but a decisive and radical overhaul of our Nation's health care system. It is broke, they say, and it is time for us to fix it.

Many of my colleagues have probably heard much the same thing back home in their districts. But somehow here in Washington the message never seems to get through. Nothing happens. It's business as usual. The premiums go up; the problems deepen; nothing is done. And when we do finally do something, we give people benefits they don't want and then hand them the bill.

Today, at last, the message from the grassroots has gotten through. The anger, the frustration, the demands for change are starting to be heard. Seniors will no longer be put off or ignored. And anyone who thinks they are going to get even with seniors by doing nothing about long-term care can expect to find themselves learning a lesson—not teaching one.

There is no reason why we cannot act on the long-term care issue during the 101st Congress. So far, this has been a singularly disappointing session of Congress. With so many vital issues and problems needing to be addressed—not only health care, but the drug abuse emergency, the housing crisis, and the state of our schools—we have wasted our time on the legislative equivalent of shadowboxing and puppet plays, debating nonissues like flag burning and titillating artwork. No problem we face is insurmountable or insoluble; there are concrete, meaningful actions we can take tomorrow to revitalize our schools, to build housing for our people, and to make quality health care available to all.

"The earth is littered with the jawbones of asses," the poet Georg Buchner once wrote, "What may be missing are the Samsons to swing them." The 101st Congress can still be salvaged if we start heeding the call from our constituents and come out swinging.

Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate having this opportunity to speak out on behalf of the many senior citizens I am privileged to represent concerning the terribly unfair burden imposed by the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act.

I have opposed this bill from the outset, calling it catastrophic taxation and a cruel hoax on the elderly. As passed, the bill fell far short of the goal of providing affordable, catastrophic health insurance coverage. Instead, it represented the largest expansion of Medicare since the program was created over 20 years ago, requiring that we impose catastrophic taxation to provide protection against the cost of catastrophic illness.

More than 11 million senior citizens, or 35 percent of all retirees, will be forced to pay the new Medicare surtax this year. Both the tax rates and the percentage of elderly paying the tax will continue to rise in future years. According to the Congressional Budget Office [CBO], 42 percent of the elderly, or 14 million retirees, will be paying the new tax by 1993. Recent proposals to lower the cap will not cure the inequities in this legislation and should not be accepted as a solution. Congress can just as easily raise the cap when additional revenues are needed.

Most seniors will be paying for health care coverage they do not need. Of the Nation's 32 million Medicare beneficiaries, 125,000 will benefit from the provision allowing for hospital stays in excess of 60 days per year. This act assures that 93 percent of the participants will not exceed the out-of-pocket limit on physicians fees and services. Moreover, 83.2 percent will never exceed the deductible for prescription drugs. Costs to the potential beneficiaries in terms of taxes, premiums, and deductibles will continue to rise while the percentage of actual beneficiaries remains constant.

Furthermore, over 70 percent of Medicare beneficiaries already have provided catastrophic coverage for themselves. Participants who are most likely to incur the supplemental premium are likely to be covered by their existing Medigap or retirement health plans. Nearly 70 percent of Medicare enrollees also carry policies to cover what Medicare does not offer, and another 10 percent are covered by Medicaid.

In response to a wave of outrage from older Americans, the House Ways and Means Committee has approved a revision of last year's catastrophic care bill. While the committee's action provides some relief from the catastrophic taxes, it doesn't go far enough. Rather than support the Ways and Means reform package, I would urge my colleagues to support the Donnelly amendment which is being offered today. Representative DONNELLY's amendment would repeal the Catastrophic Protection Act, while keeping in place those provisions which assist the poor and most vulnerable. Under Representative DONNELLY's plan, the surtax would be repealed, effective December 1988, and the supplemental would be returned to the participating individuals.

The Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act is a costly mistake in more ways than one. It should be repealed. Today we have the opportunity to convince our respective senior constituencies that their voices have been heard, and that we share their outrage. Vote today for the Donnelly amendment to repeal the Catastrophic Protection Act.

Mr. FAUNTROY. Mr. Chairman, the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act that we passed last year has been the object of more controversy and constituent outcry than most of us have seen in a good long while. Although none of us in the 100th Congress was completely satisfied with the legislation that was passed, many of us were determined to get something through the Congress that would provide for the catastrophic health care needs of America's senior citizens. In the meantime, of course, we have been bombarded with complaints from individuals and from senior citizen advocacy groups who are opposed to the costs of the catastrophic care provisions, and especially the imposition of the surtax.

Realizing that the financing mechanism for the catastrophic coverage was flawed, I immediately cosponsored legislation in the 101st Congress, H.R. 974, introduced by my colleague, BARNEY FRANK, of Massachusetts, that would repeal the additional part B increases mandated by the new law and would freeze the part A surtax rate and cap at the 1989 level, with possible adjustments for inflation; additional revenues necessary to pay for the coverage would instead be raised through a doubling of the cigarette tax. A few months later, I also became a cosponsor of H.R. 2547, introduced by my colleague, DAVID BONIOR, of Michigan, to repeal the supplemental premium and provide for catastrophic benefits by extending the maximum individual income tax rate of 33 percent, eliminating a longstanding inequity that favors the very rich. I cosponsored both of these bills in an effort to retain the catastrophic benefits for so many people who need them, while alleviating the apparent unfairness in the financing mechanism which penalized many low- and moderate-income individuals and families.

As the debate on catastrophic care continued, both in committees of the House and in the Nation as a whole, I have become increasingly disturbed by two emerging trends. First, I am concerned about the avalanche of selfishness exhibited by too many people of means all across our Nation who are saying, "Yes, we want the catastrophic care benefits, but we don't want to pay for them." Many of the same people who were advocating for the catastrophic care bill 1 year ago are now complaining that they don't want it because they must bear a portion of the expense. While I recognize that the financing mechanism may need adjustment, to alleviate the disproportionate burden now being levied upon some low- and middle-income consumers, I am convinced that many who do have the means to pay simply are too selfish to share the cost of the services from which they will directly benefit.

Second, I am concerned that so many of my colleagues in the House are advocating for repeal of the entire catastrophic care package because it needs revision and refinement. Certainly, while the law needs some reworking, to repeal this legislation for which we struggled so long would be a serious step backward in our response to the health care needs of our Nation's senior citizens. According to mail received in my office just in the past few days, the majority of senior citizens and, indeed, 77 percent of all Americans—and believe me, all of us will in some way be affected by the outcome of today's legislative decisions—are staunchly opposed to repeal of the catastrophic coverage and instead support the Stark-Waxman-Gradison substitute, which retains many provisions of the current law, including the widely favored prescription drug benefits, but eliminates the Medicare surtax completely. While I am not completely satisfied that the Stark-Gradison-Waxman substitute is the perfect solution to the catastrophic care dilemma, I respect the monumental effort that my colleagues have invested in its development and I am responsive to the dozens of national senior citizen advocacy groups and other national health organizations which have strongly endorsed this alternative over repeal.

Mr. Chairman, while I would much prefer that we were voting today on a comprehensive national health care policy that would provide a unified and accountable program of health care for all Americans, I urge my colleagues to take a stand to retain what is good in our current provisions for catastrophic medical coverage and to support the Stark-Gradison-Waxman substitute as the best alternative before us today for providing for the catastrophic health care needs of our Nation's senior citizens. And I urge us to work even harder in the days before us to stop the insanity of merely throwing peanuts at our Nation's needs for nonviolent solutions to its human problems while we pour billions into poorly designed war plans masquerading as national defense. We need a comprehensive national health care policy, and this current confusion over catastrophic care is a grating example of why we cannot afford to wait for it any longer.

Mr. BUECHNER. Mr. Chairman, over 1 year ago I was visited by the lobbyist for one of our Nation's most powerful senior citizens groups. He demanded I support the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act. I expressed to him my serious concerns with the bill. He said he felt it was in the best interest of our Nation's senior citizens and likened their bill to be a train coming down the track and that I could either support them or be left at the station. My reply was I think I'll just step aside and listen for the crash.

Well, Mr. Chairman, the crash has occurred and Congress is being called upon to clean up the mess it created. Only 1 year ago, the Catastrophic Coverage Act was hailed as a major advancement for long-term health care for our senior citizens. I had serious problems with the bill and was one of 72 Members who voted against it.

Two overriding factors guided my vote. At town meetings in my district senior citizens called upon Congress to address their prime concern of long-term care cost. I heard their voices and decided the present catastrophic package did not meet the criteria they set forth.

Now, in a true catastrophic care package the long-term needs of our Nation's elderly population would be directly addressed and not simply swept over with a "free-for-all benefit expansion" of the present system. Unfortunately, the present catastrophic law was a generous benefit expansion which obviously did not resolve the long-term care dilemma. In fact, the package has actually harmed seniors by way of prohibitive, duplicative costs and in absence of true long-term care benefits.

The Stark-Waxman revision of the catastrophic law is not the answer. The amendment may seem to retain some long-term benefits, when, in fact, there is no meaningful long term custodial care feature in this amendment or under current law. The home health coverage and hospice benefits it retains are associated with acute care, not long term custodial care.

Even the Ways and Means revision of the Catastrophic Health Care Act bill does not address the problem. It does not address the concerns of seniors who do not want to duplicate catastrophic benefits that are already available through supplemental insurance policies. Further, the revision ties the catastrophic benefits to part B of Medicare which amounts to more of subliminal cohersion rather than a true option.

Another factor in my decision not to support the bill last year was that most of the senior population who shoulder the costs for this massive Federal program are older Americans who were already covered with some form of private insurance. The "catastrophic" financing provision is not only unfair but carries with it costs that will spiral out of control. In addition, the costs that will be picked up by Medicare adds one more obligation to a system that is already stretched to its limit.

The public outcry over the Catastrophic Program is deafening, and the voices calling for repeal are getting louder. Our "window of opportunity" to provide a straightforward, accessible, and cost-effective catastrophic package that meets the needs of our aging population closes with each passing day.

The same people who gave me the directive to get me on the train that crashed are back. This time they have a plane. It's called the Stark proposal. It provides the wrong benefits at the wrong price. Let's ground it now before it too crashes.

The cure for this ailing program is quite simple: Congress should just "do the right thing"—repeal the current defective plan and begin more deliberate work on a system truly responsive to needs of our elderly Americans.

Mr. WELDON. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to rise today in strong and vocal support for the Donnelly-Archer amendment. Last summer, Congress got itself in trouble by listening to the suggestions of Washington lobbyists claiming to represent the best interests of the senior citizens.

Mr. Chairman, I think you have heard the real voices of the senior citizens. I know that the elderly don't approve of what their national organizations paraded as a triumph for Medicare. The senior citizens in my district want repeal. And they want it now. I am pleased that the House will have a chance to act on those wishes, in a clean, up or down fashion.

Later today we will have an opportunity to vote on a reform proposal offered by the gentlemen from California [Mr. STARK and Mr. WAXMAN]. Provided the House agrees to repeal "catastrophic health care," I will vote against their amendment. While I applaud their desire to see that some of the protections offered to senior citizens be retained, I am suspicious of any modification package supported by "nearly every major senior citizen's group." Isn't that how we got into this mess in the first place? Isn't that the reason that every Member of this body has received thousands of postcards, letters, and petitions from angry senior citizens who complain that we did not act with their best interests in mind? Isn't that the reason that we are having this debate on the floor today?

If we are to be truly effective Members of Congress, then we must listen to the voices of our constituents. Sometimes that can be difficult, as there is often confusion and disagreement among them. In this case, our senior citizens are speaking with one voice. If we fail to vote for repeal today, then we have slapped democracy in the face. We will have acknowledged the complaints and concerns of the people, but listened to paid lobbyists. If we fail to vote for repeal today, then Jefferson and Madison and Washington and Adams will roll over in their graves.

I urge my colleagues to listen to the people and vote for repeal.

Mr. BALLENGER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to take this opportunity to express my strong support for the repeal of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act. Since the passage of this truly catastrophic legislation, I have received numerous letters, almost 2,000 of them, from elderly constitutents asking me to change or even repeal this law. Senior citizens complain that they are paying too much for benefits they do not need, and they are paying for it through increased taxes and premiums. I believe that today we finally have the opportunity to give the people what they want. By voting for the Donnelly-Archer substitute we have the opportunity to repeal this law.

While the Medicaid provisions are beneficial, the rest of the act is a catastrophe. Original estimates projected the cost of the legislation to be $30 billion over 5 years—1989–93. However, new estimates put the cost at closer to $45 billion. With estimated revenues of $39 billion, the Congressional Budget Office [CBO] predicts that the program will be running a $6.2 billion deficit within the initial 5 years of enactment. With the program gone bankrupt, we will be forced to repeal benefits or increase the surtax in order to maintain the program.

Under the Stark-Gradison-Waxman substitute, the controversial surtax is repealed; however, the part B flat premium is increased for all seniors. In addition, the expensive prescription drug benefit would be maintained. This particular benefit alone would boost the cost of the entire program by 45 percent, and very few seniors could take advantage of the coverage. Proponents of this approach claim that it solves the problems voiced by seniors because it repeals the surtax, but maintains needed benefits. I question this reasoning. While the surtax is repealed, part B premiums increase, and it would retain the benefit most likely to bankrupt the entire program.

I recognize the efforts of my colleagues to revise the existing law; however, I believe the only way to effect any real changes is to repeal it, and to start over. Attempting to save a few of the benefits will only cause new problems for a new set of seniors. In addition, it would still not provide the type of coverage that most seniors need and want, such as coverage of extended nursing home care.

I recognized this legislation was a mistake last year, and voted against it. It's time to repeal the law, and craft a new program that matches the needs of the majority of the seniors. Passage of the Donnelly-Archer substitute would allow us this opportunity.

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Chairman, today we will consider whether or not to repeal the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act. Last year when we passed this legislation, we believed that the program would adequately meet the needs of the elderly. However, over the past several months many of us have heard from the senior citizens in our districts that the program is not what they need or want.

I originally supported the Medicare catastrophic coverage bill. I felt that, although it was not perfect, it was a step in the right direction. However, in the ensuing months, it became apparent that the system was flawed and none of the solutions seemed to address the problem. It is for this reason that I am supporting repeal of the program.

My seniors have expressed dismay over the financing mechanism of the program. Under the plan, those who saved and invested their earnings so that they would be self sufficient in their later years must pay an extra fee over and above the premium paid by other beneficiaries. This system punishes those who have planned for their future.

Many seniors have also enrolled in additional Medigap policies which cover some of the benefits included in the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act. Without the option to enroll in the Catastrophic Program, seniors were forced to either give up the Medigap policies in which they had already invested or pay for double coverage.

Further, because of these additional Medigap policies, acute care costs were covered for many seniors. They were more worried about long-term care costs, which can be much greater and for which protection from the private sector is harder to obtain.

I believe that we need to address this as the real catastrophic cost which senior citizens face. I hope that by repealing this program in its present form, we will not preclude ourselves from addressing this serious issue.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. Chairman, I share with my colleages the reservations that have been expressed over the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act. I appreciate very well the tremendous political pressure that we in Congress have been under to repeal this law. I also understand the concerns of some of our senior citizens who have been asked to pay additional taxes to support the program.

However, I must express my deep regret that, in so doing, we will be voting to repeal the skilled nursing facility [SNF] benefit included in the 1988 act. Loss of this provision will exact a great toll in human terms. Thousands of our frail elderly who desperately need skilled nursing care will go wanting, now and in the future.

Let me cite a few facts. The catastrophic health law expanded an already existing SNF benefit. Prior to enactment, it was mainly a "paper benefit." Today it is a bona fide benefit used by many frail elderly. According to figures obtained from the Health Care Financing Administration, more than 500,000 beneficiaries will have obtained a day of covered nursing home care in 1989. My office, and the offices of other Members of Congress, may not have heard from these people, since their condition makes it difficult for them to communicate. But they have been receiving an unmistakable benefit as a result of our passing the catastrophic health law last year.

Mr. Chairman, this is a very sad hour for the U.S. Congress. I hope that even now we can state our commitment to providing accessible, quality long-term care to the millions of Americans who need it.

Mr. MARLENEE. Mr. Chairman, I hate to say it but I told you so. Throughout the 100th Congress, I voted against the catastrophic health bill each time it came up on the House floor. I was concerned about the outrageous cost to senior citizens, adding a 28-percent surtax and a monthly Medicare premium of $42.60 to their already tight budgets to pay for this catastrophe. It's unfair to unload all the cost of this program on the elderly and then provide hardly any service that they will use.

In my discussions with constituents, Montana senior citizens are worried about long-term health care. What does the future hold for them? Will they have to impoverish themselves to receive health care? The bill passed last year did nothing to address the issue of nursing home care or home health care. Its main provisions focused on extended hospital stays and a new drug benefit. What good is that when only one out of every 25,000 Medicare recipients would benefit from this hospital benefit?

Plus, the cost of the drug benefit has already outstripped projected estimates. The Congressional Budget Office estimates that the cost of the new drug benefit, which many pharmacists oppose because of a lack of adequate reimbursement from Medicare, has jumped 107 percent to $11.8 billion. If the Stark/Gradison amendment is approved, which keeps this benefit, who will pay for this increase? You guessed it—the elderly.

At the time, I was attacked for my vote on this legislation, claiming that I was callous toward the elderly. Campaign ads were run against me saying that my vote against the catastrophic health care bill reflected my views that I was against health care for the elderly.

Nothing can be further from the truth. Now, I have the last laugh. I was one of the 73 Members to vote against H.R. 2470, and I have never been more proud of my stand. I'm glad I don't have to reverse my stand from last year. What is needed is a fresh start toward long-term health care—not a half-hearted attempt to piece together bits of a flawed Federal catastrophic health care law.

I would encourage my colleagues to reexamine the role of the private sector in delivering quality health care at the lowest possible cost. I have cosponsored various bills in the past that would encourage the creative energies of the private sector to come up with solutions to the long-time health care problem. We have the best health care system in the world. Let's take the politics out of health care, and put people first before special interest and poll results. Vote "yes" on the Donnelly/Archer catastrophic health care repeal and vote against the Stark/Gradison amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DONNELLY].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 360, noes 66, not voting 6, as follows:

NOT VOTING—6

Courter	Garcia	Yatron
Florio	Wise	Young (AK)

□ 1404

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Florio for, with Mr. Wise against.

Mr. STOKES changed his vote from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The CHAIRMAN. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 7, printed in section 2 of House Report 101-261.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. STARK

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment on behalf of myself, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GRADISON], and the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN].

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STARK: Amend part F of subtitle B of title X (relating to revisions to the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988) to read as follows (and conform the table of contents of such subtitle accordingly):

PART F—REVISION OF MEDICARE PROVISIONS IN THE MEDICARE CATASTROPHIC COVERAGE ACT OF 1988

Subpart 1—Provisions Relating to Part A of Medicare Program and Supplemental Medicare Premium

SEC. 10181. REPEAL OF EXPANSION OF MEDICARE PART A BENEFITS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) GENERAL RULE.—Except as provided in paragraphs (2) and (3), sections 101, 102, and 104(d) (other than paragraphs (2)(C) and (7)) of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 (Public Law 100-360) (in this part referred to as "MCCA") are repealed, and the provisions of law amended or repealed by such sections are restored or revived as if such section had not been enacted.

(2) EXCEPTION FOR BLOOD DEDUCTION.—The repeal of section 102(1) of MCCA shall not apply insofar as such section amended paragraph (2) of section 1813(a) of the Social Security Act (relating to a deduction for blood).

(3) EXCEPTION FOR HOSPICE BENEFIT CHANGES.—The repeal of section 101 of MCCA shall not apply insofar as such section—

(A) amended paragraph (4) of subsection (a) of section 1812 of the Social Security Act (relating to hospice care benefits), and

(B) amended subsection (d) of such section (relating to a subsequent extension period of an election).

(b) TRANSITION PROVISIONS FOR MEDICARE BENEFICIARIES.—

(1) INPATIENT HOSPITAL SERVICES AND POST-HOSPITAL EXTENDED CARE SERVICES.—In applying sections 1812 and 1813 of the Social Security Act, as restored by subsection (a)(1), with respect to inpatient hospital services and extended care services provided on or after January 1, 1990—

(A) no day before January 1, 1990, shall be counted in determining the beginning (or period) of a spell of illness, except that days of inpatient hospital services before January 1, 1989, which were applied with respect to an individual after receiving 90 days of services in a spell of illness (commonly known as "lifetime reserve days") shall be counted;

(B) the limitation of coverage of extended care services to post-hospital extended care services shall not apply to an individual receiving such services from a skilled nursing facility during a continuous period beginning before (and including) January 1, 1990, until the end of the period of 30-consecutive days in which the individual is not provided inpatient hospital services or extended care services; and

(C) the inpatient hospital deductible under section 1813(a)(1) of such Act shall not apply—

(i) in the case of an individual who is receiving inpatient hospital services during a continuous period beginning before (and including) January 1, 1990, with respect to the spell of illness beginning on such date, if such a deductible was imposed on the individual for a period of hospitalization during 1989;

(ii) for a spell of illness beginning during January 1990, if such a deductible was imposed on the individual for a period of hospitalization that began in December 1989; and

(iii) in the case of a spell of illness of an individual that began before January 1, 1989, and has not ended as of January 1, 1990.

(2) TERMINATION OF HOLD HARMLESS PROVISIONS.—Section 104(b) of MCCA is amended by striking "or 1990" each place it appears.

(c) TERMINATION OF TRANSITIONAL ADJUSTMENTS IN PAYMENTS FOR INPATIENT HOSPITAL SERVICES.—

(1) PPS HOSPITALS.—Section 104(c)(1) of MCCA is amended by inserting "and before January 1, 1990," after "October 1, 1988.".

(2) PPS-EXEMPT HOSPITALS.—Section 104(c)(2) of MCCA is amended—

(A) by inserting "and before January 1, 1990," after "January 1, 1989,"; and

(B) by striking the period at the end and inserting the following: ", without regard to whether any of such beneficiaries exhausted medicare inpatient hospital insurance benefits before January 1, 1989.".

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The provisions of this section shall take effect January 1, 1990, except that the amendments made by subsection (c) shall be effective as if included in the enactment of MCCA.

SEC. 10182. REPEAL OF SUPPLEMENTAL MEDICARE PREMIUM AND FEDERAL HOSPITAL INSURANCE CATASTROPHIC COVERAGE RESERVE FUND.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Sections 111 and 112 of MCCA are repealed and the provisions of law amended by such sections are restored or revived as if such sections had not been enacted.

(b) DELAY IN STUDY DEADLINE.—Section 113(c) of MCCA is amended by striking "November 30, 1988" and inserting "May 31, 1990".

(c) DISPOSAL OF FUNDS IN FEDERAL HOSPITAL INSURANCE CATASTROPHIC COVERAGE RESERVE FUND.—Any balance in the Federal Hospital Insurance Catastrophic Coverage Reserve Fund (created under section 1817A(a) of the Social Security Act, as inserted by section 112(a) of MCCA) as of January 1, 1990, shall be transferred into the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund and any amounts payable due to overpayments into such Trust Fund shall be payable from the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund.

(d) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 201(i)(1) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 401(i)(1)) is amended by striking "Federal Hospital Insurance Catastrophic Coverage Reserve Fund,".

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in this subsection, the provisions of this section shall take effect January 1, 1990.

(2) REPEAL OF SUPPLEMENTAL MEDICARE PREMIUM.—The repeal of section 111 of MCCA shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1988.

Subpart 2—Provisions Relating to Part B of the Medicare Program

SEC. 10185. REPEAL OF LIMITATION ON MEDICARE PART B COSTSHARING; MODIFICATION OF COINSURANCE PERCENTAGE FOR COVERED OUTPATIENT DRUGS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 201 of MCCA is repealed and the provisions of law amended or repealed by such section are restored or revived as if such section had not been enacted.

(b) MODIFICATION OF COINSURANCE PERCENTAGE FOR COVERED OUTPATIENT DRUGS FOR 1993.—Section 1834(c)(2)(C)(ii) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395m(c)(2)(C)(ii)) is amended—

(2) the amount of administrative expenses incurred under part B of title XVIII of such Act relating to implementation of MCCA, plus

(3) the amount of interest accrued to the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund attributable to balance described in paragraphs (1) and (2).

SEC. 10187. AMENDMENT OF CERTAIN MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

(a) REVISION OF MEDIGAP REGULATIONS.—

(1) Section 1882 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395ss), as amended by section 221(d) of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988, is amended—

(A) in the third sentence of subsection (a) and in subsection (b)(1), by striking "subsection (k)(3)" and inserting "subsections (k)(3), (k)(4), (m), and (n)";

(B) in subsection (k)—

(i) in paragraph (1)(A), by inserting "except as provided in subsection (m)," before "subsection (g)(2)(A)", and

(ii) in paragraph (3), by striking "subsection (1)" and inserting "subsections (l), (m), and (n)"; and

(C) by adding at the end the following new subsections:

"(m)(1)(A) If, within the 90-day period beginning on the date of the enactment of this subsection, the National Association of Insurance Commissioners (in this subsection and subsection (n) referred to as the 'Association') amends the amended NAIC Model Regulation (referred to in subsection (k)(1)(A) and adopted on September 20, 1988) to reflect the changes in law made by part F of subtitle B of title X of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989, subsection (g)(2)(A) shall be applied in a State, effective on and after the date specified in subparagraph (B), as if the reference to the Model Regulation adopted on June 6, 1979, were a reference to the amended NAIC Model Regulation (referred to in subsection (k)(1)(A)) as amended by the Association in accordance with this paragraph (in this subsection and subsection (n) referred to as the 'revised NAIC Model Regulation').

"(B) The date specified in this subparagraph for a State is the earlier of the date the State adopts standards equal to or more stringent than the revised NAIC Model Regulation or 1 year after the date the Association first adopts such revised Regulation.

"(2)(A) If the Association does not amend the amended NAIC Model Regulation, within the 90-day period specified in paragraph (1)(A), the Secretary shall promulgate, not later than 60 days after the end of such period, revised Federal model standards (in this subsection and subsection (n) referred to as 'revised Federal model standards') for medical supplemental policies to reflect the changes in law made by part F of subtitle B of title X of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989, subsection (g)(2)(A) shall be applied in a State, effective on and after the date specified in subparagraph (B), as if the reference to the Model Regulation adopted on June 6, 1979, were a reference to the revised Federal model standards.

"(B) The date specified in this subparagraph for a State is the earlier of the date the State adopts standards equal to or more stringent than the revised Federal model standards or 1 year after the date the Secretary first promulgates such standards.

"(3) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section (except as provided in subsection (n))—

"(A) no medicare supplemental policy may be certified by the Secretary pursuant to subsection (a),

"(B) no certification made pursuant to subsection (a) shall remain in effect, and

"(C) no State regulatory program shall be found to meet (or to continue to meet) the requirements of subsection (b)(1)(A),

unless such policy meets (or such program provides for the application of standards equal to or more stringent than) the standards set forth in the revised NAIC Model Regulation or the revised Federal model standards (as the case may be) by the date specified in paragraph (1)(B) or (2)(B) (as the case may be).

"(n)(1) Until the date specified in paragraph (4), in the case of a qualifying medicare supplemental policy described in paragraph (3) issued in a State—

"(A) before July 1, 1990, the policy is deemed to remain in compliance with the standards described in subsection (b)(1)(A) if the insurer issuing the policy complies with the transition provision described in paragraph (2), or

"(B) on or after July 1, 1990, the policy is deemed to be in compliance with the standards described in subsection (b)(1)(A) if the insurer issuing the policy complies with the revised NAIC Model Regulation or the revised Federal model standards (as the case may be) before the date of the sale of the policy.

"(2) The transition provision described in this paragraph is—

"(A) such transition provision as the Association provides, by not later than December 15, 1989, so as to provide for an appropriate transition to reflect the changes in benefits under this title made by part F of subtitle B of title X of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989, or

"(B) if the Association does not provide for a transition provision by the date described in subparagraph (A), such transition provision as the Secretary shall provide, by January 1, 1990, so as to provide for an appropriate transition described in subparagraph (A).

"(3) In paragraph (1), the term 'qualifying medicare supplemental policy' means a medicare supplemental policy which has been issued in compliance with this section as in effect on the date before the date of the enactment of this subsection.

"(4)(A) The date specified in this paragraph for a policy issued in a State is—

"(i) the first date a State adopts, after the date of the enactment of this subsection, standards equal to or more stringent than the revised NAIC Model Regulation (or revised Federal model standards), as the case may be, or

"(ii) the date specified in subparagraph (B), whichever is earlier.

"(B) In the case of a State which the Secretary identifies, in consultation with the Association, as—

"(i) requiring State legislation (other than legislation appropriating funds) in order for medicare supplemental policies to meet standards described in subparagraph (A)(i), but

"(ii) having a legislature which is not scheduled to meet in 1990 in a legislative session in which such legislation may be considered, the date specified in this subparagraph is the first day of the first calendar quarter beginning after the close of the first legislative session of the State legislature that begins on or after January 1, 1990. For purposes of the previous sentence, in the case of a State that has a 2-year legislative session, each year of such session shall be deemed to be a separate regular session of the State legislature.

"(5) In the case of a medicare supplemental policy in effect on January 1, 1990, the policy shall not be deemed to meet the standards in subsection (c) unless each individual who is entitled to benefits under this title and is a policyholder under such policy on such date is sent a notice in any appropriate form by not later than January 31, 1990, that explains—

"(A) the changes in benefits under this title effected by part F of subtitle B of title X of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989, and

"(B) how these changes affect the benefits contained in such policy and the premium for the policy.

"(6) In the case of an insurer which had in effect, as of December 31, 1988, a medicare supplemental policy with respect to an individual, for which the individual terminated coverage as of January 1, 1989 (or the earliest renewal date thereafter), no medicare supplemental policy of the insurer shall be deemed to meet the standards in subsection (c) unless the insurer—

"(A) provides written notice, by January 15, 1990, to the individual (at the most recent available address) of the offer described in subparagraph (B), and

"(B) offers to the individual, during the period beginning on January 1, 1990, and ending on March 1, 1990, continuation of coverage under such a medicare supplemental policy (with coverage effective as of January 1, 1990), under the terms respecting treatment of pre-existing conditions and group rating of premium which are at least as favorable to the individual as such terms as existed with respect to the policy as of December 31, 1988.".

(2) It is the sense of Congress that States should respond, at the earliest practicable date after the date of the enactment of this Act, to requests by insurers for review and approval of riders and premium adjustments for medicare supplemental policies in order to comply with the amendments made by paragraph (1).

(b) ADJUSTMENT OF CONTRACTS WITH PREPAID HEALTH PLANS.—Section 222 of MCCA is amended by inserting "and before January 1, 1990," after "December 31, 1988," each place it appears.

(c) NOTICE OF CHANGES.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall provide, in the notice of medicare benefits provided under section 1804 of the Social Security Act for 1990, for a description of the changes in benefits under title XVIII of such Act made by the amendments made by this part.

(d) MISCELLANEOUS TECHNICAL CORRECTION.—Section 221(g)(3) of MCCA is amended by striking "subsection (f)" and inserting "subsection (e)".

(e) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The provisions of this section shall take effect January 1, 1990, except that the amendment made by subsection (d) shall be effective as if included in the enactment of MCCA.

Subpart 3—Miscellaneous Amendments

SEC. 10191. REPEAL OF MAINTENANCE OF EFFORT AND RATE REDUCTION FOR MEDICARE ELIGIBLE FEDERAL ANNUITANTS.

(A) IN GENERAL.—Sections 421 and 422 of MCCA are repealed and any provision of law amended or repealed by such sections is restored or revived as if such sections had not been enacted.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The repeals made by subsection (a) shall take effect January 1, 1990, except that the repeal of section 421 of MCCA shall not apply to duplicative part A benefits for periods before January 1, 1990.

(B) FREQUENCY OF SCREENING.—Section 1834(e)(2)(A) of the Social Security Act, as added by section 204(b)(2) of MCCA, is amended—

(i) in clause (iii)(I), by striking "the 11 months of a previous screening mammography" and inserting "11 months following the month in which a previous screening mammography was performed",

(ii) in clause (iii)(II), by striking "the 23 months of a previous screening mammography" and inserting "23 months following the month in which a previous screening mammography was performed",

(iii) in clause (iv), by striking "11 months of a previous screening mammography" and inserting "11 months following the month in which a previous screening mammography was performed", and

(iv) in clause (v), by striking "23 months of a previous screening mammography" and inserting "23 months following the month in which a previous screening mammography was performed".

(3) ROUNDING OF PART B PREMIUM.—Section 1839 of the Social Security Act, as amended by section 211(c)(1)(E) of MCCA, is amended—

(A) in the first sentence of subsection (b), by striking "subsections (f) and (g)(4)" and inserting "subsection (f)",

(B) in subsection (b), by inserting after the first sentence the following new sentence: "If the resulting monthly premium is not a multiple of 10 cents, such premium shall be rounded to the nearest multiple of 10 cents.", and

(C) in subsection (c), by striking "the foregoing provisions of this section" and inserting "subsection (a)(3) or (e)".

(4) MISCELLANEOUS.—

(A) Clause (iii) of section 1814(a)(7)(A) of the Social Security Act, as added by section 104(d)(2)(C)(iii) of MCCA, is amended by moving its alignment 2 ems to the left so its alignment is the same as that of clause (ii) of such section.

(B) Section 1842(p)(3)(B) of the Social Security Act, as added by section 202(g) of MCCA, is amended by striking "section 1842(j)(2)(A)" and inserting "subsection (j)(2)(A)".

(C) Section 221(g)(3) of MCCA is amended by striking "subsection (f)" and inserting "subsection (e)".

(D) Section 1842(h)(5)(B)(iv) of the Social Security Act, as added by section 223(b)(4) of MCCA, is amended by striking "paragraph (2)(A)" and inserting "paragraph (2)".

(b) MISCELLANEOUS CORRECTIONS RELATING TO THE OMNIBUS BUDGET RECONCILIATION ACT OF 1987.—

(1) Effective as if included in the enactment of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987, section 1834(b)(4)(A) of the Social Security Act, as added by section 4049(a)(2) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987, is amended by striking "insurance and deductibles under section 1835(a)(1)(I)" and inserting "coinsurance and deductibles under sections 1833(a)(1)(J)".

(2) Section 1842(j)(1)(C)(vii) of the Social Security Act, as added by section 4085(i)(7)(C) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987, is amended by striking "accordingly" and inserting "according".

(3) Section 1886(g)(3)(A)(iv) of the Social Security Act, as added by section 4006(a)(2) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987, is amended by striking "may) be" and inserting "may be)".

(c) OTHER CORRECTIONS.—

(1) Section 1866(a)(1)(F)(i)(III) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking "fiscal year))" and inserting "fiscal year)".

(2) Section 1875(c)(7) of the Social Security Act, as added by section 9316(a) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1986, is amended by striking "date of the enactment of this Act" and inserting "date of the enactment of this section".

(3) Section 1842(j)(2)(B) of the Social Security Act, as amended by section 8(c)(2)(A) of the Medicare and Medicaid Fraud and Abuse Patient Protection Act of 1987, is amended by striking "paragraphs" and inserting "subsections".

Subpart 4—Provisions Relating to Budget Waivers

SEC. 10195. EXCLUSION FROM CALCULATION OF DEFICIT OF AMENDMENTS MADE BY PART.

The changes in outlays and revenues resulting from the amendments made by this part shall not be counted for fiscal year 1990 for purposes of calculating—

(1) the deficit in each budget of the Federal Government submitted by the President under title 31, United States Code, for purposes of comparison with the maximum deficit amount in section 3(7) of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974;

(2) the deficit under section 3(6) of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974 for purposes of comparison with the maximum deficit amount in section 3(7) of such Act; and

(3) the deficit and excess deficit for purposes of sections 251 and 252 of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985.

MODIFICATION OF AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. STARK

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, the amendment contains certain technical imperfections, and I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be modified with technical corrections. The technical corrections are at the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the modification.

The Clerk read the modification, as follows:

Modification to amendment offered by Mr. STARK: In proposed section 10185—

(1) in the heading, insert "INCREASE IN CATASTROPHIC DRUG DEDUCTIBLE AMOUNT;" after the first semicolon; and

(2) after subsection (a), insert the following new subsection (and redesignate the succeeding subsections of such section accordingly):

(b) INCREASE IN THE CATASTROPHIC DRUG DEDUCTIBLE AMOUNT.—Section 1834(c)(1)(C)(i) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395m(c)(1)(C)(i)) is amended—

(1) in subclause (II), by striking "1991 is $600" and inserting "1991 is $800", and

(2) in subclause (III), by striking "1992 is $652" and inserting "1992 is $950".

Mr. STARK (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the revision or of the amendment, as modified, be dispensed with, and that the amendment, as modified, be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The modification has been read. Is there objection to the modification?

Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, although I do not intend to object, I would take this time to give an opportunity to the gentleman from California to explain the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. STARK].

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, the request concerns drafting the amendment as presented to the Committee on Rules. There was an error in the amount of deductible for the prescription drug benefit.

Under the erroneous draft, the deductible is not increased to $800 and subsequently $950 as is and was intended by the drafters of the amendment.

□ 1410

It was an error, and it has been presented to our colleagues at all times as an $800 and $950 amendment. This would merely reflect both the intention and the material submitted to the Rules Committee.

Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I certainly understand the position the gentleman from California finds himself in.

The problem is that we did make a determination to operate under a closed rule. Under open rules we can make corrections when problems are found. However, when we decide to operate under closed rules, there are advantages to that and there are specific consequences. One of the consequences of closed rules is the fact that we cannot take steps to modify amendments.

Therefore, on that basis, I would object.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. Further reserving the right to object, I do yield to the gentleman from California. I do not intend to cut any Member off.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that in the further debate on amendments to be offered later this week there will be other unanimous-consent requests made of the body, and as a courtesy I wonder if the gentleman would, recognizing the gentleman's objection to closed rules, allow me to explain to him that this is almost in the nature of a typographical error, and the gentleman may make his own observations as to the chance of passage.

But I would submit to the gentleman and request as a courtesy that he might allow us to correct this typographical error at this point because it is a rather significant part of the bill.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his explanation.

Mr. Chairman, further reserving the right to object, let me say to the gentleman that I understand the suggestion he is making. The problem is that in this instance the typographical error has fairly substantial results associated with it, and the fact is that the version the gentleman has before the Committee of the Whole at this time, without correction, is what the Rules Committee made in order. It seems to me that we ought to stick in the debate with the substantive amendment as made in order by the Rules Committee.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I do object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from California [Mr. STARK] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and a Member opposed will be recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER] will be recognized for 30 minutes in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that 15 minutes of my time be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DONNELLY].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. STARK].

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI], chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, as chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, I support the Stark-Gradison-Waxman substitute for the Medicare catastrophic coverage provisions of H.R. 3299.

Although I would prefer not to make any changes to the current Medicare catastrophic coverage law, this substitute both responds to Members who feel that the supplemental premium must be repealed and preserves important benefits of last year's law.

The Stark-Gradison-Waxman substitute eliminates the supplemental premium completely. But unlike the Donnelly-Archer repeal amendment, it then takes the important next step and retains essential benefits.

Frankly, while I would prefer to maintain major medical coverage for hospital and physician services, I recognize that it is simply not possible to keep all of the benefits.

There are four reasons to support this proposal.

First, the Stark-Gradison-Waxman substitute retains important benefits from the Medicare catastrophic coverage program without shifting any financial burden to younger workers and their families.

The benefits provided by the Stark-Gradison-Waxman proposal are fully funded by the Medicare part B premiums enacted last year. The substitute is deficit neutral after the first year.

Second, it retains the benefits that are especially beneficial to senior citizens with modest means. These include prescription drug coverage, safeguards against impoverishment for spouses of nursing home residents, and the Medicaid buy-in for the poorest senior citizens with incomes below the poverty level.

Third, the proposal retains some long-term care benefits including home health and hospice expansions and respite care. Senior citizens and their families are concerned about the costs of long-term care. These new benefits are a first step in the area of long-term care.

Finally, for those that are concerned about better Medicare coverage for the elderly, let me suggest that they should not hesitate to support the Stark-Gradison-Waxman substitute.

It is hard to imagine that there will be a second chance to reconsider improved Medicare benefits in the near future. No matter what the proponents of repeal will tell you, no "magic bullet" will be discovered to resolve the issue next year—an election year.

Moreover, if the Donnelly-Archer repeal amendment is ultimately enacted, it will blunt any momentum to respond to serious health care problems of this nation—such as long-term care or health care for the 35 million uninsured Americans.

I strongly urge your support of the Stark-Gradison-Waxman substitute.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Stark-Gradison-Waxman substitute amendment before us today which would repeal the supplemental premium but retain important benefits for older Americans.

Older Americans have asked us for a change and we hear them loud and clear. That is why we are here today debating changes to the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act. Our decision today is whether to eliminate the entire package of valuable benefits or to salvage important benefits yet repeal the most objectionable provision, the supplemental premium.

Medicare is an extensive Federal program which affects over 30 million senior citizens. The Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 has been one of the most controversal laws passed in recent memory. Yet whatever our actions are today, we will only be making piecemeal improvements to a health care system where fundamental change is needed.

Mr. Chairman, it is painfully obvious that our Nation's health care system is in disarray. We spend over a half a trillion dollars on health care each year. We spend much more than any other industrialized nation on health care, over 11 percent of our gross national product. This adds up to $1,926 for every man, woman, and child in America.

What is this massive expenditure buying us? Is our Nation's health status superior to that of other countries which spend less on health care than the United States?

Over 37 million Americans have no health insurance coverage at all. Another 17 million are underinsured. Over 200 million Americans are without long-term care protection and are at great risk of financial ruin if a chronic or catastrophic illness strikes. Our infant mortality rate is the highest among industrialized nations.

These figures are appalling in a Nation of wealth and abundance such as the United States. Behind these statistics and numbers are real people with real problems. Nearly every day, people in my district contact me with serious problems they are having with health care coverage, whether it be the high cost of health care, the complexity of private and public insurance programs, or their general frustration with the health care system.

I would like to remind my colleagues of the words spoken on the floor of the Senate by my fellow Minnesotan Hubert Humphrey:

> The moral test of government is how it treats those who are in the dawn of life, the children; those who are in the twilight of life, the aged; and those who are in the shadows of life, the sick, the needy, and the handicapped.

Looking at our system of health care, it is clear that we are on the verge of failing this moral test.

The group most affected by the hardship of rising health care costs is the elderly. Out-of-pocket health care costs are rising about twice as fast as seniors' incomes. It is estimated that older Americans spend at least 16 percent of their incomes on health care, a larger percentage than when Medicare and Medicaid began. Older Americans would be paying even more than the nearly $1 in $5 of income they do now if Congress had not fended off the past administration's attempts to gut Medicare and Medicaid.

It was against this backdrop of rising costs of health care for older Americans and the threat of financial ruin from catastrophic illness that Congress originally passed the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act. The President sent an incomplete and limited catastrophic health care plan to Congress. Many Members, including myself, would have preferred expanding Medicare to include long-term care and shifting more of the burden away from low and moderate income elderly. We realized that such an expansion was not feasible under the Reagan administration but we recognized the importance of accomplishing this first step.

Today we are presented with three proposals to change the law. Given these choices, I am supporting the proposal that will be most beneficial to older Americans in my district and across the Nation.

One option that the House will vote on today is a total repeal of the Cata- strophic Coverage Act. A repeal would not only eliminate Medicare catastrophic care benefits, it would likely dash any future hopes of enacting long-term care coverage universal health care or any other improvements in the Medicare national health care system. Not a single major senior citizen organization supports a repeal because of its detrimental impact on seniors health care and the negative impact on further Medicare health care improvements in the future.

Another proposal is the House Ways and Means Committee plan contained in the bill which would scale down some of the benefits and make catastrophic coverage optional. This plan would require seniors to choose between giving up part B coverage and catastrophic coverage or continuing in both programs and paying the premiums. Making the coverage optional might have unforeseen consequences such as shifting the cost burden from higher income individuals who could afford to opt out of the plan to lower income seniors whose costs could increase. This policy would make the financing of catastrophic more unfair than current law. And result in the sole reliance, by those who opt out, on Medicaid when catastrophic illness and health care costs arise. Financed not by an orderly health insurance process but by the general tax revenues.

If I had my preference, I would maintain most of the increased benefits provided by the Catastrophic Coverage Act but finance them by a more acceptable mechanism than the supplemental premium. However, that choice is not available to us today.

The best option before the House today is the Stark-Gradison-Waxman proposal which eliminates the supplemental premium yet retains some important benefits.

The main benefit maintained by the Stark-Gradison-Waxman substitute is the outpatient prescription drug benefit. This benefit is an important benefit for a number of reasons. Currently, fewer than 20 percent of older Americans have private insurance coverage for prescriptions drugs. Prescription drugs are the largest out-of-pocket health care expense for three-fourths of the Nation's elderly. Thirty percent of all prescription drugs are taken by older Americans even though they comprise only 12 percent of the population. The combination of the high costs and large demand for prescription drugs explains why more than 6 million Medicare beneficiaries will exceed the deductible and receive prescription drug coverage in 1991. Nearly one in five Medicare beneficiaries will be eligible and utilize such coverage. This coverage will be extremely beneficial to these recipients since the seniors that exceed the deductible will spend on average almost $2,000 per year for prescription drugs.

The Stark-Gradison substitute amendment before us also contains some important long-term care benefits. As a member of the Select Aging Subcommittee on Health and Long-Term Care, I have been a strong and consistent supporter of proposals to provide long-term health care coverage. I supported Congressman Claude Pepper's Medicare Long-Term Home Care Catastropic Protection Act which would have provided long-term home care services to chronically ill children and older and disabled persons. Unfortunately this legislation did not receive enough votes to pass in the 100th Congress.

Although the substitute before us today does not attempt to provide comprehensive long-term care coverage, it does add up to 17 days of home health care for beneficiaries who need care up to 7 days a week. It also retains a respite care benefit, allowing up to 80 hours a year of respite care services for chronically dependent homebound seniors who meet the drug deductible. I am optimistic that the Pepper Commission created by Congress last year will come up with feasible recommendations on ways to provide affordable, comprehensive long-term care for disabled and older Americans. I will continue to work in Congress for the enactment of legislation to expand Medicare to include long-term care.

The amendment also retains several other essential protections for the poorest senior citizens. Many elderly poor do not have access to Medicare benefits to which they are entitled because they cannot afford monthly premiums, deductibles and co-payments. The Medicaid buy-in program allows States to pay these costs for individual seniors below the Federal poverty line. The amendment also helps alleviate the problem of spousal impoverishment, in which a spouse living at home has to spend nearly all the couple's resources before Medicaid will pay for the care of the spouse living in a nursing home. The change contained in the original Catastrophic Coverage Act which allows a spouse to retain a greater percentage of assets and income will be retained by the substitute amendment. Finally, the amendment retains the biennial mammography screening benefit, which is expected to save as many as 4,000 lives per year.

The benefits are financed by maintaining the monthly part B premium which is part of the original legislation and a beneficiary can choose not to receive the benefits if he or she decides not to participate in the part B program as had been the case before the 1988 changes in Medicare law.

Support for this substitute is widespread among national organization representing seniors, organized labor, the disabled and other groups. A partial listing of supporters of this amendment includes the National Committee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare, the American Association of Retired Persons, the National Association of Retired Federal Employees, the Gray Panthers, the National Council of Senior Citizens, the Older Women's League and others. Many of these groups have been very critical of the Catastrophic Coverage Act in the past.

Mr. Chairman, we are faced with some difficult votes today. Some have incorrectly portrayed the vote for total repeal of the Catastrophic Program as a courageous vote. Voting for repeal is not courageous, it is taking the easy way out. Voting for total repeal would be a cruel joke on older Americans and would jeopardize future improvements to the Medicare system. The better vote today is for the Stark-Gradison-Wayman substitute which preserves some of the best features of the original Catastrophic Act. Some have claimed that the substitute "takes the catastrophic out of the catastrophic law." Actually, the amendment takes out what most seniors found truly catastrophic, the controversial supplemental premium, and retains some important benefits for elderly Americans. This vote says to the American people that we recognize the national disgrace of our health care system and we are serious about taking steps to change that system for the better. Until we can come up with a sound and workable program to implement our vision of quality health care for all, we must today take smaller incremental steps to fill the gaps in our health care safety net.

I would like to thank my colleagues Chairman STARK, ranking member GRADISON and Chairman WAXMAN for working out this worthwhile compromise. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this effort today and working for expanded health care protections in the future.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL], a valued and respected member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Stark-Gradison-Waxman substitute amendment because it will not provide the benefits that my constituents have resoundingly told me are important to them.

My constituents want and need to have long-term care coverage, such as services provided in skilled nursing facilities [SNF's]. But the Stark-Gradison-Waxman amendment would terminate the expanded SNF benefits. Instead it retains the outpatient prescription drug benefits that duplicate benefits available to 40 percent of Medicare enrollees. These are benefits already provided mostly through the Medicaid Program and employer-based health insurance plans for retirees.

I voted against the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 (Public Law 100-360) because I knew it was unfair. I knew then that it was impossible to calculate, with any certainty, the outpatient drug benefits costs. GAO and the Department of Health and Human Services have confirmed this. Costs for the outpatient prescription drug benefit are already 150 percent above the original estimate and quickly heading North.

The benefits, as whimsical so they may be, are not Congress' to give away. The beneficiaries must pay. They ought to be heard. The outpatient prescription benefit drug is not a cheap benefit. Medicare beneficiaries will have substantial drug deductibles to pay. The deductible begins at $600 in 1990 and grows to $1,224 by 1994. This is in order to limit the number of beneficiaries to 16.8 percent of Medicare enrollees.

Furthermore, the Stark-Gradison-Waxman amendment would collect nearly $18.5 billion in flat premiums over 5 years from our senior citizens. These moneys can be put to better use than financing a benefit the seniors are not asking for and which nearly half of them already receive—often at no or little cost to themselves.

I urge my colleagues to join me in voting against the Stark-Gradison-Waxman substitute amendment.

□ 1420

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN], a member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DONNELLY] yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I voted against repeal on the previous vote, not because I think this is a wonderful program, but because I think that it is a program that will and can benefit some senior citizens who might want to take advantage of it.

The problem, Mr. Chairman, is the alternative that should be on this floor is not here. I do not support the alternative on the next vote. I think it is taking the least important, not unimportant, but the least important benefits and paying for it with a head tax and repealing what I consider more important benefits such as nursing home and hospital catastrophic coverage. I do not happen to think we should do that.

However, Mr. Chairman, I think that the problem with the Catastrophic Act is that it is mandatory. The proposal I offered in the Committee on Ways and Means would have eliminated the drug benefit, a very expensive component, and use the savings from the elimination of the drug benefit to reduce the supplemental premium and keep the rest of the benefits. Unfortunately, this proposal did not prevail. I also supported another proposal that would have made the catastrophic program truly voluntary. That says to senior citizens:

Take a look at this. If you want it, if you like it, if you think it is for you, it benefits you, then you can have it, and pay for it, and get the benefits. If you don't, if you think it's not a good deal and you don't want it and you don't want to pay for it nor get the benefits, then opt out.

Mr. Chairman, taking that approach would have completely dissolved the opposition to this program. We would have preserved the program's benefits for those who might have chosen to take advantage of them, and we would have said to those who choose to opt out.

That's fine. You don't get the benefits, and you don't have to pay the cost, but you don't lose any of your existing Medicare benefits.

Mr. Chairman, that is what we should be discussing on the floor today. Unfortunately that amendment was not made in order.

So, Mr. Chairman, I voted against repeal because I think we should retain this option for those senior citizens who want it. I am going to vote against this motion because I do not want to preserve these meager benefits, although they are good benefits, while repealing the benefits relating to hospital coverage and nursing homes stays. I do not want to preserve the lesser with a head tax when we have not addressed nursing homes and catastrophic hospital coverage and at the same time we see the hospital coverage dissolved because this House voted to repeal the Catastrophic Act.

Mr. Chairman, this is not an easy issue. It is not easy for any of us. There has been a howl of protests across this country, and in my judgment the howl of protests resulted not because the benefits here are not worth anything but because this program was made mandatory for every senior citizen. We said:

Here's the program, here are the benefits, here's what it costs, and you must take it, and you must pay for it.

Mr. Chairman, there was a way to dissolve that opposition by making it optional. That is what we should do. It appears that we are not going to do it in the House. I hope the other body will do it because that makes the most sense for these issues.

Mr. Chairman, over the past year Members of Congress have been deluged with protests from their senior constituents about the Catastrophic Act. The protests have lead us to take a second look at the program. Unfortunately, today the House has chosen to repeal many important Medicare benefits that were enacted by the Catastrophic Act.

Although many senior citizens of this country have complained about the financing for the new program, I do not believe that the majority of Medicare beneficiaries want the Catastrophic Act repealed. It is my belief that the protests are directed at the financing rather than at the benefits.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that repeal is the answer. I think that the catastrophic program should be available to those senior citizens who want to take advantage of it. For those who do not feel that the program is worth it's costs, we should allow them to opt out without losing any of their other Medicare benefits.

My position is that the Catastrophic Health Insurance Program should be a voluntary program. That is the position I've voted for in the Ways and Means Committee, and it's a position that should have been made available as an alternative on the floor of the House of Representatives.

The alternative the House should have adopted was to make the catastrophic benefits completely voluntary without having to give up other Medicare benefits. This would have removed the opposition that any senior citizen might have had to it. If they do not like it, they wouldn't have to take it, and if they thought it was beneficial to them, they could sign up.

I do not support the Stark-Gradison-Waxman proposal because it repeals the most important benefits and completely removes the option of those senior citizens who might want to take advantage of them. It is my belief that benefits such as extended hospital coverage, which is repealed under this amendment, provides financial protection that many seniors could benefit from. That, after all, was the most important feature of the catastrophic legislation.

If we are going to restructure the benefits and the financing, it is my position that we should repeal the prescription drug benefit. When the Ways and Means Committee debated revisions to the Catastrophic Act, I proposed to eliminate the drug benefits, which are extraordinarily expensive in my judgement. Although many perceive this to be an important benefit, because of the high deductible, I do not believe that the benefit offers many seniors much relief from truly catastrophic health costs.

I want to clarify for the record that not only am I voting against repeal and the Stark-Gradison-Waxman alternative, I also oppose the financing revisions reported by the Ways and Means Committee. I voted against the provision in the reconciliation bill that came out of the House Ways and Means Committee because the financing is more regressive and it does not provide Medicare beneficiaries with a real voluntary option with respect to the catastrophic health insurance program.

Unfortunately, the proposal that I've advanced on this issue has not been made available for a vote by the full House of Representatives. I hope that it may be adopted by the Senate so that we can see this provision coming back from conference.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN], a coauthor of the amendment.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, the House has addressed the issue of repealing the catastrophic proposal from last year. We have repealed the surtax which would have funded it and the two catastrophic benefits that we suggested to use by the Reagan administration—protection against doctor bills and hospital bills. One of the reasons we eliminated those protections is that people feel they are already covered.

Mr. Chairman, what the Stark amendment would do would be to restore some Medicare benefits that the elderly want. These are benefits they have been trying for decades to have coverage under the Medicare Program, because they cannot go out and buy coverage so easily for prescription drugs, or mammography, or home health care, or respite care, or those protections for the poorest of the poor in our society that also get help under this legislation. We would retain these benefits while we still eliminate the surtax. The benefits would be financed by a modest increase in the premium that would be paid by all Medicare beneficiaries.

The prescription drug benefit is one that the elderly have tried to get coverage for since 1972, and it is an enormous cost when people are sick. The cost of prescription drugs really do bankrupt many Americans. Look at the figures of what the prescription drug benefit will mean, and the average drug costs for the 6 million Medicare beneficiaries who will exceed the deductible of $800. For those 6 million beneficiaries who exceed $800, their average costs are $2,000.

Mr. Chairman, there are millions of reasons to go along with this Stark proposal. There are six million beneficiaries who will receive prescription drug coverage every year. There are 33 million American beneficiaries under Medicare who will have unsurpassed insurance protection against the high costs that accompany the tragedy of chronic disease and illness. These are reasons for us to say yes to retain these benefits. There is the respite care benefit, the mammography benefit, the help for the spouse who stays at home while the other spouse is in a nursing home, assistance for low-income elderly who cannot afford to pay for their Medicare costs, and help for low-income women and children who need prenatal care and infant care.

Mr. Chairman, this proposal is not inconsistent with the previous vote and the previous amendment that has passed the House. That vote repealed the catastrophic bill. It is gone.

However, Mr. Chairman, in repealing the catastrophic bill, let us not throw out all the benefits that are there. Every senior citizen organization that lobbies in Washington today stands behind this Stark amendment. This time, they have checked with their membership, and I hope their membership has registered with the Members of Congress to vote for the Stark amendment.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. JOHNSON], a valued member of the committee.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this amendment with great respect for its authors and enthusiasm for some of the benefits retained.

Mr. Chairman, I have been an advocate of reform of the catastrophic care program, but it will take hearings, better estimates and hard work to satisfactorily modernize Medicare. I strongly oppose this amendment because it retains the drug benefit and funds it with premium increases. The drug benefit is very costly, and its administration will eat up almost half of the program's costs. This costly benefit will be paid through the premium structure.

My colleagues, I represent lots of seniors who are living on $500 a month. To these seniors increases in premiums are indeed a very heavy burden and are forcing some of them to drop out of the program. The very seniors who will find the premium increase most burdensome will also never be able to spend the money for medications that would trigger their coverage and their benefits under this program. They simply cannot spend the first $600, to $800, $1,000, that is necessary to trigger the benefits under this program, and time after time I have had them come to me and say, "I simply don't buy the prescription. I can't afford it."

So, Mr. Chairman, to fund an expensive benefit for some CEO's who are retired on big incomes we are going to burden every low-income senior in America with premiums that are harsh in their reality.

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FAWELL].

Mr. FAWELL. Mr. Chairman, the Stark amendment, as I see it, is a last-ditch effort to resurrect the cat, the catastrophic care bill, and to unrepeal the repeal which we just passed. We just finished doing what millions of seniors all over this country have asked us to do, in effect make that cat go away, repeal the cat.

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion they give us something that is just about the same, going down the same path. In the Stark amendment, the very people who brought us the cat in the first place have the cat coming back, not as in the rhyme, on the very next day, but on the very same day the cat is back.

□ 1430

The very next vote, in fact.

I think that we still have not heard from the seniors. A vote for the substitute is a vote, like the vote last year on the catastrophic, in the wrong direction again. As Yogi Berra once said, it is deja vu all over again.

Seniors have made it clear that if their money is to be used for expanding Medicare, it should go toward their highest priority. I know it has been said before, but that is long-term custodial nursing home care or in-home care. These are the catastrophes not covered by Medicare. These are not covered by Medicare and we cannot go out and buy them in the insurance market.

Like the catastrophic law, the Stark substitute does not, I emphasize, move toward long-term custodial care, it simply does not. It gives us something that is duplicative and many of our seniors have that kind of coverage in a drug prescription program.

So much for going back to the drawing board for a careful evaluation of what the seniors of America have been telling us. They have been telling us this for over a year and now, bango, we are going to go right back down the same path. A vote under the Stark amendment, Mr. Chairman, will cost every senior couple $405.60 in brand new premiums over and above the flat rate premiums which we have right now by 1994, just for one new benefit which is volatile, and we do not know what will happen in terms of cost.

In effect, the Stark substitute mandates what I call an un-COLA and tells seniors to pick up the tab.

The Stark substitute would virtually wipe out senior Social Security COLA's by 1994 to pay for the prescription drug benefit, hence the use of the word un-COLA.

An average senior couple gets $40 Social Security COLA for a year, assuming a 4.3 percent inflation. The Stark prescription drug benefit will cost all senior couples $406 per year when fully implemented. Ninety-seven percent of their COLA's will be wiped out to pay for just one benefit: prescription drugs.

Most seniors will never see their COLA since Medicare premiums are deducted from Social Security checks.

Vote against Stark-Waxman the "un-COLA" plan. Support Donnelly-Archer, the real thing.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ANTHONY].

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the substitute.

I voted against repeal. Two years ago we bragged about trying to do something for health. Now we are being stampeded into making bad judgments.

As for my own district let me quickly say, the basic patient is older, sicker, with no employment-based insurance. Under this substitute, they get 38 days. Under the old law, they get 21 days of home health care. That is an extension of long-term health care.

There is a new provision of 80 hours for respite care, those people who are burdened with taking care of the sick at home. It is a good new program.

But more importantly, if we repeal this, and I tell my southern gentlemen, take a look at your own States. In the State of Arkansas under the old law there were 1,600 Medicare patient days used in skilled nursing home facilities. Under the catastrophic bill that we passed, that has jumped up to 27,000 Medicare patient days used today. They will be grandfathered, no longer be eligible for these services at the end of this year and then asked to leave.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. MORELLA].

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Stark-Waxman substitute to the Medicare catastrophic coverage provisions of H.R. 3299. The House has just voted to repeal the surtax, a move which was necessary if we are to preserve any of the new benefits. Now we have the chance to restore some of the benefits of the package, and to finance them with the already scheduled increase in the part B premium. As was the case in the Donnelly substitute, the surtax would be eliminated.

I believe the Stark-Gradison-Waxman proposal preserves some of the most important benefits for the elderly. Many of the benefits which would be retained are particularly important to older women. The bill would retain the provisions to address spousal impoverishment, the need for regular mammography screening, expanded home health care benefits, and respite care. The mammography provisions alone are expected to save 4,000 lives per year. While the respite care benefit is a very limited one, it does provide for the first time some respite for caregivers of the elderly, most often elderly women themselves. Clearly, the spousal impoverishment provisions are vital if we are to prevent the impoverishment of so many at-home spouses of nursing home residents.

I am concerned with the potential future costs of the drug program, and I will certainly work with the House/Senate conferees to better ensure that part B premiums do not skyrocket in order to finance future drug cost increases.

I will also be working very hard to ensure the continuation of the current law provision which protects public retirees, as well as some private sector retirees, from paying for a duplication of benefits between their own health plans and the Medicare program. The substitute retains these provisions.

I believe the overriding need today is to eliminate the surtax, and to work to retain at least some of the new benefits. I urge my colleagues to support the Stark-Gradison-Waxman amendment, and to then work to address the true catastrophic health needs of the elderly: long-term and home health care coverage. As a member of the Select Committee on Aging, I will continue my efforts in this regard, and I urge my colleagues to join me in making this issue a top priority.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. CHANDLER].

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Stark-Gradison proposal.

I want to point out that if this were a referendum on respect or affection for the gentleman from California and the gentleman from Ohio who have brought us this amendment, I would vote yes. They are outstanding leaders.

But on catastrophic health insurance, we got it wrong. We have already admitted that. Unfortunately, last year we listened to the AARP, the AFL-CIO, the American Pharmaceutical Association. Then finally we went home and we listened to the elderly. They said no. They said no to the surtax, no to the premium increase, no to replacing Medigap, and no to the benefit package.

Finally we listened, by the score of 360 to 66.

Now, did seniors tell us to retain the drug benefit? Was that what you heard? Is this the priority of seniors?

Oh, believe me, the AARP wants it. The AFL-CIO wants it. The American Pharmaceutical Association wants it, of course.

Do senior Americans want it? None of them have told me they do.

Now, would it not be wise to stop and start over, to hold hearings, ask seniors what they want? Do they want a drug benefit? Do they want hospital coverage? Do they want more doctor benefit, or do they want long-term care coverage?

Is a $42.60 a month premium by 1993 too much?

Do we want to shift the cost of care of the disabled to the elderly? And let me make a very important point here. Ten percent of those eligible for part B are disabled. They are not 65. They are not retired. They are disabled. Yet 20 percent, the CBO estimates 20 percent, of this long-term benefit will go to that 10 percent of those who qualify. Is that a policy decision you are willing to defend today?

I want to ask you some important questions. If we adopt the drug benefit, what more can we do? Can we make room for a long-term care benefit? Are we ready to take this decision? Has there been time? Have you had any input? Did anyone ask your opinion as to what should be in this package? Do your seniors understand this? Do you know how they would want you to vote?

Mr. Chairman and my colleagues, let us avoid another mistake. Vote no on the Stark-Gradison amendment.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BONIOR].

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Chairman, the seniors of this Nation need health care—they need help with long-term home care. They need to know that serious health problems will not bankrupt them and their families.

But they do not need and they cannot afford an unfair and burdensome tax.

The catastrophic surtax violates every principle of equity that our Nation holds dear. No other group of Americans has been asked to foot the bill for the entire cost of the benefits they receive—not students, not veterans, not farmers, no one.

We have taken the first step by repealing the surtax.

But now we must make a commitment to the future, to the development of a health care system that truly meets the needs of seniors. The Stark, Gradison, Waxman proposal is the next step.

It repeals the surtax and keeps intact the most important benefits seniors need. It keeps the prescription drug benefit, saving more than 6 million seniors hundreds of dollars per year. It keeps the mammography screenings benefit, saving as many as 4,000 lives per year.

And, it takes an important step toward full coverage of long-term care costs by providing 38 consecutive days of home health care.

It was not too long ago that we lost our most revered and beloved colleague Claude Pepper. Senator Pepper believed in a compassionate vision for health care. He committed his career to helping the elderly.

If this country is going to meet the challenge of a national health care crisis, we must adopt that vision, that commitment, that passion at this critical moment and not give up on the dream of adequate health care for our seniors.

Health care for the elderly is a trust between generations. It is vital not just for the old, not just for the disabled, not just for the sick, but for the security of American families.

Today, we must make a new beginning to guarantee family health security. I believe the Stark-Waxman-Gradison amendment is the first step.

Mr. Chairman. I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I would have preferred today to be voting for an alternative that would repeal the surtax and keep all the current medical benefits intact. In fact, earlier this year I introduced legislation that would have accomplished both of these goals. Unfortunately that is not one of our options today.

Under the current program, an individual senior can be required to pay more than $800 in "supplemental premiums" for benefits that average $65. By 1993, some seniors will be required to pay over $1,100 for benefits that will average about $322 per person. The inequities are obvious. Under the current law, too many seniors would be required to pay more for the surtax than the value of the benefits provided.

Most elderly citizens live on fixed incomes and cannot afford to pay such a dramatic increase in taxes. Today we are acting to correct this gross inequity. We must repeal the surtax.

I hope my colleagues will support the Stark-Waxman-Gradison proposal which will both repeal the surtax and preserve some of the most critical senior health care benefits. By focusing on preventive and chronic care, the Stark-Waxman-Gradison proposal provides benefits that aren't covered by most private insurance plans.

I will be voting for this proposal today and I hope a majority of my colleagues will as well.

It is a disgrace that in this country we allow a cruel catastrophic illness that may have already robbed a family of a life, to also rob that family of its life savings. I hope my colleagues share my sense of urgency. We can't wait much longer. We must move forward to provide adequate health care for our senior citizens. Mr. Chairman, we must make a promise that today is a new beginning.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from Illinois [Mrs. COLLINS].

Mrs. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act and specifically the Stark-Gradison-Waxman proposal. I commend our colleagues for devising a plan to save the most essential of catastrophic's benefits, while eliminating the surtax that so many of our constituents have opposed.

The purpose of Medicare was to make high-quality health care affordable for this Nation's elderly and disabled. The Medicare Catastrophic Protection Act was passed to assist those elderly and disabled Americans who risk financial ruin when catastrophic illness strikes.

Many of us worked long and hard to craft a measure that we thought was a good attempt to deal with one of the most serious problems in our health care system today: The financial consequences of prolonged and expensive illnesses. However, I have come to understand that as currently implemented, the surtax is unfair to many seniors and must be changed.

The question of how to change the act is not easy to answer. To finance the benefits through a mix of general revenues and income from beneficiaries would be the most fair option, but that would necessitate a tax increase of some kind. And regardless of how significant and beneficial a program this may be, it appears that nothing is good enough to warrant a tax hike. Another option we are asked to consider is out-and-out repeal of the act. I find this the most distressing and unfavorable proposal of all. If we can save any of the benefits and finance them through means other than the general revenues or a surtax, we should do so. That is exactly what we have in the Stark-Gradison-Waxman alternative.

The Stark proposal repeals the supplemental premium altogether, and takes with it the acute care catastrophic coverage for hospital, physician, and skilled nursing facility care. However, this amendment retains some of the most important benefits of the Catastrophic Coverage Act, including those that are generally not offered by private insurers. It retains the outpatient prescription drug benefit which would become applicable after a beneficiary had reached the $800 deductible. This may not sound like a big deal to many of you, but those of us with sizable elderly populations in our district know that prescription drugs are a major expense for seniors. Many elderly persons who are on multiple medications and will likely be on them for the rest of their lives find that they must frequently adjust their dosages—I heard that some take their pills only every other day instead of daily—because they cannot afford to take their medicines as their doctors have prescribed. Three out of four of them pay more for prescription drugs than for anything else, including food.

Another important benefit retained in the Stark proposal is the mammography screening benefit. I am particularly pleased that this preventive measure was deemed worthy of inclusion because I fought hard for its acceptance into the Medicare Catastrophic Protection Act. Through screening and early detection of breast cancer, we save lives—an estimated 4,000 per year—and we save money. It is much easier, less traumatic to the patient and less expensive to treat cancer at early stages than at more advanced stages.

The Stark proposal also retains some of the long-term care benefits in the original Catastrophic Protection Act, such as adding 17 days of the home health care benefit and adding respite care services for chronically dependent, homebound beneficiaries. It is very important that we continue to build on the home health care provisions, for this will be one of the next major health care financing issues we address. More and more ill and disabled persons prefer to be cared for at home, whenever possible. Likewise, family members often prefer the peace of mind of knowing that a loved one is receiving the love and attention they deserve. We must act—and act soon—to offer some kind of assistance to these families so that they do not have to deplete their resources in order to get help in properly caring for a loved one.

Finally, as I urge my colleagues to support the Stark-Gradison-Waxman proposal, let me note that it has been heartily endorsed by numerous national and local groups representing seniors, retirees, and consumers. If you haven't heard from these people yet, trust me, you will. They are firmly backing the Stark proposal over repeal and are letting their voices be heard.

Again, I urge you to vote "Yes" on the Stark-Gradison-Waxman alternative.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MOODY], a member of the committee.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

The Stark-Waxman-Gradison catastrophic amendment is important.

I urge support for the Stark-Waxman-Gradison substitute to total repeal of catastrophic care.

This bipartisan alternative to total repeal would:

First. Repeal entirely the supplemental surtax, but not the flat tax.

Second. Retain several key benefits:

Spousal impoverishment protection;

Medicaid buy-in to Medicare for the poorest seniors;

Prescription drugs;

Expanded home health care;

Respite care;

Mammography screening; and Expanded hospice care.

Seniors groups do not want total repeal. Even the National Committee to Preserve Social Security and Medicare—Roosevelt group—says that the Stark-Waxman-Gradison substitute is much preferable to repeal. This substitute is also endorsed by the National Council of Senior Citizens and AARP.

Suggestions that total repeal of catastrophic coverage paves the way for a federally funded long-term care are cynical and insincere. Most cost estimates on comprehensive long-term care programs range from $50 to $90 billion—5 to 9 times the cost of catastrophic. I can't see us funding long-term care after the fiasco over catastrophic funding.

Under the Ways and Means mark in the reconciliation bill, 60 percent of seniors would not pay a single penny in the supplemental income-based surtax, while less than 5 percent would pay the maximum surtax of $800. Total repeal of the MCCA would therefore be chief benefit to the fewer than 1 in 20 seniors who would pay the maximum premium, so the Stark-Waxman-Gradison substitute is vastly preferable to repeal.

Mostly about the controversy over catastrophic care insurance has always been financing, not the benefits. The Stark-Waxman-Gradison substitute retains important, real benefits and removes the controversial supplemental surtax.

The easy vote may have been for total repeal. The responsible vote, and the right vote, is for the Stark-Waxman-Gradison substitute.

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW].

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, one of the previous speakers said this is deja vu all over again. If I did not have such respect for the drafters of this particular amendment, I would think it was sent up here by Joe Isuzu.

This time, my colleagues, we have just been beat up on the question of catastrophic health care, a very bad bill we passed last year. This time, let us be more responsible. Let us read the fine print.

We have just voted to repeal catastrophic. Let us not bring back now the worst part of catastrophic. There has been interest expressed on both sides of the aisle, and I have an interest, a very definite interest, a strong constituent interest as a member of the Committee on Ways and Means to go back and study this to see if there is a way we can bring back one that is equitably financed. This is not the one.

I would urge the Members that we can be forgiven for one mistake, but let us not come down on the side of error again. Let us come down on the side of caution and look at what is before us with a great deal of caution, and this time let us listen to the people first and then vote.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUNDERSON].

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to Stark-Gradison and in support of total repeal.

Mr. Chairman, soon Congress will vote on whether or not to repeal the Catastrophic Act. Newspapers, newsletters, news broadcasts, town hall meetings, and constituent mail have all served to relay to Congress the displeasure of the Nation's seniors. The number of persons who have contacted and spoken with me alone are in the thousands. And the common theme which unites their pleas and arguments is that the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act needs to be changed.

In January, I cosponsored several pieces of legislation to reform the Catastrophic Act. Unfortunately, those efforts and countless others went nowhere. Instead, only the Ways and Means compromise was put forth. As noble an attempt as it was to appease seniors and save some catastrophic benefits, the Ways and Means proposal is not an appropriate reform vehicle. Not only do I seriously doubt the fiscal health of the Ways and Means proposal, but I believe the voluntary provision is an ill-conceived straw option. Mandating that anyone who opts out of the Catastrophic Program must opt out of Medicare part B as well is ridiculous.

Thus, Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Donnelly/Archer amendment to repeal the Catastrophic Act. Unfortunately, it alone represents an appropriate response to the precarious policy situation in which this body finds itself today; mainly, that the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act does not make prudent sense either as public or fiscal policy.

Last year, prior to the enactment of the Catastrophic Act, Congress received assurances that private Medigap premiums would decrease. Today I still have yet to see a private premium which has decreased. In fact, some seniors are now paying 40 percent more for private insurance than they were before we passed the act. This increase, coupled with the catastrophic surtax, is simply too much for our seniors to pay, especially since a good deal of what they received in catastrophic benefits duplicated benefits they already had. Mr. Chairman, the Catastrophic Act is a policy whose time has passed.

Similarly, this law makes bad fiscal sense. Originally this act was to cost $30 billion. CBO now estimates the cost to be closer to $48 billion. The skilled nursing home benefit alone will cost an estimated $2.5 billion this year, 150 percent above the $1 billion estimated when Congress passed the act into law. Obviously, raising the current surtax rates to cover the cost of the new benefit estimates is out of the question. And certainly we have not the fat in Government revenues to float the cost of this program. Thus, let us rid ourselves of this deficit monster before it grows larger.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, a word about the Donnelly/Archer repeal amendment. From the start of the catastrophic debate, I have been most concerned about the affordability of nursing home coverage for those least able to afford. Why we have forced people to become impoverished and down right poor before we helped them is beyond me. I am pleased, therefore, that this repeal amendment retains the spousal impoverishment provision. Although it may ultimately cost the Federal Government in the short run, I believe it will have a positive long-term effect. We simply cannot afford to repeal the surtax and maintain expensive benefits as some would have us do. Not only does the Donnelly/Archer amendment make good public policy sense, but it makes good fiscal sense as well.

In retrospect, what began as an earnest attempt to protect elderly Americans from catastrophic illnesses, turned itself, into a catastrophe. Reform efforts have been squelched, thus let us repeal; support the Donnelly/Archer amendment.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. Goss].

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to Stark and Gradison.

Mr. Chairman, we have come down to the moment of truth. We have overwhelmingly supported a complete repeal of the Catastrophic Health Care Act. We have gone on record to the seniors of this Nation that we want to wipe this bad piece of legislation off the books.

So let us not lose our resolve now. Let us not undo what we have just done.

I rise today in strong opposition to the Stark alternative.

We have read in the newspapers that this issue, the issue of repealing catastrophic health care, is the result of an "annoyance" among seniors. We have read that the uproar has been caused by lobbyists.

Well, Mr. Chairman, my district has the second highest number of senior citizens in this Nation. They are not just annoyed at this law. They are adamant; 82 percent of those who responded to a questionnaire this summer demanded outright repeal of this law. They will not accept a patch-work alternative.

I urge my colleagues to stand by their votes of only a few minutes ago. I urge my colleagues to oppose the Stark alternative.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TAUKE].

Mr. TAUKE. Mr. Chairman, last year's vote on the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act was one of the most difficult I have faced in my years in Congress. No elderly person should be forced into poverty by high health care costs. No elderly person should be forced to choose between paying for life sustaining medicines or paying the electric or grocery bill. No elderly couple should be forced into poverty before Medicaid will cover the cost of nursing home care.

Our intentions were good, but our final product was seriously flawed health care policy and retirement income policy. In the end, I voted against this legislation. I believed that Congress could and should have done better.

Today, we face another very difficult vote. We have three choices: Repeal the Catastrophic Act and start over from scratch; allow the Ways and Means Committee's modifications to stand and force the elderly to choose between paying for benefits they may not want or need or dropping all of their part B coverage; or vote for an amendment which repeals the physician and hospital portions of the coverage but retains a costly, very poorly structured, inflationary prescription drug benefit and repeals the limits on beneficiary part B cost-sharing.

Again, Congress could and should do better. I am encouraged to note that all of the options before us today preserve spousal impoverishment protection, a first step toward addressing the catastrophic cost most elderly fear most: long-term institutionalization. But as I review the options before us, I am convinced we are rushing to judgment. I sense that we are spurred not only by the overwhelming opposition of the elderly to the Catastrophic Act, with its inequitable surtax, mandatory participation, and duplication of coverage that a majority of the elderly already have. I also sense a good deal of anger over what many perceive to be the ingratitude of those they thought they were helping. Many in Congress continue to believe that it is a minority of higher-income elderly fueling the opposition to the Catastrophic Act and a majority of elderly who simply do not understand what a good deal they are getting.

I believe the elderly are not misinformed in their opposition to the current law and it is we who are not listening. It is poor retirement income policy to single out those who have saved independently for retirement and tax them to pay for benefits for all of the elderly and for younger disabled persons. As a group, we would tax the elderly at a higher rate than any other taxpayers. Some working elderly would see marginal tax rates in excess of 100 percent. Given our population's demographics, we need to be encouraging independent savings and participation by the elderly in the work force, not providing disincentives through our tax policies.

While the elderly pay for the lion's share of the program's costs, the disabled, with their greater medical needs, are likely to receive the greatest share, proportionally, of the catastrophic protection. I support providing catastrophic coverage for the disabled. But if we were designing a Federal program to do so, would we finance it largely by taxing the elderly? That is precisely what we did in the Catastrophic Act.

We should not have been surprised by the fact that the cost estimates coming in to Congress now are billions more than the estimates we had when we voted on the Catastrophic Act. We expanded benefits under a system in which costs were already spiraling out of control. With all due respect to my colleagues, the Stark-Waxman-Gradison amendment would repeat this mistake. It is likely to further fuel increases in prescription drug prices, providing limited protection to a few elderly, but leading to higher out-of-pocket costs for prescriptions for the vast majority.

Further, a very high percent of the prescription drug benefit is consumed by administrative costs. Instead of providing the benefit through Medicaid for lower-income elderly, the Catastrophic Act establishes a costly new program. The prescription purchases of every Medicare beneficiary will have to be tracked.

In summary, this is not the time to rush to judgment and again seek to patch up a fundamentally troubled health care system. I am supporting repealing the act, with the exception of spousal impoverishment and Medicaid protection for low-income beneficiaries, because we need to start over. We need to take a comprehensive approach, examining our entire health care system and making those reforms necessary to ensure that every American has access to health care at a reasonable cost and protection against catastrophic health care costs.

The options before us today, other than repeal, will simply further fuel health care costs for the majority of the elderly and the nonelderly, increasing the number who cannot afford any coverage at all. There are better alternatives. I would prefer to put the surtax, the physician, and the drug coverage on hold for a period of time to give ourselves the opportunity for reasoned, dispassionate consideration of how to best restructure this law and our health care system as a whole.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY].

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I am for long-term care. I am a sponsor of long-term-care legislation. But anybody who tells seniors that they are likely to get it if we totally repeal catastrophic is simply peddling baloney.

This President does not have the vision, and this Congress does not have the guts, unfortunately, to pass long-term care.

I found out what my seniors wanted, because I asked them. I sent a questionnaire to senior citizens in my district. One-third want repeal, two-thirds do not. Two-thirds of the seniors in my district said they want us to salvage respite care. They want us to salvage the protection against spousal impoverishment. They want us to salvage the drug benefit.

The Stark-Waxman amendment gets rid of the surtax. It does not get rid of needed benefits. I urge the Members to support it.

I have only one other thing to say. I am very angry about some of the misinformation being peddled by Mr. Roosevelt and his group over the past year and a half. I think that what that may demonstrate is that Archie the cockroach was right when he said that, "Blood will tell, but it often tells too much."

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WYLIE].

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, I take this time to explain why I plan to vote for the Stark-Gradison-Waxman amendment.

Last year I vote for an insurance program designed to protect our Nation's elderly from catastrophic costs related to health care. Most people in my district support the belief that we need catastrophic health insurance protection—and have since I was first elected to Congress. That must have been true in most districts, since Congress passed the largest expansion of Medicare benefits to the elderly in more than two decades.

Since then, I, like all of us, have been swamped with thousands of letters from seniors who object to paying the surtax for a variety of reasons.

Some have adequate coverage in private plans and others like employees of the State of Ohio have catastrophic-type coverage under State plans. They were asked to pay a tax for something from which they cannot benefit. I understand how they feel and, Mr. Chairman, I voted for a repeal of the surtax a few minutes ago. I will now vote for the Stark-Gradison-Waxman amendment, because to me it retains the concept of catastrophic health care benefits. As has been mentioned, it retains the prescription drug benefit. I know from personal experience that the cost of prescription drugs can be catastrophic in the case of long-term painful illnesses. This amendment retains mammography screening. I am told by my good friend, Dr. Arthur James, a leading cancer specialist, that thousands of women's lives can be saved through periodic mammograms. This is reason enough for me to vote for this amendment.

It retains the new home health care coverage, hospice, and in-home respite care.

For a lot of people this is a vote for merciful treatment of our elderly. It retains the spousal impoverishment provision.

Most people who have contacted me do not seem to object to the $4 a month increase in monthly premiums to pay for these benefits. I feel the equities weigh in favor of a favorable vote on this amendment.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SYNAR].

Mr. SYNAR. Mr. Chairman, every week I receive gut-wrenching accounts from elderly Oklahomans on fixed incomes unable to pay for their prescription medicines.

Some of them are eligible for Medicaid but still can't afford their medicines, like the elderly couple I heard from last week: Their combined Social Security is $520 a month. One spouse's monthly drug bill is $207. She has high blood pressure; he has congestive heart failure. She writes that sometimes she skips buying her medicine because of the high cost. And, she concludes by saying that she's not asking for anything. "We learned long ago that the poor people, especially the elderly, are going to be left that way."

I would like to say that these letters are rare. They're not.

Apparently the Congress is not capable of coming up with an acceptable comprehensive solution to the problem of inadequate Medicare coverage. That's too bad.

In the meantime, the Stark amendment is the least we can do.

The people who will benefit from this amendment have not asked us for anything. They don't expect our help. You may not even have heard from them.

It was for them that catastrophic was created and it is them that will suffer most from its repeal.

I urge my colleagues to vote yes on the amendment.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Stark-Waxman-Gradison alternative, and I commend my distinguished colleagues, the gentlemen from California, Mr. STARK and Mr. WAXMAN, and the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. GRADISON, for working for a constructive alternative to address the serious concerns which have been raised over this bill, while retaining many of its vital benefits.

Mr. Chairman, we must bear in mind that the Catastrophic Protection Act was initially enacted in order to protect nearly 32 million Medicare beneficiaries from the devastating costs of catastrophic illness. I urge my colleagues not to throw the baby out with the bathwater.

I have long supported the need for catastrophic health benefits. However, many serious questions have been raised over the method of financing this legislation.

The Stark-Waxman-Gradison substitute repeals the troublesome Medicare surtax, removing the duplicative benefits which are already covered by many retirement programs, and retains many of the more beneficial provisions of the present law.

All of us are aware of the heartbreaking stories of our Nation's seniors who suffered from a catastrophic illness and whose assets rapidly withered away turning their financial security into destitution in a matter of just a few months.

This proposal retains important health benefits for our elderly: Home health care, hospice and respite care, the prescription drug benefits, and the Medicaid buy-in and spousal impoverishment benefits.

Mr. Chairman, accordingly, I urge my colleagues to support this measure which repeals the surtax, the major argument against the bill, while at the same time retaining sorely needed health benefits.

□ 1450

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN], a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, there has been reference to the cost of administration as a third. That is out of thin air. The CBO estimates at most when the program is implemented it would be 15 percent. Do not try to scare us.

Popular appeal. The ABC poll, and I hope Members will take this into account, and we have rechecked their figures, 77 percent of the public is against repeal, and 57 percent of the seniors are against repeal. We talked with ABC today. For those who think they are responding to the public, I say look at the broader figures, and in a sense hedge your bet and at least retain some key benefits for the seniors of this country.

Third, the cost of the benefit. The demand is going to be somewhat high.

Fourth, wait for the commission. It is well intentioned, but it is a dodge. We should not wait to retain the essence of a good program.

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I have great personal and professional respect for the three authors of this amendment. I have worked closely with them over the years. But let me paraphrase what Ted Koppel said to the Governor of my State this time last year: "Fellows, you just don't get it, do you?"

Pride of authorship is a dangerous thing. I can understand why these gentlemen want to save a modicum of this program, because they have worked so hard, so diligently. Years of their life were put into drafting something that has been rejected by the people they purport to help.

The vote that was just taken in the House is a message from the Members of the House to those of us that write health policy in this Congress. The next time you do it, they are saying, do it right.

If there is one valid criticism of what was wrong with the catastrophic program, it is that we added benefits on a catch-as-catch-can basis. We added this benefit to assuage this interest group, to gain their support. We added this benefit to gain the support of these Members of the House. We added this benefit to get the support of those Members of the other body, with very little logic behind it.

I personally support all of these benefits. They are good benefits. They are needed benefits.

Let me just talk about one, the drug benefit. The benefit we were told was going to cost $5.7 billion a year ago, and by the Congressional Budget Office we are now told it is going to cost $12 billion.

Who is going to pay that $12 billion cost and how is it going to be paid? The same people that reject Catastrophic Illness Program are the people we are now telling your constitutents to pay for this coverage that less than 20 percent of them receive.

It starts out at $4 a month; it goes to $6 a month; it goes to $12 a month; it is a never-ending road. The administrative costs are outrageous.

This is not the way to draft health care policy, may I suggest, ladies and gentlemen, by adding a few benefits to pick up a few votes. Good benefits albeit, but it is just not the way to do it.

The House just spoke to us and told us not to do it this way. Members cannot have it both ways. Members cannot vote to repeal the program, and make no mistake about it, we did not just repeal the surtax, we repealed the benefits also.

The last thing that the elderly people in this country want us to do to them is to try to trick them. Let us tell them the truth. We made a commitment to go back to square one, to look at the needs, to listen to the people that we are going to ask to finance the program. Now we are coming through the back door adding, in a patchwork quilt, additional good coverages, with no way to pay for them other than on the backs of beneficiaries who rejected that same proposal just half an hour ago.

Let me just say in conclusion about the groups that support the Stark proposal, let me remind my colleagues these were the same groups this time last year that told us when we passed this catastrophic bill it would be welcomed with open arms by our constituents. We got a little less than an open-arm welcome from 32 million Medicare beneficiaries.

Listen to the people that Members represent. That is what the title of the job is all about. Not to the people in the corridors, some group which will have financial benefits from this amendment. I need not name whom, I think everybody knows.

Do not make the same mistake again. We do not get ourselves out of a hole by digging it deeper. Let us go back, let us take a sober, antiseptic look at what the needs of the beneficiaries are and how we can fund a program that is necessary. Let us listen to their input. Let us not jump back in and create another problem for ourselves.

The people expect some sort of logic and honesty about how we vote here. When we vote to repeal the surtax, we vote to repeal the programs. Do not add them back one at a time, little by little, without any sober analysis of where we are going.

This amendment, of all the amendments, ought to be overwhelmingly rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee will rise informally in order that the House may receive a message.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HUGHES) assumed the chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will receive a message.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Kalbaugh, one of his secretaries.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Committee will resume its sitting.

OMNIBUS BUDGET RECONCILIATION ACT OF 1989

The Committee resumed its sitting.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. STARK] has 16 minutes remaining; the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DONNELLY] has 2½ minutes remaining; and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER] has 7 minutes remaining.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. STARK].

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Oregon [Mr. WYDEN].

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

The Chairman, it is very obvious that the health care system in this country is in a shambles. But now we have a chance to throw some important relief in the system to millions of older people.

In particular I would encourage my colleagues to support the Stark amendment because it offers benefits which are least likely to be covered through Medigap policies or employer-sponsored retiree health plans. On top of that, it takes the baby steps toward a long-term care policy with respite benefits. They are preventive benefits in a system that is essentially sick care.

Finally, I would say to my colleagues, in the very first year, 1991, at least 5 million people will be helped as we fill in the gaps in our system through the drug benefit.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from Washington [Mrs. UNSOELD].

Mrs. UNSOELD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I wasn't here when the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act was adopted but I'm pleased to be here today to have an opportunity to rectify the injustice done to thousands of America's senior citizens by scrapping the supplemental premium or surtax that is intended to fund the majority of the benefits of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act. In the 9 months I have served in Congress, no other issue has generated the consistent outcry I have witnessed from senior citizens, who are justifiably angry to discover they are to be taxed to fund benefits they don't want and feel they don't need.

Hundreds of my constituents have written or called or talked with me during my trips back home about this issue. Rarely before in my years of public service have I seen an issue where popular sentiment was so overwhelmingly one sided. I've received less than a dozen letters in support of the Catastrophic Act as it is currently structured. Senior citizens feel they were ambushed.

It simply isn't fair to ask that middle-income seniors alone fund the catastrophic costs of low-income seniors or of those disabled individuals below the age of 65.

Furthermore, the surtax penalizes those senior citizens who had the foresight to save for their retirement. In essence they are now asked to help foot the health care bill for those who didn't make those tough choices.

The injustice even seems greater when we see that over 75 percent of older Americans have some type of supplemental Medicare coverage, either available through their preretirement employers or through privately purchased Medigap policies. Many of the new catastrophic benefits duplicate the benefits already available through these supplemental policies. The benefits most likely to be duplicated by these private policies are the "catastrophic" benefits of the new act. The end result for those with such supplemental policies is that they are faced with higher cost of the supplemental premium, for which they will see little in return.

The unfortunate outcome of the surtax controversy has been to draw attention away from the importance of the Medicare Program and the value of the program expansions included in the catastrophic benefits. Medicare has played a significant and important role in protecting the financial security of older Americans in the 25 years since its enactment. The Catastrophic Act filled in a number of important gaps that existed in the Medicare Program, particularly for low-income seniors and younger disabled persons. I would contend that each of the benefits included in the Catastrophic Act has significant value and should be a part of the Medicare Program. The factors of cost and political reality, however, simply make that impossible at this time.

I urge my colleagues to vote to terminate the supplemental premium. Such an action is the honorable thing to do and absolutely necessary if we are to restore the faith of older Americans in this body. The Medicare Program does need to be expanded and we need to examine the long-term care issue, the true catastrophic issue for America's elderly. The controversy over catastrophic benefits highlights just how difficult that task will be.

We have the opportunity today to end the supplemental premium, while still retaining at least some of the important features of the Catastrophic Act. The Stark-Waxman-Gradison proposal will do just that. It still is not an ideal choice, but I doubt we will find one that can satisfy everyone. Most important, passage of this compromise will retain the important prescription drug benefit, a benefit rarely covered in private supplemental policies. One in six beneficiaries are expected to exceed the prescription drug deductible in any given year; almost half the elderly will use the drug benefit over 5 years. Those who qualify for the drug benefit, spend almost $2,000 per year on average for prescription drugs.

The Stark-Waxman-Gradison proposal would also retain the mammography screening benefits, which is expected to save some 4,000 lives each year, as well as retain the in-home respite care benefit, the expanded home health care and hospice benefits. Each one of these benefits should be a part of Medicare.

We can retain these benefits and still entirely eliminate the unfair supplemental premium. The increase in the monthly premiums, that began this past January with a $4 monthly premium increase, is not ideal, but I believe that America's senior citizens are willing to accept that cost. I have gotten only a handful of letters objecting to the increased monthly premiums. I am well aware of the burden of these higher premiums on those seniors with very limited incomes. Unfortunately, the budget pressure we face today leave us with no alternative if we are to retain any of the catastrophic benefits.

A number of organizations that have been leaders in the fight to eliminate the supplemental premium have endorsed the Stark-Waxman-Gradison proposal. Many of the letters I have received in opposition to the supplemental premium have come from the members of these very organizations. I am comfortable that this proposal offers us an excellent opportunity to end the horrible injustice of the supplemental premium, but yet retain some of the important benefits of the original act.

□ 1500

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. McDERMOTT].

Mr. McDERMOTT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

I did not vote for catastrophic last year because I was not here. But I will not vote to throw away the first Medicare expansion in a generation, just because Ronald Reagan insisted that seniors pay for it.

Whatever you think about catastrophic, I know one thing for sure. Prescription drugs keep people out of hospitals and nursing homes. They help us treat patients, control symptoms, and prevent illness. Nothing frustrates a doctor more than to prescribe a drug the patient cannot afford.

My parents live on Social Security and spend $200 a month for prescription drugs. So do millions like them. They do not have a choice. They do not have private insurance to cover this cost. Most Medigap policies will not pay for it. Next to long term care, this is the senior citizens' greatest need.

Why pay to see a doctor if you cannot pay for the drugs you need? Why pay for hospitalization instead of the medication that keeps you out of the hospital?

Vote for the drug benefit, for good medicine and good economics. Vote for the amendment.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR].

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Chairman, Dr. McDERMOTT talked about one area that is covered under the Stark-Waxman proposal.

I would like to zero in on another one.

The price of the average mammogram in this country is about $150, it is three times more than the annual premium would be for seniors. We know that breast cancer has reached crisis proportions in this country.

One out of nine women get breast cancer. Most of those 1 out of 9 women never get a mammogram. Most senior women, and by the way we are talking about two-thirds of the elderly being female, most senior women cannot afford a mammogram.

This would allow them to get this particular benefit.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think that when you are talking about 4,000 lives annually that can be saved because of this one benefit, 9 women in each congressional district, we ought to save this amendment for the sake of this one benefit, let alone all the other benefits.

I urge you to have some courage and to support the Stark-Waxman amendment.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAYES].

Mr. HAYES of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I have sat and witnessed the trampling on the bodies and heads of poor people for 2 weeks now. I am not stupid enough to assume that I can say anything in 1 minute that might stop that situation—but I hope it will.

Just to give you an example: One poor lady in my district, and I am sure there are others, had a regular diet of dog food that she eats, canned dog food, in order to try to pay now, under current circumstances, her medical bills, trying to extend her life a little longer.

I want to ask the question which somebody needs to answer for me so I can take it to my constituents: What is going to happen while we construct the so-called perfect piece of legislation that we are going to get together on to correct what is being done?

Mr. Chairman, I support the current amendment being proposed by our colleagues, Messrs. STARK and WAXMAN.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Oregon [Mr. DEFAZIO].

Mr. DEFAZIO. Mr. Chairman, I opposed passage of the Catastrophic Coverage Act last year because I felt the financing mechamism was unfair and felt the benefits weren't the coverage that most seniors needed or wanted. But, today, I rise in support of the Stark, Waxman, Gradison amendment.

The benefits of the Stark amendment: increased respite care, hospice care, home health care, and the State Medicaid buy-in and the spousal impoverishment protection are important and needed health-care coverage. The expanded respite coverage will benefit elderly women who are in the Nation's primary in-home care givers. The mammography screening is the first preventative health care benefit offered under the Medicare Program, and the expanded home health care and hospice care coverage are steps toward long-term care coverage.

I have strong concerns with the prescription drug benefit in the Stark proposal. I have concerns with the scheduled premium increases, Medicare premiums and deductibles have already increased 200 percent since 1980. And I have concerns that the Stark amendment would repeal benefits that have alredy gone into effect. Seniors who have dropped Medigap policies for extended hospital stays and physician services, will find themselves without coverage for those costs.

However, given the options, total repeal or the Ways and Means proposal that would increase the monthly flat premium by 71 percent and reduce benefits across-the-board, I must support the Stark, Waxman, Gradison proposal. I hope that it will be improved in conference and that a better targeted benefit package will prevail.

Over the next 30 years, the number of Americans over the age of 65 will double. The need for long-term, in-home and preventative care coverage will be acute. This body will have to make some very difficult decisions about how to provide coverage for those individuals. Turning our backs on the elderly because this is a difficult issue is not responsible government.

Health care and retirement benefits for our seniors represent a contract between the generations; one that transcends nationality or party lines; one that is innately human. If we shirk our responsibility as a society to care for our parents and for their parents, we betray our humanity. Support the Stark, Waxman, Gradison amendment.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. JAMES].

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to express my opposition to the Stark-Gradison-Waxman substitute proposal for repeal of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988.

Mr. Chairman, today is an important day for the millions of Medicare beneficiaries who have been forced to participate in the Medicare Catastrophic Program. Although well-intentioned, this program itself has many ills. It does not help senior citizens with their much-needed long-term care needs; many of the program's estimated costs are doubling; and the financing of the program is surely a "seniors only" tax!

We can craft a better health care program for our Nation's senior citizens. We can and we must. But this important task cannot be achieved as an amendment to budget reconciliation. We must admit our failure in crafting the current catastrophic program and go back to the drawing board to create a program that will prove to be beneficial to our Nation's growing number of senior citizens.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOLF].

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, today Members of the House have the opportunity to be responsive to the overwhelming sentiment of older Americans with regard to the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act. We have the opportunity today to vote to repeal the Catastrophic Act.

A few months ago this moment did not seem possible. Only through the unrelenting drive of older Americans making known to Congress their clear opposition to the Catastrophic Act is this vote possible. Only through the tireless and reasoned efforts of my colleagues on the Catastrophic Task Force, led by HARRIS FAWELL of Illinois, to force congressional action on the Catastrophic Act is this vote possible. And only through the foresight of my colleagues BRAIN DONNELLY and BILL ARCHER who have offered us this repeal amendment here today is this vote possible.

I have heard from over 4,000 of my constituents in northern Virginia who are unmistakeably opposed to the Catastrophic Act. My constituents' concerns have focused not only on the inequities of the funding mechanism but also on the fact that senior citizens have many pressing long-term health care needs that the Catastrophic Act fails to address.

The latest figures from the Congressional Budget Office [CBO] on the cost of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act are disturbing, if not shocking. The expected cost of the program has soared 60 percent higher than anticipated just 15 months ago. The Catastrophic Coverage Program will shortly be bankrupt. It has changed from a program running a $9 billion surplus to one that will incur a $6 billion deficit. None of the catastrophic reform proposals, including the latest House Ways and Means revision, are feasible alternatives, according to the latest CBO figures.

It is now time for Congress to start with a clean slate, repeal the Catastrophic Act, and hold public hearings in order to better address the pressing health care needs of older Americans.

The Donnelly-Archer amendment gives us that clean slate. Among senior groups supporting repeal is the Military Coalition, an organization representing 21 military employee and retiree groups.

The Military Coalition submitted a letter to Congress which said in part:

Our 1.3 million members oppose the Stark-Gradison-Waxman Amendment.

Imposing the prescription drug benefit on seniors by linking it to Part B Medicare reduces the value of Part B and is overwhelmingly opposed by senior citizens. The mandatory provision that they will not use is particularly costly to military retirees and service-connected disabled veterans who already have earned a drug benefit from the U.S. Government.

We urge you to vote for Donnelly-Archer and reject Stark-Gradison-Waxman.

The Military Coalition is comprised of: Air Force Association, Air Force Sergeants Association, Association of Military Surgeons, Association of U.S. Army, Commissioned Officers Association of the Public Health Service, Fleet Reserve Association, Marine Corps League, Marine Corps Reserve Officers, National Association for Uniformed Services, National Military Family Association, Naval Reserve Association, Naval Enlisted Reserve Association, Navy League of the U.S., Non-Commissioned Officers Association, Reserve Officers Association, the Retired Officers Association, the Retired Enlisted Association, Society of Medical Consultants to the Armed Services, U.S. Army Warrant Officers Association, U.S. Coast Guard CPO Association, and the U.S. Coast Guard WO and CWO Association.

A "yes" vote on Donnelly-Archer and a "no" vote on Stark-Gradison-Waxman is a vote in the best interests of older Americans and the long-term future of the Medicare system. I urge my colleagues to not lose this opportunity today to repeal the Catastrophic Act.

The full text of the letter is as follows:

THE MILITARY COALITION,
Alexandria, VA, October 3, 1989.

MEMBER OF CONGRESS,
U.S. House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

When the House considers the proposed changes to the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988, you will have the choice of voting for the Donnelly-Archer Amendment to repeal the act or to vote for the Stark-Gradison-Waxman Amendment which repeals the surtax, but, imposes a mandatory prescription drug benefit on Part B Medicare recipients.

The Military Coalition prefers to retain core catastrophic benefits as in the Senate McCain Bill (Catastrophic Reform Act); however, our 1.3 million members oppose the Stark-Gradison-Waxman Amendment.

Imposing the prescription drug benefit on seniors by linking it to Part B Medicare reduces the value of Part B and is overwhelmingly opposed by senior citizens. The mandatory provision which they will not use is particularly costly to military retirees and service-connected disabled veterans whol already have earned a drug benefit from the U.S. Government.

We urge you to vote for Donnelly-Archer and reject Stark-Gradison-Waxman.

Sincerely,

GEORGE F. HENNRIKUS, Jr.,
Colonel, USAF, Retired Chairman.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia. [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, every single alternative from repeal to the various substitutes that have been offered deal with the real problem that is troubling this body, and that is the supplemental premiums.

Obviously that was a mistake and has to be corrected.

There are those who believe that the best opportunity for this insurance substitute is to simply scrap the entire program, come back next year, look at the possibility of universal health care or all of the other alternatives that are being offered.

But I doubt that those things are going to come about because I do not think there is a body of opinion that would support that at the present time.

So I think one has to look at the alternatives that are offered to see whether or not there is one that provides benefits that all of us can generally support. And the people that I hear from, more than any other, and people that I deal with on a day-to-day basis, more than any other, are those people who are slightly above the Medicaid stage, do not qualify for Medicaid and yet they are slightly below the poverty line.

This is a real problem that is not going to change, however long we wait. Therefore, I think if we really want to deal with those people slightly over the Medicaid wage level who do not qualify for Medicaid, but do need help simply because they cannot afford hospital care, cannot afford the medicines that they need, then we ought to see if there is a program that can be paid for that is affordable. I believe that the Stark amendment comes closer to that than any other.

Time after time I talk with people who cannot possibly use up all of their few hundred dollars because their spouse is in a nursing home. I think all Members agree that should not be the case. This attempts to correct that. Time and time again I see the need for a Medicaid buy in. That is not going to change, however long we wait. I see the need for additional home health care, that ought to save members money in the long term. I see the need for each of these programs that has been scaled down in this amendment, that are not going to change. The only thing that we do is to pay for these benefits, and they are not overly generous.

I do not think that is going to change. For that reason, I support this amendment.

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Stark-Gradison amendment.

Despite the best intentions of its sponsors, it comes to the House too hastily prepared. It is a last minute, almost desperate and expedient move to expand Medicare with little thought for what beneficiaries really want or need. The proponents settle arbitrarily on an array of noncatastrophic benefits plus prescription drugs. Drug coverage may be needed by the elderly, but Medicare's capacity to administer and afford this benefit is doubtful.

The authors of the amendment argue that the cost of their benefits will be covered by part B premiums. What they fail to mention is that CBO estimates for the drug benefit alone have nearly doubled in just a year. CBO's original 5-year cost estimate was $5.7 billion. That number has now exploded to $11.8 billion.

The fact is—not one druggist has yet filled one prescription under this program. We have no way of accurately estimating its cost. It's reasonable to assume that demand for new AIDS drugs will expand exponentially and lead to much, much higher drug costs.

Experience has taught us one thing for sure—all estimates for new Medicare benefits are understated. The only question is by how much.

To save the Catastrophic Program, we're asked to pick the one benefit most likely not to succeed. Even the current low ball estimates call for a deductible in 1994 of over $1,200 and an increase in the part B premium of over $200 a year per person. That's a big hit on low-income elderly.

Few of us can seriously believe Congress will allow a deductible or premium of that size to stick. The drug benefit is a train wreck waiting to happen—and in the end will require either more taxpayer dollars or broken promises to the elderly.

That is not to say that the other benefits retained by Stark-Gradison may not have merit—as part of a thoughtful comprehensive overhaul of Medicare. However, for purposes of this debate, there's no evidence that they are any more justified than the catastrophic benefits the amendment so readily throws overboard.

Mr. Chairman, I understand that the authors of this amendment are trying in good faith to save a program in which they deeply believe.

However, I just as sincerely believe that when you consider the volatility of the drug benefit—and the question of priorities—our wisest course is to repeal the program now so that we can begin with a clean slate next year in thoughtfully reconsidering the future direction of our Nation's health and long-term care policies.

This body has just voted overwhelmingly for Donnelly-Archer to repeal catastrophic. A vote for Stark-Gradison is totally inconsistent and would overturn that vote. It would play into the hands of the conference committee which is likely to be dominated by supporters of the surtax and it sends the wrong message to the Senate.

I urge my colleagues to vote "no" on Stark-Gradison.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. CARDIN].

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Stark-Gradison amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today in opposition to the Donnelly amendment to repeal the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act and in support of the Stark amendment to delete the supplemental premium and preserve the prescription drug, home health care, respite care, mammography and spousal impoverishment benefits.

Our Nation's senior and disabled citizens need the benefits provided by the catastrophic insurance law. The costs of a catastrophic illness can literally bankrupt a family. The financing mechanism in the new law, however, is contrary to the traditional means of financing Medicare. In the interests of fairness, Congress must eliminate the surtax.

If we vote to repeal, we deprive those seniors who need these benefits. I favor an adjustment in the financing mechanism. We should pay for this extension of Medicare the way we have always paid for Medicare, with a balance between current beneficiaries and future beneficiaries. When we abandoned that principle to please Ronald Reagan, we planted the seeds that led to today's action.

I support the Stark amendment because it keeps key elements of the program alive, preserving the chance that we can rebuild the rest of the program on a sounder foundation. The surtax must go. But the benefits it financed should be saved.

Each year more than 6 million senior citizens will benefit from the prescription drug program preserved by the Stark amendment. In addition, this compromise proposal includes the home health, respite care, and biennial mammography screening benefits. We know that the mammography benefit alone will save the lives of 4,000 women a year. In addition, the Medicaid buy-in for poor seniors and the spousal impoverishment provision that provides financial protection to spouses of nursing home residents have been retained in this amendment.

I am hopeful Congress can resolve this issue satisfactorily this year so we can move on to address the pressing need for protection against the enormous costs of long-term care.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. GRADISON).

Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Chairman, just 15 months ago, President Reagan signed into law the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988. This legislation represents the greatest expansion of Medicare for the elderly and chronically disabled since the Medicare program itself was enacted in 1965. Now, before a significant portion of the new benefits have even begun, an effort is being waged to repeal this landmark legislation.

Today, two substitutes are being offered to the provisions contained in H.R. 3299 relating to the Medicare catastrophic coverage program. The first calls for near total repeal; the second, which we are considering now, eliminates the highly controversial supplemental premium and, yet, retains many of the program's essential benefits.

While I wish that the whole program could have been given an opportunity to work, that clearly is not going to happen. I have, therefore, joined the distinguished chairmen of the Ways and Means and Energy and Commerce Health Subcommittees in developing a much more moderate alternative to the Donnelly-Archer amendment.

What have we heard from our constituents over the past year concerning the catastrophic program? They do not like the supplemental premium. They feel they already have coverage for many of its acute care benefits. They want protection from the skyrocketing costs of prescription drugs. And they want long-term care coverage.

Does the just approved Donnelly-Archer repeal substitute, respond to the concerns we have heard? It does eliminate the supplemental premium, but it also eliminates all non-Medicaid benefits of the catastrophic program—benefits that the elderly and their advocates worked for years to have included in the Medicare program.

The Stark-Gradison-Waxman substitute also eliminates the supplemental premium. Equally important, however, it retains essential health care benefits that many of our constituents tell us they want and need. For example:

The prescription drug benefit would be retained.

Some long-term care benefits such as expansion of home health and hospice coverage as well as in-home respite care would be retained.

The long overdue coverage of mammography screening for women age 65 and over would be retained. It is estimated that this provision alone would save thousands of lives each year.

Also retained are essential benefits for the poorest senior citizens, including the Medicaid buy in to protect against the financial burden of Medicare cost sharing and protection for spouses of nursing home residents against impoverishment.

Not only are the retained benefits important, but they are also largely unavailable or unaffordable to a great many beneficiaries through the private sector. The Stark-Gradison-Waxman amendment finances the retained benefits with the monthly flat premium as set by current law.

For those who may hope otherwise, near total repeal would not be the end of the controversy. Yet to weigh in are millions of moderate-income elderly who will be considerably worse off with repeal. Also, I expect that nearly all beneficiaries will be totally unprepared for the huge Medigap premium increases that will occur when the policies are adjusted to pick up benefits from the catastrophic program. Who do you think they are going to blame for the increases?

Perhaps the ultimate irony may be that so many Members consider repeal politically necessary. The politics of an issue can change, and I think the politics of this issue could change radically if this program is repealed and millions of senior citizens and the chronically disabled realize what they have lost. One need not be a media whiz to envision the future campaign ads against incumbents who voted to take these benefits away from our most vulnerable citizens.

The Stark-Gradison-Waxman substitute is not perfect, but it would give us an opportunity to save as many of the valuable new benefits as possible while addressing the concerns that have been raised about the program's financing.

I join with such diverse organizations as the United Auto Workers, the American Federation of Government Employees, and the National Education Association, as well as the major senior citizen groups in urging you to support the Stark-Gradison-Waxman substitute. Doing so is a responsive and responsible approach to modifying the Medicare catastrophic program. It is the least our elderly and chronically disabled citizens deserve.

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RUSSO].

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield my remaining time, 30 seconds, to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RUSSO].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RUSSO] is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. RUSSO. Mr. Chairman, here we go again. Another band-aid, another short-term fix for a serious problem and the continuation of an inefficient, complicated, costly system, a system that everyone in this country agrees does not work well.

What is wrong with limited prescription drugs? What is wrong with limited long-term health care? I will tell the Members what is wrong with it. They are limited. That is the problem. They are limited.

We need prenatal care, we need postnatal care, we need preventive medicine, we need comprehensive long-term care, and we need a comprehensive prescription drug program. We do not need limited piecemeal fixes.

The only way we are going to get this is if we commit ourselves to enacting a comprehensive national health care program. I do not accept the argument that has been espoused today by several Members that if we do not do this today, we will never have these benefits, we will never see the light of day. I think that is wrong. The issue of the 1990's and the 21st century, I say to my colleagues, is going to be quality health care for every American, and if Members do not think so, they can just read the polls.

Mr. Chairman, we can do it. All we need to do is make a commitment as leaders in government to start down that road toward national health care. Corporations that were opposed to this for years are not for it. Why? Because they spend so much money on health care costs for their employees. They realize that they are at a complete disadvantage because of the extreme cost of health care, and they have no way of containing that cost.

So they are ahead of the curve. They are ahead of Members of Congress. The American people understand it. They are ahead of the Congress. They have already made health care costs in this country a national priority. What is wrong with Members of Congress doing the same thing?

Let us join the American people. Let us do what they want. They want a national comprehensive health care program. It does not belong on the back burner. The elections of 1990 and 1992 and the elections of the future are going to be dealt with with an eye toward national health care.

So let us get on board. Let us do what the American people want. They deserve better of this Congress. Let us move forward, defeat this amendment, and start the debate for universal health care for every American.

Mr. Chairman, they deserve it. Let us do it.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STARK. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Chairman, let me remind my colleagues that if they vote for the Stark-Gradison measure, we can at least go to conference and give the conferees a chance to work out this difficult problem. That can be done. The intent has clearly been established here today, and that is the thing to do.

If we vote "no," then we have no vehicle, and we have no choice except to be embarrassed in front of the American people.

So, Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will be supported.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PICKLE] for his comments.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to urge my colleagues to support the amendment that is coauthorized by the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GRADISON]. It is important.

We have eliminated the supplemental tax which generated 90 percent of the complaints. We should vote for this amendment if for no other reason than supporting this amendment will cost $1 billion less than the Donnelly-Archer amendment in deficits next year and $2 billion less over 5 years. It will be revenue-neutral in the out years.

But that is not the reason we came to this as an alternative. The real reason is that we determined that it is the right thing to do. Will it be expensive? Yes, of course it will be, although it will be paid for by the beneficiaries at less cost than they could buy the same protection commercially.

It will be expensive because they will use more drugs. And why is that? Because the technology for geriatric medicine will improve more and develop more in the area of pharmaceuticals in the next decade than at any other time.

There will be no major advances in diagnostic techniques for seniors. There will be no major advances in surgery for seniors. Parkinson's disease and Alzheimer's disease and high blood pressure and the other chronic diseases that afflict the elderly will be cured with pharmaceuticals breakthrough, and these drugs will be expensive.

I want to point out to the Members that our constituents do not have insurance available commercially to protect them against the cost of pharmaceutical medicine. That is why it is the most important benefit to retain. They can buy on late-night television from Danny Thomas and Lorne Greene and the rest of them all the doctors' benefits and all the hospital benefits they want, but they cannot buy the prescription drug or other minor benefits that are included in this bill.

The benefits are fully paid for by a modest increase of $4 rising to $10 a month in the 5th year. This premium increase has not been objected to by any of the groups. I might add that it is supported by many senior groups, including the group that generated the uprising against the supplemental premium. That group is now attempting to generate support for this amendment.

I urge the Members to consider, in the interest of our seniors, for a modest monthly increase which they are not objecting to, giving them a benefit they cannot otherwise purchase and which is desperately needed this year and for many years to come.

With this vote, we will have shown our response to the outcry of seniors by eliminating the supplemental surtax. That is what they objected to most. Now, let us go home and for $1 or $2 billion less than the Donnelly-Archer amendment, let's give them benefits which they desperately need and which they will increasingly need in the future. Let's give those benefits to them at a modest monthly cost, which they have not objected to, and which they could not replace in the commercial market.

Mr. Chairman, I urge the Members to support this amendment as a responsible step forward in providing some incremental benefits to the needy, the 20 million Americans we have not heard from and for whom we can preserve some small sense of safety, dignity and necessary health care. I ask the Members to please vote "yes" on this very important amendment.

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Gradison-Stark-Waxman substitute to the Medicare Long-Term Care Catastrophic Protection Act of 1988. Let me start off by saying that it seems very appropriate, under the circumstances, that this legislation has coined the term "catastrophic." The events that have lead up to today's debate and vote have not only wreaked havoc in our offices, with the outpouring of letters, postcards and telegrams from angry seniors, but if we repeal this measure today, we will have taken part in wrecking the lives of millions of elderly who desperately need the services provided in this bill.

When we enacted the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act last year, I and others, following the lead of the late Claude Pepper, recognized then that we needed to enact a measure that included long-term care and other services. And even though this body voted down Mr. Pepper's initiative, we did support the new expansions of Medicare, acknowledging this as a first-step in our improving health coverage for our Nation's elderly.

Furthermore, we established the Bipartisan Commission on Comprehensive Health Care to examine and make recommendations on those issues and concerns not included in the catastrophic legislation. In the short time that I have been a part of this panel as its newest member, I firmly believe that we will develop an action plan to deal with closing the other gaps in health care for the elderly, persons with disabilities, and other needy Americans.

The American public is looking to us for leadership. I urge my colleagues to vote in support of this Medicare improvement provision and show our Nation that we will not be swayed in our efforts to move forward and improve the health of our citizens.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, for over 30 years Congress has considered proposals to alter substantially the role of the Federal Government in providing for the health care of the American people. Today we are on the verge of the latest revision. Unfortunately, we will not expand health coverage for our senior citizens. Because of problems with the funding mechanism established by the Catastrophic Care Act of 1988, Congress will most certainly repeal most, if not all, of the act.

When Congress enacted Medicare in 1965, we made a solemn compact with the American people—a compact which declared that when you grow old and retire, you should not live in fear that you will become sick and not be able to pay the medical bills. However, it is clear that the Medicare Program has not kept pace with the needs of our Nation's elderly population or with the skyrocketing costs of health care. We have the responsibility to review, revise, and renew the Medicare compact.

As a nation we took an important step in this direction in 1988 with the Catastrophic Coverage Act. This measure was the only type of legislation to expand health care coverage for the elderly that the Reagan administration was willing to consider, and as such it was by no means perfect or even adequate. It did not address, for example, the most pressing health care problem facing our senior citizens, namely the lack of any comprehensive approach to long-term health care. Nevertheless, senior citizens organizations strongly supported the Catastrophic Coverage Act, and it did provide a host of health benefits to people who greatly needed them. These included prescription drug coverage, an increase in Medicare's mental health reimbursement, a respite care benefit, and spousal impoverishment provisions.

The Catastrophic Care Act of 1988 went a long way toward meeting some of senior America's most urgent health care needs. Contrary to current public opinion, many Members of Congress, including myself, expressed concern over the inequitable method of financing this new legislation. I have always felt that the cost of these essential benefits should be paid for by all Americans rather than specifically targeting one segment of the population, in this case Medicare beneficiaries. However, President Reagan was very clear about his desire for full financing by the elderly and about the need for a self-financing mechanism such as the controversial surtax that was signed into law. In fact, he assured Congress that he would veto legislation that did not contain this component. Thus, the funding mechanism established in the 1988 act was simply the best we could do at the time and were encouraged to support by various of the seniors organizations.

Today, under a dramatically different set of circumstances, Congress must decide the future of the 1988 Catastrophic Care Act. There are two major amendments concerning health care for the elderly to be considered: one to repeal the act outright, with the exception of three improvements in Medicaid, and one to reform the act. I support the Donnelly-Archer-Russo amendment to repeal the 1988 Catastrophic Care Act because I still believe that the funding mechanism as it stands is unfair. I am also persuaded that those seniors who would be paying the surtax strongly believe that they are being unfairly treated. Under these circumstances, I believe it makes more sense for Congress to start again and develop a health policy which is fair and responds to the health needs of all Americans, in particular to the poor and the elderly.

However, the Stark-Gradison-Waxman amendment would spare a small portion of the original catastrophic act's critical benefits. For example, it would retain catastrophic prescription drug coverage, home health care coverage, hospice coverage, and mammogram coverage. In our determinations to do away with the act's flawed method of financing, we must not lose sight of the merit of its purpose. Therefore, I support the Stark-Gradison-Waxman amendment as a substitute.

America's elderly are a vulnerable population. They deserve protection. Its funding not withstanding, the Catastrophic Care Act provided some of that vitally needed protection in the form of health benefits. Members must stand up for a fair and responsible health care program for the elderly. Because I believe that it salvages an important health benefit for the elderly I support the Stark-Gradison-Waxman substitute.

Mr. MFUME. I join my colleagues in support of the Stark-Gradison-Waxman Medicare catastrophic coverage amendment to H.R. 3299, as it eliminates the burden of a surtax but retains some instrumental benefits.

I recognize that the current Catastrophic Coverage Act of 1988 is significantly flawed; however, the benefits that this measure does provide are long overdue and should be retained. More importantly, I also recognize that even as we continue to legislate, those citizens whom we set out to protect from total financial loss resulting from a catastrophic or long-term illness, remain yet unprotected from financial devastation.

Total repeal of the current Catastrophic Coverage Act would serve only to impact negatively, not only on the indigent elderly, but also on middle income older Americans. While able to sustain themselves minimally, they certainly cannot continue to do so in the event of a serious or chronic illness requiring costly medication or extensive hospitalization and nursing care, without coverage. The Stark-Gradison-Waxman amendment would clearly work to ensure that coverage would be available for those in need.

Mr. Chairman, there is no question that the issue of catastrophic coverage must be revisited and that the establishment of a viable plan should top the agenda of those concerned about the well-being of our Nation's elderly. We must remain keenly aware, however, that timely revisitation is necessary. We presently have no guarantees of this in any manner. Moreover, should existing benefits benefits be rolled back, what will become of those elderly persons currently benefiting from the provisions already in place?

It pains me to think there are those willing to acquiesce to the pressure of the amplified cries of a few, while making day-to-day existence for those suffering illness, a financial nightmare.

Let me conclude by stating that the Stark-Gradison-Waxman provision is a good measure which ensures the continuence of crucial provisions which a great many elderly and chronically ill Americans need. I support this measure along with continued strides toward the development of a sound catastrophic health coverage measure.

I urge my colleagues to join with me in voting for this amendment.

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Stark-Waxman-Gradison substitute.

I commend the gentlemen for offering their amendment.

This debate highlights the dilemma we face regarding health care in this country today.

We know seniors want and need protection against doctor and hospital bills, the highest cost of prescription drugs and the staggering price of long-term care.

But we can't figure out how to provide that protection because we are already spending so much on health care.

In 1950, we spend $1 billion a month on health care. That figure rose to $1.5 billion a day by 1988, despite several rate freezes or payment reforms in the interim.

We devote a 50-percent greater share of our gross national product to paying for health care than the average for all industrialized nations.

No industrialized nation spends more for health care on a per capita basis than the United States. We spend 38 percent more per capita than Canada, 87 percent more than West Germany, 124 percent more than Japan, and 170 percent more than Great Britain.

Even at these very great expenditure levels, however, we alone among industrialized nations fail to provide universal access to basic health care services, including long-term care.

Why?

As much as $1 out of every $4 spent on health care today—about $125 billion annually—may be wasted.

Some experts estimate 20 to 30 percent of all medical procedures performed provide no appreciable improvement in outcomes and, in some cases, actually may be detrimental to the welfare of patients.

We also lose billions because of the unique pluralistic nature of our system.

The thousands of individual insurers and businesses who pay for health care do not have the clout to bargain effectively for lower prices. Our system places enormous paperwork burdens on providers and competition runs up costs for advertising, public relations and other frills which add nothing to the quality of patient-care.

If we are going to meet the health care needs of the American people now and in the future, we must have a fundamental, structural overhaul of our health care system that will allow us to provide more and better medical care without raising costs.

We must consider measures such as:

Implementing a national health insurance system that guarantees the access of all Americans to affordable, comprehensive, high-quality medical care;

Changing the emphasis of the system from sickness care to disease prevention by improving coverage of preventive health services;

Increasing funding for health education and health promotion programs to convince Americans to stop smoking, moderate alcohol consumption, avoid drugs, lose weight and exercise regularly;

Establishing wellness clinics at work sites, in schools, and in senior citizens centers;

Funding research into the prevention of the leading causes of debilitation and dependence among senior citizens—incontinence, arthritis, dementia and debilitating falls;

Developing admistrative and other out-of-court mechanisms to resolve medical malpractice cases; and,

Improving our technology assessment capability and developing treatment guidelines so that only those procedures that actually improve outcomes are utilized and paid for.

With a strong national commitment to making these types of fundamental, structural changes in our health care system, we can become a healthier and more productive nation in the 21st century.

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Chairman, I am voting today for both the repeal of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act and for Stark-Gradison-Waxman substitute. The reason for these votes is that I believe the surtax levied upon Medicare recipients to pay for the benefits under this law was wrong. I also believe, however, that the benefits created under the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act will make a significant difference in the lives of millions of American seniors.

The benefit levels included in the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act enacted by the 100th Congress, met a critical need among the Nation's elderly. However the financing mechanism created to pay for these benefit increases was flawed.

Many of us would have liked to have retained all of the benefits under the catastrophic law, such as the expansion of coverage for individuals who needed the services of a skilled nursing facility. However, given the situation, that is not possible.

The Stark amendment repeals the surtax while retaining many benefits that will help the estimated 8 million elderly individuals who experience chronic illness or disability each year. The impact of these provisions is far too important to merely erase without further consideration.

While some 80 percent of Medicare beneficiaries have some form of catastrophic coverage for hospital and physician costs through private Medigap policies, this is not true of prescription drug costs. Prescription drug costs are the largest out-of-pocket health care expense for three out of four elderly individuals. At the same time, fewer than 20 percent of Medicare beneficiaries have private insurance that covers the costs of prescription drugs. The prescription drug benefit that is retained under the Stark substitute will protect millions of elderly individuals from the often devastating costs of prescription drugs.

The Stark substitute also retains several other important provisions included in the original law—home health care benefits; respite care; hospice care; coverage of mammography screening; the ability for low-income seniors to buy into the Medicaid Program; and the protections against impoverishment for spouses of nursing home patients.

The importance of these provisions is not insignificant. For example, the mammogram benefit will save more than 4,000 women's lives each year. The respite care benefit provides often-needed relief for the families of homebound seniors.

While the spousal impoverishment protections contained in the law are not as generous as those enjoyed by seniors in California, the do set a minimum standard for the spouses of nursing home patients around the country. I will work to correct this inequity in the spousal impoverishment provision for California seniors.

These provisions enacted by Congress last year to help Medicare beneficiaries are too important to erase by repealing the entire program. Putting the burden of paying for these benefits on the backs of the elderly was wrong, but an overhasty repeal of the entire program would also be a step in the wrong direction. I believe the Stark-Gradison-Waxman amendment is a step in the right direction and I urge my colleagues to vote for this substitute.

Mr. HILER. Mr. Chairman, with the showdown involving the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act finally at hand, Members are faced with the difficult task of revising or repealing what was considered one of the major accomplishments of the 100th Congress.

Without question, the new Medicare coverage has become the single most contentious issue among the elderly in this country. The senior citizens I represent tell me they don't want this coverage; it's too expensive, many of them already have this sort of coverage through private or employer-paid plans, and it doesn't adequately address the real health care need faced by seniors. The question remaining at this point is whether Congress will admit its mistake and remedy the situation.

I've remained hopeful all along that we could fix this legislation, as I think few people would deny that the program is well-intentioned. The problem is that we took what was a good idea—put forth by a constituent of mine, Dr. Otis Bowen—and came up with a piece of legislation that went far beyond our original intent; to provide seniors with sound protection from the high costs of acute, catastrophic illness. Instead, as Congress is often prone to do, we produced a massive health insurance package that seniors consider of dubious value.

Unfortunately, it is becoming apparent that we are no longer talking about what was originally a $30 billion program, as recent cost estimates put out by the Congressional Budget Office and the Department of Health and Human Services indicate that the actual costs will be much higher. CBO told Congress last year the cost of the overall program would be about $30 billion over 5 years. Now they are saying the cost could top $45 billion. HCFA goes so far as to estimate the 5-year cost at $55 billion. This is clearly way out of control.

If these figures are indeed true, we have clearly overstepped what we originally set out to accomplish. Added to this is the fact that seniors have clamored all along for help in the area of long-term custodial care which is clearly a valid concern given the fact that a nursing home stay costs $25,000 a year or more.

I believe that reform of the catastrophic coverage law should embrace the need for basic, low-cost Medicare coverage against the high costs of hospital and doctor-related expenses. As I stated, the premise is a good idea. But let's act to protect older Americans and relieve the burden, not add to it. The point of this coverage is to provide seniors with peace of mind, and to do so at a reasonable and fair cost.

Unfortunately, it seems we are now faced with a choice of either repealing the act, approving the Stark-Waxman plan, or accepting the reform proposal put forth by the Ways and Means Committee. As I see it, what Ways and Means did neither improves the program or alleviates the concerns that seniors have. The focal point of the outcry, the surtax, remains in place, albeit scaled back to a small degree, and what's worse, in an attempt to lower the tax bite on one segment of the senior population, the Ways and Means proposal would shift the added financial burden on low and middle-income seniors. Simply put, we would provide a small measure of relief to 5.6 million beneficiaries at the expense of over 12 million others.

Stark-Waxman eliminates the surtax and most of the core catastrophic benefits as well, retaining the most costly and perhaps least predictable benefit in the entire program, prescription drug coverage. We're not quite sure how much this benefit will cost when it is fully implemented. Originally thought to cost about $5.7 billion, recent CBO estimates put the figure closer to $12 billion.

This is not my idea of reform, and we would be kidding ourselves if we truly expected seniors to accept either of these proposals. We will undoubtedly be faced with trying to fix the program again next year. If Congress is unable to get its act together and provide real improvement to the Medicare Program—scale the benefits back and lower the costs for all senior citizens—then a vote for the Donnelly-Archer amendment for repeal is the only responsible choice we have.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment proposed by the chairman of the Ways and Means Subcommittee on Health.

I must say honestly that I am less than enthusiastic about the Stark-Gradison-Waxman proposal, and I think the majority of us who will vote in favor of it would agree that this alternative is not our first choice. However, Mr. Chairman, it does preserve some important benefits in the current law, and more importantly it keeps the effort to revise and correct the law alive so that we can work out a better solution in conference.

I do not like the fact that this amendment would take us $3 billion in the hole, but even that deficit is less than the cost of repealing the law outright. I intend to support the amendment to be offered by the chairman of the Budget Committee to eliminate the exemption from the Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction law and keep this cost on budget. The cost of revising or repealing catastrophic coverage is something conferees on this bill will have to wrestle with.

For all its flaws, Mr. Chairman, this amendment should be adopted because it will provide the House with a foundation from which we can join the other body in continuing to develop a balance and fair plan to revise the current catastrophic coverage law. If we fail to take advantage of this opportunity, I believe it will be a very long time before we have another chance to provide this important protection for the elderly.

I urge my colleagues to vote for the Stark-Gradison-Waxman amendment and join with us in continuing to work to improve the current law and maintain our commitment to the elderly.

Ms. LONG. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the Catastrophic Care Program, but in strong opposition to the catastrophic surtax. I believe this tax on senior citizens is not fair, and I support reducing the Medicare premium for catastrophic coverage. Instead of requiring beneficiaries to be solely responsible for covering the costs of the additional benefits, we should be finding cost savings in other areas of the Federal budget.

The Catastrophic Care Program provides critical protection to senior citizens faced with the economic devastation of a catastrophic illness. As we in Congress make spending decisions, preventing the impoverishment of our senior citizens should be one of our first considerations. This is not an endeavor to be shouldered by senior citizens alone. In the best American tradition, we need to all lend a hand in supporting catastrophic care for our elderly.

Of the alternative proposals to amend the Catastrophic Care Program, I do not support repealing the Catastrophic Care Program nor do I support shifting the cost of the program to those least able to pay: Low-income senior citizens, the very people who are struggling to stay out of poverty.

The second alternative available today is the Stark-Gradison-Waxman amendment. Under the provisions of this proposal some benefits would be cut while the surtax would be eliminated. However many important benefits such as the provisions covering the cost of prescription drugs, home health care services, respite care and expanded hospice care would be retained. In addition, the spousal impoverishment protection for nursing home Medicaid patients, as well as the Medicaid buy in to Medicare for seniors below the Federal poverty level, would be kept.

While I believe that we should be voting to keep the benefits of the Catastrophic Care Program while reducing the surtax on senior citizens, today we have no such choice. I support the Stark-Gradison-Waxman amendment to enact equity and protection for our senior citizens.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, today I will vote to repeal the unfair and onerous surtax provisions of the Medicare Catastrophic Coverage Act.

Mr. Chairman, constituents in my district overwhelmingly disapprove of this tax. It unjustly overburdens senior citizens, many of whom are on a fixed income. I am most pleased to have this opportunity to vote to repeal the catastrophic surtax.

Lest there be any misunderstanding among our colleagues, Mr. Chairman, it is important to note that both amendments presented to the House today—the Donnelly and the Stark amendments—will provide us with the opportunity to repeal the tax. In fact, the surtax repeal provisions are identical.

I will vote for the Stark surtax repeal.

After careful consideration, I have concluded that the Stark approach, which eliminates the surtax but preserves some modest health care benefits, is superior to the Donnelly alternative. The Stark amendment is the prudent and balanced way to eliminate the tax problem while preserving some relatively inexpensive health care benefits.

Mr. Chairman, less than a year ago, Congress committed itself to provide assistance to the millions who had no health care coverage and to the hundreds of thousands more who were so ill that they were forced to deplete all their savings, sell their homes, and in some extreme cases actually divorce their spouse for no other reason except to qualify for needed health care. For some, divorce was seen as a way of protecting the other from impoverishment.

Our health care programs should not be constructed in such a way so as to impose such hardship and emotional trauma on our seniors. Regardless of the outcome today—I believe Congress should revisit the elderly health care issue and come up with a fair and humane system. The Stark amendment in a modest way seeks to provide some health care benefits for seniors and at the same time repeals the surtax which unnecessarily singled out and burdened our elderly population.

The Stark amendment continues the commitment to these seniors and at the same time repeals the surtax which unnecessarily burdened our elderly population.

Mr. Chairman, I will vote for the Stark amendment because it:

First. Repeals the surtax;

Second. Returns all estimated taxes paid for calendar year 1989;

Third. Preserves the prescription drug benefit expected to aid over 6 million seniors;

Fourth. Protects the biennial mammography screening program projected to save the lives of more than 4,000 women a year;

Fifth. Keeps the proposed expansion of home health care coverage for beneficiaries who are attempting to recuperate at home but still need special medical attention;

Sixth. Allow expanded respite-care services for chronically dependent homebound beneficiaries;

Seventh. Maintains Medicare buy-in provisions for those seniors caught between Medicaid and Medicare regulations and left with no coverage at all; and Eighth. Maintains spousal impoverishment provisions that enable seniors to qualify for nursing homes without forcing their spouses to sell their homes or obtain a paper divorce.

Mr. Chairman, the important health care provisions attached to the Stark surtax repeal protect both preventive and chronic health care assistance now offered to our senior citizens. These benefits should not be forsaken in the justified ground swell of support for repeal of the surtax.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the Donnelly amendment before us today will not only repeal the surtax, but it will destroy all that we have gained in health care coverage. To do that would be a mistake.

In casting our votes today, we must remember that it is the surtax which needs to be repealed—not each and every one of the benefits. This is one of those rare instances when we can have the best of both—repeal of an unfair tax, but retention of some benefits.

Mr. Chairman, too many seniors have come to know—firsthand—the fear and tragic realities of catastrophic illnesses. And it is exactly these people who can least afford to pay a surtax for health care protection.

I will vote for the Stark amendment. It will repeal the surtax and it will relieve our seniors from this unfair, financial burden. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, the Stark amendment will protect some of the more humane health care benefits established for those who may some day face a catastrophic medical tragedy.

□ 1551

The Clerk announced the following pair:

On this vote:

Mr. Wise for, with Mr. Thomas of Wyoming against.

Messrs. KANJORSKI, FOGLIETTA, McDADE, and GRAY changed their vote from "aye" to "no."

Messrs. MATSUI, MRAZEK, and LEWIS of Georgia changed their vote from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. THOMAS of Wyoming. Mr. Chairman, I was here for the vote on the Stark amendment. I put my card in the machine. I thought I had voted.

I would have voted "no." It did not register.

The CHAIRMAN. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 8 printed in section 2 of House Report 101-261.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. PANETTA

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PANETTA: In part F of subtitle B of title X, as previously amended, strike the last subpart ("Provisions Relating to Budget Waivers").

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] will be recognized for 15 minutes, and a Member opposed will be recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be recognized in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DONNELLY] will be recognized for 15 minutes in opposition to the amendment.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA].

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7½ minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL], and I ask unanimous consent that he be allowed to control the time and be allowed to yield further.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, my amendment prevents the consequences of repeal from being waived from Gramm-Rudman. The amendment that was adopted on repeal has an impact on the fiscal year 1990 budget, some $4 billion to $5 billion depending on whose numbers we use. That is largely the result of anticipated premium payments that would be expected in fiscal year 1990.

The issue, therefore, at this point is not whether or not there will be repeal. Obviously a majority of the House has voted for that. But the issue now is whether the deficit increase caused by repeal in fiscal year 1990 will be waived from the Gramm-Rudman law.

Mr. Chairman, I would urge the Members not to waive the Gramm-Rudman law for three very important reasons. First of all, Gramm-Rudman, for all of its problems and imperfections, and we all know them well, is still a very important element in the budget process. It is the very law that drives whatever deficit reduction we can achieve. It is the basis for scorekeeping in terms of whether or not we can avoid across-the-board cuts.

I recognize continually that there are efforts to try to bypass it either through asset sales or scorekeeping gimmicks or time shifts or one thing or another. The reality is that Congress has never waived the law with regard to a particular bill.

The waiver here sets a very dangerous precedent, and it is not fair to all of those other committees, particularly the Committee on Appropriations that has to abide by all of the targets established by that law. The fact is that once we provide this kind of waiver, where do we draw the line? What about funds for education, what about funds for drugs, for health care, for space, for defense? Where do we draw the line in terms of whether or not we permit a waiver?

In addition, we ask committees time and time again to abide by the budget resolution and they do, only to come back and permit a waiver. Does that not undercut the very budget process that we try to support?

Last, and I think very important, the fact is that it is not necessary to waive Gramm-Rudman in this instance. The indication is that we have in reconciliation now about $16.6 billion compared to the instruction of $13.4 billion. So we have about $3.2 billion in addition.

□ 1600

In addition to that, the conferees obviously can provide additional room, depending on what we do with regard to capital gains, or Medicaid, or score keeping, or other areas that are included in reconciliation.

Third, I read in part from a letter from the Director of the Office of Management and Budget to me which states:

> Further, in this particular case there does not now appear to be a need to grant a Gramm-Rudman-Hollings exemption for the purpose of avoiding sequester.

The fact is that we feel the room is present in reconciliation to accommodate the costs of repeal, and all we asked for is the opportunity to try to accommodate repeal in reconciliation without waiving the Gramm-Rudman law.

So for all of these reasons, budget discipline, the fact that it would set a bad precedent in terms of the House and the other committees, and the fact that we have the room here to try to at least attempt to accommodate the costs, for all of those reasons I would urge support of this amendment.

Mr. HUCKABY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PANETTA. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. HUCKABY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to commend the gentleman from California for his efforts. Gramm-Rudman, with all its fallacies, has forced fiscal responsibility on this House, and I would hate to see us throw the towel in at this late hour.

Mr. PANETTA. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, let me make this observation: Only in this city would the repeal of a $47 billion program be charged against the author of the program as increasing the deficit. I understand how that happens because I happen to understand the bizarre way that we do accounting under our system. But I think the American people have a difficult time understanding that the deficit is going to increase when we eliminate a $47 billion major domestic program.

Let me just say I have spoken with the chairman of the Budget Committee and it is my understanding that he has had an opportunity to discuss this technical situation with the Director of the Office of Management and Budget. At this point in time I have no objection, even though technically I am opposed, to the Panetta amendment being adopted, the Gramm-Rudman waiver being stricken from the Donnelly-Archer-Russo amendment, and to giving the parties involved the opportunity to see if this can be worked out without suspending the law.

If it cannot, clearly when this legislation comes back to conference, then the House at that time would have to address the issue.

If I could ask the chairman of the Budget Committee are my statements correct?

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONNELLY. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PANETTA. The gentleman is correct. I think what we are asking for is the opportunity to try to accommodate this within the confines of reconciliation. Obviously if we cannot, the gentleman always retains the opportunity to come back and fight for a waiver.

Mr. DONNELLY. So I have no objection to the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Chairman, I would make the same statement for one of the coconspirators of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DONNELLY] I refer to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER] who feels the same way about our amendment.

This is a case of the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] and myself being the same whether the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. STARK] was going to be accepted or whether the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DONNELLY] was going to be accepted. The gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] supported the Stark amendment and I supported the Donnelly amendment. Had either prevailed, we would have had this amendment, and we hope in that case the gentleman from California [Mr. STARK] would have accepted this, as has the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DONNELLY] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER].

Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARMEY].

Mr. ARMEY. I thank the gentleman from Minnesota for yielding time to me.

I rise in support of the amendment by the chairman of the Budget Committee and the ranking member, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL]. I want to take a moment to congratulate them both for their leadership on that committee.

Before I speak on the amendment let me just mention we have just saved ourselves and the Nation from what had been earlier an awful error by repealing the catastrophic medical bill. Though we clearly have problems with medical care that must be readjusted as we take up that task again, let me commend to the body a study I have just discovered entitled "Critical Issues: A National Health System for America," edited by Stuart Butler, produced by the Heritage Foundation. Perhaps if we get this we can begin anew.

But now to the point of this amendment: I was one who voted for Gramm-Rudman in the first place. Why did I do that? Because we as a body are able to use the American citizens' money in three ways: we can tax it, we can borrow it, or we can spend it.

Historically we have done all three of these with very little constraint and very little incentive for rationality and rationing and selecting among scarce options in our decisionmaking process.

We have tended to want to do all we could of everything we could. Gramm-Rudman introduced a constraint in this process. It is a limit on borrowing. This is not the constraint I would have chosen. I would have chosen a constraint that defined a limit on spending and a limit on taxing. But the one constraint we have that exists in a hard number in the law is Gramm-Rudman. The existence of that constraint defined as it is in the law says we must go to a more rational, a more thoughtful, a more thorough, a more integrated decisionmaking process.

If we waive that constraint, we return to the kind of business as usual, lackadaisical, careless decisionmaking system that allowed us to get into this terrible problem of deficit spending in the first place.

We must preserve the integrity of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings and that constraint.

As the chairman says, it is not necessary even at this point for this purpose with respect to the next fiscal year to waive the constraint. But to do so would give us a terribly unholy precedent.

What are the alternatives? Accept the constraint, accept the challenge. Look at the possibility of deferring the reauthorization, the new authorization of spending as we have in this bill. Look for previous spending programs that can be revised and improved upon. But look at the larger option and save the integrity of Gramm-Rudman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would inform Members that the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] has 3½ minutes remaining; the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] also has 3½ minutes remaining, and the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] has the right to close debate.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI], chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Panetta amendment. There is no compelling reason why this House should waive Gramm-Rudman.

What is particularly disheartening, is that the House has instructed its committees to live under an entirely different set of rules. The Ways and Means Committee struggled to achieve the deficit reduction target of $8 billion. If a member had a revenue loser, then it had to be paid for. Yet, the House has adopted a different set of rules for itself. The House waived the budget neutrality principle as if it did not exist. Why should a committee strive to achieve its reconciliation instruction again?

When the catastrophic health insurance bill was enacted last year, it contained a sound conservative financing principle that collected revenues before outlays were committed. Congress wanted to insure that moneys were always available to cover the costs of the program and that the trust funds never went bankrupt. Private insurance companies follow that same principle. This decision was not made to have the elderly help meet the 1990 deficit target, as some have alleged.

If Gramm-Rudman is waived today, why shouldn't Gramm-Rudman be waived every time there is a politically appealing reason to do so? We waived Gramm-Rudman to bail out the savings and loan industry. Why not waive Gramm-Rudman to fight the drug war or deal with the loss of funds in the FHA, or provide funds for disaster relief, or go to Mars?

Mr. Chairman, I say to my colleagues you cannot be selective about Gramm-Rudman. Once it is waived for catastrophic health, all budget discipline in this Congress will be completely eroded. The proponents of this misguided waiver are simply saying, Let's borrow more money. Let's borrow more money so that our children and grandchildern can pay the bill. Let's borrow more money so that we can become more dependent on foreign investment. Let's borrow more money because we don't have the courage to cut spending or raise taxes.

At the end of this month the public debt limit will have to be raised again. All of you who vote against the Panetta amendment will bear the responsibility to carry that increase in the public debt limit.

If you are against borrowing more money, if you are against shifting budgetary costs to your children and the younger generation, I strongly urge you to support the Panetta amendment.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

□ 1610

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the amendment to strike the waiver of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings contained in the catastrophic health amendment just agreed to by the House.

Under the waiver in the catastrophic amendment, changes in outlays and revenues shall not be included when calculating whether the budget deficit exceeds the $100 billion maximum deficit amount allowed under Gramm-Rudman for fiscal year 1990. Instead, unless we pass the Panetta-Frenzel amendment, the Gramm-Rudman calculations are supposed to pretend that the original catastrophic program is still in place.

Under the original catastrophic program, revenues in fiscal year 1990 were estimated to exceed premiums by a substantial amount. Under the amendment adopted a few moments ago by the House, the cushion is entirely wiped out and the program runs a deficit in fiscal year 1990. Therefore, compared to present law, the amendment increases the fiscal year 1990 deficit by several billion dollars.

The administration strongly supports this amendment. The following letter from OMB Director Darman makes that very clear. He also believes that we can overcome the costs of repeal without a waiver. Chairman PANETTA and I wrote a similar but less optimistic letter on the amendment yesterday. Both letters follow.

As the reconciliation bill has already made painfully evident, Gramm-Rudman and Budget Act procedures have been bent badly out of shape to accommodate congressional spending desires. There are billions of dollars of year-to-year timing shifts, several instances where the bill directs CBO and OMB to change customary scoring practices, and dozens of extraneous provisions including several which create costly new entitlements.

This amendment to strike the GRH waiver offers us a chance to support what discipline is left in the budget process. There are many other urgent or politically popular spending needs lined up behind the catastrophic program. If GRH is waived for catastrophic, how will we be able to deny waivers to next year's batch of crises? First it was S&L's; then it is catastrophic Medicare; tomorrow it will be the war on drugs.

The sequester calculations show that the deficit is already more than $16 billion over the GRH target. Denying this waiver will make the job of avoiding a sequester even more difficult. However, with effort it can be done sooner or later—and most probably later.

This is the vote that separates the deficit reducers from the cake-eaters. The deficit reducers will vote in support of the budget process, in support of Gramm-Rudman, and in support of smaller Federal deficits. The cake-eaters will talk about deficits and vote to punch another hole in Gramm-Rudman.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT, OFFICE OF MANAGEMENT AND BUDGET,
Washington, DC, October 4, 1989.

Hon. BILL FRENZEL,
House Budget Committee, U.S. House of Representatives.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN FRENZEL: We understand that the House has just voted to support an amendment to the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act that would exempt the Catastrophic Health Insurance (CHI) program from scoring under the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings (G-R-H) legislation. The Administration strongly opposes this exemption from G-R-H scoring. We have opposed exemptions to G-R-H consistently in the past. The most recent case was the exemption proposed, but not enacted, as part of the financial institutions reform and recovery legislation. We believe that the fiscal discipline imposed by the G-R-H legislation—admittedly imperfect, but nonetheless important—would be substantially weakened if exemptions to it were allowed.

Further, in this particular case there does not now appear to be a need to grant a G-R-H exemption for the purpose of avoiding sequester. As we approach the crucial October 15 deadline, there are several new elements in the calculus that I would call to your attention. The DOD paydate shift, which had been a subject of dispute, has now been overtaken by events. It has already taken place. In addition, the House includes Medicare scoring language, which we did not support but which is now moving forward in the reconciliation bill. If enacted, this language would direct us to score certain shifts in Medicare payments between fiscal years that we would otherwise be prohibited from scoring. And if the emerging House reconciliation bill, including the language dealing with the scoring of Medicare payment shifts, is enacted, our current estimate of the G-R-H baseline deficit would be reduced by approximately $12 billion. This would then yield a revised G-R-H deficit estimate that could accommodate the CHI roll-back without triggering sequester.

Let me be clear: The CHI amendment would unquestionably have a serious adverse effect on the actual fiscal year 1990 deficit. But in view of the scoring issues I've noted, it is now the case that without the undesirable G-R-H exemption the CHI amendment would not trigger a sequester if the House version of the reconciliation bill, including the Medicare payment shift language, were passed by the Congress and signed by the President before October 16th.

I write this letter in response to your inquiry on this matter. Nothing in this letter should be construed as an expression of support for or opposition to one CHI substantive amendment as opposed to another. The sole purpose of this letter is to report on the relationship of scoring issues to a possible sequester—as currently estimated.

With best regards,

RICHARD G. DARMAN.

U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON THE BUDGET,
Washington, DC, October 2, 1989.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: Tomorrow, as part of the debate on reconciliation, the House will be voting on two amendments to the Ways and Means catastrophic reform legislation. Both the Stark and Donnelly amendments contain provisions which waive the Gramm-Rudman law by excluding the fiscal year 1990 deficit increase caused by the amendments from the Gramm-Rudman deficit and sequestration calculations. CBO estimates that if enacted the Stark amendment will increase the deficit by $3.2 billion, and that the Donnelly amendment will add $4.0 billion to the fiscal year 1990 deficit.

Should the Stark or Donnelly amendments be adopted, we intend to offer an amendment to strike the Gramm-Rudman waiver included in each proposal.

While the Gramm-Rudman law is imperfect, it is an important element of the congressional budget process. It provides a budgetary discipline that has encouraged Congress and the President to agree on substantial deficit reduction in recent years. To exempt the deficit impact of the Stark or Donnelly amendments from Gramm-Rudman sequestration calculations is bad precedent and threatens to undermine budget discipline.

Over the course of this year there have been numerous attempts—some successful, some not—to use asset sales, changes in scorekeeping conventions and timing shifts to evade the Gramm-Rudman restrictions. On the other hand, this year the House has generally met its budget resolution targets on appropriation bills. In addition, the reconciliation package we are currently considering actually surpasses the reconciliation targets agreed to in the fiscal year 1990 budget resolution. We are within reach of the $110 billion deficit required to avoid sequestration under Gramm-Rudman.

Next year we will certainly face additional demands on the budget because of defense, education, health, anti-drug, space, transportation and child care needs, to name a few. These pressures make it even more important that we preserve the basic discipline of Gramm-Rudman to ensure that we continue on a path towards a balanced budget. A vote for our amendment will help preserve the Gramm-Rudman discipline.

Frankly, there is a down-side to our amendment. Members should be aware that without the Gramm-Rudman waiver in catastrophic reform/repeal the total deficit reduction required to reach the $110 billion target set by Gramm-Rudman for fiscal year 1990 could be $3 billion to $4 billion higher.

OMB has calculated that up to $13 billion in reconciliation savings must be achieved to avoid sequestration. With the additional $443 billion in outlays resulting from the $1.1 billion in budget authority for disaster assistance funding agreed to last week, the amount needed to avoid sequestration will clearly rise. Currently the reconciliation bill contains over $16 billion in deficit reduction. While there is a good chance that the Stark or Donnelly amendments can be accommodated without triggering sequestration, there is no guarantee that the conference agreement on reconciliation will result in enough deficit reduction to meet the $110 billion target. Obviously accounting honestly for catastrophic reform/repeal will increase pressure on the reconciliation bill and the reconciliation conference to achieve enough deficit reduction to avoid sequestration.

We firmly believe that avoiding the bad precedent of waiving Gramm-Rudman outweighs the increase deficit reduction burden that may be placed on the reconciliation bill. We do not believe we should pretend we are closer to the Gramm-Rudman target than we are. If necessary, we should pay for catastrophic repeal/reform.

We urge Members to support our motion to strike the Gramm-Rudman waiver contained in the Donnelly/Stark amendments.

Sincerely,

BILL FRENZEL,
Ranking Republican.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back my remaining time.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VANDER JAGT. Mr. Chairman, a question has been raised concerning the effective date provision of section 11202 of H.R. 3299, a provision of the budget reconciliation legislation within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Ways and Means. Specifically, the question relates to the effective date provision of changes affecting certain original issue discount obligations. As I understand it, that effective date provides a grandfather in those situations where there was a written binding contract in effect on July 10, 1989, and at all times thereafter. I believe I am correct in concluding that an assignability feature in such a contract would not cause the grandfather rule to be inapplicable. Specifically, if such a contract was assigned to another party, I believe that party could then enjoy the benefits of the grandfather rule by being able to issue instruments that would not be subject to the new limitations contained in section 11202. I would hope that the conference report language on this provision will make this point clear and I will ask that the professional tax staffs review this issue to make sure this clarification raises no technical problems inconsistent with the objective of the grandfather rule.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the Donnelly-Archer amendment just considered and I ask unanimous consent to insert technical descriptions of the Donnelly-Archer amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I seek recognition in order to make a point of order against section 7001 of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against section 7001 on the grounds that it is a tax measure which is in violation of paragraph B, clause 5 of House Rule 21.

Mr. Chairman, section 7001 of the bill imposes a fee of $20 per passenger on vessels engaged in U.S. cruise trade or which offer offshore gambling. The proceeds of this fee are to be deposited in both the harbor maintenance trust fund and Treasury's general fund.

The supporters of this provision argue that a significant portion of the Coast Guard's costs of providing safety and navigational assistance are attributable to these vessels.

Mr. Chairman, charging one class of beneficiaries of governmental activity does not transform a tax into a user fee. The maintenance of our harbors and the safety of our waters are concerns to all of us and we are all the beneficiaries of these activities.

Mr. Chairman, the Federal Government has already decided to raise revenue in a manner which is related to these activities through the harbor maintenance tax. However, such a provision of law is clearly a tax and not a user fee.

User fees are paid by persons whose voluntary request for a government service causes the government to incur costs which are defrayed through the payment of a fee. Mandatory assessments to finance the costs of government are taxes. This provision is clearly a tax and I urge the Chair to sustain my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MAVROULES). Does any other Member desire to be heard on the point of order?

If not, the Chair will respond to the point of order of the gentleman from Illinois, with the committee's indulgence, by first making a general statement.

The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order against section 7001 of H.R. 3299 that it constitutes a tax measure contained in a bill reported by a committee—the Committee on the Budget—not having jurisdiction to report tax and tariff measures in violation of clause 5(b) of rule 21. As indicated on page 615 of the House rules and manual, the Chair did on October 24, 1985, sustain points of order against provisions in a reconciliation bill reported from the Committee on the Budget which were tax measures contained in recommendations from the Committee on Education and Labor and from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries which clearly involved the application of tax provisions within the Internal Revenue Code.

However, the question which the Chair is called upon to answer in this instance is the application of clause 5(b), rule 21 to a provision recommended by a committee of the House and contained in the bill reported from the Budget Committee which does not directly amend the Internal Revenue Code, but rather which is drafted to take on the characteristics of a "fee" charged against a particular class of users availing itself of a certain service or engaged in an activity in order to generate revenue in support of Government service or at least to be credited as an offsetting or proprietary receipt against expenditures incurred by a governmental entity providing a service.

At the outset it should be made clear that clause 5(b) of rule 21 does not preclude the inclusion of "revenue" measures in bills reported by committees not having jurisdiction over revenues, but rather the inclusion of "tax and tariff measures" in such bills. Decisions by the House, for example, that a certain provision originating in the Senate constitutes a "revenue measure" which must under section 7 of article I of the Constitution originate in the House, and referrals of "revenue measures" by the Speaker to the Committee on Ways and Means under clause 1(v), rule 10, are not necessarily precedents which the Chair must follow in determining whether a provision is a "tax or tariff." It is clear that certain assessments, fees, and charges, while constituting "revenue" measures, are not necessarily taxes or tariffs as those terms are properly understood in law and in accepted budget concepts. The Chair has no direct precedent upon which to rely since the incorporation of clause 5(b), rule 21 into the rules of the House in the 98th Congress in January 3, 1983. However, the Chair would note that when the rules change was presented to the House on that date then majority leader Wright explained that:

> The rules would allow a new point of order to be raised at any time against a provision in any bill or Senate Amendment which contains a tax or tariff measure, unless that measure was reported by the Committee on Ways and Means, the committee which has proper jurisdiction over those matters.

In establishing legitimate parameters by which to measure legislative proposals as taxes or tariffs under clause 5(b) of rule 21, the Chair has examined relevant case law as well as budget concepts, and committee counsel's briefs containing definitions of user fees and taxes which are generally accepted in the budget of the United States and by the Congressional Budget Office. When distinguishing between user fees and taxes, the U.S. Supreme Court has treated with deference the classification of the change as a fee. Ultimately, however, the Court would go beyond the bare face of the legislative measure or the legislative label to consider the true nature of the charge.

Several insightful Supreme Court cases make the following distinctions between fees and taxes. Fees imposed by a governmental entity tend to fall into two categories. The first category contains user fees that are incident to a voluntary act by a person to whom a service is provided or a benefit is bestowed by the government that is not shared by all members of society. The second category contains regulatory fees, such as licensing and inspection fees, which are founded on governmental police power to regulate particular businesses or activities.

User fees and regulatory fees share common traits that distinguish them from taxes: Fees are paid by choice in that the party paying the fee has the option of not utilizing the governmental service or avoiding the regulatory activity and thereby avoiding the charge. Furthermore, fees are collected merely to compensate the governmental entity for providing the service, or, in the case of regulating activities, for the expenses incurred in regulating the activity, such as processing the license application and providing the requisite inspection, and are legitimate to the extent that the services for which they are imposed are sufficiently particularized as to justify distribution of the costs among a limited group—the "users"—of the services rather than the general public.

On the other hand, taxes are collected for the purpose of raising revenue to offset the general costs of government as well as to offset the costs of services provided to a more generalized group of beneficiaries.

In response to the specific point of order, the gentleman from Illinois makes a point of order against section 7001 of H.R. 3299 on the ground that it carries a tax measure in a bill reported by a committee—the Committee on the Budget—not having jurisdiction to report tax measures, in violation of clause 5(b), rule 21.

Section 7001 of the bill would impose a fee of $20 per passenger on certain cruise vessel passages in U.S. ports. Revenues gathered by the fee would be deposited as offsetting receipts of the harbor maintenance trust fund established by the Internal Revenue Code, and otherwise funded by excise taxes, and as proprietary receipts of the Coast Guard.

The report on the bill notes that "much of the funding required by the Coast Guard for port safety and security and antiterrorism plus a substantial percentage of the amounts necessary for navigational assistance (including channel marking and maintenance) is attributable to" such cruise vessel passages.

The point of order asserts that the cruise ships against which the fee would be assessed would not merely be providing recompense for the government activity that they make necessary by their passages. Rather, the revenues gathered by such fees would be applied to more general government activity of broader benefit. In the first place, the revenues are being deposited in accounts that relate to government activities ranging far beyond port security and navigation assistance programs. In the second place, even those two government activities benefit classes far beyond cruise ships.

The Chair believes that such a provision gathering revenue to finance such general government activity is properly characterized as a tax within the meaning of clause 5(b), rule 21. Accordingly, the point of order is sustained against section 7001.

POINT OF ORDER

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other points of order?

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against section 7002 of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against section 7002 on the grounds that it is a tax measure which is in violation of paragraph B, clause 5 of House rule 21.

Mr. Chairman, section 7002 of the bill imposes an annual fee of $1 per acre on the holder of Outer Continental Shelf leases. This fee has been designed to offset the costs of ocean-related environmental research, assessment, and protection programs.

Mr. Chairman, we all benefit from environmentally sound activities relating to Outer Continental Shelf drilling. The beneficiaries go far beyond the leaseholders who are being assessed this fee.

Mr. Chairman, the provision meets the classic definition of a tax—namely, revenues raised to fund a public purpose. There is nothing about the provision which would justify it as a user fee. Most importantly the payer of the fee has not caused the Government to provide him some service or thing of value. Without such a nexus, this fee is unmistakably a tax.

I urge the Chair to sustain my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MAVROULES). Are there any other Members who wish to be heard on this point of order?

If not, the Chair is prepared to rule. The gentleman from Illinois makes a point of order against section 7002 of H.R. 3299 on the ground that it carries a tax measure in a bill reported by a committee—the Committee on the Budget—not having jurisdiction to report tax measures, in violation of clause 5(b), rule XXI.

Section 7002 of the bill would impose an ocean protection fee of $1 per acre on oil and gas leaseholdings on the Outer Continental Shelf. Unlike the traditional rents collected on OCS leases, which are deposited either as undistributed miscellaneous receipts in the Treasury or into the Land and Water Conservation Fund, the revenues gathered by the ocean protection fee would be deposited as offsetting receipts of the Department of the Interior and the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. As described in the report on the bill, such revenue would be specifically designed to offset some of the costs of various ocean protection programs of those two agencies.

The essence of the point of order is that OCS leaseholders would not merely be providing recompense for some Government activity that they occasion. Rather, the revenues gathered by such fees would be applied to more general Government activity of broader benefit.

The report on the bill lists some of the ocean protection programs that would be partially financed by the new, per-acre fee. Two examples are the Coastal Zone Management Program and Fisheries Management Program. Although such programs bear logic relationship to OCS oil and gas leasing activities, they are among the general functions of government. That the per-acre fee might attempt to pro rate the relationship of such programs to OCS oil and gas leasing activities does not alter the character of the program as general functions of government.

The Chair believes that a provision raising revenue to finance general Government functioning is properly characterized as a tax within the meaning of clause 5(b), rule XXI. Accordingly, the point of order is sustained against section 7002.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against section 3156 of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against section 3156 on the grounds that it is a tax measure which is in violation of paragraph b, clause 5 of House rule 21.

Mr. Chairman, section 3156 of the bill provides that an employer who terminates a pension plan in a standard termination must pay a $200 per-participant fee to the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation [PBGC], the Federal insurance agency established to insure defined benefit pension plans against insolvency.

The authors of this provision argue that the charge is a deferred premium to reflect the fact that ongoing insurance premiums are too low. This catch-up fee, they argue, merely imposes on employers the true cost of the risk they imposed on the system before exiting.

This fee is in no way a user fee in return for ongoing insurance. When an employer makes a standard plan termination, the plan must be fully funded and assets used to purchase annunities. The plan benefits are no longer insured by the PBGC. The employer poses no further risk on the system, and receives no further protection from it.

By paying this one-time fee, employers would pay neither for ongoing risk nor for the past risk they imposed. Rather, they would pay a fee to finance the continuing risk imposed by the employers who remain in the system. This is a tax, an amount paid by a class of taxpayers for no benefit, past or future, but rather to finance a broader—and in this case, totally different—class of beneficiaries.

Mr. Chairman, this provision is clearly a tax and I urge the Chair to sustain my point of order.

□ 1630

The CHAIRMAN. Are there other Members who wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HAYES of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be heard on the point of order raised by my colleague, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman.

Mr. HAYES of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, section 3156 provides that single-employer pension plans terminating in a standard termination must pay a final premium of $200 per participant. This represents a deferred premium, not a tax.

Pension plans are covered under the termination insurance system established under title IV of ERISA and administered by the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation. The insurance program is funded entirely by premiums paid by covered plans, not by general revenues or taxes.

Each covered plan pays an annual per-participant premium. When ERISA was first enacted, this premium was set at $1. Over the years, the premium has been substantially increased, but has never adequately reflected the true cost of the insurance protection received by participants in defined benefits plans. Congress has deliberately kept the actual premium charged artificially low in order to encourage employers to continue their defined benefit plans.

The $200 termination premium, paid by the plan, is merely a continuation or extension of the premium to recapture a portion of this premium subsidy. Even at $200, the termination premium continues to be substantially less than the benefits the plan and its participants have received while covered under the insurance system.

Despite the fact that neither the annual premiums themselves nor this new termination premium are taxes, there is no dispute that setting of PBGC premiums is within the joint jurisdiction of the Committe on Education and Labor and the Committee on Ways and Means. This has been true since ERISA was enacted because the statute specifically provides for consideration of any resolution to raise premiums by both committees. In light of the past history regarding treatment of premium increases under title IV, we fully expect that members of both committees will be conferees on this provision.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that a statutory grant of joint jurisdiction transforms the premium paid by covered plans to fund the termination insurance program into a tax.

I urge you not to sustain the gentleman's point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there other Members who wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. FRENZEL. May I be heard further, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, the argumentation in support of this fee as a premium would make more sense if it were absorbing any risk or buying any protection. It obviously does not, for those who are terminating their plan, and it buys protection for others. It, therefore, has to be considered a tax and not a premium.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAYES] wish to be heard further on the point of order?

Mr. HAYES of Illinois. No. Mr. Chairman, I have completed my presentation.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MAVROULES). The Chair is prepared to rule.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] makes a point of order against section 3156 of H.R. 3299 on the ground that it carries a tax measure in a bill reported by a committee—the Committee on the Budget—not having jurisdiction to report tax measures, in violation of clause 5(b), rule XXI.

Section 3156 of the bill would impose certain fees incident to terminations of employee benefit plans under the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 [ERISA]. Funds so received would be deposited as offsetting receipts in the applicable fund established under section 4005 of ERISA. Amounts in that fund are available for expediture for various purposes specified in section 4005(b)(2).

The basis of the point of order is that the payers of the fees in question would not merely be providing recompense for some Government activity that they occasion. Rather, the revenues gathered by such fees would be applied to more general Government activity of broader benefit. As was stated in argument on the point of order, a terminating plan poses no further risk on the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation; thus the only risk financed by the termination fee would be the continuing risk posed by the plans remaining in the system.

The Chair believes that such a provision is properly characterized as a tax within the meaning of clause 5(B), rule XXI. Accordingly, the point of order is sustained against section 3156 and that section is stricken from the bill.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I have a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against section 3131(B) on the grounds that it is a tax measure which is in violation of paragraph b, clause 5 of House rule 21.

Mr. Chairman, section 3131 of the bill exempts multiemployer pension plans from the full funding limits of the Internal Revenue Code section 412(c)(7).

This provision directly amends the Internal Revenue Code to allow the deductibility of contributions to a multiemployer pension plan in excess of the full funding limit. I would argue that this provision which provides a specific exemption from the full funding limitations for multiemployer pension plans is a tax because a deduction would be allowed for amounts which are not deductible under current law.

I urge the Chair to sustain my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there other Members who wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HAYES of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be heard on the point of order raised by my colleague, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. HAYES of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, section 3131(b) contains parallel amendments to both title I of ERISA and the Internal Revenue Code relating to the full funding limitation governing pension plans. The gentleman from Minnesota is seeking to strike the portion of that subsection that amends the Code on the ground that this is a tax and within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. Chairman, as we know, ERISA is a unique statute. Many of its requirements are implemented through parallel provisions in both title I and the Internal Revenue Code. The provision at issue here is a provision that has been subject to this parallel treatment under ERISA since its enactment. When the section was amended most recently in the 1987 Budget Reconciliation Act, parallel changes were made and members of both the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Education and Labor were appointed conferees on those provisions.

Over the years, the Committee on Education and Labor has strenuously objected to changes in ERISA that were accomplished solely by amendments to the Internal Revenue Code, since failure to amend the corresponding section in title I leaves employers and pension plans with conflicting or inconsistent rules. We have tried to act responsibly by making both sets of changes with respect to this provision. We fully expect that members of both committees will be appointed conferees on this provision.

If the point of order against the Code amendment is sustained, the title I provision will still remain, thus the issue will still be a live one for conference. Of course, if the conferees move forward and adopt this provision, they will have to add the corresponding Code amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am sympathetic to my colleague's concern that other committees may be trying to usurp his jurisdiction. As you know, that happens to us all the time. However, this is not a case of usurping jurisdiction; this is a case of a good faith effort on our part to legislate responsibly and not play jurisdictional games.

I urge you not to sustain the gentleman's point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MAVROULES). Are there other Members who wish to be heard on the point of order?

If not, the Chair is prepared to rule.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] makes a point of order against section 3131(b)(1)(A) of H.R. 3299 on the ground that it carries a tax measure in a bill reported by a committee—the Committee on the Budget—not having jurisdiction to report tax measures, in violation of clause 5(b), rule XXI.

For the reasons stated by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL], the provision in section 3131(b)(1)(A) constitutes a tax in that it directly relates to deductibility under the Internal Revenue Code.

The point of order is sustained and section 3131(b)(1)(A) is stricken from the bill.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to reserve a point of order against section 3201, and I would intend to raise it tomorrow before final passage.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not necessary to reserve that point of order.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I thought I would give the House notice, including our distinguished chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thanks the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] having assumed the chair, Mr. MAVROULES, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 3299) to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 5 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for the fiscal year 1990, had come to no resolution thereon.

PROVIDING ASSISTANCE FOR FREE AND FAIR ELECTIONS IN NICARAGUA

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 256 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 256

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to consider in the House the bill (H.R. 3385) to provide assistance for free and fair elections in Nicaragua. All points of order against the bill and against its consideration are hereby waived. The amendments recommended by the Committee on Appropriations shall be considered as having been adopted. Debate on the bill shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations, or their designees. It shall be in order to consider the amendment printed in the report of the Committee on Rules accompanying this resolution, by and if offered by Representative Durbin of Illinois, or his designee, said amendment shall be debatable for not to exceed one hour, equally divided and controlled by the proponent and a Member opposed thereto, and said amendment shall not be subject to amendment. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, which may only be offered by Representative Michael of Illinois, or his designee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI). The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BONIOR] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield the customay 30 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. PASHAYAN], pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 256 provides for consideration of H.R. 3385, a bill which would provide assistance for free and fair elections in Nicaragua.

The rule provides for 1 hour of general debate to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill shall be considered in the House, and all points of order against the bill and against its consideration are waived.

Amendments recommended by the Committee on Appropriations, which specify the types of groups to receive these funds and require reports from the Agency for International Development to the appropriate committees of Congress, shall be considered as having been adopted.

The rule further makes in order an amendment by Mr. DURBIN or his designee, printed in the report accompanying this resolution. The amendment shall be debatable for 1 hour, equally divided and controlled by Representative DURBIN and a Member opposed. The Durbin amendment is not subject to amendment.

Finally, the rule provides for one motion to recommit for the minority leader, Mr. MICHEL, or his designee.

Mr. Speaker, during the last 6 months, events in Central America have accelerated at a heady pace. Many steps have been taken toward democracy, peace, and reconciliation in Nicaragua.

In April, the Nicaraguan Government instituted major electoral and media law reform. Studies by the United Nations, the Organization of American States, the Venezuelan Government, and the Hispanic Law Division of the Library of Congress have concluded that the Nicaraguan electoral laws are essentially democratic and within the mainstream of Western norms.

In early August, the Nicaraguan Government and 17 opposition parties signed a sweeping accord which met "95 percent" of their demands, according to one opposition leader.

Just a few days later, the five Presidents of Central America met in Tela, Honduras—on the second anniversary of the historic signing of the Esquipulas II peace agreement—and adopted a plan to disband the Contras by December 8, 1989.

In September, the opposition parties picked Violetta Chamorro, editor of La Prensa, to be their Presidential candidate. Throughout October, voter registration will occur, and on December 4 the electoral campaign will officially begin.

After so many years of war, the administration's cooperation in seeking a peaceful resolution in Nicaragua through diplomacy, and support for free and fair elections is welcome.

Today represents a victory for those of us who have advocated this strategy for such a very long time.

I know of no other country whose election will receive such intense scrutiny. The United Nations has agreed to send international observers to Nicaragua, the first time that body will monitor a sovereign nation's elections.

In contrast to monitoring efforts in countries such as the Philippines, El Salvador, and Panama, international efforts in Nicaragua will cover the entire campaign period, not just election day.

Similarly, the OAS has sent monitoring teams to Nicaragua. By election day on February 25, 1990, the United Nations and OAS will each have 160 observers on the ground in at least 80 locations.

In addition, former President Jimmy Carter will lead an international delegation of monitors comprised of former Presidents and Prime Ministers of Western Hemisphere countries.

These types of efforts—which all of us support—will receive funds in H.R. 3385. Up to $9 million will be provided through the National Endowment for Democracy, consistent with its charter, in support of free, fair and open elections in Nicaragua. Specifically, $400,000 will be earmarked for the Carter monitoring team.

We stand at a pivotal point in Nicaragua. We must do everything we can to ensure equal opportunity for the opposition, and free and fair elections next February.

I have every confidence that with the provision of this assistance we will have done all that we can to help this process.

House Resolution 256 will provide for an open and full discussion of the assistance provided in H.R. 3385. I urge the adoption of the rule so we may proceed to consideration of this important matter.

□ 1650

Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 256 is the rule under which the House shall consider providing $9 million in funds previously appropriated, in order to offer financial assistance for free and fair elections in Nicaragua.

The bill made in order by this rule, H.R. 3385, is a major policy initiative of the Bush administration. Those who believe in democracy should support passage of the bill.

For the past 8 years, the policy of the United States aimed at establishing a democracy in Nicaragua. Now that we are on the verge of elections—the very essence of a democratic government—we must not falter. We must intensify our efforts on behalf of democratic institutions in Nicaragua.

Mr. Speaker, the bill made in order by the rule would transfer $3 million from funds previously appropriated to support peace, democracy, and reconciliation in Central America. It would also transfer $6 million from funds previously appropriated for humanitarian assistance for the Contras.

There will be no effect on the budget from this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, the President has requested that $9 million go to the National Endowment for Democracy to assist in voter registration efforts, poll-watching, election day get-out-the-vote efforts, and in monitoring of the elections, which will be held on February 25.

Up to $5 million of these funds may be available in assistance to internal groups, such as political organizations, independent elements of the media, independent labor unions, and business, civic, and professional groups for support in the election process.

Up to $4 million of these funds may be available to the National Endowment for Democracy to assure the conduct of free, fair, and open elections.

Under the rule, the amendments recommended by the Committee on Appropriations shall be considered as having been adopted. The administration strongly supports the amendments, which are printed in the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I want to make this point clear to the House: The package of assistance requested by the Bush administration is contained in the bill as amended and reported from the Committee on Appropriations.

The rule makes in order one amendment, to be offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Durbin]. His amendment would effectively deny the President's request by striking all but $400,000 from the bill and limiting that $400,000 to the sole purpose of monitoring the election process.

Mr. Speaker, the policy of the Bush administration, to provide financial assistance for democracy in Nicaragua, is a natural extension of the policy put forward by President Reagan.

Mr. Speaker, it was never the policy of the United States in the Reagan administration to wage war with the Sandinista Government, or to have conflict forever. Our support of the Contras for the past 8 years has brought us to the point where the military stalemate produced the desired result: Diplomacy and free elections.

There is no doubt that the policy has succeded so far, because the Sandinista Government of Nicaragua, which has ruled by the bayonet and the bullet since 1979, has now committed itself to national elections.

If Ortega had crushed the Contras by force of arms, it is clear that Nicaragua would not be having this election. The question presented by this legislation is a simple one: Shall the United States support democracy in a totalitarian society?

Or shall the United States permit an absolutist Marxist ruler to continue in office, relying on hundreds of millions of dollars in Soviet aid to influence the election prospects?

Mr. Speaker, an article in the Newsweek of October 9 makes it clear that there are stark differences between the election process as we know it in the United States and as it is being waged in the Nicaraguan presidential election.

When the National Opposition Union held a rally recently, the only site available was a dingy movie theater with a primitive sound system. When the ruling Sandinistas nominated President Ortega, they did so in a nationally televised rally held in a spacious, government-owned arena.

The Sandinista presidential campaign is financed by the Nicaraguan Government.

The National Opposition Union gets 10 minutes of free television time every third night, on a channel that is so weak, a Managua resident can hardly see the pictures.

Mr. Speaker, democracy is at stake in this legislation. Shall we support free and fair elections? Or shall we not?

There are Members who claim that the U.S. aid will taint the election process, that our financial assistance will produce a result with "made in the U.S.A." stamped all over it.

Mr. Speaker, if so, I believe that "made in the U.S.A." is certainly preferable to "made in the U.S.S.R."

The course of action suggested in the Durbin amendment is a victory for President Ortega, purely and simply. The Durbin amendment would eviscerate $8.6 million from the President's request.

Does anyone really think that Ortega wants the United States to assist in the election process in Nicaragua? Obviously he would not.

Does anyone really believe that the elections will be more free or more fair without this $9 million? Obviously they will not.

Mr. Speaker, the course of action suggested in the Durbin amendment is to let nature take its course, to stand by and let Ortega win unfairly, as if by default. Hollow democracy is no democracy at all.

The course of action suggested by the President's policy is to assist democratic institutions, to strengthen the free press, to help to free trade unions and democratic political parties in their effort to participate in free, fair, and open elections.

Mr. Speaker, the choice is clear. The House should support the President's initiative.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished Member for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, in speaking about this provision of my good friend, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN], let me just make three points from the perspective that I am coming from on this bill.

First, I have almost consistently opposed aid to the Contras.

Second, I maintain that if you are going to get involved in a Nicaraguan election effort, the effort should be overt, and not convert.

Third, I really have no preference as to who wins that election. I think that is up to the Nicaraguan people, and this is something we should deeply respect.

I think passage of this amendment would be very, very difficult for our policy in Central America. First of all, what a lot of this money does is that it enforces free and fair elections, election observers, and I think what it assures is some kind of semblance of a free election.

Now, I do not know if the Sandinistas are going to run a free election, but I think these funds that we are providing at least will make a difference in that direction.

Second, this entire Central American stalemate that has occurred, in other words, no peace, some kind of repatriation, an election campaign gearing up, has been brought forth by a very delicate balance of negotiations between the Democratic leadership, the Republican leadership and the President.

I say just leave it alone.

Third, I do not know if my friend intends this, I am sure he does not, because he has a distinguished record on Central American issues, I am concerned that his amendment would undercut the efforts of President Carter.

□ 1700

President Carter is going out to that area as a negotiator. He met with a group of us, and it is his understanding that the policy initiated by the administration is consistent with his objectives in the area, and that is that there be no covert activity consistent with the Tela agreements, that there be a respect for election observers, free and fair elections, and that some of these objectives through the Center for Democracy are consistent with his mission.

I understand that there are some funds in the package for President Carter's purposes in sending monitors between now and the election.

Again, I deeply respect my friend from Illinois. I just think somebody who has voted with him all the way on Central American issues, maybe nearly, not every one, I just think his provision is not adequate right now. I think it is well intentioned, but I think we should leave this alone and hope that the election is fair. These funds, in my judgment, will help this election be fair.

Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON].

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, let me say at the very outset that I will support this rule. Even though it is not completely open because it has been agreed to by the leadership of both parties during the Rules Committee meeting yesterday, I expressed some misgivings over this rule. And, frankly, I would have preferred a clear-cut debate over the administration's proposal—period—rather than having the Durbin amendment also coming before the House.

Be that as it may, I expect the Durbin amendment will not meet a kinder fate on the floor than the one it suffered in the Appropriations Committee, and so we will get an up-or-down vote on the administration's proposal. I very much hope that H.R. 3385 will be enacted in its present form because time is of the essence. And so I will vote for this rule in the hope that we can get the bill down to the President's desk in time to really make a difference.

An important component of the aid package contained in H.R. 3385 will go toward registering voters. The voter-registration process will be closed as of the end of this month, and so it is absolutely essential that we get this aid to the democratic political parties in Nicaragua as soon as possible.

Surely the democratic forces in Nicaragua deserve at least a minimal token of moral support from the United States. They do not seem to be worried about some kind of stigma that supposedly accompanies assistance from the National Endowment for Democracy. They do not fear this kind of aid any more than democratic forces in Poland, Chile, and the Philippines were afraid of it.

And that brings up a second point, Mr. Speaker. These other countries I just mentioned all had a history of democratic institutions and exposure to Western political values. Whatever may have been—or may be their current plight, at least they have had a history of democratic experiences to fall back on.

No such luck in Nicaragua. The democratic forces there are starting from scratch. There is not a Nicaraguan living who can remember a time when that country was a democracy worthy of the name. This coalition of Democratic parties desperately needs the kind of practical assistance that the National Endowment for Democracy has provided so successfully in these other countries.

Mr. Speaker, we have reached the end of the game. This may well be the last important vote concerning Nicaragua that Congress will need to make.

Mr. Speaker, in my remaining time, I would like to comment on one specific controversy that we are likely to hear about during debate today.

Statements are going to be made that this $9 million package represents a huge intrusion into the Nicaraguan political process, that the words "Made in America" will be stamped all over the coalition of democratic parties opposing the Sandinistas, and that people we profess to be helping will thereby be hopelessly compromised and defeated.

But before these crocodile tears start flowing, I believe we should remind ourselves of the mammoth obstacles already standing in the way of those Nicaraguans who are struggling to establish a democratic society.

First, these elections are being conducted in a totalitarian environment. The atmosphere of intimidation is overwhelming. I would add further that the Sandinista police state is almost totally dependent on massive amounts of aid from the Soviet bloc. Nine million dollars is peanuts in the face of a multibillion dollar effort, paid for in Moscow, to consolidate the Sandinistas in power.

If democracy cannot take root in Nicaragua, that country is doomed to a hopeless future. Indeed, there will be no future. The Nicaraguan people will be condemned to the life of serfdom and tyranny they have known for too long already.

I strongly urge support for H.R. 3385. This is our last chance to do something good for those people.

Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, I share the gentleman's sentiments.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BEREUTER].

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, this Member rises in strong support for the rule and aid to the Nicaraguan election process.

The Nicaraguan electoral process is absolutely critical if there is any chance for a satisfactory and democratic resolution to a decade of strife and conflict.

A date for elections has been set, and the Sandinista leaders have stated that they will not subvert the elections; but this does not automatically mean that elections will be free and fair. Nor does it mean that opposition candidates can organize for an effective campaign. Truly fair elections require a democratic process and election infrastructure that does not exist in Nicaragua. And the funds that this body is now considering can help to provide that needed money for the process and infrastructure.

This is not an effort to steal the election with U.S. high technology and sophisticated North American campaign techniques. Nicaragua is so impoverished that the most basic of election materials and necessary logistics are missing, and are needed. Paper, typewriters, telephones, loudspeakers, and vehicles to use are all in desperately short supply. If there is any hope for a successful election, these very basic materials are needed. Parenthetically, I do hope that these limited funds are not used to buy many—if any—vehicles. Land Rovers or other vehicles are very expensive and would arrive too late anyway for the crucial registration period.

There should be no confusion about where the proposed aid will go—great proportions of money will not pour directly into the coffers of the united opposition Presidential candidate, Violetta Chamorro. Instead, much of the funds will go to an officially designated election oversight body. This oversight body will then disburse aid between the Sandinistas candidates and the United Opposition Union [UNO] candidates.

Mr. Speaker, open foreign funding of the election is legal under Nicaraguan law. Of course, the election law has been established by the Sandinista government. Direct money contributions must be shared, and the United States has no choice but to abide by these rules with overt, legal contributions. Those who insist that no covert assistance go to the opposition must accept the legal requirements imposed on overt election aid. While the proposed U.S. aid will go to the UNO, some of the aid will also go to the Sandinistas.

This body should be aware, Mr. Speaker, that the United States is not the only nation who is considering contributing to the Nicaraguan election process. Europe's Christian Democratic and Social Democratic foundations have made their generosity known.

Indeed, Daniel Ortega has traveled to Europe seeking additional funds for the Sandinista Party and the election process. Indeed, Mr. Ortega told us 3 weeks ago that he had approached, thus far unsuccessfully, the Libyan Government of Colonel Qadhafi for electoral assistance funds.

If the United States is to help the Nicaraguan election process, it must do so quickly. Within the next 3 weeks the voters are to be registered, and if the registration process is not conducted properly and Nicaraguans encouraged and able to register, then the election on February 25, 1990 will stand no chance of being a fair election that represents the will of the true majority of all Nicaraguans.

Mr. Speaker, the fate of Nicaragua has been discussed by this body on countless occasions in recent years. During those debates, opinions have differed sharply. But past divisions over Nicaragua should not obscure the undeniable merits of open, legal help to Democrats seeking peacefully to make their case to the voters.

If democracy is to be given a chance in Nicaragua, the opposition to the Sandinista government in the February 25, 1990 election must be given the resources to be competitive. Members of the House are down to the last option since the majority in this body are said to be against covert aid for that purpose, and aid to the Contra's effort against the Sandinistas has been terminated.

I urge support for House Resolution 256, the rule provided for H.R. 3385.

Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER].

□ 1710

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, first I would like to associate myself with the very succinct and outstanding explanation which was provided to this House by the gentleman from California [Mr. PASHAYAN] outlining the situation in Nicaragua. I believe that it is a very important one, and there is a point that he made in his explanation which I wish that he would underscore for us once again. I believe that he talked about the amount of time that has been allotted to the opposition, and the amount of time that the Sandinistas used in their nominating convention.

I heard the gentleman when I was in my office, and I believe the gentleman said that the opposition is allowed 10 minutes on a very obscure television channel every 3 days, and that the Sandinistas, in fact, for their nominating convention used 12 hours on their government-owned television in a huge office building to nominate Daniel Ortega. Was I correct in what I heard from the gentleman?

Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DREIER of California. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman was correct half way. I mentioned the 10 minutes, but I failed to mention the 12 hours and appreciate the gentleman adding that. Although it is a detail, it is an enormously important detail because it highlights the contrast that exists, obviously manipulated by the Sandinista government.

Mr. DREIER of California. I think it is a very important one. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with my colleagues a conversation which I had, having spent all day with Commandante Tomas Borge in Nicaragua. When I challenged him on the issue of 12 hours of uninterrupted Sandinista convention television being carried in Nicaragua he said, "Well, it wasn't quite 12 hours, but we really did make a mistake in doing it for that amount of time."

It clearly underscored, Mr. Speaker, the fact that we have seen the Sandinistas once again abuse power.

Let us look briefly at the situation in Central America and a couple of neighboring countries.

On March 19 of this year we saw for the first time in the history of the country of El Salvador a transition from one democratically elected government to another.

That would not have taken place, Mr. Speaker, had we not seen in the early part of this decade, 1983 to be exact, a tremendous infusion of United States technology to help bring about the first real election in years in El Salvador.

Here we are once again, Mr. Speaker, asking to see that that process takes place again, this time in Nicaragua, a place where we all recognize that we have invested a heck of a lot of money throughout this entire decade. I believe as we look at this $9 million, it is a very important expenditure for us.

I do not have a record of spending money frivolously in this House, Mr. Speaker, but I believe it is very important that we provide the support.

If we contrast El Salvador's situation with the experience that we had just yesterday in Panama and the bloodshed that we saw in May following the horrible election by Manuel Noriega in Panama, it is very clear that the last bastion of freedom in the world, and specifically the Western Hemisphere at least, is the United States of America. That underscores again our responsibility.

My very good friend, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BONIOR] mentioned the fact that throughout October we are going to see the registration process take place in Nicaragua. Throughout October 4 days can be expended on the registration process, a total of 4 days, 4 Sundays. In fact, the registration process as we stand here today is 25 percent completed.

That is why it is absolutely essential, Mr. Speaker, that we do everything that we can to immediately encourage the democratic process in Nicaragua. I hope that we will be able to report this bill out as it has been reported by the committee just as quickly as possible.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Colorado, [Mrs. SCHROEDER].

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Michigan for yielding time to me.

I feel a little bad standing up here saying I hope Members vote against the rule, I hope Members vote against all of this, because I find it kind of amazing. In a way I want somebody to keep pinching me on the floor.

Here are Members on the other side of the aisle who do not believe in spending limits domestically. They do not even believe in the fairness doctrine, many of them, when it comes to television coverage. They do not believe in public financing for any of our races. But boy oh boy, in Nicaragua they are for everything.

I am not sure I am getting this right, but that is what I think I hear. I find that really astounding.

I also find it astounding that we have seen in Panama an election where everybody agreed that Noriega stole it. It was not just the United States, we all did. We saw the President of the United States encouraging people in Panama to do something about the fact that their election was stolen.

Yesterday some very courageous young officers did something about it and the White House did not do anything except come up with the idea let us send some money into Nicaragua.

I mean, come on. I do not really see this as any kind of a Central American policy except throw money at it and do all sorts of things that people will not agree to at home. I think we look awfully silly.

I think we ought to save some time by voting against the rule, just putting this thing out and saying this is not working, this is not where we should be.

I hear the argument that if we do not do this above-board they will just do it covertly, and that is probably right. I think the Members who make that argument on our side of the aisle are correct, that at least we are bringing this out in the open and we are showing what has been going on and what some of the problems have been.

So I do salute the gentleman from Michigan and others who are saying if we are going to do it, at least it should be done overtly and people should know it. Government is not a fungus, it can thrive in sunshine, and the taxpayer ought to know where their money goes overseas.

I find it amazing that what I heard advocated for the Nicaraguan elections, if we were advocating that here ourselves, they would say we were Socialists, we were doing all these terrible things. Yet somehow it is perfectly all right for us to be doing it down there.

I just do not quite get it, and I think that part of this is trying to cover up the nonfesance of the White House yesterday after they had actively encouraged Panamanians to do things. I really find this a very sad day.

So I think we ought to just put this behind us and go on and see what transpires down there.

Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire as to the amount of time remaining.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI). The gentleman from California [Mr. PASHAYAN] has 10 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BONIOR] has 17 minutes remaining.

Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUNDERSON].

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I regret that the gentlewoman who preceded me in the well of the House left so quickly. Is it that difficult to ever support some kind of bipartisan policy in Central Ameria? Is it that difficult to support something echoed and supported by this administration, that now when we are talking about full and free and fair elections we cannot even support the election process?

The gentlewoman gets up here and suggests that somehow we would not support using tax dollars in the American political system? Was I sleeping or did we not give the Democratic National Party and did we not give the Republican National Party something like $3 million each last year to run their national conventions?

What we are talking about here is simply providing the infrastructure assistance to allow full, free, and fair elections, not just an election, but elections which are full, free, and fair and competitive and where people have the opportunity to participate. Each and every one of we Members of Congress take for granted that when we go home and participate in our campaigns, and we create these schedules, and we make the telephone calls, and we have the stationery, and we get in the cars and travel to our campaign events that that is something that exists all over. The reality is that does not exist in Nicaragua, and it is that kind of infrastructure we are talking about here today.

To suggest Members going to oppose this rule and to oppose this legislation is to say that we will by reality of the time clock do everything we can to make sure that Sandinistas are not participants in full, free, and fair elections where the opposition has equal opportunity to make their case.

□ 1720

If there ever is a time for a bipartisan consensus on Central American policy, this simple legislation, H.R. 3385, ought to be supported.

The rule ought to be endorsed by voice vote. The Durbin amendment ought to be rejected for what it is, and we ought to go on and pass the bill.

Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS].

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I take the well at this point not to speak specifically to the bill, which I will do when we get into the general debate and into the discussion on the amendment, but to ask all of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to vote for this rule, to bring this bill to the floor.

We are running out of time in Nicaragua.

The process by which voters in that country can register to vote lasts only for three more Sundays.

We are in a time bind if we are going to have any chance at all to allow the Nicaraguan people to freely register and have their voices heard.

I would just as soon the Durbin amendment was not offered because it is a bad amendment. I am eager to vote against it as I am eager to speak against it.

But it is in the rule. That is in the spirit of fair play. But I ask my colleagues, whether they like the Durbin amendment or not, that we have to bring this bill to the floor. We have no time to lose.

Mr. PASHAYAN. Mr. Speaker, just to make it clear, as a matter of reiteration, this side supports the rule and encourages Members to vote for it.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support the rule and get on with this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI). The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to House Resolution 256, just adopted, I call up H.R. 3385, a bill making assistance available for free and fair elections in Nicaragua.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY].

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill, and that I be permitted to include charts, tables, and other material.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 13 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to place this bill in a little context.

In the 1970's, after about four decades of misguided American policy supporting every tinhorn government around in Latin America, one of the governments that we were supporting in Central America, the Somoza regime in Nicaragua, began to lose its grip. Mr. Somoza was a greedy despot, by anybody's definition, and like many other governments which the United States was misguidely supporting, because of his activities, he began to generate a broad spectrum of opposition to his continued rule.

That opposition included many respected businessmen, many respected members of the academic community, youth groups as well as left-wing revolutionaries.

In about 1978 President Carter was advised to withdraw United States support from the Somoza regime because it was clear that Somoza was losing support, and President Carter was told that we ought to support a more progressive government down there.

The Carter administration declined to withdraw their support from Somoza at that time because, very frankly, they were told by a lot of conservatives in this House and in the other body that if the administration pulled the plug on the Somoza regime that people in this House would see to it that the Panama Canal implementation legislation never went through the House.

So, recognizing they could not fight two battles at the same time, the Carter administration delayed in its withdrawal of support from Mr. Somoza.

I have always believed that if the Carter administration had gone ahead at that time and withdrawn its support from the Somoza Government, that we would have had a much different government in place in Nicaragua than we have today because at that time you still had a business-based opposition, you still had a capitalist-based opposition to the Somoza regime.

But because of the preference of the right wing in this country, the Carter administration was prevented from following its best instincts.

So over the next year the middle class departed Nicaragua, they gave up; they could see that the United States policy was not going to make a positive difference. And in the end, when Somoza fell, the only effective resistance to him was on the part of the left-wing Sandinistas.

In 1979 they won.

For the next about 1½ years the United States tried to construct a relationship with the Sandinistas and finally gave up in frustration. People like Adolfo Calero, who later went into the Contra movement, persuaded this Congress for about a year and a half that we ought to provide some United States assistance to Nicaragua even though the Sandinistas were in power.

They said we ought to provide that assistance largely through the private sector to try to moderate the conduct of the Sandinistas.

A lot of us had misgivings about that, but we respected the motives of a lot of people who were trying to limit the radical change the Sandinistas were intending to carry out.

So we supported them for a while.

Then we gave up on it. And for the last 8 years the United States, as you know, has financed a war against the Sandinistas which was fought by and through the Contras.

Many of us in Congress thought that was a futile act. Many of us thought it was a misguided policy. Many of us thought it was self-defeating.

Finally the Central American presidents asserted themselves. They urged an end to it.

And, finally, we won a crucial vote on the floor of this House and, as a consequence, we are now following a different policy in Central America and a different policy in Nicaragua.

The United States has agreed, "No more dollars for war."

Now we have an election in which, no doubt about it, the Sandinistas have a lopsided advantage, both procedurally and politically.

Now, a few years ago this Congress created an institution called the National Endowment for Democracy to help promote democratic beliefs and democratic processes all over the world.

The National Endowment has done some good work in Chile. We have done some good work in Poland through the AFL-CIO.

In Nicaragua we have provided $3.5 million in this fiscal year so that the National Endowment can provide just the kind of effort being talked about by a number of speakers today, an effort to build some democratic infrastructure in Nicaragua, an effort to try to familiarize people with "get-out-the-vote" techniques, registration techniques and all the rest.

And I think we reached a bipartisan agreement that that is legitimate.

□ 1730

Now the administration has brought a new request to the Congress. They have asked for $9 million in additional funding for these same kind of activities. They asked the leadershp to put it on a fast track, and they did. Secretary Baker made his request on September 20. The Committee on Appropriations received the bill on September 28 . We reported it out October 3. That is extraordinarily fast. I think anyone would grant that.

That bill, very simply, would provide about $5 million through the National Endowment for Democracy for what is described as "support for the election process and monitoring." It would also provide for about $4 million for election support and monitoring, to include funds for the minimum contribution necessary to the Supreme Electoral Council, to satisfy their 50 percent tax on foreign contributions to political parties. It also provides $400,000 for former President Carter's group to Council on Freely Elected Heads of Government, which is trying to monitor the conduct of that election; $250,000 for the Center of Democracy to do the same thing; and $400,000 for the center for Electoral Assistance and Promotion to do the same thing.

Mr. Speaker, I would not object to this legislation if it would accomplish its ends. However, I honestly do not think it does. As the chairman of the Subcommittee on Foreign Operations, Export Financing and Related Programs, I felt it was my duty to the House, because of the agreement between the White House and the bipartisan leadership, I felt it was my institutional duty to the House to bring this bill to this body as quickly as possible, and not to try to interpose my objections in a procedural way, and thereby prevent this House from working its will. We brought this bill through the Committee on Appropriations to the floor, and I am trying to handle the bill here today in as fair a way as I know how.

Let me simply say that having fulfilled my duty to the House, I now feel I have to fulfill my duty to my conscience. That means that I will be voting against this bill. I recognize that it is very rare for a bill manager to vote against a bill with his own name on it, and to vote against a bill which he is bringing to the floor of the House. However, as I have indicated, the bill has my name on it because I did it as a courtesy to the President. The bill is here, as a courtesy to the House.

My reasons for being dubious are very simple. First of all, I am concerned that the provision of such a large amount of money—and while this does not seem to be a large amount of money in American terms, it is certainly a large amount of money in Nicaraguan terms—I simply am very concerned that the infusion of such a large amount of money in what I consider to be a very inexact manner, will, in fact, operate to cripple the very people we are trying to help. I want to see the opposition to the Sandinistas win that election, make no mistake about it. I am concerned that this package is so large and so loosely put together, and so loosely conceived that, in fact, it will have the opposite effect.

Newsweek was quoted by a previous speaker on the Nicaraguan election, the conduct of the Sandinistas, and I do not challenge that that was quoted from an article. But I would like to quote the key paragraph from that article which was conveniently left out by the previous speaker referring to it. The last paragraph in that article says that:

> The Chamorro campaign appears to have committed a tactical error by aligning itself too visibly with the United States—

And it goes on to say, > if Chamarro is defeated, many Nicaraguans will blame the United States, and some Americans may criticize the President for sending good money after bad.

Well, I am not going to criticize the President because we can have an honest disagreement on this, and I think we do.

But there are two other reasons why I oppose and will vote against this bill. First of all, the U.S. law does not allow for the use of money contributed by foreign entities in our own elections. I think we ought to abide by that same process with respect to other people's elections. That may be an old-fashioned principle, but I happen to believe in it. Second, I have supported public financing of American congressional campaigns for the last 15 years. I find it ironic that today we find the Bush administration, for the first time, in support of public financing, for Nicaragua. I find it difficult to explain why the U.S. taxpayers can legitimately be expected to promote democratic processes somewhere else, but somehow can be told at the same time that it is not legitimate for them to promote democratic processes in congressional elections here in our country. I find that a mite quaint, to say the least.

Now, the administration, to be fair about it, will say that there is no money that will go directly for campaign purposes, and the administration has been honest and above board in their dealings with me, and I am sure that that is the intent. Very frankly, money that we are providing here is what would be known in American political parlance as soft money. It is money which is going to parties, and Members know very well that a dollar which goes to a party computer or a dollar which goes to a get-out-the-vote campaign helps the candidate every bit as much as it helps the party. I would not object to that if I thought it would help, but I am afraid it will have a snap-back effect. I would simply say that while I will not vote for the Durbin amendment because I think the Durbin amendment is not sufficiently evenhanded on the question of to whom it would give money, neither will I vote for this package, because I think it goes too far. In fact, it will wind up, I think, significantly hurting the very people in the Nicaraguan election process we are trying to help.

We can have a legitimate disagreement about that. I recognize we have one today.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this bill has moved quickly because the leadership of both parties understands that the need is great and urgent. The UNO coalition is facing an entrenched dictatorship with all the resources of the state at their disposal, including secret police, the government ministries, the media, and the military. The Sandinistas continue to receive massive support from the Soviet bloc—$1 billion in military and economic aid alone in the last 12 months.

The democratic opposition, on the other hand, has few resources. UNO has an office without equipment, volunteers without training, and parties without material infrastructure. How can UNO register voters without vehicles to transport to the countryside? How can poll watchers and observers be trained without instructors? How can offices be established in Nicaragua's 16 departments without typewriters or telephones?

We are talking not just about an honest council, we are talking about a fair election with a level playing field. Some argue that the United States should not support such activities. I did not hear their voices when money was appropriated for NED in Poland or Chile. Democracy does not come cheap—especially when facing a dictatorship with lavish Soviet bloc funding.

This money will allow seminars, meetings, and workshops to be conducted on how to register and how to get out the vote. It will allow materials and media messages to be developed to inform Nicaraguans how, when, and where to register and vote. It will enable the training of poll watchers and the establishment of a national network of monitors to make a parallel vote count as was so important in the Philippines and Panama.

There is really one very simple question before this body: Are we willing to give democracy a chance in Nicaragua? That is the question: Dictatorship or democracy? The field of battle has changed from bullets to ballots, and over the years I have listened to numerous colleagues argue that we should give peace a chance.

□ 1740

Mr. Speaker, it is not hard to have peace. Simply do not oppose dictatorships, and there will be peace. Now is the time to give democracy a chance.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

[Mr. OBEY addressed the Committee. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KANJORSKI). Correction is noted.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE], the ranking member of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, you have heard of the Stealth bomber. You may have even seen it. Well, the State Department has one upped Defense. Today, rolling out of Foggy Bottom and onto the House floor to be fueled with dollars, we have H.R. 3385—the Stealth bamba.

Mr. Speaker, la bamba zoomed into my sights Monday night. No radio contact. No flight plans. The State Department didn't bother talking to me, and I don't think they bothered talking to a lot of others they should have talked to. State flies solo.

By Tuesday, the Stealth bamba was before the Appropriations Committee. No hearings. No subcommittee. No justification. I hear it. I see it. But I don't know what it is. Maybe it's an enchilada.

By today, la bamba has flown onto the House floor, untouched by human hands. An airspeed record. Those doorkeepers out there must have their radar off.

I have a list describing what the $9 million transfer for elections in Nicaragua will be used for. Bear in mind, this is for 3 months for voter registration and election. Put on your flak jacket.

First, salaries, benefits, and related expenses—$815,000. Here it is, Mr. Speaker, a nation's chance to reenter democracy. A chance to shrug off tyranny and oppression, and they need money for fringe benefits. Mr. Speaker, I don't know about you, but when I run a campaign, I rely on volunteers.

Second, seminars, lectures, and meetings—$315,000. Mr. Speaker, we're paying for coffee and donuts.

Third, courtesy invitations to international observers and/or visiting delegations—$140,000; $50,000 for the Nicaraguans to fly abroad and observe the international observers. Fly the friendly skies of Nicaragua. Who gets the frequent flyer miles?

Fourth, vehicles—$1,345,000. Mr. Speaker, I hope we're renting and not buying. At $20 a day from Hertz Rent a Car, that is 2,241 cars for a month. And if they're buying, instead of renting—they're surely going to win the election—with the slogan "register to vote and get a free car."

And listen to this, Mr. Speaker.

Fifth, gasoline, lubricants, and maintenance, $149,472.

Lubricants, Mr. Speaker. What kind of monkey business are we getting into?

Mr. Speaker, no wonder this bamba is flying by night. It is one thing to support the vital cause of democracy. It is another to be taken for a ride; $9 million is more than a drop in the bucket. I just wish I knew into whose bucket this bamba was being dropped.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Florida [Mrs. ROS-LEHTINEN], our newest Member.

Mrs. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, as a political refugee who has felt the anguish of losing one's homeland to communism, I can understand the anxiety that the Nicaraguan people are feeling. I know what it is to see the Communist thugs take away your home, your business, rip apart your family and drive a wedge between children and their parents.

It is difficult to list all that is lacking in Nicaragua: food, decent jobs, an adequate education, health care, justice; the list is too long.

However, Mr. Speaker, the one main item that is missing in Nicaragua today is the one thing that this vote can provide: free, open and fair democratic elections for all.

The Sandinistas control the whole ball game right now.They have the infrastructure in place to register voters, to get the paperwork cleared up. They have the trucks to take them to remote villages. They have the megaphones to get the attention of the farmers in faraway fields. They have the telephone lines, the telegraphs, radio, television, all of the equipment, ready to rally the troops. They are registering only those who are friendly to the Communist regime.

What does the opposition have? They have the spirit of freedom ready to guide them. They hear the rousing bell of democracy. The call of liberty sounds out to them. It is sounding out to all of us here as well.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues, "Will you heed their call? Or will you merely save all of your words of praise about democracy for the Fourth of July picnics and for the parades? Will you vote today to implement a real plan for democracy, or will you merely continue to parrot empty rhetoric about the glory of democracy, about the importance of voting, about the need for fairness?"

Mr. Speaker, let us give everyone, even the opposition, the same opportunities as the ruling Sandinistas have had for many years. I only wish that we would have a similar opportunity for my native Cuba.

Mr. McHUGH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CROCKETT].

Mr. CROCKETT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the administration's request for $9 million to buy the Nicaraguan election. I hope the House will defeat this bill.

The Congress has already appropriated $3.5 million for the National Endowment for Democracy to support free and fair elections in Nicaragua. That in itself is more than the Endowment has spent on elections in the Philippines, Poland, Chile, or anywhere else in the world.

This bill would increase the total amount to $12.5 million. That amount not only exceeds by several orders of magnitude what we have spent on any other election. It also comes close to equalling the regular budget of the National Endowment for Democracy for the entire world, which is $15 million.

This is not support for free elections. This is an attempt to buy an opposition victory. These funds will go to support the campaign of Violeta Chamorro and the opposition coalition that nominated her for President.

We have written into the governing statutes of both institutions that will receive this money—NED and AID—a prohibition on doing precisely that.

Section 116(e)(1) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 states with respect to AID, "None of these funds may be used, directly or indirectly, to influence the outcome of any election in any country."

Section 505(a)(1) of the National Endowment for Democracy Act states, "Funds may not be expended, either by the Endowment or by any of its grantees, to finance the campaigns of candidates for public office."

Those prohibitions, which we so casually ignore in this bill, are there for very good reasons. On the one hand, if we attempt to buy a victory for a party in a foreign election, we enable others—in this case, the Sandinistas—correctly to paint that party as being in the pocket of the United States. On the other hand, such a victory, financed by foreign funds, would lack the very legitimacy that we say we are promoting.

Have we already forgotten that for 8 years the United States attempted to dictate the nature of the Nicaraguan Government by force? Do we now expect people to believe that we have suddenly become a disinterested party that seeks only free and fair elections? Do we expect the Nicaraguan people to sit still and let us try to overwhelm their election with our money? Who are we trying to kid?

This legislation is unwise. We would do better to limit ourselves to supporting the activities of legitimate internatoinal monitors—such as the United Nations, the Organization of American States, and former President Carter's Council of Freely-Elected Heads of Government—who bring cleaner hands to this endeavor.

I urge my colleagues to defeat this measure.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LAGOMARSINO].

Mr. Speaker, while the gentleman is coming forward, I would like to point out that the very fine remarks we heard from the gentlewoman from Florida [Mrs. ROS-LEHTINEN] a few minutes ago were her first speech in the House and they could not have come at a better time or be better delivered.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the proposed funding for the democratic electoral process in Nicaragua.

Many of us in the Congress believe that the upcoming elections in Nicaragua on February 25, will determine whether the future government in that country will be democratic or totalitarian. We also believe that what happens between now and February 25 will determine whether those elections are free and fair.

The Sandinista government has agreed to a number of electoral reforms that offer the potential framework for democratic elections. However, many critics of the Sandinistas agree that they are attempting to use the electoral laws and electoral reform proposals to their advantage and, unless the democratic opposition receives adequate help, the opposition will not be able to compete on an equal basis.

Former President Jimmy Carter, whose initiatives in 1979 were instrumental in paving the way for the Sandinista takeover in Nicaragua, met with President Bush and Secretary of State Baker in mid-September to discuss the upcoming elections in Nicaragua. Secretary Baker explained the proposed request to Congress for $9 million to help the democratic opposition and called it a "rare chance for us to support democratization in a totalitarian society." Mr. Carter said such aid is necessary "to make the playing field level" and is "entirely proper" so long as it meets the guidelines that require similar contributions to the independent organization monitoring the February elections.

I agree with President Carter that such aid is necessary to give the democratic opposition a fair chance in Nicaragua. If we want to see the democratic process advance in Nicaragua and avoid, what critics call, a military solution, then I believe we must approve these funds to support the electoral process.

I urge my colleagues to support this funding.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN].

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker I rise to express strong support for H.R. 3385, a bill authorizing up to $9 million in unexpended Agency for International Development funds, to provide assistance for free and fair elections in Nicaragua.

The rising tide of democratic reform throughout the world has somehow managed to evade some of our Latin American neighbors. This is an important bill because it helps to promote democracy. There is nothing covert about the purpose and function of these funds. This legislation mandates that the executive branch notify the Congress prior to the obligation of funds. The bill further specifies that funds going to the Supreme Electoral Council of Nicaragua be used solely for technical electoral purposes.

Mr. Speaker, this is a timely measure at an appropriate time. I commend the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY] and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS] for their work on this measure, and I urge its adoption.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BALLENGER].

Mr. BALLENGER. Mr. Speaker, if I may, I would like to read a couple quotations here. One is the first paragraph in the charter of National Endowment for Democracies. It says:

> The National Endowment for Democracies was founded upon the belief that the world's greatest democracy should help others who share our democratic values and are striving to build free and democratic societies.

I do not think that takes a great deal of anybody's thought to understand that.

Then I am quoting today from a neighbor from Mexico who happens to be the President of Mexico in his speech today. He says:

> Congress and friends, all nations are committed to change, a change that brings hope for freedom and justice. We have the obligation and the moral duty to support it.

Again from the President of Mexico:

> The future of all societies today must necessarily be democratic. Democracy is essential to promote economic growth and satisfy the requirements of social well-being. Mexican democracy has gradually become stronger by embracing broader social plurality, which Nicaragua does not have, that exists and through more open public debate and a more intense and political life and competitive elections.

Mr. Speaker, the money that is coming from the National Endowment for Democracies that we are going to vote on today, we mentioned leveling the playing field, and I say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN], the gentleman knows, I was also in Nicaragua this past week, and questions were made about the television time that is allowed. The Sandinistas for their national election where they elected Mr. Ortega had 12 straight hours on their national TV. UNO is allowed 20 minutes a week.

Mrs. Chamorro, whose headquarters is right next to her house because she cannot afford anyplace else, a neighbor is lending her the house, she does not even have a telephone. She had to pull a line in from next door to connect the phone. She cannot call out, but she can receive calls.

The majority of people here ought to recognize that those people who have been involved in this election, the election is now, the next 4 weeks are going to decide this, the next 4 Sundays, and the truth of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, if we do not help now, you can kiss it goodbye.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. CARPER].

Mr. CARPER. Mr. Speaker, as I have listened to today's debate, I reflected back on the last 7 years of debate that has taken place in this Chamber on our involvement in Central America. In those 7 years we witnessed some brutal moments as we wrangled over whether to provide lethal aid, covert aid, nonlethal aid, or humanitarian aid to the Contras. At times, those debates included charges of giving Central America away to the Communists on the one hand, or charging that we were trying to overthrow a government with which we had normal diplomatic relations on the other hand.

Much has changed in the last year or so. Much has changed in recent months, and I welcome those changes. We are no longer debating whether or not to send bullets to Nicaragua, to the Contras, but how best to ensure that the ballots cast in next February's election are truly meaningful, that they mean something. We are hoping for an election that is free of corruption, relatively free of intimidation, an election where the opposition party and its candidates have a real chance to make their best case and win municipal elections, wins seats in the National Assembly, perhaps even win the Presidency of the country.

Frankly, I was never very enthusiastic about lethal aid to the Contras, although I have supported a number of Contra aid packages in recent years to sustain them. While I appreciate the concerns raised by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN] and others that we may be buying some trouble with this $9 million, I am inclined nonetheless to support this bill. There are a couple questions that I think we need to consider here in this debate. One, is whether $9 million is too much. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] has argued that perhaps it is. He may be right, but, I am afraid that the $400,000 that the Durbin amendment would provide simply is not enough.

Another question that should be asked is whether we are doing something in Nicaragua that we have not done as a nation in other countries, be it in Chile, Panama, the Philippines, or Poland. Clearly, we have funded similar activities in other places. We have undertaken similar kinds of activities, although perhaps not to the extent of the dollars involved in this case.

The third question might be, can the dollars that will be spent, that are being appropriated here, be spent on any one particular candidate's election? My understanding is that no, they cannot be, and I think that is as it should be.

□ 1800

The last question I would have us consider is: How does the Nicaraguan law address this issue? Is it silent on it? Does it permit the money to be spent? As long as one-half of the money we are spending does go as is required under the Nicaraguan law to the Supreme Electoral Council, this money can flow, even under Nicaraguan law.

Mr. Speaker, this is perhaps a close call, but I think a vote in favor of this bill is in order, and I intend to support it.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DELAY]

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, let me just commend the gentleman from Delaware who just spoke, because he reflects what has been going on in this body for many years about what is happening in Nicaragua. He is really a thinking man who has looked at the issue and has come down to support free and open elections in Nicaragua. Because for years on the floor of this House we have heard time and time again a debate of withholding aid for Nicaraguans to fight for their freedom and calling for free and open elections and calling for democracy in Nicaragua through peaceful means. We are here today to do that.

This is not new money, Members. This is not new money. This money has already been authorized, and it is just that we are trying to reprogram it. This is not money going to the Sandinista government. One might say that, "Well, if it goes to the Council on Elections, it goes to the Sandinistas," and they might be able to make an argument about that. But we have, or the opposition has, a member on that council that can monitor how this money is being spent, that if it is used by the Sandinistas in their elections process, do we not know that everyone will know about it?

The real issue here is Nicaragua, not the United States. Its economy is devastated by the policies of the Sandinista government. They do not have vehicles. They do not even have bicycles. They cannot buy gas. If there is anything left in the country, it is controlled by the Sandinista government.

How is the opposition going to run an election? This money, by the way, is not used for bumper stickers and buttons and T-shirts. This is to run elections. The only way that elections can be run openly and fairly is by passing this bill and channeling money into that process.

If Members will not support the Nicaraguans to fight for their freedom, at least support the Nicaraguans to hold elections to win their freedom by the polls and at the polls.

I urge all Members to support the election process in Nicaragua by voting for this important spending measure.

Mr. Speaker, may the best candidate win.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. RHODES].

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, yesterday and today there was a hue and cry here on the Hill from Members on both sides, as a matter of fact, that yesterday in Panama we missed a great opportunity to help the Panamanians find freedom and democracy, if we had only "done something yesterday." While it is true, I am not quite sure what that something could or should have been. Still, there was a feeling that we missed an opportunity to help the Panamanians find democracy.

Mr. Speaker, here we have an opportunity to do something to help the Nicaraguans find democracy and find freedom. We have had many of those opportunities in the past, some that we have seized, some we have let go by, but here is an opportunity, a chance to level this thing out, to give the opposition an opportunity to run a decent, fair campaign and to give the Nicaraguans a fair choice as to what kind of government they want in their country in the future. This is an opportunity that cannot be let go by. It is an oportunity that, as has been pointed out by the gentleman from Delaware, is perfectly legal under Nicaraguan law. This is a chance we must take.

Mr. Speaker, we must give UNO the opportunity to run the kind of election that we would want to run ourselves so that the people in that country have a fair and free choice to choose the way they wish to be governed in the future. It is a chance for us to do something. Let us do it. Vote for the aid.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SLATTERY].

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SLATTERY].

Mr. SLATTERY. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend, the gentleman from Oklahoma, for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today as someone who has consistently opposed military assistance to the Contras. I always thought our Nation's policies toward Nicaragua should be designed to encourage the internal political opposition. Ladies and gentlemen, the legislation before us today does exactly that, and I plan to support it.

The $9 million under consideration today some might say is too much, and we can debate that. But the fact of the matter is money is needed for poll watchers. It is needed for ballots, ballot boxes, and all the other incidental things we have heard people talk about today.

The one thing that I would like to focus on for the remaining time that I have is the need for us in this country, and this is a responsibility that this administration is going to have to bear, and that is to make sure that we do not create the perception in Nicaragua that this election is being dominated by the United States, and, folks, if we do not think that is going to create a problem for the internal opposition in Nicaragua, we are dead wrong.

Just consider this: If some foreign power was running a candidate for President of the United States in this country, and if the perception was created that that candidate was beholden to a foreign interest, how would Americans that even opposed that candidate's philosophy react to that?

I hope that this administration, in administering these funds in Nicaragua, will keep it in mind and recognize that it is critically important for us to provide these neutral-type items as we advance the cause of democracy which we all support in Nicaragua.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman for his work, and I thank my friend, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS], for his work on this legislation. Folks, the administration has a great responsibility in this area to carry forward this program in a way that does not create the perception that this election is being bought by U.S. interests.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. McHUGH], a member of the subcommittee.

Mr. McHUGH. Mr. Speaker, frankly I had hoped that we would have a third option available to us today, because I think the two options that we are confronted with are not a reasonable response to the circumstances in Nicaragua.

The bill itself, which is one option, would provide $9 million to support the electoral process, but it would be spent in ways which are not very clear from the language of the bill.

The Durbin amendment would provide very little assistance: Only $400,000 for the monitoring group chaired by former President Carter. I have no objection to that, of course, but even if one supports nothing more than election monitoring, I believe that the Durbin amendment is too restrictive. For example, it would cut out money for the Center for Democracy, an organization that has been invited to Nicaragua by both the Government and the opposition. It is on the ground now, and it seems to me unwise to exclude $250,000 for that monitoring group.

Furthermore, I personally believe it is reasonable to provide some additional assistance in Nicaragua. The National Endowment for Democracy [NED] has been successful in promoting the democratic process and institutions in other parts of the world, including Chile. It is well organized to provide such assistance, and I think that is appropriate in Nicaragua.

Mr. Speaker, I would go even further and support some modest campaign assistance to the opposition parties in Nicaragua, preferably through some organizations unrelated to NED. Nicaragua is not the United States. Nicaragua does not have a tradition of democratic elections and strong party organizations. The Sandinistas have been dominant and still control much of the power, including the media.

If we want to help in providing an even playing field, it is not unreasonable to provide some modest assistance to the opposition. Certainly we should not fully fund their campaign, but some help openly provided is not unreasonable. It is also not in conflict with Nicaraguan law. The law in Nicaragua contemplates outside campaign assistance. One only has to provide 50 percent of that assistance to the Nicaraguan electoral council. Thus, we would not be offending Nicaraguan law by providing some assistance.

It is also important to note that the likely alternative to assistance openly provided is covert assistance, which in my judgment would be a serious mistake.

My problem with this bill is that it is far too generous. To provide $9 million in Nicaragua, a dirt poor country, is to flood the country with money. I think it will create a significant risk of abuse and waste, and reports of that kind will create a problem not just for us, but for the opposition in Nicaragua itself.

□ 1810

The problem is further exacerbated by the ambiguity of the bill on how that money will be spent. The bill would deliver most of the money through the National Endowment for Democracy, consistent with that organization's charter, and that charter specifically provides that "funds may not be expended, either by the Endowment or by any of its grantees, to finance the campaigns of candidates for public office." That is clear enough.

Unfortunately, when one looks at how the administration intends to spend the money, one finds in its breakdown the following items:

"Salaries, benefits and related expenses, $815,000; vehicles, $1,345,000; travel allowances and per diem for 20,000 poll watchers, $600,000." These items raise serious questions; there seems to be a conflict between what the bill says and what the administration intends. If we are representing in this legislation that funds will not be spent for campaign purposes, we should be sure that will be the case. This is not at all clear.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, while I would be willing to support some assistance in Nicaragua, I must oppose this bill as being both too large and too loosely drawn.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOLF].

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Speaker, let me begin by thanking the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SLATTERY] for his comments.

The last time I was in Nicaragua the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SLATTERY] and I were down there at the same time, and I appreciate his comments and his statements.

Second, I want to thank the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY] for allowing the bill to come out and to move.

This is a good package. It is a good package. All of the Members in the body want peace. We are not talking about sending AK-47's down to Nicaragua. We are not talking about bombs. We are not talking about mining the harbors. We are not talking about any kind of mines that young people could step on. We are talking about the opportunity to promote democracy.

We have an opportunity for free elections. As one speaker said, when we look at all the resources the Sandinistas have, when we met several years ago with Cardinal Obando y Bravo and later with Mrs. Chamorro and went back again to see the resources the Sandinistas had, this helps with regard to changing the process.

It worked in Poland. We are pushing in this body the President to put more money in Poland because we, both Republicans and Democrats, do not think he has done enough.

Well, the same thing would hold true here. It worked in Chile. In Chile and Poland it worked. Let us give it a chance down in Nicaragua.

I would hope that we would have a big strong vote. This is a bipartisan issue. This is not a Republican issue and it is not a Democrat issue. Hopefully we can come together in a spirit of reconciliation to bring about democracy down in Nicaragua. So I rise in strong, strong support.

I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY] for allowing the package to come out. I think the gentleman is a real statesman.

I thank the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SLATTERY] for his position. Hopefully my colleagues on both sides will come together to do what I think is appropriate, to help bring about democracy in Nicaragua.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GOSS].

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I thank my distinguished colleague for yielding time to me.

This is a matter of utmost urgency at this time before this body. As my colleagues have indicated who were with me this Sunday observing the registration process in Nicaragua, time is running out and the process is not leading to full, fair democratic elections as we have envisaged in this House.

There is no question that we found a very strong unification among the political party that is flying the democratic flag, the democratic opposition. We found morale high and we found a commitment to democracy in the country.

There is also no question that we found that the people who are running these elections in Nicaragua are the same people, the same Sandinistas, that ran the sham elections in 1984 that by international opinion were labeled as a fraud.

Very clearly there is a challenge to democratic-loving people to make sure that this election provides the opportunity for fair play.

As we went about the country, as we went about Managua and listened to citizens and watched the polling process work, we discovered that the people want to vote, they want to express their opinion. There is no question about that.

There is interest and enthusiasm in the country in coming to grips with an election. It is exciting. It is something that they are focusing on. Yet if they do not register in the next three Sundays they will be preempted from having that opportunity.

It is critical that we have observers there. It is critical that we have a way to get people who want to get to the polls to register, not in a partisan way, but to exercise their right to vote. It is critical that they understand the process, that they have help understanding what is a complicated registration process. We need to help these people do these things.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONYERS].

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the Chair and the manager of this bill for allowing me the time to express my opposition to the appropriation of $9 million to the Nicaraguan political opposition.

First of all, Secretary Baker had in fact endorsed the candidate. I think that that takes us out of the impartial position that we want so much to be in.

Second, I think that it is very clear that $9 million there is like $900 million somewhere else. So if we think that we are going to vote this money today and not be thought to be dominating the process, please forget it. It will not work.

Third, the fact of the matter is that no one has asked for this money. I think that we ought to honestly consider the fact that this is one way that we can get it through the National Endowment for Democracy.

Please be concerned.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in opposition to this bill that appropriates $9 million in fiscal year 1990 for assistance to the Nicaraguan political opposition, election monitoring, and other election related activities.

The majority of these funds will be channeled through the National Endowment for Democracy. We probably should be eliminating all funding for the NED, not increasing it.

By next year, Nicaragua will already have the monitoring groups from the United Nations and the Organization of American States as well as the Council of Freely-Elected Heads of Government, headed by former President Jimmy Carter, a total of 160 people. Everyone involved in bringing genuine peace to this region would agree that we do not need to allocate $9 million, funneled through the NED.

The National Endowment for Democracy is former administrations baby espousing the so-called "crusade for freedom." It is a small private organization whose primary function has become to influence and shape U.S. foreign policy. This organization funds itself with taxpayer money.

We cannot tolerate this organization meddling in foreign elections, advocating views they ascribe to the American people, and embarrassing our Government overseas.

Most working Americans are feeling the tight squeeze of the Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction targets, trying to meet a Federal budget balance, yet we in Congress are willing to provide $9 million to influence the Nicaraguan elections.

The NED has been able to convince some in Congress that its work is essential to promote democratic institutions abroad and that it does not meddle in or determine policy. This is a euphemism for covert U.S. action. In fact the endowment has secretly supported an organization in France, one of the world's oldest democracies, actively opposing there the governing party. President Mitterand was not informed that the U.S. taxpayer money funded his political opposition and the group had publicized ties to an outlawed terrorist organization.

But perhaps the endowment's most extraordinary activity was funding an organization advocating support of Contra funding in American newspaper advertisements; taxpayer money to advise 535 Members of Congress to support Contra funding opposed by a majority of Americans. The organization, Prodemca, argued that none of the moneys went to the advertisements. But the arguments were unconvincing most people know that funds are fungible.

Prodemeca also appears to have drawn the endowment into one of the most serious public policy scandals in American history: the Iran-Contra affair. Project Democracy, supported and funded by the endowment, was identified by the Tower Commission as part of the illegal Contra supply efforts, so the endowment has repeated again its history of improper involvement in foreign policy affairs, of the execution of policy outside the constraints of accountability and of the decisionmaking process determined by the Constitution.

Other endowment activities have included support for a military-backed candidate in Panama, the ADN Party in Bolivia, the Conservative Party in Columbia.

I urge my colleagues to reject a vote for $9 million and to favor the amendment by our colleague, Mr. DURBIN, to cut our $8.6 million, leaving $400,000 for the team headed by former President Jimmy Carter, the council of Freely-Elected Heads of Government.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER].

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, sometimes I wonder what we do around here when it comes to Central America. We play by different rules there than we do here.

In our country under laws passed by Congress there may be absolutely no foreign money injected into our campaigns, not one penny, and rightly so.

Imagine Manuel Noriega giving our Presidential candidates money, or Muammar Qadhafi, or think of any foreign country doing that. It is ridiculous and it is wrong. But yet those very Members in this Congress who would be repelled by such a thing support foreign intervention in Central America. I do not understand.

I will tell Members another thing I do not understand. Members vote in this Congress to cut out our newsletters whereby we communicate with our constituents, but we want to give Mrs. Chamorro $5 million to send out her newsletters.

Now, that is wonderful, but I do not understand it. We are quick to cut our own newsletters, but we are going to give this money that is going to work its way into that campaign so the UNO party can communicate with its constituents. I do not understand. And that is why I am going to vote against it. I am going to vote for the Durbin amendment.

In this country less than 50 percent of the eligible voters vote in Presidential elections. I do not see the same concern about that that I do about registration in Central America. I wonder how many of my colleagues who are bemoaning the fact that there is not enough voter registration in Central America worry about it in this country and are supporting the same-day registration bills that we have here in this House?

So, Mr. Speaker, I think it is time to speak up, and we ought to speak up together. We should be for democracy, yes. Let us support the Durbin amendment. Let us not support a waste of funds. With the $8 million we save, maybe we could immunize all of the kids in this country who are waiting in line for it.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I would like to associate myself with the gentlewoman's remarks. She does not understand.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON].

□ 1820

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I find it hard to understand the logic or illogic that prevails in part of this Chamber. The Soviet Union has told us this year that they are curtailing their aid to Nicaragua and yet, even though Mr. Shevardnadze told Mr. Baker and our President that aid is not going to continue, we knew through intelligence sources that they have been transshipping hundreds of millions of dollars in aid to Nicaragua.

We know that the Communist-controlled Government in Nicaragua for 12 straight hours had propaganda given on state television to the people of that country. Yet the opposition, the UNO forces down there who are fighting for freedom and want free and fair elections, they get 20 minutes a week. They have no money. They do not even have a telephone. They do not have ways to get people to the polls and to the registration areas for registration.

Of course we do not want to help them.

Let the Soviets pour hundreds of millions of dollars of aid in there, let them do everything they can to control the election, but we do not want to help the people who are fighting for freedom down there? You folks have helped abandon the freedom fighters, the 42,000 people who are living, women and children who are living in Honduras who want to be free.

There are 12,000 to 14,000 people who have been fighting for freedom down there. They will not let them register and vote. And you guys, you lovers of freedom will not even allow them to have a pittance so they can at least try to fight for a free and fair election down there.

My attitude is you are supporting a Communist government down there by your inaction. That is my view.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire how much time remains on each side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KANJORSKI). The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS] has 5 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY] has 3 minutes remaining.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROOMFIELD].

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly support the bill before us which provides assistance for free and fair elections in Nicaragua.

I have been sitting listening to some of the arguments against this bill. It is too much money, we are told. Providing assistance through NED destroys the integrity of that organization, we are told. Some of the funds will inevitably be spent on campaign purposes, we are told.

I do not agree. All these arguments avoid addressing the issue we face today.

That issue is: "Will Congress support democracy in Nicaragua?" It's not enough to say you're for democracy; this is not a time for words, it's a time for action.

This legislation provides the essential assistance needed to conduct free and fair elections.

Without this assistance Nicaragua's democratic opposition faces almost certain defeat. They face running a campaign with only one phone—a phone which is shared with two other businesses and only receives incoming calls. They face the difficulty of transporting UNO pollwatchers to over 4,300 registration booths across the country without even one vehicle.

I urge all Members to support this bill; it is a vote for freedom and democracy in our hemisphere. Vote for democracy, vote for this legislation.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GRANT].

Mr. GRANT. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I would just like to remind the body that when we were in Nicaragua recently and met with Mrs. Chamorro and others of the opposition, we also met with Mr. Ortega. He had just returned from a trip to Libya, from the Eastern-bloc countries where he was trying to raise money to use in a very partisan nature, I am sure, in that election. And for us to say that we ought not to put American money from our taxpayers into the race is to fly in the face of the fact that Mr. Ortega is himself doing the very selfsame thing.

So I rise in very strong support for the position that the Representative from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS] so eloquently stated and would remind the Members that we are talking about fair elections as well as free elections.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PENNY].

Mr. PENNY. Mr. Speaker, I just returned from a trip to Central America, and I offer these observations as we prepare to vote on this package of aid to the Nicaraguan election process.

First, the Sandinistas are likely to win the February elections regardless of what we do to aid the opposition. Let's look at the facts: Over 200,000 Nicaraguans have left the country in the past 10 years. Some are part of the Contra resistance. Others live in refugee camps in Honduras and Costa Rica. Many have left because of political persecution or because they had little economic opportunity within Nicaragua. All of these groups represent, for the most part, anti-Sandinista voters who will not be allowed to participate in the upcoming elections.

Within Nicaragua, the voters have a choice. A real campaign between the Sandinistas and the organized opposition, UNO, is now underway. Violeta Chamorro and her slate of opposition candidates have officially filed for office. That is the good news. The bad news is that voters have only 4 days—the first 4 Sundays in October—to register for the February elections. Many will fail to register. Why? Last Friday in the streets and markets of Managua, I discovered that most people were anxious to register and vote. Yet, no one, I repeat no one as yet knew where they could register although the first registration Sunday was just 2 days away.

The Sandinistas have all the advantages of incumbency. Political patronage is the name of the game in Nicaragua, and all of those Government workers are working overtime to identify and register their supporters.

In spite of this gloomy picture for the Nicaraguan opposition, I feel that our support of the electoral process is crucial at this time. For 8 years I have opposed military aid to the Nicaraguan Contras and the Reagan administration agenda in Cental America. Several of my colleagues and I have supported positive interventions during that time, namely the child survival assistance project.

But child survive funding has been the exception, not the rule. Virtually all of our effort over the past 10 years has been geared toward a military overthrow of the Nicaraguan Government. This misguided and unfortunate policy has brought nothing but hardship and suffering to the people of Nicaragua.

We now have an opportunity for change. Our military support for the Contra forces has ended. Opposition groups are being given a chance to dislodge the Sandinistas with ballots instead of bullets. Aid in support of a free, fair, and competitive election is a welcome departure from the destructive aid of the past.

Frankly, we are getting started too late with this electoral assistance. With one registration Sunday already behind us, this aid is several weeks too late to assist in the voter registration effort that is required to assure the maximum number of Nicaraguans a voice in the coming election. Nonetheless, this money can do some good if made available quickly.

I am most comfortable with those allocations in this bill which generally supported the electoral process, $4 million has been provided for the National Endowment for Democracy. These funds will be allocated to internal groups such as labor unions, the media, and business and civic groups to promote voter information and organization activities. Specific allocations would support the Carter Council, the Center for Democracy, and the Center for Training and Promotion, groups that are dedicated to monitoring the fairness of the Nicaraguan election.

I am more troubled by the prospect of direct aid to the Chamorro campaign. However, half of these funds, under Nicaraguan law, will have to be donated to the Supreme Electoral Council. This money should therefore be used to support the election infrastructure—polling places, election personnel, ballot boxes, et cetera. Ironically, given the fact that the Sandinista Party dominates the Supreme Electoral Council, this represents a windfall for the Government the United States is committed to bringing down.

In spite of my reservations about the funding in this bill which may directly help the UNO ticket, I intend to support the legislation.

First, it reflects a policy change which will make it less likely that we will return to the military option.

Second, Mr. Ortega is already blaming Mrs. Chamorro for receiving aid from the United States though none has been approved. This will be an issue in the campaign whether or not we appropriate the money. Mrs. Chamorro is interested in the help in spite of the charge that she is the U.S. candidate. She claims that many Nicaraguan voters are prepared to vote for a candidate who can improve relations with the United States.

Third, Ortega and the Sandinistas are receiving significant financial support from the Soviet Union, Cuba, Lybia, and other sources. It is naive for us to think otherwise. The Sandinistas will be well-funded by outside governments and our aid will only balance the scales.

Finally, a competitive election is essential if Nicaragua is to continue on the path to democracy. If the Sandinistas walk away with a landslide because the opposition was handicapped, then the prospects for pluralism and economic reforms will be set back. A close race will force the Sandinistas to reach out to a broader cross-section of voters. It will also demonstrate to the opposition groups that they can compete fairly and peacefully for a share of the power and hopefully keep their efforts focused in the political arena where—as in America—they know they will get another chance in the next election.

On balance, this package offers a better shot at a better future for the Nicaraguan people.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, several speakers on the other side of the aisle have suggested that persons on this side of the aisle who do not want to provide this exact package "don't want to help freedom, don't want to help the Nicaraguan opposition." That is absolute nonsense. The question is: Are we going to help them smart or help them stupid?

It seems to me that this is far from being a skillful application of American know-how; it is a fairly clumsy application of American electoral and political know-how.

You know, I guess in life sometimes God is cruelest when he gives you exactly what you ask for. And I think that today God is going to give the administration exactly what they asked for. At least the House is, but not with my vote. But I have very little doubt they are going to get it.

□ 1830

I believe one of the problems with this is that in the process of trying to fulfill a very laudable and understandable goal, it results in our turning NED into a pretzel by suggesting that somehow funds that will be provided in this package will not be used for direct campaign purposes.

NED will, according to this proposal, not provide direct aid to a campaign, but they will be able to use these funds for party infrastructure support that would enable the National Opposition Union to receive cash grants from NED's grantees to buy vehicles, set up party offices, purchase office equipment, and pay the salaries of individuals working for the party.

Now, I have been in politics 26 years, and I know that when money goes in to help my party, it helps me. Therefore, I believe we cannot really say with a straight face that we are living up to NED's charter, by the provisions of this debate, and I would be willing to give a reasonable amount of money if it were more clearly and skillfully applied.

I would simply make this point: NED is supposed to be an important and precious instrument which we use to promote the interests of democracy around the world. I would like it to continue to be that kind of instrument. I do not think we help sustain the National Endowment for Democracy, if we require it to go through the kinds of procedural folderol that is required in this instance in order to, with a straight face, provide any assistance for them under this package.

Members are going to vote however they choose. This is not an earth-shattering question. It simply is a judgment call as to whether or not this package is going to injure the National Endowment long term. It is also a judgment call as to whether or not it is, in fact, going to be more help than hurt to the Nicaraguan opposition when all is said and done.

I think that this package is too hefty for them to carry. I think it will be used cynically by the Sandinistas to, in fact, discredit the opposition. I hope they do not succeed. I think we would better protect that opposition if we had a more skillfully drawn package, which I would be willing to support. This is not it.

Mr. RAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 3385.

Since 1983, when I was first elected to this body, I have been concerned about the situation in Central America, and in Nicaragua in particular. In my opinion, the economic and political problems of our Southern neighbors pose one of the greatest threats to the future security of our Nation, and I believe it is vital that the United States develop a comprehensive and well-thought out policy toward the region—and that we stick with that policy over the long term.

For those of us in this body who believe that democracy in Central America must be nurtured and encouraged, H.R. 3385 provides a tangible way to prove that our support of the parties seeking free and open elections in Nicaragua is more than just rhetoric.

For the last 6 years, we have tediously and with great difficult and internal conflict within the Congress brought pressure to bear upon the Sandinista government in order to bring about the elections now scheduled for February. If the elections in Nicaragua are to really be free and open, and if the voice of the people is to be heard, then it is vital that this $9 million be channeled to the opposition parties so they can register their supporters, campaign effectively and provide the observation needed to ensure fair elections.

We have encouraged the growth of democracy in Nicaragua, and we have applauded the courage of the opposition parties in mounting a campaign against Daniel Ortega. Now, it's time for us to show that the United States can be counted on to support democractic elections. I urge my colleagues to vote yes on H.R. 3385.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 3385, as amended, and urge its immediate adoption.

The election scheduled to take place in Nicaragua on February 25, 1990, represents an historic opportunity to break the cycle of repression, violence and economic decline that has plagued that country and to open the way toward a new period of democracy and development. Whether or not this opportunity will be seized will depend not only on the credibility and outcome of the electoral process itself, but also upon the extent to which the political space that is now opening can be secured and continually enlarged upon even after the election is concluded. For this to occur, the fragmented and beleaguered democratic opposition in Nicaragua must develop the experience, confidence and strength that will enable it to become an enduring force in Nicaraguan society and the guarantor of pluralism in the years ahead.

February 25, therefore, is a unique moment in the history of Nicaragua. The election is potentially a watershed which can set the country on a new, democratic course.

It is in that spirit that the Congress should approach this election. The central question facing us is whether the circumstances are such in Nicaragua as to justify providing noncampaign assistance to the Nicaraguan United Opposition, UNO, the broad party alliance of Nicaraguan opposition, and other groups through the National Endowment for Democracy for the purpose of strengthening democratic institutions, processes and participation in a manner consistent with the endowment's mandate and authorizing legislation. I believe we should.

According to the measure before us, funds may be used for nonpartisan purposes, including infrastructure development and training, and for such activities as voter registration and education, get-out-the-vote drives, election monitoring, and international observer delegations. In addition, assistance to support democratic education programs of labor, civic, and business organizations and independent media is authorized and appropriated. As with all NED programs, support would be given openly, for specific purposes outlined in grant agreements.

The factors that must be considered in the debate over whether to provide this assistance include the following:

This is not an ordinary election among parties committed to the rules of peaceful political competition. Rather, it is a contest between a coalition of parties covering the entire democratic spectrum and a nondemocratic party which enjoys a monopoly of state power, including control of the army and the police. While the ruling party, the Sandinista National Liberation Front [FSLN], has accepted electoral reforms in the context of Central American peace negotiations, it possesses vastly superior financial and organizational resources, including those made available to it by virtue of holding state power and aid from Cuba, Libya, and the Soviet bloc. Given the desperate economic circumstances in the country, its ability to use the offer or denial of jobs, food, and housing as political incentives and to discourage people from joining the opposition is an enormous advantage.

No amount of aid to UNO can rectify this imbalance. But such aid can nonetheless be justified out of considerations of fairness and the need to level the playing field by giving UNO sufficient resources to establish itself as a credible democratic force.

It would be preferable if such support could be obtained elsewhere; and indeed, it is hoped that UNO will be able to obtain direct campaign support from Latin America and Europe. But sufficient support is not available from within Nicaragua, given the utter impoverishment of the country. Indeed, the economic decline has produced an urgent need for elementary infrastructure support.

The democratic groups in Nicaragua want this support. They do not believe that their efforts will suffer by receiving noncampaign support from the United States. This judgment call is theirs to make. In this regard, UNO has specifically requested support from the National Endowment for Democracy and its Democratic and Republican Party institutes, not directly from the U.S. Government. They also request that such support be given openly, subject to public and international scrutiny and in the spirit of democratic solidarity.

Consistent with the statute governing NED programs, no funds made available in this legislation may be used to support campaign activities. Standard to all NED grant agreements is a provision which states that, "No funds provided hereunder shall be used to finance the campaigns of candidates for public office;" language requiring the maintenance of "* * * such records as may be reasonably necessary to fully disclose the amount and the disposition * * *" of the funds granted under the agreement; and a series of other provisions establishing procedures to ensure that funds are spent for the purposes stated in the grant.

All NED grant agreements include provisions allowing for an interruption of the flow of funds or termination of the grants if the grantee is found to be in violation of the terms of the agreements.

The National Democratic Institute for International Affairs [NDI] and the National Republican Institute for International Affairs [NRI] would serve as the United States grantees for NED support to democratic political groups in Nicaragua. NDI and NRI will be receiving a proposal from a prominent U.S.-based international accounting firm laying out what role it can serve in establishing and carrying out ongoing accounting and auditing functions. The institutes would work with this proposal and the firm to establish strict policy guidelines and management structures for ensuring segregation of NED funds from campaign activities. Grant agreements would not be signed until budgets are worked out based on policy guidelines, management and accounting requirements. It is anticipated that the necessary consultations would begin as soon as possible.

These consultations would include a review of all budget items requested to ascertain which elements of the budget might be in conflict with NED's prohibition against support for candidates. Specifically, all budget items, including salaries, will be analyzed to determine which of the costs can legitimately be segregated as noncampaign expenditures for nonpartisan purposes after the start of the campaign period on December 4. In addition to salaries, the review would include an analysis of equipment purchases and ancillary activities. In addition to contracting with a major firm to establish accounting structures, NRI and NDI intend to contract for management, purchasing and legal services and will establish a permanent presence in Nicaragua to ensure that all financial and programmatic policies are followed.

Mr. Speaker, it is the Nicaraguan people, not the United States, who must contest this election. It is they who must organize, communicate and do all the other hard work that will be involved in this difficult campaign. All that can be done from here is to provide assistance to those who want a democratic future for Nicaragua so they can function as effectively as possible under the circumstances. If they do, they may have a chance to make this election the occasion for the institutionalization of pluralism, the empowerment of previously marginalized democratic forces, and the establishment of peaceful political competition—grounded in the strategic freedoms of expression and association—as the means of resolving disputes and achieving national reconciliation.

Regardless of the outcome of the February elections, the only true guarantor of democracy in Nicaragua is an active, well-organized civil society. A sustained effort to build and nurture the institutions of democracy in Nicaragua is necessary to ensure that the political opening which now exists does not close abruptly after February 25, 1990. While this legislation requires the Agency for International Development to obligate the funds by February 28, 1990, it is my intention that the National Endowment for Democracy and its grantees develop long-term programs to promote pluralism by aiding the broad civic opposition in Nicaragua beyond this relatively short campaign period.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation was introduced and jointly referred to the Committees on Appropriations and Foreign Affairs on Monday. The bill is of great interest to members of my committee. Yet, in order to accommodate the wishes of the leadership and because of my strong support for a sustained effort to aid democratic forces in Nicaragua, as chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I agreed to the House's consideration of this legislation today. For the record, I would like to insert a copy of my letter to the Speaker on this matter.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of H.R. 3385, as amended. Given the stakes involved, I believe that the circumstances in this case warrant approval of this support for democracy in Nicaragua and I encourage our colleagues to support the measure.

The letter follows:

COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS,
Washington, DC, October 3, 1989.

Hon. THOMAS S. FOLEY,
The Speaker, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: The bill H.R. 3385, to provide assistance for free and fair elections in Nicaragua, was introduced and referred jointly to the Committees on Appropriations and Foreign Affairs yesterday, on October 2, 1989. It is my understanding that it is your intention that this legislation, as reported this morning by the Committee on Appropriations, be considered expeditiously by the full House.

As you know, the bill, as introduced and amended by the Committee on Appropriations, contains legislative provisions within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. Specifically, the bill, as introduced, waives existing provisions of law in order to provide the assistance stipulated therein and contains a statement of policy with respect to the use of the funds.

Although the Committee on Foreign Affairs was not consulted with respect to the procedure for handling this bill, I fully support the purpose of the legislation. Therefore, without prejudice to the Committee's jurisdiction and to accommodate the Leadership, I have no objection to consideration of the bill, as reported by the Committee on Appropriations, in the House tomorrow. Thank you for your consideration.

With best wishes, I am

Sincerely yours,

DANTE B. FASCELL,
Chairman.

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, this is a sad day for the U.S. House of Representatives. It is a sad day when the most powerful democracy in the world decides that we are so threatened by an impoverished nation of 3 million people that we feel obligated to buy an election.

In the process, we hurt the cause of democracy. We tarnish the reputation of the National Endowment for Democracy. That organization has been so successful precisely because it has avoided taking one side in an election campaign—but scrupulously supported the process of free and fair elections.

The vote this afternoon is portrayed as whether or not we support democracy in Nicaragua. That simply is not the issue. We all support democracy in Nicaragua. And in Poland, in Hungary, in Chile, and in the Soviet Union. But we don't inject millions of dollars into a country where the per capita income is $300. We don't run a campaign for our own hand-picked candidate. This package is akin to a foreign government sending $800 million to a U.S. Presidential candidate.

We support ballot boxes, voter registration, election observers because we believe that democracy offers the fullest expression of self-determination. But once we cross the line and begin funding particular candidates, we inject the U.S. Government into the process and we infringe upon the individual right we are seeking to protect.

The package is billed as a way to level the playing field. But over the last 10 years, U.S. policy has focused on leveling the entire country. The Reagan administration began with a covert program designed to interdict arms. Then, we tried to make the Sandinistas "cry uncle." When the administration failed to get public support for the Contra war, they took the operation off the books and we ended up with the Iran-Contra fiasco—the biggest scandal of the decade. In the name of democracy, innumerable laws were broken in this country to bring democracy to that country. Given the historical context, we do no favor to the Nicaraguan opposition by stamping their candidate "made in the U.S.A."

We have a golden opportunity to help support the democratic process. Or we can subvert it. For the greatest democracy in the world, that choice should be clear. Vote for the Durbin amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KLECZKA). All time has expired.

Pursuant to the rule, the amendments recommended by the Committee on Appropriations are considered as having been adopted.

The text of H.R. 3385, as amended by the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations, is as follows:

H.R. 3385

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That of the amounts remaining unexpended from funds allocated to the Agency for International Development, up to $3,000,000 of the funds made available by section 9 of Public Law 100-276, and up to $6,000,000 of the funds made available by section 2 of Public Law 101-14, may be used by the Administrator of the Agency for International Development, notwithstanding any other provision of law, for assistance for the promotion of democracy and national reconciliation in Nicaragua: Provided, That such assistance may be made available only as follows: (1) up to $5,000,000 in assistance to internal groups, such as support for political organizations and alliances, independent elements of the media, independent labor unions, and business, civic, and professional groups through and consistent with the charter and standard operating procedures of the National Endowment for Democracy; and for support for the election process and monitoring including, but not limited to the organizations specified in proviso 2(c) below, and (2) up to $4,000,000 (a) for election support intended to ensure the conduct of free, fair, and open elections through and consistent with the charter of the National Endowment for Democracy (which may include contributions through the National Opposition Union to the Supreme Electorial Council as necessary); (b) for support for the election process and monitoring, and; (c) of which not less than $400,000 shall be made available for the Council of Freely-Elected Heads of Government, and of which not less than $250,000 shall be made available for the Center for Democracy and of which not less than $400,000 shall be made available for the Center for Training and Election Promotion: Provided further, That the provisions of section 7, 8, and 9 of Public Law 101-14 shall be applicable to funds made available by this Act: Provided further, That the Agency for International Development shall report to the appropriate Committee of Congress prior to obligation of funds: Provided further, That all travel by Members of Congress conducted pursuant to the upcoming Presidential elections in Nicaragua shall be in accordance with section 1754, title 22, United States Code: Provided further, That it is the sense of Congress that the National Opposition Union's representative on the Supreme Electorial Council are used solely for technical electoral purposes, such as ballot boxes and ballot printing: Provided further, That funds made available by this Act shall remain available until February 28, 1990.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is now in order to consider the amendment printed in House Report 101-268 by, and if offered by, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN] or his designee. Said amendment shall be debatable for 60 minutes, equally divided and controlled by the proponent of the amendment and a Member opposed thereto and shall not be subject to amendment.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. DURBIN

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DURBIN: Strike the first "$3,000,000" and insert "$400,000";

After the first "Public Law 100-276", strike the word "and" and all that follows through the phrase "the provisions of sections 7," and insert "shall be made available for the Council of Freely-Elected Heads of Government for the sole purpose of monitoring the election process: Provided further, That the provisions of Sections 7,"; and strike the next to the last proviso.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. DURBIN] will be recognized for 30 minutes and a Member opposed will be recognized for 30 minutes.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the amendment, but I would like to guarantee that I can yield 15 minutes of my time to the gentleman from Oklahoma, and that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS], in turn, might be able to yield portions of his time.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I make that as a unanimous-consent request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY] will be allotted 15 minutes, and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS] may receive the balance of the time, 15 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN].

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that the legislation being considered by the House of Representatives suggests we appropriate $9 million to the National Endowment for Democracy to the nation of Nicaragua for their electoral process. Prior to entering into the debate on the specifics and wisdom of that proposal, I would like to make note for the record that the following language is included in the authorizing legislation of the National Endowment for Democracy:

Funds may not be expended either by the Endowment or by any of its guarantees to finance the campaigns of candidates for public office.

Another point I would like to make is that the present population of Nicaragua is approximately 3½ million people, about 1½ million voters. What the administration is proposing with this additional $9 million, that we spend over $12.5 million, through the National Endowment for Democracy, to influence the February 1990 election in Nicaragua.

I would hope that Members of the House would compare that total spending of $12.5 million for 1½ million voters to what we have spent in other nations around the world in pursuit of democracy through the same National Endowment. In Poland, a nation of 36 million people, we spent $2.7 million. In the Philippines, a nation of 50 million, we spent less than $1 million. In Chile, a nation of 12 million people, we spent $1.5 million.

Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KOSTMAYER].

Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Speaker, this is an awful lot of money for a very small country. It is a $9 million package. About $1 million of the $9 million will be used for President Carter's group and related groups. That leaves about $8 million. A couple of hours ago I called Carl Gershman, the very able director of the National Endowment for Democracy, and I asked him when they could get this $8 million, if it is approved today, when they could get it to Nicaragua. He said probably not until early November. That means it will be spending that money between early November and election day on February 14. That is about $600,000 per week. It is about $6 per vote. A major component of that budget is for voter registration, but voter registration will be over by November 1. What is the $600,000 per week going to be spent on? Others have dealt with the list: $615,000 for salaries, benefits and related expenses; $1,345,000 for vehicles, traveling allowances for UNO representatives to visit overseas. That is an awful lot of money, Mr. Speaker.

What this does is to make NED an arm of the Government. That is not what NED is supposed to be. This $9 million, plus the $3.5 million that we are already spending in Nicaragua, through NED comes to a total of $12.5 million in Nicaragua. Last year NED's budget worldwide was $12.3 million. We will spend $12.5 million in one country over a short period of time, when last year NED's entire worldwide budget was only $12.3 million. That is too much money. It is a bad policy. It ought to be rejected, and the Durbin amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I was sorely tempted to vote for the Durbin amendment, but in the end I decided that I would oppose it for two simple reasons. No. 1, I think a case could be made that some additional assistance for electoral process activities, not political party activities, can be made. I think the United States could legitimately provide that assistance without doing injury either to the National Endowment for Democracy or our own national interests.

Second, I think the Durbin amendment is defective because it is very selective in terms of the money it is going to provide. It is willing to provide $400,000 for the Council of Freely Elected Government which is headed by President Carter.

Mr. Speaker, I have absolute confidence that they will do a fine job in overseeing the election activities down there, and I think that we ought to provide that $400,000.

However, Mr. Speaker, there are two other organizations who are also actively involved in trying to assure fair elections down there. One is the Center for Democracy. The bill, as presented for the administration, contains a $250,000 item for them. Also the Center for Training and Election Promotion in San Jose is also providing $400,000 for their election work in Nicaragua. I think that is also a legitimate expenditure.

Mr. Speaker, the Durbin amendment does not provide for those, and, therefore, I think the Durbin amendment is not adequately balanced, and I will, therefore, vote against it.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ALEXANDER].

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN] for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the gentleman's amendment, the gentleman from Illinois. We have had a sad and disgraceful history between our country and Nicaragua from overthrowing popularly elected governments to installing dictators. And now we are attempting to openly support the democratic process by providing money from our country through the National Endowment of Democracy.

Mr. Speaker, I think that generally is good. I think that it is a watershed in Central American relations with the United States.

However, like others who have spoken here this evening, I am very much concerned that there is too much money and too few rules to guide the administration of these funds, and we all know that money corrupts and that $9 million in a very poor, impoverished country is equivalent to maybe $100 or $200 million and will probably corrupt the process there.

Mr. Speaker, I am also concerned that the initiative may backfire, and whomever we support might be opposed by the Nicaraguan people. That would be the effect in my State if someone from Oklahoma tried to come over to Arkansas and openly influence an election. I mean we would all vote against them, and that is the way it works with other peoples as well.

Mr. Speaker, I am very much concerned that the amount of money and the lack of rules might also tarnish the reputation of the National Endowment for Democracy, and I want to rise this evening and urge my colleagues to support the Durbin amendment which I think reduces the amount of funds, makes some rules that are necessary and gives this new initiative, this new change of direction, in Central American relations a chance to succeed.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. KYL].

Mr. KYL. Mr. Speaker, this aid package has very broad bipartisan support. It is not a campaign assistance program, but rather supportive of the electoral process, as we have heard, and it is legal under Nicaraguan law. As a matter of fact, part of the money is even taxed by the Sandinista government.

The Durbin amendment, therefore, is perplexing and really devastating to a fair prospect for fair elections in Nicaragua. For years we have been promoting democracy in Central America. We finally signed off on plans for elections removing support for the Contras and getting them out of Nicaragua.

We have all said that we support the holding of free and fair elections in Nicaragua. What do we mean by support? Are these only hollow words?

Mr. Speaker, we have criticized the President for not supporting the Chinese students, for not supporting the new Polish Government more, for not supporting the democracy in Panama. Here we have a chance to really back up our words with actions, real support, and $9 million is not too much when starting from scratch.

Mr. Speaker, this money supports the process, the monitoring, the balloting, the voter registration, the get-out-the-vote campaign, civic meetings, international observers' training of poll workers, and, yes, even transportation. That is true. However they have absolutely none, and that is why $9 million, starting from scratch, is not too much.

Mr. Speaker, all of these are things that NED has previously supported in Panama, Chile, the Philippines, and Poland.

We should oppose the Durbin amendment which would gut the funding of this resolution. We have one chance here because time is very short, as has been pointed out. They are already partly through the registration process.

My colleagues, the Durbin amendment is tantamount to killing the resolution. I urge my colleagues to vote no on the Durbin amendment.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COLEMAN].

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I think that there are a lot of us that came to the floor with a determination to try to make up our minds after listening to some debate on this issue. I do not think it is all that clear-cut. I did not think so up until just a few minutes ago.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to tell my colleagues that one of the problems that I am personally going to have with this piece of legislation is, No. 1, I hesitated to oppose it because I am never sure I am completely right, like some of my other colleagues appear to be. Second, my view was that perhaps we would do just the reverse of what we intended to do by providing the kind of assistance that this bill purports to provide.

However, Mr. Speaker, let me say to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON] who preceded me in the well by some speakers it has always been a part, quite truthfully, of the undercurrent in this House that, if somehow one does not support the administration's position with respect to Nicaragua, that they would somehow be coddling communism.

Mr. Speaker, I take that personally, and what the gentleman just said on the floor ahead of us I think deserves to be taken back by him.

As far as I am concerned, the Durbin amendment ought to be passed. This bill is not worth the paper it is printed on so long as there is the belief that the rest of us are coddling Communists if we do not support their position. Well, they can forget it.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER].

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, it is very clear that a simple choice stands before us. Does the United States of America stand for the cause of freedom and democracy by supplying $9 million? It is a small amount of money when we are talking about an issue like freedom.

Or, Mr. Speaker, does the United States of America do nothing, basically nothing, and stand back and allow this Communist, totalitarian, and repressive regime to remain in control?

I think it is a very simple choice. We have in this decade seen 13 countries, now 14 countries, have free and fair elections, countries which had not had elections throughout the decade and who had not had elections for years and years in the past, and now I think it is important for us to do everything that we can to put this aid package in place.

Many people have said that we are supporting one particular party. Mr. Speaker, this coalition consists of the Communist party; the AFL-CIO is heavily involved, the union party, all the way to the conservative party. They are united. They are united because they have one simple and basic goal, Mr. Speaker, and that is to turn out the Sandinistas.

Will this $9 million package make it possible for free and fair elections? I fear that it will not. The election is one-quarter of the way complete because of the registration process which is overwhelmingly stacked against UNO, the opposition. Unfortunately we have seen hurdle after hurdle established by the Sandinistas. They have millions, in fact hundreds of millions, of dollars which has gone into Nicaragua from the Soviet Union and Libya.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that we need to have at least this $9 million package, and I urge opposition to the Durbin amendment.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SKELTON].

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, I stand to oppose the Durbin amendment. I stand for what is in the bill which is, of course, $9 million in fiscal year 1990 funds drawn from previously appropriated funds, $5 million to the National Endowment for Democracies, $400,000 to the Council of Freely Elected Heads of Government, $250,000 to the Center for Democracies and $400,000 for the Center for Training and Promotion, plus $4 million for general election support.

I think the important thing is that we stand for a full, free, and fair election. This is an attempt to help that come to pass.

The cards are stacked against the opposition. We know that as a result of the Sandinista government and the roadblocks that have been mentioned here toward a free election.

I am convinced and I will predict that if we are able to pass this amendment and the money is allowed to be spent for the general election support and that there is a truly free and open election, you will see what happened in Panama and the opposition will win and it will win overwhelmingly.

I think it is important that we have and establish the framework for a free and fair election there.

We need to level the playing field in an electoral process that is heavily tilted toward the government, that is, the Sandinistas favor.

Mr. Speaker, this is not military aid. It is not covert aid. The National Endowment for Democracies will not be allowed to support any particular party.

This money will go to voter registration. It will go to education. It will go to poll watching. It is designed to encourage the internal political opposition to fight the good fight, and if they do fight the good fight, we will have a free, fair and open election and we know what it will be like in Panama. The opposition will win.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI].

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the Durbin amendment to H.R. 3385. The Durbin amendment would strike $8.6 million of the proposed $9 million for assistance for the elections in Nicaragua, leaving $400,000 for election monitoring. H.R. 3385 unamended would provide $9 million in assistance for elections in Nicaragua. This legislation is not appropriate for a number of reasons.

Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt that every Member on both sides of the aisle is a strong supporter of democracy and wants to promote democracy and free elections everywhere.

I oppose H.R. 3385 because I do not believe that the Bush administration's plan to assist in the Nicaraguan elections will achieve any of these goals.

Nine million dollars, contrary to what some of our colleagues have stated, $9 million is an extremely large amount of money to be spending on an election in Nicaragua. There has already been $3.5 million appropriated to build the democratic process in Nicaragua. The additional $9 million, bringing it to $12.5 million spread over 1.5 million Nicaraguan voters, equals $6 for every voter in a country where the average per capital income is $300.

We have heard these figures before this afternoon. I just want to revisit them.

A foreign government undertaking a similar effort to influence the elections in the United States, an action which would be illegal, would spend over $800 million. That is the comparable figure.

As many of my colleagues will point out, although the United States generally advocates a position of neutrality in foreign elections, we have aided opposition parties in the 1988 Chilean plebiscite and the 1989 elections in Panama. This plan for $9 million, combined with the $3.5 million already appropriated would mean we would be spending almost 40 times more per capita to influence the Nicaraguan elections than we spent on the Chilean plebiscite. I find the arithmetic and the amounts proposed staggering. The United States aid would nearly equal the total cost of $14.4 for administering the Nicaraguan election as estimated by the Nicaraguan supreme electoral.

H.R. 3385 is uncomfortably vague about the activities on which the money can be spent. The administration is unable or unwilling to provide a detailed accounting for how American taxpayer's dollars would be used in the Nicaraguan election, raising the very real possibility that it will be misused. What will the money be used for? The Bush plan proposes millions for voter registration—a process that will only be on-going for another 2 weeks in Nicaragua. Our Federal Government does not even expend any funds for voter registration in our own country.

We have learned the hard way that even when there are laws in place, zealots will find ways around them. It is totally unacceptable to support a plan that contains no guidelines or restrictions for activities in a region in which the temptation for the administration to interfere is great. As we search for ways to promote democracy, we must realize that our activities are setting bad examples of how a democracy might work.

There are indeed legitimate activities to promote democracy. The administration has not presented us with any comprehensive plan for such activities. Fiddling around in the Nicaraguan electoral process runs the real risk of creating an atmosphere hostile to "Yankee Imperialism" and a backlash against the very democratic process which we seek to encourage.

I do believe that there is a legitimate role to be played in the Nicaraguan elections by international election monitors. I support the Durbin amendment because I believe that it supports the kinds of activities which we must encourage, unbiased international election monitoring. We want to ensure that free and fair elections are held in Nicaragua. Let us set an example by making positive that our own Government does not participate in activities which will prejudice the election. I urge my colleagues to oppose the obscene expenditure of $9 million for uncertain, vague and possibly illegal activities.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE].

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, you know, it is a fascinating exercise we are watching here. We have known for some time that there are elements in this Chamber that want to emasculate the Contras, and they succeeded. The Contras are now fading into refugee status, but they put all their eggs in the basket of democracy, free and fair elections, but now we see an effort to pull the life support system on free and fair elections, $400,000 instead of $9 million.

Well, if you want an already vertical playing field to become even more perpendicular, I suppose go ahead. Imagine $400,000 against $500 million a year from the Soviet Union in military and economic support a year, $500 million. The army is dominated by the opposition party. If Mrs. Chamorro wins, what is she going to do for an army? They are all in the Sandinista camp; telephones, access to the media, a stacked election commission, and we begrudge them $9 million, half of which I guess goes to the electoral commission under their laws.

I should think people who have successfully emasculated the Contras would have a serious interest in seeing that somehow there is a pass at a free and fair election, but that is not so.

To the gentleman from Texas who said that they are being accused of coddling Communists, I would disavow that notion totally, but I would say that actions have consequences. There is a Latin phrase, "cui bono?" Who benefits?

Now, Neville Chamberlain did not coddle Hitler. I am sure he was as great an English patriot as Lord Nelson, but what he did benefited the Nazis and caused an awful lot of deaths in World War II.

And so what we are doing with the Sandinistas by not giving the democratic opposition adequate resources, they do not have telephones, they do not have trained poll watchers, they do not have transport; by not giving them a modicum of assistance and resources, not to the candidates, but to the process, it is already farcical, and this makes it even more so.

I will tell you, I know how Henry Jackson would vote were he alive on the Durbin amendment. I know how Harry Truman would vote on the Durbin amendment. I know how John F. Kennedy would vote, and yes, I know how George McGovern would vote.

I would suggest that you should have an interest now that you have made refugees out of the Contras in giving democracy a half even chance. Give David a slingshot as he goes against the Sandinista Goliath.

I hope and pray that you will reject this poisonous amendment and give democracy half a fighting chance.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MRAZEK].

Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Illinois, we have blown hundreds of millions of dollars on the Contras that has gone into their bank accounts and their Gucci suits and their Rolex watches, and now the gentleman acts as if $400,000 is a pittance in a country where some people are rubbing sticks together to make fire.

I would like to tell you, tell the people of Charleston what they could do with $9 million when they have lost everything they have got.

Mr. HYDE. They could vote.

Mr. MRAZEK. Think what your local school districts could do with $9 million. With $9 million, your local school district might be able to provide a little better education for your kids.

Maybe we ought to think about that a little more.

Now, I happen to have a breakdown here of where all those millions of dollars are going to be spent in that godforsaken country.

We have got courtesy invitations to visiting delegations, $140,000.

Travel allowance and per diem, $600,000. Well, there is $740,000.

Why do we not send Malcolm Forbes and Liz Taylor down there with their team? What do you think? They could enjoy a good party for $740,000.

Here we have vehicles, $1.345 million, that is one million, three hundred forty-five thousand dollars.

What are we doing, are we taking these people to the polls in a fleet of Jaguars?

□ 1900

Education programs for registration and voting, $720,000. In those big city machines in Chicago and New York City, they used to talk about a chicken in every pot. It sounds to me for this kind of money like we are going to be putting a CIA agent in every hut down there. We are talking about seminars, lectures, and meetings, $315,000. Who are we sending down there to provide these lectures and seminars? I know that Ollie North is getting $50,000 a speech now, but that would only be six speeches, so I assume that for all of the people we need to educate, we are going to have to send down more than Ollie North.

I think we have to be concerned that we are going to be looked at as the big gringo again trying to buy an election and corrupting the results of an election in which a lot of human beings for the first time will hopefully have an opportunity, in a free and fair election, to vote.

They have the same hopes and dreams for their children that they have a better life that we have for our children. Yet, we have to make sure they get registered. I do not think we have to spend $9 million to get a process through to get them registered.

I know the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS] himself suggested on his recent trip to Nicaragua he said he was able to see 50 people walk in and register while he was there observing alone.

We are a nation of laws. It is what separates us from the nations we so easily condemn on this floor, and as a nation of laws and a nation of respect for laws, yes, we do have a responsibility to see that we can help to monitor a free and fair election in Nicaragua, but let us not waste more American taxpayer dollars that could be better spent in Charleston or in your own school districts on a process which clearly cannot effectively utilize this money, which is designed to buy an election, which will be counterproductive in terms of how a victory by Mrs. Chamorro is looked at, and Lord knows, I hope Mrs. Chamorro is elected. But when she is elected, it will have to be on the basis that we allowed a free and fair election with $400,000 designed for monitoring, and a lot of people who want to make sure that that free and fair election takes place.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. BOSCO].

Mr. BOSCO. Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the word Nicaragua means in Spanish—but I do know what it means in English—"Let's waste money." We wasted millions when we gave it to the Sandanistas, we wasted millions when we gave it to the Contras, and now we're about to waste millions by giving it to the apparently innocuous election process.

Now I do not know exactly how this money is going to be used. I have heard the purpose described as everything from poll watchers to paying Mrs. Chamorro's phone bill. This amendment will apparently help former President Carter and his group.

I will say people in Communist countries don't have much trouble getting out to vote. Sixty-five percent voted in Poland and ousted the Communist government there. Eighty percent voted in the Soviet Union and turned the party upside down—even defeating some longtime Soviet politicians who didn't have any opponents.

Let us look at voting in Central America. An overwhelming number of people showed up in Panama, ousted Noriega and his friends, forcing him to steal the ballot boxes. People stood in lines to vote in El Salvador, even while they were being shot at. In Guatemala over 80 percent of the people voted.

If we are worried about people voting—let's do something about our own turnout—only 53 percent of those eligible voted in our last Presidential election.

Maybe that is because people are tired of us wasting money. The $9 million is a waste. The $400,000 is a waste.

We are not used to leaving people alone. Especially when we can waste money on them. But in this case I think leaving the people of Nicaragua alone—without 1 cent of our largesse that may very well do the best thing, for them and for us.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KLECZKA].

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker and Members, I rise in support of the Durbin amendment, not because it is my first choice but because it is the only choice. My personal preference would have been to provide a small amount of money to help out for voter registration and things of that nature, clearly, not buying four-wheel vehicles which will end up in the camp of Daniel Ortega come next February.

Mr. Speaker, let me try to put the debate in a different light. Let us just suppose that Dan Ortega and the Sandinistas in the last Presidential election here in this country sent Michael Dukakis $4 million. What would be the reaction from the Bush campaign? What would be the reaction from the Republican side of the aisle? My lord, the outcry would be deafening, totally deafening. But what are we doing today? We are doing in essence the very same thing.

A portion of this legislation, about $4 million, will go to the opposition party, UNO, and its candidate, Mrs. Chamorro.

Under Nicaraguan law, 50 percent of that goes to the Supreme Electoral Council. The gentleman from Texas on the other side indicated that, yes, there is one representative on the council from the opposition party. In fact, there are two opposition members on the election council, but clearly not a majority. The majority is controlled by the Sandinistas.

By our vote today, we are going to give a minimum of $2 million to the Sandinista reelection campaign of Dan Ortega, and I think it is kind of comical. It is going to be very comical in a short while to watch my friends on the other side of the aisle vote $2 million of U.S. taxpayers' money for their good friend, Dan Ortega.

I just had the opportunity, with three other colleagues, to return from Nicaragua, and we toured the camps. We met with the refugees. We went to the hospitals to see the little children who have been maimed by this war, and I tell the Members, my friends, if we have an additional $9 million laying around in this country, let us earmark it for the child survival fund where in that country we cannot only provide corrective surgery for the kids who had their limbs blown off; so we could provide prostheses so these kids can walk and have a normal life. But to give $2 million to Dan Ortega, I think, is totally absurd, and I plead with my colleagues to support the Durbin amendment.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. DEFAZIO].

Mr. DEFAZIO. Mr. Speaker, with all the other pressing national questions, with thousands of homeless Americans in Washington this week to tell us we have failed to provide affordable housing in America, with veterans' medical care in crisis, how do we suddenly come up with $9 million in an attempt to buy an election in one of the poorest nations on Earth, $9 million outside the regular appropriations and authorizations process, $9 million in 36 hours? Because it is a crisis?

Mr. Speaker, why can we not show the same urgency in bringing bills to the floor that will help American citizens? This Congress has already appropriated $3.5 million, $2 per voter, for the National Endowment for Democracy. This bill adds $9 million on top of that, $5 per voter, public funding for elections in Nicaragua, public funding for voter registration in Nicaragua, and not a penny here at home.

My friends, democracy starts at home. Vote for the Durbin amendment and turn back this hypocrisy.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCURDY].

Mr. MCCURDY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the Durbin amendment. As I have argued many times on this floor, our policy toward Nicaragua has, for too long, been characterized by a bitter partisanship unrivaled on other foreign policy debates. The result has been that the democratic center in the House has given way to extremes on both ends of the political spectrum.

The potential for a fresh approach toward Nicaragua came earlier this year when, after Daniel Ortega promised to hold free and fair elections in February 1990, the administration and the bipartisan leadership in Congress reached an agreement to sustain the Nicaraguan resistance with humanitarian aid through the elections.

Since Ortega made this promise last January, a consensus has been building that the United States should take decisive action to promote democracy in Nicaragua by leveling the playing field without directly interfering in the elections. The package the administration has sent up today accomplishes this important objective. It will support the democratic process in a number of important ways. It will allow the National Endownment for Democracy and its affiliate institutes to carry out activities similar to those pursued by NED in Chile, Panama, the Philippines, and Poland. These activities include training, party building, civic education, "Get out the vote" drives, election monitoring, support for international observers, and other critical programs which will ensure a maximum voter turnout.

Mr. Speaker, this package deserves our support. But the Durbin amendment threatens to undo all of this.

Supporters of the Durbin amendment argue that it is too much money. However, the fact is that 10 years of Sandinista rule have done great harm to the democratic process in Nicaragua, and it will take money to repair and restore it. The $9 million in the administration's package not only will promote the democratic process for the election in February, it also will lay the foundations for its continued development after the elections take place.

Proponents of the Durbin amendment also claim that the reputation of NED will be damaged if we adopt this aid package. Yet the Board of Directors of NEC, which includes such distinguished individuals as DANTE FASCELL, Lane Kirkland, Zbig Brzezinski, and Charles Manatt, has unanimously endorsed this proposal. It is ludicrous to suggest that the Board of Directors would do anything to put NED's reputation at risk. Again, NED has carried out similar activities in other parts of the world. Are Nicaraguans less deserving of a democratic process than Poles, Chileans, and Panamanians? I do not think they are.

Finally, supporters of the Durbin amendment contend that we might somehow discredit the outcome of the election or allow the Sandinistas to claim that we are buying the election. Mr. Speaker, the Sandinistas will make these accusations even if we do not send a dime to Nicaragua.

Nicaragua is at a political crossroads, and we have an opportunity to put it on the path to democracy. The Sandinistas are taking advantage of every resource of the state to frustrate the opposition's campaign. We should make this minimal gesture to ensure that the opposition has an opportunity to compete with the Sandinistas on a level playing field.

I urge my colleagues to oppose the Durbin amendment and support the bill to provide free and fair elections in Nicaragua.

□ 1910

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT].

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I came over because I heard the gentleman from California [Mr. Bosco] and

I thought it was the most formative speech I have heard on this subject for a long time.

I just would like to say that Congress had better start talking about Toyotas. Sandinistas will take care of themselves.

If we keep sending money down there we are just buoying up the economy. They do not have enough money to keep toilet paper on the shelves in their stores. Communism is falling apart and $400,000 is more than enough.

We better start looking at Toyotas and start talking about soybeans around here before in about 10 years we will be shipping foreign aid over with the yen.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 minutes.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, let me say I am sorry that my good friend, the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. DICK DURBIN, and he is a friend, is wrong on this amendment, because he is right on so many of the other things that he brings to the House floor.

I am surprised by the Members who have suddenly become fiscal conservatives and who find it shocking that we would provide $9 million to help promote democracy in a nation where people are starving for democracy.

I wish these Members had had the same sense of fiscal responsibility when other bills had come to the floor, but it was lacking at that time. But I am always glad to welcome converts.

I am also very interested in the fact that so many of my colleagues find it so outrageous that we would involve ourselves in foreign elections and in foreign politics. I do not remember hearing them say that about Chile; I do not remember hearing them say that about Panama; but I guess I was just not listening, because I am sure they did. My colleagues are very consistent. I will go back and look in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and find those comments.

I am a little surprised at the concern about how quickly we have moved at the request of the Speaker of this House to provide $9 million for the elections in Nicaragua. It seems we moved just about as quickly to provide $200 million to Mrs. Aquino in the Philippines, and I am very glad that we did.

I am not neutral between democracy and dictatorship. I do not think it is wrong to take a stand and say they are not morally equivalent.

I urge my colleagues to vote down the Durbin amendment. I urge my colleagues to vote for this small amount of money to promote democracy in our hemisphere.

I associate myself closely with the words of my friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. MRAZEK], they are human like us. They have the same dreams we have, they have the same aspirations we have. Let us not deny them the right to a free and fair election on a level playing field.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. HUNTER].

Mr. HUNTER. Promoting democracy and helping people who want to be free is and should be the life blood of the U.S. foreign policy. A couple of speakers have said that we want to prevent bloodshed. My friends, democracy is the alternative to bloodshed.

If Members do not want to give this money, if you do not want to spend money to help Nicaraguans and democracy, to build democracy in their own country, then we might as well tear down this picture of Lafayette and put up perhaps a picture of Scrooge.

This is absolutely critical. As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] said, we have the Soviet Union financing the other side to the tune of $500 million or $600 million a year. To fiscal conservatives, sure, even if we have to give a couple of thousand to Daniel Ortega, this is worth it, because this is the only chance we have.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH].

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

I just want to point out, and I think it makes a lot of sense, many in the majority party have outlined a plan to aid Hungary and Poland to the tune of $887 million.

Imagine that. We are going to give $887 million to Hungary and Poland, who are still part of the Warsaw Pact, not that we should not do things there. Obviously we should. But we are reluctant to allocate less than 1 percent of that amount to a country in our own hemisphere that wants to have some kind of election down there.

The problem I have with giving the $9 million is I am concerned this is going to validate the election. If there is an election held in Nicaragua and there are phony results, which I fear and I suspect in advance of those elections, people are going to stand up on the left side of this issue and argue that we just had a free fair election and it has been validated by putting this $9 million in there.

We put ourselves in the trick bag in this case. But do you know what? This is the only game in town, and that is why we have got to do the $9 million, because we have no other option at this point. Let us give the election a chance.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I think it is pretty clear that upon examination of this measure this is not a question of fiscal conservatism or liberalism, this is a question of whether we are a fiscal fool to send $9 million into this process, and we are asked to vote on it before it is determined how that money will be used, who the recipients will be, and the purposes to which it will be put.

The notion is that somehow this is an endorsement of freedom if we simply vote for this $9 million. The notion is that they cannot have freedom unless we spend this $9 million. We cannot have a free and fair election even though there will be every monitoring group that exists in the world involved in this process.

We are into this election process $1 billion. We funded the Contras, we have destroyed their economy, we have taken Mrs. Chamorro, and we buy her newsprint, we pay for her newspaper to run, we make sure that she has access to newsprint, we funded her entire operation, and now we are going to provide her the very best election that America can buy.

You could have had—if you want to take a stand for democracy, you could have taken it for free yesterday, had the President just grabbed General Noriega when he had his hands on him. But he chose to send him back.

What is it going to cost us to promote democracy in Panama? Is that another $9 million or $10 million?

We already had that election. We already had the dictator. The people spoke out yesterday, people risked their lives, and we threw them to the wolves. Do not tell me about your commitment to freedom. You had your hands on him. But you decided you would not do it. You would not take the risk for democracy to set an entire nation free, but now you tell us you are going to spend $9 million and somehow that is going to assure freedom. It will not work, it will not work.

These Contras would not fight unless we paid them. UNO would not stay in business unless we paid them. They have squirreled away the money in their bank accounts. And apparently now they will not register and go vote unless we pay them.

Is this not a time that we make this a Nicaraguan election rather than an American election? Is it not time that we step back and let the Nicaraguan people decide this? Then should they decide to vote for Mrs. Chamorro, and I hope that they do, then we ought to consider aid just as we did in the case of the Philippines, aid in the case of Poland, when we see that that demonstration has taken place. We ought not to be voting for this $9 million.

The Durbin approach is a reasoned approach so that this election can be monitored, it can be certified, we can determine that it is either free and fair or it is a farce and we can take appropriate action at that time.

We should not be spending this money and sending it down the same rathole with the same rats that took us for a billion dollars.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN].

Mr. DORNAN of California. With all due respect to the rhetoric on the other side—please, some of you gentlemen please listen.

With all due respect to the rhetoric on the other side, Mr. MILLER of California, Violetta Chamorro is not a rat. You got that? She is not a rat. And what she is trying to do down there is not a rathole. When her husband was assassinated in January——

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DORNAN of California. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. MILLER of California. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, my reference was to the same people that have been sucking U.S. Treasury money and sitting around in Miami trying to get a free ride.

Mr. DORNAN of California. But that is not her.

Mr. MILLER of California. They are trying to get a free ride. Now they are sucking off of this process in the name of freedom. Those are the people I have referred to. They know who they are, you know who they are, and I know who they are.

Mr. DORNAN of California. I will accept that, as confusing as it was, by way of clarification that the gentleman does not mean Violetta Chamorro is a rat. Her husband died for freedom, assassinated in January 1978. That is how we got rid of Samoza eventually.

Now if this were an election called by Samoza, if that dictator were alive, as Pinochet got arrogant and called for an election, you would be out there saying send them $19 million to $90 million.

The fact remains that the Washington Post said the Sandinistas want $4 million, the others will get most of the $5 million, and Carter gets 0.4.

How far radical left do you have to be to deny the 9 to both sides?

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN] has the right to conclude, after my side does, with his remarks on his amendment.

So, Mr. Speaker, for those Members who did not hear her before, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Florida [Mrs. ROS-LEHTINEN], who did such a beautiful job before.

Mrs. ROS-LEHTINEN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker and colleagues, we have heard a lot of fine words, people who say they are for democracy, they are for free and open elections. But this is the time when you have to put that vote down and you have to decide that those empty words of praise for democracy and praise for free and open elections is not just reserved for those wonderful democratic and free and open picnics that we have and the parades and all those fancy things that we do back home when we say we are for democracy.

This is the time when it counts.

I know what communism is. I lost my home; I have family there that are still suffering; I have family that wants to come over here to the United States and they are not allowed.

I have family members who want free and open and fair democratic elections in my native Cuba, and they are not allowed to have them. Here we have an opportunity to really put our money where our mouths are.

If we say we are for free and open and fair democratic elections, then vote that way, and this is a good opportunity for you to do so.

I only wish that my family in Cuba would have the opportunity that some of my residents who have family in Nicaragua will have the opportunity to do on February 25.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE].

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KANJORSKI). The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE] is recognized for 3½ minutes.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to step back a little bit and look at what is proposed here.

I have heard it said we are attempting to buy an election. I would have recourse to the history books after World War II.

In Italy it is a matter of record that this country involved itself to the extent of sending money over to the non-Communist political forces in Italy and helped save that country from going behind the Iron Curtain.

One of the great facilitators of that good move was Clark Clifford, a gentleman who is held in high, justifiably, regard by the Democratic Party.

We did not buy the election there. We facilitated a democratic process.

We are not trying to buy an election in Nicaragua; we are attempting to even things up.

When you have one party that has the army, that has control of the media, that has control of the transport, that has control of the electoral commission and which receives hundreds of millions of dollars from the Soviet Union and Cuba and from the East bloc, it is pathetically little that we want to give to the process, not to the candidates.

One of the gentlemen, I think the gentleman from Wisconsin, said that we should not be giving Mrs. Chamorro money. We are not giving any candidate money. We are attempting to give the political process an assist on the side of liberty rather than subjugation.

Parenthetically let me inquire why the romance with the Sandinistas? Why are they thought to be social democrats with a humanitarian face? I do not know. What is happening is all—you are saying let us be isolationists, let us step away and leave this to the Nicaraguan people.

But the people are in a straitjacket. People are impoverished; the people have no resources to have a free and fair election.

That is what we want.

Now, Pinochet was defeated in a plebiscite down there, he was deposed in the future, but the plebiscite voted "no." The National Endowment for Democracy was active down there, not supporting any candidates but supporting the opposition so they would have a chance.

They had a chance, and they won.

Those people here who object to what we are trying to do through the same agency in Nicaragua where silent, thunderously, resoundingly, ringingly silent when the National Endowment tried to assist the forces of democracy in Chile.

Mrs. Aquino has been the recipient of lots of money, hundreds of millions of dollars, and I say "Good." We have a stake in freedom around the world.

This notion that we should take care of our own people at home rather than help countries overseas comes a little hollow when we vote a for billions of dollars for countries around the world because we have a stake in their survival.

□ 1930

We have a stake in freedom. To retreat behind a blanket and pull it over our head and say what goes on on the land bridge between Texas and the Panama Canal is of no concern to the United States is blind; dangerously, willfully blind.

So I hope and pray that this modest, little anemic, not to say anorexic program to help the process down in Nicaragua will receive the support of those Members who are committed, verbally and by posture, to the democratic process in our hemisphere.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, if the goal of our foreign policy in Central America is to energize an election, the United States, through the National Endowment for Democracy, has already made a substantial investment in Nicaragua. Let it not be said by anyone leaving the floor today that if the United States does not spend another penny, we have somehow forsaken the electoral process. In fact, in this fiscal year, we will have spent $3½ million in Nicaragua specifically for this electoral process.

For what? Our $3½ million has been spent on workshops, voter registration, conferences on election monitoring, promoting trade unions and registering their members, and subsidies to anti-Sandinista newspapers, radios, TV and magazines. Just a few weeks ago, the National Endowment for Democracy released the last allotment of funds, $1½ million, into the tiny, poor nation of Nicaragua. For what? $415,000 for labor groups, over $800,000 for voter registration, and $250,000 for the opposition newspaper, La Prensa. The United States has made it clear that we want a fair and free election. We have already invested millions of dollars to that end.

What I am asking my colleagues in the House to consider tonight is whether or not it is necessary to spend an additional $9 million on the Nicaraguan election. I think not.

Several days ago, the Secretary of State, Mr. Baker, sent a letter to the Speaker of the House which was released to the Committee on Appropriations. The administration is obviously not content with the millions already spent. The Secretary of State wants an additional $9 million spent by our taxpayers in Nicaragua. He made it clear, though, that his intent is not to aid the electoral process. Reading his letter makes that clear. If Members of this House received this letter in their campaigns, they would put it in their brochures because Secretary Baker endorses one particular candidate and one particular party—the UNO party and Mrs. Chamorro.

I might also say that the Secretary waves the bloody shirt of the Soviet Union spending $500 million in Nicaragua, as if this is going to somehow influence the outcome of this election. Let me remind the Members that the United States of America spent $384 million supporting the Christian Democrats in El Salvador, and guess who won? Mr. Cristiani of the rightist ARENA party. All of that United States aid did not buy the Salvadoran election. All the money spent in Nicaragua by the Soviet Union and by the United States can hardly be expected to do the same.

Let me add, too, that the suggestion that we are somehow leveling the playing field misses the point. I just returned from Nicaragua. I can tell Members what the people had concerns about. They were concerned about food, clothing, milk for their children, vaccinations. The basics, the necessities.

Look what we have done to the nation of Nicaragua. We have promulgated a civil war which has destroyed their economy. We have turned to a trade embargo to strangle their economy, and we wonder why they are suffering. We have added to the decline of the marxist economy with our own foreign policy, and it is the people of Nicaragua who are the unfortunate victims.

Up to $5 million in this appropriation can go directly to one political party; $1.4 million in cash, with little or no accountability. Ladies and gentlemen of the House, we would not turn loose this money to any agency in the United States with that little accountability. Ironically, because of Nicaraguan law, up to $4 million could go to the Sandinistas themselves. Is that what the other side of the aisle wants, support for the Sandinista government? I did not catch that message in all of the speeches made earlier.

The strategy which we are pursuing in Central America, the one which the administration brings to Members to spend this $9 million, replaces gunboat diplomacy in Central America with political action committee diplomacy. If the United States is unhappy with the government, we will not send in the marines; we will send in media consultants.

Now the saddest argument I have heard in support of this appropriation comes, unfortunately, from my side of the aisle, where otherwise progressive Members support $9 million spent over the table as opposed to untold millions spent under the table. They would rather see this money spent overtly than by the CIA covertly, and welcome a mugging in broad daylight to avoid the suspense of a burglary at night.

The amendment which I offer tests whether the United States is setting out to secure a free and fair election in Nicaragua, or whether our goal is to guarantee a victory for one slate of candidates. Our best policy is to stand fast with the money we spend and to encourage vigorous monitoring by people we trust. The group that I am supporting with $400,000 includes a former Republican President of the United States, Gerald Ford, and a former Democratic President, Jimmy Carter. They have been entrusted with the responsibility of monitoring this election. I am fully funding their effort to make certain that it is free and fair, or if it is not, that the results be reported in the court of public opinion.

Let me close by saying this: For those who feel that the United States' funding of a bloody civil war in Nicaragua was not a proud chapter in the history of a peace-loving Nation, I am afraid this massive expenditure of millions, to muscle into the Nicaraguan elections, will never prove our national commitment to democracy. If our goal is really free and fair elections in Nicaragua, Uncle Sam has to keep his hands off the ballot box.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the remainder of my time.

Mr. Speaker, I think it takes a real sense of humor for any Republican in this House to lecture any Democrat on fiscal responsibility after the 8 years of Reagan deficits which we have seen run up in this decade. I also find it somewhat ironic to see that $2 million in this package will wind up in the hands of the Sandinista government.

The gentleman from Illinois referred to a "love affair" which he thinks some people on the left have with the Sandinistas. I know of no one in this House who has a love affair with the Sandinistas, and I can imagine the hue and cry which would come from this side of the aisle if Democrats were to propose this package tonight and suggest that we provide $2 million in direct contributions to the Electoral Council, which, in Republican words, is controlled 4 to 1 by the Sandinistas. I can imagine the uproar that we would hear.

I would like to make a third point in response to some of the comments made from this side of the aisle. No person I know in this institution is neutral on the question of democracy. Everyone in this institution is for democracy. Every Member in this institution is for America. To suggest, directly or indirectly, straightforwardly or through innuendo that it is otherwise, is to discredit yourself and to discredit this institution.

I do not happen to believe that the elections in Nicaragua are going to be fair. I do not think it is possible, given Sandinista domination of that society, down to the village level, to ever have fair elections. I do think it is legitimate for the United States to try and provide, along with other countries in the world, some tools to open up the process.

However, I do not believe it will produce a fair election. I never did believe that. Any Member who believes it is, in my judgment, hopelessly naive.

My objection to this bill is virtually the same as my objection to the amendment.

□ 1940

Mr. Speaker, I think that the bill goes far beyond providing legitimate institutional, electoral support. I think the bill winds up being ham-handed, and I think it will backfire. The administration, I have no doubt when the votes are counted tonight, will get every dollar they ask for, and they will get it when they ask for it.

The Durbin amendment is unbalanced because it is highly selective in the electoral supervision groups to which it provides money, and I think it, therefore, ought to go down.

I think the bill is muddled and confused. I think the best approach is to simply vote against both, which is what I intend to do when the rollcall is opened.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong opposition to this amendment.

But I must say that in one sense I welcome the amendment.

After 8 years of debate about American policy in Nicaragua, we are at last confronted with an unambiguous choice.

Either we support the democratic process in Nicaragua or we turn away while avowed totalitarians conquer a brave opposition.

The Contras are not the issue here. We are not arming them. This issue is whether we help a 14-party coalition, spanning the political spectrum, to compete on a fairly equal basis.

The sponsors of this amendment tell us we are interfering in the internal affairs of another nation.

This is selective indignation, selective isolationism. We are told by the same people that the United States must support democratic forces in countries ruled by right-wing authoritarians.

Indeed, in 1979, the administration of Jimmy Carter, with the support of many who now support this amendment, interfered in Nicaragua, against Somoza.

But somehow this sense of noble purpose gets lost when democracy faces the Sandinistas in Nicaragua.

For 8 years we have been told covert aid is bad, overt aid is good. So here we are giving this aid overtly.

For 8 years we have been told by the supporters of this amendment that the United States should emphasize diplomacy not force.

So we emphasized diplomacy in the bipartisan accord. Now the supporters of this amendment tell us we should abandon the democratic resistance in the electoral process that resulted from diplomacy.

That's like pushing a car to the starting line of the Indy 500 and then refusing to give it gasoline.

Some complain because some of these funds will go to a Sandinista-controlled entity, the supreme electoral council.

But if we don't abide by this condition of Nicaraguan law, the democratic coalition won't get any of the funds it needs.

So, I ask you: Are we going to deny bread to the starving just because we also have to give bread to the well-fed?

The Sundays in October are the only times Nicaraguans may register. One Sunday is already gone. If we don't get aid to the democratic opposition to help them get out their vote, there will be no election—only electoral fraud.

To those who for eight years have been telling us force isn't the answer, I say: Put your vote where your mouth is. Support the peaceful democratic opposition.

Mr. SMITH of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in opposition to the Durbin amendment, which would violate the provisions of the bipartisan compromise on United States aid for the Nicaraguan elections.

I think we ought to recognize the distance this administration and the Committee on Appropriations have come in crafting a compromise on election assistance to Nicaragua. This money is not covert; it is open, above board aid given to balance the political playing field, and thus to allow the Nicaraguan people to choose their own destiny.

In the past few years we have seen a series of countries experience the satisfaction of self-determination for the first time. We have the opportunity today to give the people of Nicaragua, who have suffered through an endless war and an even longer economic depression, a fair choice next February. Let us be farsighted enough to ensure that freedom which has meant so much in Poland and elsewhere. The National Endowment for Democracy has given us confidence in the fairness of elections in Chile, Panama, in addition to Poland, and can do the same for Nicaragua.

I urge my colleagues to vote against the Durbin amendment.

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the Durbin amendment. As a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I should report that our committee reported this bill favorably so as to afford the President an opportunity to have a vote on the floor on this issue. I thought that the President was dead wrong on this issue yesterday and I think so just as strongly today.

It was pointed out yesterday that the volume of money under consideration here is a huge sum in the context of the Nicaraguan economy. On a proportional basis, this proposal is the equivalent of a donation from a single foreign government in the amount of $800 million to either the Democratic or the Republican Party. Never mind that our laws prohibit the acceptance of such donations. We would be outraged at the suggestion that you can promote democracy by throwing money at one group and excluding the others.

The State Department has informed the leadership that this money will contribute to institution-building in Nicaragua. The administration assures us that even though funds are to be provided for "travel by UNO leaders * * *" they will not be used for campaigning. This clearly is a distinction without a difference. You give a politician money to travel around this district to spread his political message and yet you deny that it is a campaign contribution.

Why are we doing this? The voter registration underway this month in Nicaragua is reported to be a great success. It is hard to see how the introducing of a huge, corrupting sum of money at this critical stage does anything positive for the process. Never mind what the implications of this are for the National Endowment for Democracy, and organization that until now has made grants on a competitive basis. This bill will do virtually nothing to convince Nicaraguans that their votes should be cast as a matter of conscience. Just the opposite, it will convince each voter that forces beyond his or her control will determine the outcome of this election. This is a terrible idea that has come up at just the wrong time and it should be thoroughly rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KANJORSKI). Under the rule, the previous question was ordered.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN].

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for this time for the purpose of inquiring of the distinguished majority leader the program, as amended, for tomorrow or any unanimous-consent requests the majority leader might wish to make at this juncture for tomorrow.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHEL. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to announce to the Members that on tomorrow we will intend, and I will in a moment ask for unanimous consent to meet at 9 in the morning, to dispense with the 1-minutes, and to immediately go to the child-care provisions of the reconciliation bill. We believe that we can be completed in 5 or 5½ hours, which would have us finished with that bill on or about 2 or 3 o'clock. We do not plan that there be further actions on the floor tomorrow, so we would have Members out of here by 2 or 3 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

HOUR OF MEETING ON TOMORROW

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 9 a.m. tomorrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KANJORSKI). Is here objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that he was in doubt.

So the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. CLARKE. Mr. Speaker, I was absent during consideration of rollcalls 269 and 270 providing for free and fair elections in Nicaragua, H.R. 3385. Had I been present I would have voted "nay" on rollcall 269, the Durbin amendment, and "aye" on rollcall 270, final passage.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. NEAL of Massachusetts). The Chair will entertain 1-minutes at this time.

THE JURISDICTION MAZE OVER THE WAR ON DRUGS

(Mr. STEARNS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to continue the series of 1 minutes started by our colleague Larkin Smith calling attention to the maze of jurisdiction over the war on drugs.

Because every committee has a piece of this issue, the drug war is the top priority of no committee with legislative authority. How in the world can committees with other primary objectives be expected to make drugs its main focus?

Let me take the Banking Committee, on which I serve, as an example. This year we had to deal with the savings and loan crisis. A big issue. An important, even crucial issue for all Americans, and we had to deal with it immediately. But what about our part in the drug war? It has not been given the priority in the Congress that it demands, in spite of the fact that the drug problems under our jurisdiction are not going away. Because we had another pressing issue, the war on drugs took a back seat.

We must create a new committee with sole jurisdiction over the drug war. I urge all of my colleagues to cosponsor H. Res. 247, which would do just that.

ANNUAL REPORT OF NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF BUILDING SCIENCES FOR 1988—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, without objection, referred to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

(For message, see proceedings of the Senate of today, Wednesday, October 4, 1989.)

COMMUNICATION FROM CHAIRMAN OF SUBCOMMITTEE ON COURTS, INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY, AND THE ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the chairman of the Subcommittee on Courts, Intellectual Property, and the Administration of Justice of the Committee on the Judiciary:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, DC, September 29, 1989.

Hon. THOMAS S. FOLEY,
Speaker, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: This is to notify you pursuant to Rule L (50) of the Rules of the House that I have been served with a subpoena issued by the Circuit Court of Dane County, Wisconsin.

After consultation with the General Counsel to the Clerk, I have determined that compliance with the subpoena is not consistent with the privileges and precedents of the House.

With warm regards,
Sincerely,
ROBERT W. KASTENMEIER,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Courts, Intellectual Property, and the Administration of Justice.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE HONORABLE BILL GRADISON, MEMBER OF CONGRESS

The SPEAKER pro temopre laid before the House the following communication from the Honorable BILL GRADISON, Member of Congress:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, October 3, 1989.

Hon. THOMAS S. FOLEY,
Speaker, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, D.C. 20515.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: This is to notify you pursuant to Rule L (50) of the Rules of the House that I have been served with a subpoena duces tecum.

After consultation with the General Counsel, I will determine whether compliance with the subpoena is consistent with the privileges and precedents of the House.

With great respect, I am
Sincerely yours,
BILL GRADISON,
Representative in Congress.

SECRETARY KEMP CLEARS THE DECKS AT HUD

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WYLIE] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, yesterday HUD Secretary Jack Kemp made an announcement of reforms that he characterized as a clear-the-decks proposal. Earlier this year the Secretary promised to clean up HUD from stem to stern.

Mr. Speaker, from the daily accounts in the media of fraud and favoritism at HUD, it is easy to see that Secretary Jack Kemp inherited a foundering ship. If I may continue the sailing ship analogy, a recent GAO report on FHA describes in painful detail how systemically flawed programs like hospital insurance, and coinsurance have torn great, gaping holes in HUD's mainsail, the FHA insurance funds. The combination of favoritism and well-intentioned but poorly designed programs has caused HUD to follow an erratic course leading toward dangerous financial straits.

I am confident that the worst of the storm may be over for HUD. Our former colleague, Secretary Kemp, has a firm grasp at the helm of HUD. Yesterday's announcement fulfills Secretary Kemp's promise in a comprehensive form that addresses three major areas: ethics, management, and finance, and the Federal Housing Administration [FHA].

Mr. Speaker, the HUD reforms to which Secretary Kemp referred are based on the collective efforts of the Banking Committee under the fine leadership of Chairman GONZALEZ, the Government Operations Committee under TOM LANTOS, and various legislative proposals from House Members as well as reform task forces within HUD. In announcing his reforms, Secretary Kemp said, "I have been heartened by the bipartisan spirit with which many in the Congress have approached the past abuses at HUD."

Mr. Speaker, during the debate over the S&L legislation, Chairman HENRY GONZALEZ steered the Banking Committee through "shark-infested" waters to ensure the passage of that emergency legislation. Similarly, the HUD reform package put forth by Secretary Kemp is truly emergency legislation which addresses needs as compelling as those addressed by the savings and loan recovery legislation. As soon as possible, I fully expect to join the chairman of the Banking Committee, Mr. GONZALEZ, in introducing this reform proposal.

The issue of affordable housing and the restoration of a national housing policy both have gone unaddressed for too long. Both House and Senate Banking Committees have put tremendous effort into developing major potential housing legislation. In addition, Secretary Kemp also is working on new housing initiatives. Yet, we all realize that the abuses at HUD must be cleared up first. Mr. Speaker, I am confident that the Banking Committee on a bipartisan basis, under the leadership of Chairman GONZALEZ, will swiftly bring an excellent HUD reform package to the House floor. In this regard, I commend Chairman GONZALEZ for scheduling a hearing on Secretary Kemp's reform proposal on Thursday, October 12, 1989.

Mr. Speaker, I am including the full text of Secretary Kemp's statement at his press conference on HUD reforms, which urges prompt action to help set HUD back on the right course.

STATEMENT BY SECRETARY JACK KEMP

When President Bush asked me to join his Administration as Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, he made it clear that our mission would be to use the full resources of HUD to wage war on poverty, homelessness, and despair.

Unfortunately, we soon learned that a number of programs intended to help the poor were riddled with systemic flaws that allowed them to be corrupted by greedy individuals who used their political influence to gain unfair access to HUD resources. As these abuses gradually unfolded we recognized that comprehensive changes in program management and financial accountability would be necessary to "clear the decks" for homeownership, jobs, and hope in our nation's inner cities and distressed rural communities.

This is not to say that other reforms will not be required as investigations proceed. It is to say that I will not allow HUD's mission to be paralyzed.

President Bush and I have not and will not tolerate the systemic flaws at HUD which have allowed its programs to be abused for political purposes or personal gain at the expense of those in need. I look forward to working together to quickly pass a legislative package of reforms which will include the best proposals, so we can get on to working on new initiatives that will help better meet our responsibilities to those in need.

I have been heartened by the bipartisan spirit with which many in Congress have approached the past problems at HUD. There have been many good ideas and constructive proposals offered by members, such as Congressman Lantos and Senator Bob Byrd, as well as by those in my own party. Many of the proposals we offer today have drawn on their suggestions, as well as those of the GAO, HUD's Inspector General, and HUD's many professional and dedicated employees, both career and non-career.

Some of the reforms I am proposing can be implemented unilaterally and I will do so. Others will require legislative action and I am asking Congress to consider those proposals immediately. I am grateful that Congress has been carrying out a thorough examination of these problems. I feel certain that we will have its full bipartisan cooperation in passing the necessary legislative reforms, and that we will continue to work together on any further reforms that may be needed.

The comprehensive package I am announcing today envisions reforms in three areas: ethics, management and finance, and the Federal Housing Administration. Here are some of the major reforms which will have to be implemented.

First, ethics. Many of HUD's worst problems first came to light in the Inspector General's report to Congress. Among the issues addressed in these reports were allegations that housing grants had been awarded to certain developers who paid huge fees to politically connected consultants and lobbyists, who did little more than open doors and place phone calls.

The first reform in this package will establish a strict requirement that all consultants and lobbyists who represent those attempting to obtain grants from HUD must register with the Department. In addition, all those applying for funds will be required to disclose any fees paid to lobbyists, consultants, and lawyers in connection with their application. HUD will have the authority to deduct all or part of the fees which have been paid from the total amount of any grant or award. I will also ask Congress to give me the power to impose civil penalties amounting to as much as $10,000 for each act of non-compliance.

We have learned that many past funding decisions have been based on political influence rather than merit. I will require that from now on all housing awards will be made on the basis of a formula or by a competition with criteria designed to measure need.

I believe it is essential that HUD's business be conducted in the light of full public scrutiny. All awards will be published in the Federal Register and will be fully documented for all to inspect.

Moreover, cases occasionally arise where complex federal regulations applying to HUD programs need to be waived. In far too many instances, however, these waivers turned into "black holes" that were manipulated to maximize someone's financial gain. Luxury apartments were constructed in an upper income area in Chicago, for example, which qualified for FHA insurance only by waivers on normal cost and mortgage ceilings. Waivers should only be necessary in very rare circumstances and when they are, they will require personal approval of an appropriate Assistant Secretary, and will be published in the Federal Register.

Finally, although there is some value to having a discretionary fund available to the Secretary, I have concluded that the Secretary's Discretionary Funds for housing and community development must be eliminated. Scarce resources must be allocated solely on the basis of need and merit. In the Bush Administration, and during my stewardship of this agency, no decisions will be made at HUD for the political advantage or personal gain of anyone.

Second, Management and Financial Reform. We have discovered that HUD's management system has been severely lacking in anything like rigorous financial accountability and as a result great difficulties have been created in our ability to evaluate the financial health and effectiveness of many of our programs. In the past, because of our inability to judge whether our programs were properly targeted, for example, HUD was unable to recognize that program funds were often benefiting developers and consultants instead of needy Americans. There is the case of the largest Title X default—a California country club which included a $7 million golf course; $8 million club house; 17 tennis courts; 2 swimming pools; and a health spa. That's why we are eliminating the Title X program.

I will create a new position—Chief Financial Officer—who will report directly to me and who will have the responsibility of overseeing HUD's financial operations. I will also appoint a Comptroller for the FHA. Moreover, I intend to contract for an independent management firm to identify structural and systemic problems and to recommend comprehensive reforms to strengthen the financial and managerial integrity of HUD's programs.

The Community Development Block Grant Program (CDBG), we have realized, has not always focused its precious resources on low-income people. Counties with desperate needs for jobs and housing have instead, all too often, directed block grant funds to wealthy suburbs for amenities like planting trees and building bike racks and swimming pools. Currently, there is a legal requirement that a portion of CDBG funds be spent on low- and middle-income people. I will ask Congress to increase the required proportion from the current level, up to 100 precent in wealthy communities and 75 percent in distressed communities and to make CDBG a more effective tool in our new war against poverty.

To further ensure my goal of strictly targeting HUD's resources to benefit those in need, I am asking Congress that up to one-half of one percent of all appropriations—approximately $100 million—for housing and community development be set aside for program monitoring and evaluation. I will also ask for greater authority to better recover misused government funds from HUD grantees, and will continue the aggressive efforts of our Asset Recovery Strike Force, which I created last June, and which has recovered nearly $4.5 million to date.

Finally, the Federal Housing Administration. We have concluded that the FHA requires sweeping reform. FHA's accounting and financial records have been so poorly maintained that they are indecipherable. As a result, from 1975 until earlier this year, no audits of the FHA's programs could be conducted. I intend to require the FHA to publish financial statements on a yearly basis. These will be compiled and audited by independent accounting firms. In addition, the FHA's accounts which have been lumped together indiscriminately in the past will be broken out program by program, region by region beginning in 1991, so we can have an accurate and accountable basis for decision making.

The FHA's single family insurance programs are designed to provide homeownership opportunities for families who will actually occupy their homes. FHA was never intended to create opportunities for profit by real estate speculators and "no money down" operators. Yet, while investors made up only 2.5 precent of new FHA policies last year, they accounted for about 15 percent of the losses. There is one investor in Denver who defaulted on all 750 FHA homes he owned. To correct this abuse, private investors as well as those who use FHA for second homes for vacations or other purposes will no longer be allowed to obtain FHA insured loans on these properties.

As everyone knows, abuses by private sector closing agents have been notorious. The "Robin HUD" case in which one agent failed to transfer $5 million in sales proceeds to HUD is perhaps best known, but unfortunately not an isolated one. These reforms will impose tough new standards on private sector entities such as closing agents, appraisers, lenders, services, and mortgage bankers, including requirements for licensing and bonding. Also, because of huge losses from defaults in the coinsurance program, I suspended the program and sanctioned many coinsuring lenders. Today, I am restructuring the program by raising entry, capital, and disclosure requirements for coinsurers. I will insist on more stringent monitoring of this program by HUD managers.

Finally, the layering of HUD subsidies on top of the subsidy provided for low-income housing development by the low-income housing tax credit has resulted in, at times, huge profits for developers. HUD will tighten its procedures, in conjunction with legislative reforms in the reauthorization of the LITC, to ensure that scarce resources are used to maximize the number of units developed, rather than subsidize consultants and developers.

These reforms, as a whole, represent a fundamental redirection of our programs—a redirection back to the poor and the tenants and the community-based non-profits, and the wisdom, ingenuity, and entrepreneurial spirit they demonstrate throughout our Nation. President Bush has reaffirmed our Nation's moral charter to provide affordable housing opportunities and job opportunities for all Americans. We invite all who care deeply about our Nation's future to work with us to advance initiatives in urban economic development and resident empowerment to go beyond reform and place housing once again at the forefront of the Nation's domestic policy agenda.

I'm proud of the team we've assembled at HUD. Under Secretary Alfred DelliBovi; Assistant Secretary for Housing, Austin Fitts; General Counsel, Frank Keating; and all of the team President Bush and I have assembled at HUD are capable, dedicated public servants of great integrity. We look forward to taking your questions.

GOVERNMENT-SPONSORED ENTERPRISES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PICKLE] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, last Thursday, the Subcommittee on Oversight of the Committee on Ways and Means held a hearing on Government-sponsored enterprises [GSE's]. When I speak of GSE's, I am referring to organizations such as Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac, Sallie Mae, and the Farm Credit System. These are all corporations created by Federal charter, which are backed by the implicit guarantee of the U.S. Treasury, but which are completely off the Federal budget. Our goal was to better understand the operations of these GSE's; the financial risks they represent to taxpayers; and, the oversight currently exercised by the Federal Government in this area.

These are important issues for several reasons: First, the current debt and loan guarantees of GSE's exceed $720 billion; second, GSE obligations have grown rapidly from only $37 billion in 1970; third, GSE activities represent 37 percent of all Federal or federally assisted borrowing; fourth, all of this GSE activity is backed by an implicit guarantee that the U.S. Treasury will step in and bail them out if anything goes wrong; fifth, the number of GSE's is increasing, with five new organizations having been chartered since 1987, and others being proposed; and sixth, neither the unified budget, nor any other Federal budget documents show any cost to the Federal Government from the risks it bears as a result of GSE activities.

Any one of these reasons would justify careful congressional oversight. Considered together and in light of recent history, they make such oversight essential. Twice over the past 3 years, Congress has had to spend billions of dollars to make good on these implicit guarantees. We approved a $4 billion bailout of the Farm Credit System in 1987, and lest we forget, this year we have approved a $160 billion "fix" for the savings and loan crisis. If we have learned nothing else from these experiences, we must surely accept the fact that these off-budget liabilities can have very sudden and profound on-budget consequences.

I have asked what oversight does the Federal Government exercise. I must say to my colleagues that, based on my findings to date, the answer is very little. It is not at all clear to me that there is a Federal regulator for some GSE's. For others, the oversight is cursory at best. For example, the Federal National Mortgage Association, Fannie Mae, is nominally regulated by the Department of Housing and Urban Development [HUD]. Fannie Mae either holds or guarantees over $300 billion of mortgages and mortgage backed securities. And yet, the CEO of Fannie Mae testified last Thursday that HUD has not chosen to audit Fannie Mae's activities, and that GAO has only limited audit authority. In effect, the only auditing being done is by private accountants hired by Fannie Mae. Let me repeat, in all these years HUD has never thoroughly audited Fannie Mae. If it has done so at all, it has only been in a cursory way. They have the authority, but they have never used it.

Furthermore, it is clear from the testimony by the Treasury Department that they also exercise little or no restraint on the issuance of GSE debt. While statutorily charged with approving debt issuances by GSE's, as a practical matter they function only as a traffic cop, regulating the timing of debt issuances so as not to flood the financial markets with competing Federal debt. As of this time, neither the Department of the Treasury nor any other Federal agency has any idea about the financial solvency of any particular GSE, the risk represented by additional debt issuances, or the cumulative affect of GSE activities on the national economy. I must confess, neither do I. I don't think anyone does.

In effect we have given these GSE's our national credit card and hoped for the best. Let me be absolutely clear, I don't know that any GSE has misused this credit or is in financial difficulty. But with GSE borrowing at $700 billion and climbing, its high time we checked.

It is for this reason that I joined with Congressman GRADISON and Congressman SCHULZE to initiate legislation requiring the Treasury Department to study and report on GSE's. The public, the Congress, and the administration all have a strong interest in seeing that GSE's are soundly managed so as to anticipate and minimize the risks inherent in carrying out their important public purpose. I want the Treasury Department to tell the American people who these GSE's are, how they originated, what they are doing, how great a risk do they represent to the taxpayer, and who, if anybody, is responsible for overseeing their activities.

I intend to work with officials at the Treasury Department to make sure that this Treasury study is thorough, accurate, and timely. From time to time, I intend to report on its progress to my colleagues. The American public has been very tolerant of our efforts to correct past financial mismanagement, but the time has come to stop just using taxpayer dollars to clean up these messes. The time has come to prevent them from happening.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, we do not wish to leave any inference that any GSE is in difficulty. We do not wish to, and want in any way, to alarm the public. However, we do say, when we have $720 billion off budget borrowing with the implicit credit of the United States back of each one of the GSE's, that is a matter that each Member of Congress and the American people should be better informed about.

We hope to keep our colleagues informed of the study by the Treasury Department that is under way.

CHICAGO'S 1989 COLUMBUS DAY PARADE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. NEAL). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, on Monday, October 9, Chicagoans will celebrate the discovery of America by Christopher Columbus, with a gigantic parade through the city, sponsored by the Joint Civic Committee of Italian Americans. In addition to paying tribute to Christopher Columbus, the theme of this year's parade, "Voyages of Discovery," will commemorate the 20th anniversary of the Moon landing, highlighting the important contributions of Italian Americans to this historic event.

All of us in Chicago are very pleased that our Nation's First Lady, Mrs. Barbara Bush, will be joining us as the guest of honor in this year's celebration. Other participants in the parade will include Mayor Richard M. Daley of the city of Chicago, Gov. James R. Thompson of the State of Illinois; Congressman MARTY RUSSO; Dr. Leonardo Baroncelli, Consul General of Italy, and many other civic and political dignitaries, as well as myself.

Mr. Speaker, this week the President of the United States, Hon. George Bush, will be issuing a proclamation commemorating the discovery of America by Columbus. Also, the Governor of the State of Illinois, Hon. James R. Thompson; and the mayor of the city of Chicago, Hon. Richard M. Daley, have issued proclamations, and copies of these proclamations follow:

STATE OF ILLINOIS—PROCLAMATION

Whereas, every American knows what historic event occurred in 1492, for in that year the history of the world took a dramatic leap. The voyage of Columbus, which spurred further exploration of the New World, is celebrated annually throughout the lands; and

Whereas, Columbus and many other distinguished Italians have contributed to the growth of civilization. The Italian community is joined by Americans of every ethnic background in recognizing Columbus Day; and

Whereas, Italian-American residents in Illinois will be sponsoring their 33rd annual Columbus Day Parade to honor their native hero;

Therefore, I, James R. Thompson, Governor of the State of Illinois, proclaim October 9, 1989, as COLUMBUS DAY in Illinois.

JAMES R. THOMPSON,
Governor.

PROCLAMATION

Whereas, the Joint Civic Committee of Italian-Americans (JCCIA) is sponsoring its annual Columbus Day Parade on October 9; and

Whereas, the coverage and visionary wisdom displayed by Christopher Columbus in his intrepid voyage of discovery is exemplary of the Italian-American community; and

Whereas, those qualities of our Italian-American brothers and sisters are evident in the many contributions to the arts, politics, sports, and socio-economic life of Chicago; and

Whereas, the Chicago Council on Fine Arts, Department of Cultural Affairs is presenting its annual exhibit and program series in honor of Italian Heritage Month in October, and the public is invited to attend; and

Whereas, this year's parade honors the 20th anniversary of man's landing on the moon;

Now, Therefore, I, Richard M. Daley, Mayor of the City of Chicago, do hereby proclaim October 9, 1989, to be COLUMBUS DAY IN CHICAGO, and urge all citizens to be cognizant of the events held in connection with this historical observance in honor of the great navigator, Christopher Columbus.

Dated this 15th day of August, 1989.

RICHARD M. DALEY
Mayor.

Mr. Speaker, Chicago's Columbus Day celebration will begin at 9 a.m. with a concelebrated Mass at Our Lady of Pompeii Church in Chicago. Arrangements for this year's Mass have been made by the Reverend Lawrence Cozzi, C.S., chairman of the religious committee and Reverend Leonard Mattei, cochairman. The main celebrant will be Joseph Cardinal Bernardin, Archbishop of Chicago, and the host for liturgy will be the Reverend Angelo Carbone, C.S., pastor of Our Lady of Pompeii Church. An introduction before the Mass will be given by Theresa Petrone, the theme coordinator of this year's parade, and cochairperson of the programs and arrangements committee. Norman Boccio of the finance and souvenir book committee will serve as commentator, and the lectors will be Marion Ortale, president of the JCCIA Women's Division, and Lilia Juarez, president of the JCCIA West Suburban Women's Division. The prayer of the faithful will be offered by Ron Onesti, president of the JCCIA Young Adult Division, and cochairman of the floats committee; and the members of the offertory procession will include, Renata Zanichelli, the queen of the Columbus Day Parade; Mauro Glorioso, who will be portraying Christopher Columbus in this year's parade; Marie Palello, executive secretary of the JCCIA, chairperson of the floats committee, and coordinator for this year's parade and Ann Sorrentino, chairperson of the costume committee.

Music will be provided by the Italian Cultural Center Choir of Chicago, under the direction of Josephine LiPuma; and the organists will be Lawrence Salvador and Frank Pungo. Serving as ushers will be Nick Bianco, John De Bella, Michael Palello, Lawrence Spallitta, chairman of the floats personnel committee, and Anthony Lanzito. The Fourth Degree Knights of Columbus will serve as the honor guard, including Ben Daniel, master, 4th degree, and Joseph Nardi, admiral, LaSalle Assembly, and breakfast will be prepared and served following the Mass by the mother's club of Our Lady of Pompeii Church.

After the breakfast, at 10:15 a.m., a wreath laying ceremony will take place at the Columbus Statue in Arrigo Park, cosponsored by the Grand Lodge of the State of Illinois, Order Sons of Italy in America, and the Joint Civic Committee of Italian Americans. Coordinating this event will be Thomas Baratta, chairman of the TV advertisements committee for this year's parade, and Sam Garnello of the Order of the Sons of Italy in America, aided by the Color Guard of the Italian-American War Veterans of the State of Illinois. The invocation at the wreath-laying ceremony will be given by Joseph Cardinal Bernardin. The host of this ceremony will be Anthony J. Fornelli, chairman of the Columbus Day Parade Committee, and posting of the colors will be under the direction of Joe Leoni and Al Guiliano of the State of Illinois Italian-American War Veterans. Also, participating in the ceremony will be the ladies auxiliary of the Italian-American War Veterans with Grace Del Principe, State auxiliary president.

The parade will step off at Dearborn and Wacker Drive in Chicago, and this 2 hour celebration will be carried live on WGN-TV in Chicago. Over 200 floats, marching units and bands, will participate in this event, and several of the floats will carry members of the Italian-American community wearing traditional costumes from various regions in Italy. Also featured on the floats will be Mauro Glorioso as Christopher Columbus, Angela Petrone as Queen Isabella and Elizabeth Serpe as the Statue of Liberty. Ben Affetto, serving as parade marshal, will carry on the proud tradition of his grandfather, the late Marco DeStefano, who had been parade marshal for the past 37 years. Nello Ferrara of Ferrara Pan Candy Co. will serve as grand marshal of the parade.

Other chairmen and cochairmen for this year's parade, include: Elena Frigoletti, cochairperson of the authentic Italian costume committee; and Dominic DiFrisco, cochairman of the program and arrangements committee.

The television sponsors of this year's parade include Joe Rizza of Rizza Ford; Dominick Di Matteo of Dominick's Finer Foods; Nello Ferrara of Ferrara Pan Candy Co.; Anthony Fornelli of Festa Italiana; Paul Butera of Butera Foods; Ron Turano of Turano Baking Co.; Joseph Marchetti of Como Inn; Phil Stefani of Stefani's Restaurant; John Serpico of Central States Joint Board; Commonwealth Edison; Hilton Hotels Corps.; True Value Hardware; Alitalia Airlines; St. Paul Federal Bank for Savings; Arlington Race Course; the Illinois State Lottery; and Waste Management Co.

Joseph Ahern, president of the WLS-TV in Chicago, has announced that his station will also rebroadcast the parade on Saturday, October 14, from 12:00 to 2:00 p.m. Narrating the telecast for WLS will be Theresa Petrone, Mary Ann Childers, and Jim Gibbons.

Each year one of the highlights of the Chicago Columbus Day celebration is the selection of the queen of the parade. Judged on her beauty, poise, and personality, Renata M. Zanichelli of Norridge, IL, who lives in the 11th Congressional District of Illinois which I am privileged to represent, was chosen to reign as this year's Italian-American community queen. She received a $2,000 prize which was presented by the Joint Civic Committee of Italian Americans, Festa Italiana-Amerital Unico, and the James E. Coli Chapter of the Italo-American National Union.

The members of the queen's court include Arianne Venuso of Mount Prospect, IL; Angela J. Dio Guardi of Park Forest, IL; Charisse Cannistra of Hoffman Estates, IL; and Michelle Dantino of Melrose Park, IL. Dinners for the queen and her court at the Como Inn are being provided with the compliments of Joseph Marchetti.

The chairman of the queen contest is Fred Mazzei, and the cochairperson is Josephine Bianco. Judges for the contest include: John T. Coli, vice president and administrator of Teamsters Local Union 727, and president of the James E. Coli Memorial Chapter 15 of the Italo-American National Union; Joseph M. Caliendo, fur fashion designer and fur fashion show coordinator. Joseph Cosentino, editor of FRA NOI, the Italian-American community newspaper; Dr. John Drammis, cosmetic plastic surgeon and director of the cosmetic surgery center of Chicago; Rose Farina, manager of the Daley Center events for the department of culture affairs in the Chicago Office of Fine Arts; Marilyn Cusimano Fredericks, travel agent and choreographer for the Italian Heritage Ball and for the Italianettes, the folk dance troupe sponsored by the JCCIA; Laura Spingola, president of Trade Resources, Ltd., and adjunct professor for Mundelin College and the National College of Education; and Dr. Carl Tintari, cosmetic dentist and facial aesthetics consultant.

The Joint Civic Committee of Italian-Americans, under the able leadership of its president, Carl De Moon, and executive director Robert Allegrini, is comprised of more than 50 Italo-American civic organizations in the Chicagoland area and sponsors the Columbus Day Parade and related activities. Founded in 1952 to fight prejudice and discrimination toward Italian-Americans, the Joint Civic Committee of Italian-Americans has grown over the last three decades into a formidable organization for addressing the broadened social, cultural and educational concerns of more than one-half million Italian-Americans living in the metropolitan area of Chicago.

The Columbus Day celebration will close with a reception at the Como Inn Restaurant in Chicago at 3:30 p.m., in honor of the guests, the officers, committee chairmen, and members who are participating in making the 1989 Columbus Day Parade a monumental success.

On this 19th celebration of Columbus Day as a National holiday, as honorary parade chairman of the Columbus Day parade, I would like to take this opportunity to commend the members and officers of the Joint Civic Committee of Italian-Americans for their dedicated efforts and careful planning that will again make this year's parade a memorable event and overwhelming success.

The officers and members of the 1989 Chicago Columbus Day Parade Committee are as follows:

NEED FOR CONGRESSIONAL REFORM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. WALSH] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight to continue this fourth in a series of our special orders called for the purpose of highlighting the need for congressional reform. I have cochaired this series of special orders with the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. UPTON].

I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New York.

It is Wednesday night. This is our congressional reform task force evening, and every week we talk about a different, what some Members would call abuse of the rules. In the first couple of weeks since we have been having special orders on Wednesday evening, I think we have gotten a good response from callers all across the country, to our offices. I know the gentleman from New York was remarking about a woman from the Bronx that has been a faithful listener and watcher, I guess, the last couple of weeks. I have had calls even as far away as Alaska into my office. Perhaps it is midafternoon in Alaska instead of quarter to 9 on the opening of the National League series this evening.

However, there are two points I'd like to make about the rules of our House.

THE PACKED COMMITTEE

The first has to do with the Rules Committee itself. As everyone here knows, the rules that govern debate on legislation in this body make an enormous difference in the way legislation is shaped, because they determine what amendments or changes can be brought to the floor and how much Members can deliberate on them.

So if the leadership of the House wants to control the nature of legislation, all it has to do is pack the Rules Committee with Members who will follow the leader.

With regard to numbers, at least, that's exactly what's happened with the Rules Committee. The committee has nine Democrats to just four Republicans. So if the leadership wants to shut us out, they can do it easily through their overwhelming majority on the Rules Committee.

Now, we recognize that—for the time being at least—the Democrats have the majority in this House and we are in the minority. But unlike the ratio on the Rules Committee, there are about three Democrats to every two Republicans in the whole House.

That ratio is reflected, approximately, in the other standing committees in the House. Consider some of the numbers:

□ 2040

Mr. Speaker, let us take the Committee on Ways and Means: 23 Democrats, 13 Republicans. Pretty close to the ratio in the House.

The Committee on Energy and Commerce, another very powerful committee here in the House: 25 Democrats, 17 Republicans. Pretty close to the actual numbers in the House.

The Committee on the Budget: 21 Democrats, 14 Republicans.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs: 28 Democrats, 18 Republicans.

The Committee on Public Works and Transportation, a committee that I serve on: 31 Democrats, 20 Republicans.

The Committee on Small Business, another committee that I serve on: 27 Democrats, 17 Republicans.

In all these cases, the ratio is about three Democrats to two Republicans—the same as the ratio of Democrats to Republicans in the whole House.

Only the Rules Committee—which has the effective power over all legislation that comes to this floor—only the Rules has come up everywhere—in the constituent mail I receive, in discussions at town meetings, and everywhere else I go. And I'm sure everyone here is aware of the kinds of problems our Ways and Means Committee chairman ran into in his home district last summer.

Mr. Speaker, senior citizens literally confronted him in his automobile in the streets of Chicago.

After weighing all the opposition, many of us in this House concluded that the best remedy was simply to repeal the Catastrophic Act—and its taxes—and try to start over with a clean slate.

So in the reconciliation bill that we've been debating for the last week and a half, we got the opportunity to vote that way.

But there was a catch. The catch was in the form of a king-of-the-hill procedure. After the vote on repealing catastrophic health care, we also were to vote on another alternative that would preserve parts of the catastrophic benefits and parts of the taxes on senior citizens. The rule from the Rules Committee said that this whole process would be by a king-of-the-hill method, with the repeal amendment first and the revision second.

Now, as a member of the Republican Whip organization, part of my job is to count votes and to talk to Members who aren't sure how they will vote. As I was doing that this week, I found that many Members favored repeal of the catastrophic law. But I can't tell you how many of them thought that if the repeal amendment received more votes than the other, then the repeal would pass. They didn't realize that—under the king-of-the-hill procedure—even if the repeal got 400 votes, it could be defeated if the second amendment received as few as 216 votes. In other words, even if the repeal had overwhelming support, it would have been defeated by the second amendment if the second amendment had just enough votes to squeak by. If it lost, it still would win.

I doubt that's the way they teach it in ninth grade civics classes. Most students of democratic processes are taught that victory goes to the legislation that gets the most votes. But not when you're playing king-of-the-hill.

This issue is especially important in light of today's votes. This wasn't simply a procedural gimmick. These were votes on a major Federal program, costing billions of taxpayers' dollars. The king-of-the-hill procedure was the trick that nearly confused enough Members to vote in a way that would have defeated their own intention to repeal catastrophic health care.

Even more important than that, though, is what all of this does to the credibility of the House. How would any of us explain to our constituents that an overwhelming majority in the House favored a repeal of catastrophic health care and voted for it, but the repeal was defeated by another amendment that got fewer votes? I doubt any of our constituents would understand that. And I wouldn't blame them.

That's really the point of all this. We always like to mention here that this is the people's House. But when this House operates by rules that the people don't understand, then we're just not representing them properly.

My point is that we should stop trying to play the game that Jake LaMotta's brother Joey played. Our rules should be simple, straightforward, and completely fair: If you win, you win. But if you lose, you lose.

Mr. Speaker, our rule should be simple, straightforward, and completely fair. It should be, "If you win, you win. But if you lose, you lose."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. UPTON] for giving us those thoughts mixed with sports analogies. I think we tend to look at politics and sports with a lot of the same rules, and the same competitive spirit and the same drive that drives people to excel in sports. I think it drives them to excel also in politics. And the great thing about sports is that the rules are set. They do not change. Everyone knows what the rules are, and one of those things that we learn as kids is to play by the rules, that we do not take our ball and go home. We win or lose the game based on our ability, and the rules are the same for everyone.

Mr. Speaker, it has been an interesting couple of weeks in the Congress these past 2 weeks with a number of truly major issues coming before the Congress. One of the things that I have noticed as a relative newcomer here is that while the Democratic Party holds the majority in numbers, there really seems to be evolving a new majority, a majority of conservative and moderate members of both parties who take positions independent of some of the leadership, at least the voiced leadership, positions. I think that this shows surely some independence on the part of the legislators and their support for good ideas, not necessarily for anything else other than for good ideas.

Mr. Speaker, I am reminded that this sort of independence has not been rewarded in the past in Congress. I have had the occasion to read an interesting book by former Speaker of the House, Mr. O'Neill, who was also a member of the Committee on Rules and served as the distinguished Speaker of this House.

He became a member of the Rules Committee fairly early in his career, which was certainly a great reward for his leadership ability. He learned rather quickly that you cannot count on simple majorities to get the votes that you want.

What happened in his tenure on the Rules Committee is that the Democratic leadership at the time decided that the ratio was not big enough, that it would be better, rather than a majority that reflected the House majority, a 3-to-2 majority, to make it a 2-to-1 majority, or a 2-to-1 plus 1 majority. That was done and it stands today.

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. UPTON. You know, what is really interesting about the way the numbers have been set on the Rules Committee, Republicans were able to get about 48½ percent of the vote for Congress nationwide, but because of gerrymandering practices, et cetera, we ended up with just a shade more than 40 percent of the seats here in this House, in essence a 3-to-2 margin that the Democrats have over the Republicans. Many of the committee reflect that same 3-to-2 ratio, as the gentleman just indicated.

Here we have the Rules Committee, a committee that almost every bill goes to before it comes for debate on this floor, dictates what amendments can be offered, if any, who is going to offer them, how much time is going to be offered for debate, whether it waives the Budget Act, and most of the rules do waive the Budget Act that we bring up on this House floor. It is viewed by many as a procedural vote, but it is very important. Take this reconciliation bill that we have been debating this past week, 1,935 pages, only allowed 8 or 9 amendments.

There are many things certainly that I as a Member representing southwestern Michigan cannot stand in this bill, and we have no way to get it out, no way to debate the merits. There are hundreds and hundreds of pages in that bill, and yet that vote when it came up, you know, it is viewed as a procedural vote and you only got an hour of debate for the purpose of the bill.

The other committees, and I cited some of the numbers a little bit earlier, Energy and Commerce, Foreign Affairs, my Public Works Committee, relatively fair in terms of numbers in the House, a 3-to-2 margin, and you think, well, the Republicans have four Members on that committee, on the Rules Committee. The Democrats ought to have 6, 3 to 2, or 6 to 4. That is what it ought to be. The Democrats do not have six. They do not have seven. They do not have eight. They have nine.

So even if we are able to win on the merits in the discussion in the Rules Committee, we are going to get rolled almost every single time.

Mr. WALSH. Well, in a sporting event, I guess I might even take four good Republicans to nine good Democrats in a baseball game.

Mr. UPTON. Well, they won 8 to 2, and they did not have the umpire here when they played in August; even Bart Giamatti was on our side that evening, I think.

Mr. WALSH. But even in a case where each individual has one vote, there are nine votes to four votes, it is pretty tough to muster a majority from that small a minority.

Mr. Speaker, there are a number of other points that I would like to make in regard to these rules. This discussion of rules, I think, goes to the very foundation of our democracy. Indeed, we, the membership of this House, have begun to recognize the need for change, that we, the Representatives of a democratic form of government must ourselves become more democratic. Because if our legislative process is fair, then indeed we bettter represent the interests of the American people.

Thomas Jefferson wrote in his Manual of Parliamentary Practice:

> It is much more material that there should be a rule to go by than what that rule is; that there may be a uniformity of proceeding in business not subject to the caprice of the Speaker or the captiousness of the Members. It is very material that order, decency and regularity be preserved in a dignified public body.

Let us talk about self-executing rules.

The practice of providing that upon the adoption of an order-of-business resolution, an amendment or measure would automatically be agreed to, is called a self-executing rule. Such a rule was used only once in the 95th Congress or 0.4 percent, never in the 96th or 0 percent, twice in the 97th or 1.3 percent, 5 times in the 98th or 2.6 percent, 20 times in the 99th or 12 percent, and 26 times in the 100th Congress or 16 percent of all the rules that were promulgated were executing rules. My source of these statistics is the Rules Committee.

The Republican rule package would place limits on self-executing rules. The rules package states:

> It would not be in order to consider any order-of-business resolution from the Rules Committee that provides for the automatic passage of any bill, joint resolution or conference report, or adoption of any motion, amendment, or resolution, except by a two-third House vote on agreeing to such consideration.

In the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989, on which we have been working for the past several weeks, H.R. 3299, the rule provides for five "self-executing" provisions, they are as follows:

The rule provides for an amendment striking textile and footwear provision of the Caribbean Basin Initiative in the bill and adding back a 50-percent reduction in duties on certain leather-related products.

The rule provides for an amendment collecting a user fee for the filing of FCC form 740 in the Energy and Commerce title of the bill.

The rule provides for an amendment designed to bring the Post Office and Civil Service Committee's reconciled savings up to the level required in this year's budget resolution. The amendment would require the Postal Service to pay for cost-of-living adjustment for certain retirees and survivors and would raise an estimated $69 million toward reconciliation targets.

The rule provides for an amendment providing that transfers of outlays, receipts, or revenues from one fiscal year to another are a necessary but secondary effect of a significant policy change. This amendment addresses several timing changes in the Agriculture, Energy and Commerce, and Ways and Means titles of H.R. 3299, and would permit the scoring of the amount of deficit reduction that would result from their enactment.

Finally, the rule provides for an amendment incorporating abortion-neutral language into the bill. This amendment is designed to clarify that sex discrimination provisions of the child care portion of this bill do not require an employer to pay for or provide abortion-related service.

Now, you may notice that some of these things you would support, others you may oppose, but in fact none of us will ever have the opportunity to vote on these because they become a self-executing rule. They are part of the rule itself.

It would seem that reconciliation bills such as this are loaded with extraneous and nongermane issues which have all sorts of spending implications. A lot of the issues contained in this bill should be allowed to stand on their own merit. Again, whatever your arguments concerning a particular idea, for or against, a reconciliation bill is simply not an appropriate legislative vehicle for self-execution.

The democratic process is not served when you restrict the opportunity for debate and amendment, and pass a separate bill at the same time. We pass a rule to limit debate, and on the basis of that vote, consider a separate bill passed. What happens if we oppose limiting debate and amendments, but we support the separate unrelated bill that is connected to it? We are stuck and put in the position of choosing which is more important.

There are a number of concerns that this raises. There are so many things in the reconciliation bill that we do not get to vote on that one is obliged almost to support the entire bill because one supported certain aspects of that bill. There is a number of issues within the bill that should be pulled out and voted upon, but will not be.

Mr. Speaker, there is a number of other rules that we are certainly concerned about, as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. UPTON] discussed, the king-of-the-hill rule, closed rules, modified rules, and other amendments that have caused difficulty and have taken some of the fairness out of the process.

□ 2100

If I could redirect just back briefly before I close, when I was elected to city council president in Syracuse, and I know you, Mr. Speaker, served in city government yourself, and I appreciate you sitting here listening to our discussion of the rules promulgated by the Democratic Party, but very patient and a very fairminded individual, my first act, unofficial act in office, was to present each member of the council that I was presiding over but was a Democratic majority a copy of the Robert's Rules of Order and the rules of the city council, and I enforced those rules as they stood without an add on or change in the rules or interpretation or special interpretations. I did that for 3 years, and I enforced the rules evenhandedly for and against the Democrats, for and against the Republicans. My rulings were never challenged in that 3-year period, and I think that what that told me was that one can have a legislative body, and it does not matter who is in control of the body as long as everyone respects the rules.

If the rules are respected and enforced evenhandedly, the public benefits. The legislature benefits.

I would submit upon closing that that approach should be carried out in this august body. There is no more important legislative body on Earth than this one, and certainly we could show the other countries of the world the best way to run a legislature is to do it with good rules.

HURRICANE HUGO'S DEVASTATION OF THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from the Virgin Islands [Mr. DE LUGO] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. DE LUGO. Mr. Speaker, let me begin by first thanking the Members of the Udall Codel that came to my home in our time of need, that flew down to St. Croix to assess the damage that had been done to this American community by Hurricane Hugo. I want to thank the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER], who led the delegation, my good friend, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. GUARINI], my very good friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL], the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. BYRON], the gentleman from Puerto Rico [Mr. FUSTER], my neighbor from Puerto Rico, the gentleman from Samoa [Mr. FALEOMAVAEGO], my friend from across the other side of the world in the Pacific, American Samoa, and, of course, our former colleague, the Secretary of the Interior, Manual Lujan. I want to thank the gentleman from Puerto Rico [Mr. FUSTER], the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER], the gentleman from California [Mr. LAGOMARSINO], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA], the gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. BYRON], the gentleman from American Samoa [Mr. FALEOMAVAEGA], and the chairman, the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. UDALL], for taking a special order on Tuesday, September 26, to talk to the Members of this House and the people of our country about what they had seen in this U.S. territory.

Mr. Speaker, I have been on St. Croix since the day after the hurricane. I remained there until this Monday, October 2. I flew in to St. Croix on Tuesday on a C-141 which flew in before the St. Croix airport was open, and this plane was made available to us through FEMA and through the Department of Defense. I had contacted the day of the storm Robert Morris, the Acting Director of FEMA. I had also contacted Stella Guerra, the Assistant Secretary of the Interior for Territories, or I should actually rephrase that and say that Assistant Secretary Stella Guerra actually contacted me, called me from Hawaii to offer the assistance of the Department of the Interior. For that I am very grateful, and the people of the Virgin Islands are grateful, too.

I contacted Tom Wiener, chief of staff to Secretary Lujan and Dave Gribbin, the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Legislative Affairs. We also contacted Lt. Gov. Derrick Hodge while he was in the air. He had gone to Syracuse taking his daughter to enroll her for the new college year, and we told the Lieutenant Governor what was happening. He was flying back. He was going toward Miami, but we asked him to come and join us here in Washington so that we could fly down together on this aircraft. So we did that.

First, we met on Tuesday, the morning after the hurricane at 8 a.m. with Grant Peterson, the Deputy Director of FEMA, and at 9 o'clock the Lieutenant Governor, Derrick Hodge, and myself left for the Air National Guard base at Martinsburg, WV, and at 11 a.m. we were in the air along with the Under Secretary of the Interior, Frank Bracken, two members of the Office of Territories and International Affairs, with Gerald Conley, the Federal Coordinator for FEMA, and from FEMA also Stephen Singer and Curtis Carlton, 1 SBA official and approximately 15 communications specialists from FEMA.

At 4 o'clock that afternoon we arrived on St. Croix, and that night at 6 o'clock, on Tuesday evening, communications for the first time since Hugo struck were established by the FEMA communications team with the outside world. The outside world was the United States, the mainland.

We could communicate with Washington, but we could not communicate down the street in Christiansted. We could not communicate with Frederiksted. We could not communicate with the people living in the outlying districts of St. Croix. In fact, we could not communicate with anyone on the island of St. Croix. We could not communicate with the island of St. Thomas, the capital of the Virgin Islands, 40 miles away. There was no communication.

I want to tell the Members what I found when I returned to my home, and I want to share with them what it was really like in this American territory. I have to tell them that I was not ready for the devastation that we found on St. Croix. I simply was not ready for it, and I do not think that anyone who has seen what happened to St. Croix, those who were there in the early days, was prepared for it.

When we arrived in St. Croix and we went with a convoy, just a group of cars, into the town of Christiansted, I have never seen such devastation. The island of St. Croix, which just a few days earlier had been green and verdant, was brown as the walls of this Chamber, the entire island. There was not a speck of green. There was not a single green leaf anywhere on St. Croix. This was one of the things that struck me. I never thought that a lack of green could have such an effect on one, but no one would believe how we relate to nature until there is a dramatic change between the environment that one is accustomed to.

There were 100-year-old mahogany trees, these majestic giants, and they were picked up as though they were nothing. They were thrown across the road. For us to drive to Christiansted, it took a long time, because there were telephone poles down everywhere. There was wires down everywhere. The power lines were down. There were, as we entered Christiansted, rows of these trees that we have along the sides of the roads that were not completely down.

And it was the eeriest sight. It looked as though cruisers or battleships had been laying off of Christiansted or St. Croix and shelling the island for months, because those trees that had not been uprooted, where they had been maybe 100 feet tall, they were maybe 12 feet tall, and they were ripped off. There were just shreds.

It looked like a World War I picture of a forest that they used to battle in and shell each other for a year or so.

You saw all the buildings without roofs. Ninety percent of the buildings on St. Croix had major destruction. The people were in shock.

You cannot conceive of what it is like until you have been in a community where there is no communication whatsoever as when you have been on an island.

If you have a hurricane on the mainland, that hurricane passes. There is devastation. Help comes from across the State line. You can communicate with the States around you. You are not completely cut off.

The little island of St. Croix, with some 60,000 people, was completely cut off for at least 48 hours. They did not know if any help was coming. There was no way to get word in or out except for some broadcasts that were being made by ham radio operators from boats lying off the shore.

Why did certain things happen in St. Croix? God, I wish the press, which has written so much and said so much about St. Croix, rather than reaching for sensationalism had taken a moment to ask themselves certain questions and ask how any American community would respond when they are frightened, when they cannot communicate with each other

If you are the chief of police and you try to reach your men on St. Croix after that storm, how do you reach them? Do you call them up? There is no telephone. There are no radios working. All of the radios that had been put in by FEMA and the others, they were not working because every relay station had been torn down.

The only way that you could communicate with anyone was to send a runner. Ten percent of the police department came. That 10 percent, has anybody given them a commendation? Has anybody from the press said one word about the 10 percent that were on duty for 4 continuous days and nights, or what they did during those days?

I will tell you that there are men in the St. Croix Police Department that I will walk anywhere with. Capt. Ohanio Richards showed such devotion and good judgment. Do you know what the police did? There was rioting. No, there was not rioting, there was only rioting reported in the press. There was looting. There is a vast difference. There was looting, which is condoned by no one. Who condones looting? But there was looting. I saw it.

We have never had looting in the history of the Virgin Islands. But when I arrived on Tuesday, I saw the crowds. But they were not rioting. There were not mobs with machetes and guns.

I am going to quote some of the things that were printed in the press. The press got so carried away, they showed groups looting on the television screen and they used certain words that convinced people looking that, my God, what is happening here?

This little island of people, frightened; tourists in the Virgin Islands, frightened. Certainly they were frightened. You would be frightened. Anyone would be frightened, anyone, when you are placed in a situation where there is no power, there is no water, there is no food, there is no communication, there is no word that anyone knows anything about what is going on. Is anyone coming to help? What is happening?

All you hear are rumors. The rumors go like wildfire. The mainland press only prints the rumors. The television, they show the rumors.

They did not show the devastation or the problems that this community had. All they showed were people looting. Looting is a tragedy for any community.

Is looting new after a storm? It is new in the Virgin Islands, but it is a common occurrence here on the mainland.

When there is a hurricane that hits New Jersey, has there not been looting? When a hurricane hits Miami, has there not been looting? Was there not looting in Virginia without a hurricane just recently? But has the press played it up as though there were some sort of a racial attack upon innocent people? That is what it was played up as.

I hold in my hand a copy of the New York Times, an article written by one Jeffrey Schmalz entitled "Roots of Looting on St. Croix Lie in Racial and Class Tensions." From the New York Times of September 26. I will quote to you just a little bit.

> Some private groups, including the Council on Hemispheric Affairs, said they believed that unemployment on St. Croix is as high as 30 percent. They said St. Croix is treated as "backwoods" by the United States. It has few paved roads.

Well, my friends, for the record this American community that this left-wing think-tank is talking about happened to have an unemployment rate of between 2 and 3 percent. That is a rate that is considered by any American community as full employment.

Roads, the Virgin Islands participates as a State under the Federal Highway Program. The roads on St. Croix are the envy of St. Thomas, to tell you the truth.

But that is not so bad. Listen to this from the same New York Times.

> I woke up and heard Rastafarian drums right after the storm, said a 40-year-old woman who lived on St. Croix 10 years and was at the airport on that Friday to flee to Miami with her two small children.

Rastafarian drums. Drums in the hills. I have lived all my life in the Virgin Islands. My family has been in the Virgin Islands for over a century. I have never heard Rastafarian drums. But it is a picture that will terrorize people on the mainland. It was so good that the Miami Herald the next day reprinted this Schultz on page 1.

Then we have the Chicago Tribune of September 21. The Chicago Tribune talks about "machete armed mobs."

I tell you that there was looting, and that the looting came about I was told because the people were in fear, wondering where is the food going to come from. They did not know that the 10 percent of the police department that had been on duty had secured the warehouses of food and they had secured the armory where the arsenal is.

□ 2120

And they secured a number of other key places. But they went into a grocery store to buy food after the storm. The people went in there and they started to buy the food. The next thing, people started, everybody wanted to be first, and they got into pushing and shoving, and the next thing, one of the managers of the grocery store said, "Look, all you just go ahead, help yourselves, take it, take it," because they are insured anyway. That was the beginning of the looting because the minute you tell people, "Take it, help yourself," they start grabbing and that sets it off. It set it off in St. Croix and it set it off in mainland community after mainland community.

So we had looting. What did the police do? Well, it just so happens that the police did make arrests. But then what were they going to do with the people they arrested? The prison had been destroyed or suffered major damage so that the prisoners had gotten out from Hurricane Hugo. Also the detention center at Anna's Hope had suffered major damage.

So the police arrested the people that were looting, and then finally they gave up because they realized they had no place to put them and they let them go.

The looting continued and it got out of hand. People were afraid.

You can believe that in a situation like that you are afraid.

The people that were on the island were afraid, that is a natural thing to be afraid in a situation like that.

They wanted to know what help was coming, who was going to come to help them. But it is one thing to be frightened down there; it is another thing to be a member of the press with the responsibility of being a member of the great U.S. press and the powerful television media and your responsibility really is to give the people a balanced report of what is really happening in this U.S. territory.

The temptation is to go for sensationalism. Well, unfortunately they went for the sensationalism because on September 20 the Miami Herald said that gangs were moving through the streets with rifles and frightened tourists begged for help. There were no gangs with rifles.

There were people with rifles and guns protecting their property, but there were no gangs of machete-wielding people going through the town.

Time magazine, not to be outdone, listen to Time magazine:

> Anarchy in Paradise. When the skies cleared, locals armed with rifles, guns and machetes plundered the ravaged streets of Christiansted and Frederiksted. Gunfire could be heard throughout those cities.

When you read all these things and they are telling you these things and they are showing you pictures of people looting, they convince you that you are seeing things that you are not seeing.

Even worse, this is Time magazine again, "There was rioting by armed gangs of local residents."

The Wall Street Journal, Alexander Cockburn, again they are quoting the same Larry Birns, director of Washington-based Council of Hemispheric Affairs as saying unemployment and underemployment hovered around 30 percent before the hurricane.

You know, one thing we can all be proud of regarding Hurricane Hugo was the response of our country.

I want to tell you that when the Governor requested of the President that the MP units be sent in, they asked me, "If there was only looting, why are you asking for MP units?" Because you would have done the same thing as a responsible leader on the mainland. If you only have 10 percent of your police force, because the rest of the police force are with their families who have lost their homes, they are with their wives and children, looking after their families—it is not something I am condoning, you should first be on duty—but they made the decision that they wanted to look out for their families because their families had no shelter. So they were human.

But the reality was that we had 10 percent of the police force and 15 percent of the National Guard. It went up to 25 percent when I came there.

You say, "Well, if there was only looting, why did you ask for MP's?" Well, because with the type of reports that were circulating and the fear that was there, all you had to have was one incident and you would have seen a cycle begin that would have taken down that entire community.

So the Governor and I asked the President of the United States to send professionals, men who would have restraint, men who had good judgment, who could handle a situation like that.

Those are the same type of men that we would have brought to a mainland community under those circumstances because the police had been on duty, that 10 percent were worn out. It is when you are overtired that you can make a mistake.

So they came in. The President got the request from the Governor at 4 on Wednesday afternoon, and that was on September 20. The President declared it a disaster at 1:30 that afternoon. The Governor's request for military police went in at 4 and at 7:30 for the Airborne at Fort Bragg to mobilize.

At 7 the next morning, Brig. Gen. W. Bruce Moore and the advance party arrived at the airport on St. Croix, and for the rest of the day the rest of the troops were coming in.

I am going to tell you something about these men and about this officer, Brig. Gen. Bruce Moore. You will not find better anywhere in the world.

They came in and they displayed such professionalism. They did not go out, were not occupying a U.S. territory, they were not invading; they came to help and they came and they worked with our local police department and with our National Guard unit, and order was the rule of the day.

With all the dire predictions that have been made, not one person, not one white person, was killed. One young man did lose his life in the hysteria. He is a black youth who was slightly mentally retarded, well known in the community, never harmed anyone. Evidently he got into mischief, and a frightened pharmacist shot him dead.

This young man that was shot dead, he ran errands for the president of the legislature. The president of the legislature is of Danish descent. In other words, I am telling Members that the president of the legislature of the Virgin Islands is white. That is how it is in the West Indies. We have a society where we do not judge everything by the color of your skin. The president of the legislature was speaking to me the day after, and I was telling him what had happened. He was shocked, because the day before he had been with the young man.

However, that is what happens to human beings when hysteria takes over. That young man is dead. Many more could have been dead.

The fierceness of Hugo alone, it is a miracle that hundreds were not killed in the Virgin Islands. However, they were not. That was the miracle of Hugo. We survived Hugo. Only the material things were destroyed—our homes. My brother lost his home. He lost two houses, one that he lived in, and another that he rented. One completely, the other one, 50 to 60 percent damaged. Lots of people lost their homes. Many people lost everything they had. The price was a little time to focus on that. These are human beings in St. Croix, and they are Americans.

Members should have seen the fury of Hugo. A person goes there and sees at the Hess Oil refinery huge steel tanks, crushed as though they were papier-mache. The gymnasium at Central High School, that was used as a shelter for the people because it was made of concrete and steel, and it was a shelter from the storm, that was destroyed. The steel was twisted as though it were spaghetti, and the concrete just blown down. The people, at the height of the storm, were crawling on their bellies across that field, trying to get to the Central High School. That is what was going on in St. Croix. Did the press mention that?

I visited Dr. Aubrey Anduze, who I had the great honor to serve with in the legislature of the Virgin Islands. We were together. He is a former president of the legislature. He is a deacon of the Anglican Church. He is a dentist. He is a civic leader. He is a wonderful human being. He is educated, and he is black. However, he does not think of himself in racial terms. He thinks of himself as a West Indian. He and his son lost their home, totally. I went to their house. Their roof is gone, and he said, "Ron, my son and I, we are amazed that we are alive," because during the storm they thought they would stay in their bedroom, because this is a well-built house of concrete, and during the storm the roof starts to give, and he and his son are trying to get out of their bedroom, and the door was stuck. Something was jammed against the door, and they were up on the second floor. They were pushing. They are not kids any more, they are older, and they were pushing that door, and they finally got the door open and the roof comes crashing in. They would have been killed. So they go downstairs to the first floor, and as they get to the downstairs, this huge window blows out, and bam, and all the things that they had on the wall, things start blowing around and whistling around the room. They grab a mattress, put it against the window and for 6 hours they are holding that mattress against the window. The press does not tell readers about that.

Hurricane Hugo. The might of Hurricane Hugo. It is like God saying, "Hey, you are spending too much time just interested in material things. Maybe I will show you what my power is." He sure did show citizens what his power is. The helicopters of the National Guard that were put into the hanger were crushed, destroyed. The airport terminal, the control towers, both airports—down. Buildings destroyed. People so frightened. No communication, no way of talking to your neighbor. No way of knowing what is happening to your son who lives in that part of the island, or your daughter who lives over here, or your cousin who lives over there. Or your child, who is staying with your cousin. That is how it was.

We have to have compassion and understanding. We have to have responsibility and restraint when we report about a tragedy in an American community. I know TV has these programs that have become so vulgar and so sensational where they shout at each other, and the more common they can become, the more the public watches this. Is that what the news is supposed to be, that we simply make it sensational, make it sensational and do not mind at all this devastation that has been wreaked on these poor people in St. Croix?

Nows the power of the mainland media. They are going to try to equal Hugo in the devastation that they wreak on this poor community, where not only the buildings have been destroyed, but the entire economy has been destroyed. Scare all the people on the mainland, because tourism is the lifeblood of this place. Let me tell Members the things that they said had been going on, then absolutely tell the people. But what was going on was looting, and what was going on was fear, and all the things I have been describing to Members. So much fear.

If a person is a leader, and I come from a background of radio and the media, I know what the responsibility of broadcasting is. A person does not broadcast rumors until they are checked out to see if it is a rumor or if it is a fact. The New York Times, in an article they did on the early page, page 2 or so, they went into all kinds of hysterical overstatements, and they jumped to page 24, and they continued, and at the end of page 24, the last thing if a reader struggles through reading all that, then they reported at the end of the whole thing that the Federal authorities had stated that the reports that had come out of St. Croix were greatly exaggerated.

Now I imagine that what I am saying is being carried by C-SPAN, and I know that some Members who are watching me address the House may have been in St. Croix and were so frightened that they think there was shooting and that there were mobs with machetes.

No, there was looting, and there was destruction, and there was a suffering community, and there were a lot of frightened people who wanted out and deserved to be able to come out. I say to them, "You came out because your country responded, and we helped to get the means to bring you out."

There were shots all over the place? Yes, a lot of damage beyond Hugo has been put on this community, and we are going to have to rebuild it now.

However, Mr. Speaker, I want to tell my colleagues some good things. I want to tell them, first of all, that our country looks very good in the Caribbean because of men like General Moore, because of naval officers such as Admiral Moriarity who is heading the operation down there; Admiral Moriarity, because of people like Colonel Frederick, who was a top aide to General Moore, because of people like Capt. Paul Hanley of the U.S. Navy, because of one of the greatest skippers that I met, skipper of a small Navy ship called the Groves. We in St. Croix will always remember the Groves and men who reflect their skipper, their commanding officer, the men of the Groves. Mr. Speaker, they are the way we would like to see all Americans be and all American sailors be. They were incredible. They came ashore, they volunteered, they helped in the clean-up, they helped in rebuilding homes. One of the men even helped in the delivery of a child, new life, after this storm. They did everything.

Then there were the men of the Pensacola under the command of William Niethal. The Pensacola came there. It had nine berths; that is, hospital beds, that were needed.

The Coast Guard did a fine job. They are, of course, under the Department of Transportation, but I tell my colleagues that I was telling Admiral Kelso who came down; Dick Cheney sent him down to look at the whole situation, and I told the admiral, I said, "You know I've never seen anything like this." I said, "I just don't think that a few years ago the military could have done this. I think that a few years ago there would have been all kinds of interservice rivalries, but in this operation there was none of that."

The Air Force, the Army, the Navy, the Coast Guard all working together to help this American community and these poor people who were suffering.

The President sent in plane load after plane load. Do my colleagues know what it is to send in 15 C-5's? A C-5 is the largest plane in the world. The Russians have one like ours. It looks nice on the outside, but it is not quite as good on the inside, not quite the quality of the C-5. Fifteen C-5's loaded with food and supplies, relief material for this American community.

Forty-one C-141's, 25 C-130's, 2 portable airport towers and navigational aids, a portable field hospital, a complete hospital, 850 pallets of food from the U.S. Department of Agriculture, and then on top of that, another 4 C-5's loaded with food and supplies for this community.

Some local people did well, too. I want to tell my colleagues a moment about a radio station—talk about media? Media should take a look at real media, a radio station called WSTA.

Mr. Speaker, I started out with that radio station when I got out of the service. That was a long time ago, over 30 years ago. It was a little 250-watt station when I started out with it. It is considerably more than that today.

However, Mr. Speaker, this station stayed on the air continuously, 24 hours a day, for the past 2 weeks. They did not broadcast a single commercial up until maybe 2 or 3 days ago.

My colleagues have never heard anything like this. They were on the air during the storm. They were the only thing in St. Thomas. Our stations were knocked off the air.

Mr. Speaker, this was a big handicap in St. Croix, but this station in St. Thomas stayed on the air, and people were calling in during the storm saying, "My roof is collapsing. The windows are blowing in. I'm afraid. I'm afraid."

Mr. Speaker, my colleagues have never heard anything like a hurricane, the wild howling, and powerful blowing down of things, and continuously roofs flying through the air, and they said, "I'm afraid. I got to get out of here. I've got to get out of here." Mr. Speaker, the announcer was saying, "No, don't. Go into the bathroom in your house. Hide there. That's the best place, or go by your sink, and go under the sink, and hide there, and stay there," and they would do it.

Mr. Speaker, one family tried to cook something during the storm, and the stove blew up, and they got burnt, and they called into the radio station saying, "My mother is in agony. She's been burnt. what can we do because they can't get the ambulance to us?"

And another person called in, and it was a nurse, and she said, "Have your mother put her hands under the cold water," and she told them what to do, how to wrap it, and how to take care of her mother and the others until the ambulance got there.

My colleagues, it was incredible. I mean this is incredible. This station; there is no question in my mind that this station is responsible for the saving of who knows how many lives. Who knows how many people did not panic and run out into the street during the storm because of this station staying on the air with Lee Carle, and Addie Ottley and Brownie. All of them, they deserve our special commendation.

WAPA: That is the public utility. I always used to beat up on them. Well, let me tell my colleagues that they have earned my admiration. Director Alberto Bruno-Vega and Gregory Willocks, a Cruzan who heads the operation in St. Croix. He is as good as anybody. He is terrific, and they are getting back the power. They are putting it back together. They have already gotten the de-sal plants working. They have already got water out into the community. They are bringing this community back.

And VITELCO, I never had a good word to say about them—this is the telephone company—never until now, because they are doing a terrible job.

The Alabama and Georgia Power and Light Hugo Express: they are down there helping us. They were flown in from Alabama, and from the other side of the world Governor Ada has sent 21 experts on restoring power on lines because they are accustomed to dealing with typhoons out in the Pacific. And he sent from that American territory in the Pacitic to the American territory in need in the Caribbean this help.

□ 2150

Why does the press not tell that story? Why does it not tell the story of Americans in Guam helping Americans in the Caribbean? Is it not sensational enough? No. That is passed on. They are not talking about St. Croix anymore. That is finished. They have moved on to other things, you know, bearded women and God knows what else, but we have to live with it.

Thank God that we have a President, a Secretary of the Interior, a Secretary of Defense, who have responded to the needs of this American community.

I am convinced that we are going to be all right in the Virgin Islands. We are going to be all right in St. Croix. The Army Corps of Engineers is down there helping us to rebuild.

I want to tell Chairman ANDERSON, he called me, we missed each other.

There is Colonel Cox of the Army Corps and Captain Torres of the Army Corps, Lt. Gov. Derek Hodge, Virgin Islands National Guard Bob Moorhead, who worked tirelessly around the clock on St. Croix.

Everything you did on St. Croix you had to do like you were doing it five or six times before you could get it done, because there was no communication.

The FAA, Castleberry, FAA Atlanta, who helped us to restore those airports so that the planes could come in.

There was Sandy Bathon, the FAA tower manager of St. Croix.

Terry Highfield of Pan American, general manager, St. Croix.

Mike Navarro, American Airlines general manager, St. Croix, and the Zenon Construction Co., and I will tell you about many more in the week and months ahead.

What a wonderful thing it was to have one of the President's Cabinet officers come down on the Sunday after the storm, Manuel Lujan. We all know Manny Lujan, we who have served with him here. It is typical of him to do that, because he is a caring person. He is a warm person. There are people who are capable of being put into high positions and not lose their humanity and retain their caring for other people, and Manny Lujan is such a person. Some of the press do not like that style. They have already started to beat up on him, but we like him because he cares about people.

And Chairman MO UDALL, responding to my request and dispatching Codel Udall, led by GEORGE MILLER, CHARLIE RANGEL, coming down to see us. He has always been helpful to us.

There was FRANK GUARINI, BEVERLY BYRON, her remarks during the special order a few days ago, beautiful and caring.

So I want to say to all my friends here in the Congress that we will need your help.

You know, we have a lot of legislation on the books for disasters like this. We have the FEMA legislation, but unfortunately the rebuilding of the buildings and the putting on of the power and restoring water, that is the easiest part of it, but there is nothing on the books to help to rebuild a totally devastated economy, and that is where St. Croix is. So I will need your help. The U.S. Territory of the Virgin Islands will need your help. The people of St. Croix will need your help, and I am convinced that we will get your help, because that is the kind of country we are and that is the kind of Congress we are and that is the kind of people you are.

We are going to come out of this in St. Croix better than ever, because we are going to be the type of community that we should be in the West Indies, in the Caribbean, a community where we are going to live together, and we do not judge each other by the color of our skins. The vast majority of the people of the Virgin Islands are black. And how do I get to be their delegate to Congress? I run in a free election every 2 years, because we do not judge each other by the color of our skin. We like each other based on what we know about each other, whether a person is fun or kind, truthful and we can count on them. Really, on that score, we are way ahead of you here on the mainland, we really are.

So I say to the press, if you really want to do something, come down in a few months and see how we are living on St. Croix.

I was at a press conference today over at the National Press Club with a group of business leaders from St. Croix and St. Thomas who were led by Commissioner Eric Dawson and Leona Bryant, the director of tourism, and you had representatives of the chamber and of the hotel industry.

St. Thomas is coming back so fast. St. Thomas did not have the devastation of St. Croix. St. Thomas had selected areas that were very hard hit. They were talking about, "Come down to St. Thomas. We are going to give you guaranteed hotel rooms." That is, they guarantee that you have a good time at that hotel or you pay nothing. Sounded like a good deal to me.

But I was thinking, what do you say about St. Croix, because we suffered so much damage. Why would you want to go to St. Croix? I will tell you why you want to go to St. Croix. If you want in a few months to go down there, you are going to meet the people, because the island of St. Croix is going to be a very close community, close community, not closed, but close. We are going to share many things. It will be like it was I think back in the fifties when it was great to go to a West Indian or Caribbean island and meet the people. You do not go and have this plastic vacation like you have so many places today. You meet the people. You find out what a West Indian is really like. You find out that I like that person. You find all the qualities, all the warmth that is there. You have a great time. You learn about a great part of the world. You will learn about an American community that is, well, very different. It is not there just to make a lot of money. It is there, well, to protect our values and to have a really great life.

So I hope you will come and I hope you will help me and help our people rebuild from the devastation of Hugo.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

INTRODUCTION OF A BILL TO PROVIDE FEDERAL JURISDICTION OF CERTAIN MULTIPARTY, MULTIFORUM CIVIL ACTIONS

HON. ROBERT W. KASTENMEIER

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing legislation designed to improve the efficiency with which Federal courts are able to handle complex, multidistrict litigation. A single airline crash, hotel fire or bridge collapse can generate hundreds of lawsuits in a myriad of State and Federal courts. Existing law provides the means to unify these proceedings to a considerable extent; nevertheless, it often remains impossible to avoid parallel proceedings in a variety of forums, due to defects in the laws governing joinder, transfer and consolidation. The result is a waste of judicial resources in both the Federal and State courts, which may be obliged to try identical liability issues numerous times. In addition, multiple suits give rise to problems in coordination between State and Federal courts, the threat of bankruptcy before all valid claims can be satisfied, and unfairness in connection with multiple awards of punitive damages.

My bill would create a new Federal court subject matter jurisdiction, specially tailored to meet the problems created by mass tort litigation. It would authorize such cases to be heard in Federal court provided that there is minimum diversity of citizenship among adversaries, and that at least 25 persons are alleged to have sustained physical injury or death resulting in damages over $50,000 per person. It would broaden available venues in mass tort cases to include any district in which any, rather than all, defendants reside. It would expand the authority of courts receiving mass tort cases transferred via multidistrict litigation procedures, so that such actions could be retained not only for pretrial proceedings, but for determinations of liability and in some cases, damages. Finally, it would relax requirements applicable to removal of cases from State to Federal court, so as to permit mass tort cases filed in State court to be more easily consolidated in Federal court, and to enable the Federal courts to return cases to the State courts for damage determinations, when appropriate.

At a time when the burgeoning volume of drug cases is imposing ever increasing workload pressures on the Federal courts, we must be mindful of the impact the laws we enact will have on the Federal judiciary. One of the primary objectives of this bill is to reduce duplicative litigation in the Federal courts, and so improve the efficiency of court operation. Accordingly, while this bill creates a new basis for federal jurisdiction, its net effect will be to assist rather than burden the Federal courts in their efforts to cope with workload pressures.

H.R. —

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Multiparty, Multiforum Jurisdiction Act of 1989".

SEC. 2. JURISDICTION OF DISTRICT COURTS.

(a) BASIS OF JURISDICTION.—Chapter 85 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"§ 1367. Multiparty, multiforum jurisdiction

"(a) The district courts shall have original jurisdiction of any civil action involving minimal diversity between adverse parties that arises from a single event or occurrence, where it is alleged in good faith that any 25 persons have either died or incurred injury in the event or occurrence and that, in the case of injury, the injury has resulted in damages which exceed $50,000 per person, exclusive of interest and costs, if—

"(1) a defendant resides in a State and a substantial part of the event or occurrence took place in another State;

"(2) any two defendants reside in different States; or

"(3) substantial parts of the event or occurrence took place in different States.

"(b) For purposes of this section—

"(1) minimal diversity exists between adverse parties if any party is a citizen of a State and any adverse party is a citizen of another State, a citizen or subject of a foreign state, or a foreign state as defined in section 1603(a) of this title;

"(2) a corporation is deemed to be a citizen of any State, and a citizen or subject of any foreign state, in which it is incorporated or has its principal place of business, and is deemed to be a resident of any State in which it is incorporated or licensed to do business or is doing business; and

"(3) 'injury' means physical harm to a natural person and physical damage to or destruction of tangible property.

"(c) In any action in a district court under this section, any person with a claim arising from the event or occurrence described in subsection (a) shall be permitted to intervene as a party plaintiff in the action, even if that person could not have brought an action in a district court as an original matter.

"(d) A district court in which an action under this section is pending shall promptly notify the judicial panel on multidistrict litigation of the pendency of the action.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 85 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

"1367. Multiparty, multiforum jurisdiction.".

SEC. 3. VENUE.

Section 1391 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(g) A civil action in which jurisdiction of the district court is based upon section 1367 of this title may be brought in any district in which any defendant resides or in which a substantial part of the event or occurrence giving rise to the action took place.".

SEC. 4. MULTIDISTRICT LITIGATION.

Section 1407 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(i)(1) In actions transferred under this section when jurisdiction is based in whole or in part on section 1367 of this title, the transferee district court may, notwithstanding any other provision of this section, retain actions so transferred for the determination of liability. An action retained for the determination of liability shall be remanded to the district court from which the action was transferred, or to the State court from which the action was removed, for the determination of damages unless the court finds, for the convenience of parties and witnesses and in the interest of justice, that the action should be retained for the determination of damages.

"(2) Any remand under paragraph (1) shall not be effective until 60 days after the transferee court has issued an order determining liability and has certified its intention to remand some or all of the transferred actions for the determination of damages. An appeal with respect to the liability determination and the choice of law determination of the transferee court may be taken during that 60-day period to the court of appeals with appellate jurisdiction over the transferee court. In the event a party files such an appeal, the remand shall not be effective until the appeal has been finally disposed of. Once the remand has become effective, the liability determination and the choice of law determination shall not be subject to further review by appeal or otherwise.

"(3) Any decision under this subsection concerning remand for the determination of damages shall not be reviewable by appeal or otherwise.".

SEC. 5. REMOVAL OF ACTIONS.

Section 1441 of title 28, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subsection (e) by striking out "(e) The court to which a civil action is removed" and inserting in lieu thereof "(f) The court to which a civil action is removed under this section"; and

(2) by inserting after subsection (d) the following new subsection:

"(e)(1) A defendant in a civil action in a State court may remove the action to the United States district court for the district and division embracing the place where the action is pending if—

"(A) the action could have been brought in a United States district court under section 1367 of this title, or

"(B) the defendant is a party to an action under section 1367 in a United States district court arising from the same event or occurrence as the action in State court.

The removal of an action under this subsection shall be made in accordance with section 1446 of this title, except that a petition for removal may also be filed before trial of the action in State court within 30 days after the date on which the defendant first becomes a party to an action under section 1367 in a United States district court arising from the same event or occurrence, or at a later time with leave of the district court.

"(2) Whenever an action is removed under this subsection and the district court to which it was removed has made a liability determination requiring further proceedings as to damages, the district court shall remand the action to the State court from which it had been removed for the determination of damages, unless the court finds that, for the convenience of parties and witnesses and in the interest of justice, the action should be retained for the determination of damages.

"(3) Any remand under paragraph (2) shall not be effective until 60 days after the district court has issued an order determining liability and has certified its intention to remand some or all of the removed actions for the determination of damages. An appeal with respect to the liability determination and the choice of law determination of the district court may be taken during that 60-day period to the court of appeals with appellate jurisdiction over the district court. In the event a party files such an appeal, the remand shall not be effective until the appeal has been finally disposed of. Once the remand has become effective, the liability determination and the choice of law determination shall not be subject to further review by appeal or otherwise.

"(4) Any decision under this subsection concerning remand for the determination of damages shall not be reviewable by appeal or otherwise.

"(5) An action removed under this subsection shall be deemed to be an action under section 1367 and an action in which jurisdiction is based on section 1367 of this title for purposes of this section and sections 1367, 1407, 1658, 1697, and 1785 of this title.".

SEC. 6. CHOICE OF LAW.

(A) DETERMINATION BY THE COURT.—Chapter 111 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"§ 1658. Choice of law in multiparty, multiforum actions

"(a) In an action under section 1367 of this title, the district court in which the action is brought or to which it is removed shall determine the source of the applicable substantive law, except that if an action is transferred to another district court, the transferee court shall determine the source of the applicable substantive law. In making this determination, a district court shall not be bound by the choice of law rules of any State, and the factors that the court may consider in choosing the applicable law include—

"(1) the law that might have governed if the jurisdiction created by section 1367 of this title did not exist;

"(2) the forums in which the claims were or might have been brought;

"(3) the location of the event or occurrence on which the action is based and the location of related transactions among the parties;

"(4) the place where the parties reside or do business;

"(5) the desirability of applying uniform law to some or all aspects of the action;

"(6) whether a change in applicable law in connection with removal or transfer of the action would cause unfairness;

"(7) the danger of creating unnecessary incentives for forum shopping;

"(8) the interest of any jurisdiction in having its law apply;

"(9) any reasonable expectation of a party or parties that the law of a particular jurisdiction would apply or would not apply;

"(10) any agreement or stipulation of the parties concerning the applicable law; and

"(11) whether a change in applicable law in connection with removal or transfer of the action would cause unfairness.

"(b) The district court making the determination under subsection (a) shall enter an order designating a single jurisdiction whose substantive law is to be applied in all other actions under section 1367 arising from the same event of occurrence as that giving rise to the action in which the determination is made. The substantive law of the designated jurisdiction shall be applied to all such actions before the court, and to all elements of each action, except where Federal law applies or the order specifically provides for the application of the law of another jurisdiction with respect to an action or an element of an action.

"(c) In an action remanded to another district court or a State court under section 1407 or 1441(e)(2) of this title, the district court's choice of law under subsection (b) shall continue to apply.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 111 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end of the following item:

"1658. Choice of law in multiparty, multiform actions.".

SEC. 7. SERVICE OF PROCESS.

(a) PROCESS THAN SUBPOENAS.—(1) Chapter 113 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end of the following new section:

"§ 1697. Service in multiparty, multiforum actions

"When the jurisdiction of the district court is based in whole or in part upon section 1367 of this title, process, other than subpoenas, may be served at any place within the United States, or anywhere outside the United States if otherwise permitted by law.".

"When the jurisdiction of the district court is based in whole or in part upon section 1367 of this title, process, other than subpoenas, may be served at any place within the United States, or anywhere outside the United States if otherwise permitted by law.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 113 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

"1697. Service in multiparty, multiforum actions.".

(b) SERVICE OF SUBPOENAS.—(1) Chapter 117 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end of the following new section:

"§ 1785. Subpoenas in multiparty, multiforum actions

"When the jurisdiction of the district court is based in whole or in part upon section 1367 of this title, a subpoena for attendance at a hearing or trial may, if authorized by the court upon motion for good cause shown, and upon such terms and conditions as the court may impose, be served at any place within the United States, or anywhere outside the United States if otherwise permitted by law.".

(2) The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 117 of title 28, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

"1785. Subpoenas in multiparty, multiforum actions.".

SEC. 8. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act shall apply to a civil action if the event or occurrence giving rise to the cause of action occurred on or after the 90th day after the day of the enactment of this Act.

CHILD CARE

HON. NANCY PELOSI

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow the House will debate a child care bill. This is one of the most important bills that we will take up this session.

It has been 20 years since we have debated child care. Within the past 20 years, we have seen over half of the mothers with young children leave the home to enter the work force. The number of single parent families with children under 10 will have risen 48 percent during the 1980's alone. These fundamental changes in the structure of the family require fundamental changes in our child care system. We cannot wait any longer to address these changes and to help our working families who depend on child care.

I want to commend Chairman HAWKINS and my colleagues on the Committee on Education and Labor, Chairman GEORGE MILLER of the Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families and Chairman TOM DOWNEY of the Ways and Means Subcommittee on Human Resources for their diligent work on the child care bill. I know they have spent much time and energy to develop the best child care bill possible for America's families.

I urge my colleagues to vote for the child care provisions in the budget reconciliation package and oppose the substitute amendments. American families are depending on the U.S. Congress to assist them in delivering a bill which will provide quality and affordable child care.

THE WAR ON POVERTY HANGS ON

HON. CARL C. PERKINS

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, as we celebrate the 25th anniversary of the Job Corps, I found the following article in the Sunday, September 24 edition of the Washington Post to be most timely and appropriate in discussing our much overlooked war on poverty. The article, written by Colman McCarthy, points out the largely ignored 25th anniversary of the Economic Opportunity Act—an act that created such programs as Head Start and VISTA as well as the Job Corps.

In the past decade, these critical and ultimately tax-saving programs have suffered severe cuts in funding as our administration has apparently shifted its Federal spending priorities. But in my Eastern Kentucky district, we continue to struggle in this war on poverty as unemployment rates reach as high as 40 percent in some areas. Though unfortunately, this ongoing battle no longer commands the attention that it had in the sixties, the programs that resulted play a crucial role in my district and the Nation.

Secretary Kemp, who is mentioned in the article, would be wise to build on these already proven and established programs that have been battling poverty long before Mr. Kemp decided to enter the battle. I respectfully submit Mr. McCarthy's article for my colleagues' review:

[From the Washington Post, Sept. 24, 1989]

THE WAR ON POVERTY HANGS ON

(By Colman McCarthy)

Given mainstream media's penchant—no, addiction—for fluff, the 20th anniversary of Woodstock transformed editors and reporters into hype-mongers convinced that a bemudded mob self-pastured for three days listening to over-amplified rock music was an event that shaped a generation.

Another anniversary—a 25th—occurred this summer about which hardly a syllable was written or uttered, although a torrent of stories was deserved. It was an event that led to the improvement and uplift of tens of millions of lives and that did shape a generation: the passage of the Economic Opportunity Act in August 1964.

The legislation created the Office of Economic Opportunity, an agency that was to last in name for 10 years but which has survived politically for 25 years in the programs its officials began. These include Head Start, Legal Services, VISTA, Job Corps, Foster Grandparents, Community Health Centers, Upward Bound and Community Action Agencies.

All were created following the funding of the 1964 law. All have survived. OEO-born programs were nurtured in the early days by some of the Left's most politically astute strategists, ranging from Michael Harrington who came aboard as a consultant, to Daniel Berrigan, the Jesuit priest and icon breaker who came to leadership meetings and later served as a volunteer in the Upward Bound Program. The original vision of the 1964 act—to eliminate poverty—has been sustained by allies in Congress who, though chiled by feeling like exiles, stayed unshaken in liberalism's belief in governmental compassion for the weak and poor.

Today, government largess is shoveled out to S&L pirates, to B-2 bombers, to witless prison-building, to the HUD pals of Sam Pierce. While the money is dispensed in unprecedented gobs, the same Republican right that has opposed poverty programs for a quarter-century now has as its leader in Congress Newt Gingrich who says: "The values of the Left cripple human beings, weaken cities, make it difficult for us to in fact survive as a country. . . . The Left in America is to blame for most of the current major diseases which have struck this society."

For a time—two years in the mid-60's—I was one of the disease carriers. I worked at OEO, mostly carrying suitcases for Sargent Shriver, its first director and today a man beloved by all those who worked, or still work, in the life-enhancing programs he inspired and ran. Maybe I'm not objective—the suitcases were always light and Shriver ever warmhearted—but what other public official in the past 25 years has seen so many of his own pro-people programs touch so many lives? Add in the Peace Corps, which Shriver whipped into shape before OEO, and the assertion of Shriver's uniqueness is even more undeniable.

That was the sentiment the other evening at the reunion conference of the National Association of Community Action Agencies. Some 2,000 officials and volunteers from 950 community action agencies honored Shriver for his enduring commitment.

Poverty war stories were told, with one of the sharpest coming from Arthur Blaustein, once chairman of Lyndon Johnson's advisory council on economic opportunity and now a professor at Berkeley:

"During the 1980 presidential campaign, then-candidate Reagan would entertain crowds with the line: 'Do you know how much it costs to keep a kid in the Job Corps? (Pause.) And how much it costs to send a youngster to Harvard? (Long pause.) Well, I'll tell you: $8,200 for the Job Corps and only $8,000 for Harvard.' This usually elicited gales of smug laughter. But it was a totally false comparison, a perversion of reality. It just shows how distortions and false myths are created. The average taxpayer doesn't want a complex economic answer but he does deserve an honest answer.

"There are substantial costs if we eliminate Job Corps. It costs $26,000 a year to keep a youngster in prison. It costs $32,000 to keep a youngster in an alcohol and drug abuse program. It costs $55,000 to keep a youngster in a mental institution. And it costs only $16,000 to keep a youngster in the Job Corps, where they are learning self-respect and job training."

Job Corps currently has 106 centers. Legal Services has 325 grantees. Head Start has nearly 10,000 centers. Community action agencies operate in 96 percent of all U.S. cities and counties, and VISTA, ever valiant, has 3,012 volunteers in 666 sites.

Earlier this year Jack Kemp announced he would commence "a war on poverty." Where has he been the past 25 years? Let Kemp, if he's interested in more than high-pitched gab, join the war on poverty that's already in progress and might be faring better had his own party not tried so often to gut it.

A TRIBUTE TO OLIN KING

HON. RONNIE G. FLIPPO

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. FLIPPO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Olin King, and his accomplishments in the fields of science and business.

Olin B. King is chairman, chief executive and a founder of SCI Systems, Inc. Since 1961, Olin King has displayed the type of innovative business leadership that has resulted in SCI Systems growing from a three-man operation to one of our country's multinational Fortune 500 sized companies. I am proud to have Olin King as one of my constituents.

Since first coming to Huntsville, AL, in 1957, Olin King has contributed greatly to the area's development as a center of science and industry and to our Nation's progress in electronics and aerospace technologies. Working first as an engineering manager at the Army Ballistic Missile Command and later as part of the original team at NASA's Marshall Space Flight Center, Olin King decided to return to the private sector in 1961 when he founded SCI.

Today, SCI Systems operates under Olin King's leadership as a diversified electronics manufacturer for both aerospace and commercial markets, and is now one of the Huntsville area's largest industrial employers with over 4,000 employees. In recognition of his innovative business leadership, Olin King was selected as the National Management Association's 1984 Executive of the Year.

Originally a native of Georgia, Olin King received a bachelor of science degree from North Georgia College. He performed graduate work at Emory University and the University of Pennsylvania after which he served in the Korean war as an officer in the U.S. Army Signal Corps.

Olin King is an active business and civic leader in Huntsville. In addition to being chairman of the board and CEO for SCI Systems, he serves as a director of First Alabama Bank of Huntsville, N.A., a director of Delta Comunications, Inc., and president of Crown Properties, Inc.

He has worked with both State and local civic organizations committed to promoting excellence in education and economic development in Alabama. Currently, he serves as a trustee of the Alabama Heritage Trust Fund, is a member of both the Council of Twenty-One, Alabama Commission on Higher Education and the Governor's Task Force on Economic Recovery, and is a director of the Alabama Research Institute. Additionally, Olin King serves as chairman, Research Park Board of the city of Huntsville, vice chairman and trustee of the Huntsville Hospital Foundation, and is a member of the University of Alabama in Huntsville's science and engineering advisory committee. A listing of his civic contributions could go on and on.

Olin B. King is the type of business leader which any community would be proud to claim as their own. He has contributed greatly to the growth of north Alabama as one of America's emerging high technology centers. I salute Olin King and wish him the best as he continues his pioneering work in the fields of science and industry.

MANAGING PUBLIC LANDS

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Washington Report for Wednesday, October 4, 1989, into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

One of the tough questions facing the Congress is how our public lands should be managed. Most Americans agree that our nation must both develop and protect its natural resources, but striking a balance between those goals has never been easy. While current debate focuses largely on public lands in the Western states, the issue affects us in Indiana and across the nation as well.

Over 600 million acres in the United States are owned by federal land management agencies, or about 25% of the nation's

2.2 billion acres. These lands are concentrated in the West, including over 75% of both Alaska and Nevada but less than 3% of Indiana. The Bureau of Land Management (BLM) and the Forest Service manage the majority of these lands under a concept known as "multiple use"—allowing for a combination of mining, logging, grazing, oil and gas development, hunting, and recreation. These lands provide 20% of our commercial timber, 33% of our coal, and up to 50% of our onshore oil and gas reserves. Only 80 million acres of federal land are protected as national parks—such as Yellowstone, Yosemite, and the Grand Canyon—where such development activities as mining and logging are prohibited. And scattered throughout national parks, forests, wildlife refuges, and BLM lands are 90 million acres of pristine wilderness, where no roads, vehicles, or structures are permitted.

Questions abound about management of federal lands. How much access should the public have to public lands? Should the federal government own over half of Utah and Idaho and over three-quarters of Alaska and Nevada? How much land should be put into commercial production and how much saved for future generations? Are we threatening wildlife and habitats by allowing mining, drilling, and logging projects next to national parks? Does multiple-use management give too much discretion to land management bureaucracies? Can park managers cope with the large increase in visitors as federal funds dwindle? Many also question why the government reportedly fails to recover the expenses incurred in managing its lands. An estimated $500 million is lost, for example, on timber sales each year from national forests, since building and maintaining roads for loggers can cost more than they pay to harvest the logs. Similar losses also occur under federal grazing and mining programs.

The greatest debate centers on the extent the government should restrict development to protect environmentally important lands. At issue is whether, when, and how much we value undeveloped and unexploited lands and their riches. While federal laws require both the preservation of natural resources and their commercial use, they do not offer a ready formula for balancing the two. Many argue that the economic benefits for local communities and the nation of developing public lands far outweigh the value of preserving them unimpaired. Others argue that preserving wilderness and other remnants of the American frontier protects water sources, wildlife, and recreation areas, while providing an important link to America's past. The Reagan Administration is largely seen as having tilted toward development. While President Bush has received high marks for his rhetoric in support of environmental protection, his choice of land management officials and his commitment to oil drilling proposals concern many.

The Congress is now focusing on land battles in Alaska and the Pacific Northwest. President Bush advocates opening up 1.5 million acres of Alaska's Arctic National Wildlife Refuge—the only undeveloped Arctic coastline—where there is an estimated one-in-five chance of finding a major oil field. Opponents of drilling argue that the pristine land, supporting one of the largest caribou herds left in the world, should not be damaged for the sake of short-term oil supply. In Washington and Oregon, the logging industry is pitted against environmentalists who want to save the remnants of the original forests that once covered much of the country and the spotted owl which is dependent on those woods. Environmental groups have won early court battles which have crippled timber sales in the region, shutting down more than half the region's federal timber sales and causing painful job losses.

In Indiana, Hoosiers have been debating for years the final shape of a management plan for the Hoosier National Forest. While the participants in the process are Hoosiers, the major issues are national—how much land should be harvested and how much protected? The long negotiation process is slowly working toward some compromises, such as reductions in the acreage available for harvest and changes in harvest methods.

There is no black-or-white solution to these debates. The Congress may consider measures to overhaul mining and grazing laws—efforts to ensure that public resources are economically harvested. Yet on the larger question of balancing land uses, no recipe exists. The Congress will likely continue to examine each land debate in a piecemeal fashion. In each case, the Congress will confront questions of dwindling natural resources—can we afford either to close off lands to development or to lose untouched lands which cannot be replaced?

How we manage public lands goes to the heart of America's history and to its future. Our country was created out of the wilderness and made prosperous from harnessing its riches. Now, the economics of the country are shifting. The resources industries which depend on the use of the land remain important, but tourism and recreation which depend on the preservation of the land are growing. My sense is that, while development is sometimes appropriate, we should try to preserve fragile lands. It is worth keeping some of our lands untouched so that we and future generations will see the land that nurtured the nation. We will certainly see increasing pressures to develop those lands. Saying no to development becomes harder to do and to afford. But wilderness once developed can never be regained. Although no consensus exists among the public or the government on the management of public lands, we know that the decisions we make now will affect the land profoundly.

PROBLEMS WITH UNITED STATES NARCOTICS AID FOR COLOMBIA

HON. GEO. W. CROCKETT, JR.

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. CROCKETT. Mr. Speaker, as we launch an extensive program of military aid to Colombia for the purpose of aiding Colombia's war on the narcotics traffickers, it is important to realize that the Colombian military itself has links with the paramilitary organizations that form the traffickers' private army. We ignore this fact at our peril, because we might end up aiding "the very forces we are trying to combat."

Such is the conclusion of Coletta Youngers of the Washington Office on Latin America. In a recent op-ed piece for the Los Angeles Times, Ms. Youngers analyzes the problem of paramilitary violence in Colombia and the apparent acquiescence or collusion of elements of the Colombian military with such violence.

I urge my colleagues to take the time to read this excellent article, which follows:

[From the Los Angeles Times, Aug. 31, 1989]

WILL COLOMBIA STAND UP TO PARAMILITARY?

(By Coletta Youngers)

The assassination of Sen. Luis Carlos Galán hit in a nerve in Colombian society, and the courageous response of the people and the government deserves applause. For it is political will, not military might, that ultimately will determine whether Colombia will rid itself of the cocaine cartel.

Since the murder of Galán, one of the country's most outspoken anti-drug politicians, the government has made thousands of arrests and expropriated millions in drug-financed property. But the Colombian security forces have yet to confront the military arm of the traffickers, the paramilitary structure that sustains the political and drug-related violence in the country.

According to the government, there are more than 140 paramilitary organizations, most of which are organized and financed by traffickers. Operating like death squads but with the weaponry of mini-armies, they defend the drug lords' interests. These extend beyond narcotics to politics.

Rabid anti-communists, the traffickers have united with landowners and other traditional cities to protect their common economic interests against guerrilla groups and the growing demands for political and economic reforms by poorer sectors of the populations. Supporting the alliance are members of the Colombian security forces who resort to paramilitary activity for profit or out of frustration with the inability to win the 30-year battle against guerrilla insurgencies. The net result is a "marriage of convenience" in certain areas of the country between the traffickers and other landowners and members of the military and police forces, all of whom are bent on eliminating "subversive elements."

The paramilitary activity stemming from this "marriage" has displaced guerrillas from areas where they have enjoyed substantial popular support, such as the middle Magdalena agricultural region. However, more often than not, the targets of violence are Colombia's growing nonviolent forces, such as civic movements, peasant and labor unions and a newly formed political party, the Patriotic Union. Last year there were 2,738 political assassinations, including 82 massacres (killings in groups of four or more civilians), the vast majority of which were carried out by death squads or "hit men" trained by them. The murder of Sen. Galan was just one of more than 1,000 political killings this year.

Colombian government investigators and human-rights activists have compiled significant evidence implicating members of the military and police in paramilitary activity. One of the most highly publicized cases occurred in March, 1988, when gunmen raided two banana farms in the Uraba region, killing 22 union leaders. The investigation by the Colombian equivalent of the FBI led to the indictment that September of two well-known drug traffickers, three military officials, a police lieutenant, a mayor and others. After presenting her report on the massacre, the judge presiding over the case fled the country because of death threats. Her father was recently killed, apparently in retribution for her brave actions.

Perhaps evidence such as this provides a clue as to why the Colombian security forces have yet to raid the paramilitary organizations' geographical base, Puerto Boyaca in the middle Magdalena region. Since Galan's death, there has not been one direct confrontation between the military and a paramilitary group anywhere in the country, nor have there been any attempts to raid the highly publicized paramilitary training schools. In fact, within the range of measures being implemented, the paramilitary issue is conspicuously absent. Until the paramilitary groups are confronted directly, drug traffickers will continue to wage their "total war" on the Colombian government and society.

While the Colombian government's recent efforts to curb drug trafficking must be taken in good faith, the Colombian military has yet to show the political will to engage in battle with the traffickers paramilitary arm. The U.S. government, having declared a "war on drugs," has steadily militarized its anti-narcotics programs overseas and is already providing Colombia with significant levels of military assistance under the anti-narcotics rubric. Now it is sending $65 million more, along with U.S. military advisers to provide "technical assistance." Yet until the Colombian military proves its willingness to clean up its own house and to rid the nation of paramilitary violence, such aid will only serve to exacerbate domestic political conflict. Ironically, in the end it may aid the very forces we are trying to combat.

D.C. POLICE TRAINING

HON. DEAN A. GALLO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. GALLO. Mr. Speaker, on March 24 of this year, I requested a review by the General Accounting Office of compliance with title I of the District of Columbia Appropriations Act of 1989, which barred the use of Federal funds for all District operations until the D.C. government certified that the number of adequately trained, full-time uniformed officers available for duty was at least 3,880 persons.

As a former local official, I understand the necessity of providing protection of the public health and safety. I am committed to the idea that the keystone of that public responsibility is an adequate number of trained professionals on the front lines of our struggle against crime and lawlessness—the uniformed officer must be prepared to deal with the street.

While recruiting and initial screening of candidates for the Metropolitan Police Department are important components in this overall process, my concern has been, and continues to be, with the entire process that prepares these young men and women for the duties and responsibilities that they will face on a daily basis on the streets of our Nation's Capital.

In March, I provided the GAO with a list of questions that focused on the issue of compliance with the 1989 Appropriations Act. Initially, we were looking at completion of the preliminary report by midsummer.

In July, I was asked by the GAO review team for additional time to complete its work, because existing District record-keeping was inadequate to answer my questions and, of greater importance, because the initial GAO review process had raised additional questions involving the training of candidates once they were selected by the initial testing process. For that reason, I was pleased to extend the time of reporting in the interest of thoroughness.

Because my initial request for review was based on the number of qualified officers on the street, not merely the initial testing and selection process, I believe our main concern must be with training procedures, rather than initial entrance to the Police Academy for a number of reasons.

Among them, the overwhelming need for uniformed officers in the District will, in and of itself, dictate that no qualified individual will be turned away.

Also, questions involving ranking procedures, as addressed in the GAO preliminary report provided to me today, will be helpful to those Members of Congress and D.C. government officials engaged in this on-going debate, but are not the main issue in my mind.

My most pressing argument for increased emphasis on training rather than initial selection is one of common sense. Anyone who has taken the college entrance exam knows that a good score will provide an initial opportunity for higher education, but is no guarantee that a candidate will eventually receive a degree.

I urge a full review by my colleagues of the findings of this preliminary GAO report, but I will focus my efforts on the training issue.

Specifically, the GAO found that procedures and requirements at the D.C. Police Academy have fluctuated greatly in recent years, but that no documentation exists to justify the changes that have been made.

For instance, the GAO found:

The number of hours of classroom instruction have varied from 927 hours to 450 hours, with the current requirement set as 653 hours. The reason for the fluctuation is undocumented, but could be due to factors such as need for additional officers on the streets, a lack of qualified instructors or other causes.

The number of courses that a candidate can fail and still remain at the Academy has varied from 3 to 5, with no justification or indication as to who within the D.C. government made the policy decision.

The comprehensive exam required for graduation has been waved without justification or documentation at various times, allowing whole classes of candidates to become police officers without taking the exam.

Academy applicants are allowed to take entrance exams an unlimited number of times until they pass, yet no records are kept as to the number of times that individual applicants have been tested. Although copies of the tests were not available to the GAO, the developers of the test confirm that only six questions have been changed in recent years, suggesting that repeated test-taking could allow applicants to pass by trial and error.

I believe that the most disturbing GAO finding is the total lack of documentation supporting decisions and the complete breakdown of record-keeping concerning how decisions are made within the chain of command. If everyone is in charge, then no one is in charge.

I have included in the fiscal year 1990 budget a $26,000 allocation to begin the process of outside accreditation. I intend to fight for these funds in the upcoming House-Senate Conference Committee, based on the urgency of the current situation as outlined by the GAO in this preliminary report to me.

But the bottom line is that we cannot require the District to accept this allocation, which specifically requires an outside accreditation process conducted by a nationally recognized review organization.

I believe that recent news reports and the GAO findings strongly indicate the need for credibility that can only come from an independent accreditation process.

In addition, and perhaps of greater importance, the GAO preliminary findings raise serious questions about the way instructors are selected. No one can say today that the quality of instruction is either good or bad, because there is no apparent rationale for decision-making.

I am therefore calling for a full review of instructor selection and qualifications, either as part of the accreditation process or prior to its inception, but immediately in either case.

The fact is that the officers going through the Academy today will be the future leaders of tomorrow's District police force.

Finger pointing and Monday morning quarterbacking at this point are a waste of time. At the same time, I appreciate the efforts of countless people who believe as I do that we face a crisis now, not 6 months or a year from now.

The question should not be where have we been, the question should be where do we go from here?

I have asked the General Accounting Office to complete work on its preliminary findings and provide me with a final report.

Although the final report is not expected to be completed until late spring or early summer of 1990, I am satisfied that the preliminary report provides the District government with incentives to proceed with a definite course of action. I am hopeful that, by the time the final report is issued, most of these concerns will already have been addressed.

TRYING TO "UNSCRAMBLE" SOVIETS' EGGS

HON. HARRY A. JOHNSTON II

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. JOHNSTON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to submit for the RECORD the remarks of Mr. Arthur Burck of Palm Beach, FL, that appeared recently in the Palm Beach Post. Mr. Burck frequently comments on the changes in our global balance of power and ideology:

TRYING TO "UNSCRAMBLE" SOVIETS' EGGS

(By Arthur Burck)

The recent triumphant tour of President Bush through Poland and Hungary has ignited hope for freedom among the communist satellite nations of Central and Eastern Europe.

But just as the recent student uprising in Beijing's Tiananmen Square raised worldwide hope for democracy that turned out to be most premature, we must now restrain our expectations. The removal of the communist yoke, especially in its economic implications, is likely to be a slow process, one that may well be prolonged for many decades.

I have been mulling these problems since last October when we cruised the Danube River on a Soviet river boat. As a consequence of what we observed throughout the Balkans, I then predicted the "beginning of the end of communism in Eastern Europe."

THE BEGINNING OF AN END

In 1945, I also witnessed the beginning of the end of the independence of these very same nations that were then occupied or liberated by Soviet armies. Convinced that the permanence of any post war peace hinged on what happened to these occupied nations, then-Sen. Claude Pepper embarked on a five-week investigative tour of these nations. The U.S. Army had ordered me, an Army captain stationed in Rome awaiting return to my civilian position as a Wall Street lawyer, to assist Sen. Pepper as a special aide.

There was nothing that could dissuade the U.S.S.R. from dominating these nations.

Soon thereafter the Soviets "scrambled the egg" of each of these nations by setting up a communist dictatorship of the government and by confiscating all industry and other private property, placing ownership in the state.

Now, the $64 question that is beginning to confront these nations is: How do we "unscramble the egg"?

Just as the Achilles heel of the Soviet Union is its stagnating economy, the satellite nations face the same problem: bureaucratic state-owned industries that do not function efficiently.

MIND-BOGGLING TRANSITION

Indeed, the transition from a communist economy to a capitalist economy presents mind-boggling problems. Only one thing is certain: the transition will take much longer than anyone imagines.

Remember that there is negligible private capital in communist countries. I suspect, however, that underground assets are much greater than expected. There may be ways of minimizing the problem through leasing arrangements and loans, but it is slow and cumbersome.

Perhaps early solutions can come if most free nations band together to launch a worldwide Marshall Plan to rescue the economies of the stagnant socialist-communist world. But can we do so without also coming to the aid of the present Third World countries in Latin America, Africa and Asia?

And how will our own industries react when they find difficulty in competing with new low-wage countries subsidized by our largess?

In sum, any way one looks at the problems that lie ahead, we must come to the conclusion that, despite current enthusiasm generated by the Bush visit, effective solutions will be remote.

HONORING THE CENTENNIAL OF PIKEVILLE COLLEGE

HON. CARL C. PERKINS

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, on October 19, 1989, Pikeville College in my home district of eastern Kentucky will celebrate its centennial, marking 100 years of service to the education of our region.

Pikeville College was founded in 1889 as the Pikeville Collegiate Institute, an academy for grades 1 through 12. Preparatory classes for teachers were added later, and by 1921, Pikeville College was offering junior college courses at its Pikeville campus. The first 4-year baccalaureate degrees were awarded in 1957, the same year that the high school courses were phased out.

Today, Pikeville College is a thriving liberal arts college with 938 students and 50 faculty members. Its graduates are accepted to some of the top graduate and professional schools, and many of eastern Kentucky's leading citizens are Pikeville College alumni, including State Senator Benny Ray Bailey, State Representative N. Clayton Little, and Pikeville Mayor William C. Hambley.

More than half of Pikeville College's students are adults who have spent several years in the work force of raising families, and have now returned to school in an effort to improve their own education. Many of them would be unable to attend college if it were not located near their home communities. Kentucky has one of the Nation's lowest levels of adult educational attainment, and the service that Pikeville College offers to these returning adult students will go a long way toward righting that terrible wrong.

Pikeville College is in the midst of its Second Century Fund drive, which will provide for a new library and badly needed parking facility on campus, as well as a larger endowment and an increased annual operating budget. This Second Century Fund will help to position Pikeville College to continue its service to eastern Kentucky for yet another 100 years.

The educational opportunities offered by Pikeville College of today are far different than what awaited young eastern Kentuckians before its founding.

In the early 1880's, Dr. William C. Condit of Ashland was sent by the Ebenezer Presbytery to prospect for Presbyterianism in the mountains, to determine the need for churches there. Dr. Condit returned to Ashland distressed by the lack of both churches and schools in the region. "I made my report to the Presbytery," he wrote later, "recommending that we attempt to establish schools and churches together in the mountain communities."

Condit and two other Presbyterian ministers, Dr. James Hendrick and the Reverend Samuel B. Alderson, selected Pikeville as the best site for such a combination, and in 1883, the First Presbyterian Church of Pikeville was founded, followed 6 years later, in 1889, by the Pikeville Collegiate Institute.

The early years were hard for the young school. Poor roads, a lack of funds to pay teachers, and several outbreaks of typhoid all worked against the dedicated teachers and principals who worked in those years to make the school succeed. But succeed they did, and today Pikeville College is in its most secure position ever as it prepares for its second century of service.

I know that the Members of the House will join me in congratulating Pikeville College on the event of its centennial, and in wishing it well in the years to come.

A TRIBUTE TO JAMES MEADLOCK

HON. RONNIE G. FLIPPO

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. FLIPPO. Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to pay tribute today to James Meadlock, and his outstanding work as an entrepreneur in the field of interactive computer graphics.

James Meadlock is a founder, president, and chairman of the board of Intergraph Corp., one of Alabama's home-grown "Fortune 500" companies. James Meadlock has been a pioneer in designing, manufacturing, marketing, and supporting interactive computer graphics systems for design, engineering, and mapping applications.

James Meadlock is a leader in the continuing growth of Huntsville as a center for high-tech computer science and industry. He has contributed greatly to making the city of Huntsville a better place to live and work. I am proud to have James Meadlock as one of my constituents.

Originally a native of North Carolina, James Meadlock attended North Carolina State University where he received a degree in electrical engineering. During 12½ years of work with IBM, he made major contributions to America's historic achievements in missile guidance and space systems technologies.

James Meadlock worked to make America's dreams of space exploration a reality. He was responsible for the software system that was used to guide and control the Titan II Missile System. In addition, he developed all software that was used on the Saturn Launch Vehicle for guidance and control of the vehicle and all of the check-out software that was used prior to launch to test the readiness of the vehicle in flight.

In 1969, James Meadlock became one of the founders of M&S Computing, the company which was renamed Intergraph Corp. in 1980 to better reflect its ground-breaking work in interactive graphics. His work in this area was recognized by the U.S. Congressional Caucus for Science and Technology in 1985 when he was awarded a Congressional High Technology Award for outstanding contributions to the advancement of science and technology. In 1987, James Meadlock was named Executive of the Year by the National Computer Graphics Association.

Under James Meadlock's leadership Intergraph Corp. has become the U.S. Government's leading supplier of interactive computer graphics systems. Serving both defense and civilian needs, Intergraph systems are used by local, regional, and national services and agencies worldwide. Intergraph Corp. is now one of the Huntsville area's largest employers.

James Meadlock and his innovative work at Intergraph Corp. have placed Huntsville on the cutting edge of this exciting new technology. The people of Huntsville are fortunate to have this hard-working, dedicated individual as a member of their community. I salute James Meadlock and wish him the best in his efforts to expand the horizons for new developments in interactive graphics.

THE ILLUSION OF "LAND FOR PEACE"

HON. MATTHEW J. RINALDO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. RINALDO. Mr. Speaker, a constituent, Mr. Joel Weingarten, recently published an article expressing his views on aspects of the Middle East situation. He requested that I insert excerpts of his remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and those excerpts follow:

THE ILLUSION OF "LAND FOR PEACE"

(By Joel Weingarten)

The current wisdom in Washington and Jerusalem is that Israel can resolve a multitude of economic and national security difficulties by conducting "land for peace" negotiations with its Arab neighbors. The paradigm for this view, of course, is the Camp David Treaty, which Israel signed with Egypt ten years ago. Yet before plunging into another Camp David, we might first pause to consider the consequences of the first Camp David.

The Camp David Accords call for Egypt and Israel to: "refrain from hostile propaganda directed at one another * * *." Egypt's government-controlled press repeatedly violated this obligation.

On June 8, 1987, Egypt's leading government-owned newspaper, El-Ahram, reported that Israel was responsible for hoof and mouth disease in Egypt, arguing that Israeli "biological warfare" began in 1983 and that all imports from Israel should therefore be halted.

In December 1988, the government-owned newspaper El-Akhbar claimed that Israel was the most likely culprit in the terrorist bombing of Pan Am flight 103 which exploded over Lockerbie, Scotland on December 21, killing 259 passengers. Western intelligence, however, has traced the attack to Libyan and/or Syrian-backed terrorists.

It should further be noted that since 1981 Egypt has only agreed to one summit meeting between the Egyptian and Israeli leaders—and that was at the behest of the United States.

The peace process was supposed to promote the normalization of trade. However, Egypt has placed an almost total embargo on trade with Israel.

Even more important are violations of the treaty's guarantee that neither nation's citizens would be physically harmed by the other country's citizens, or by parties using the countries' mutual border. Egypt has aided the PLO by providing its terrorists safe haven in Cairo and allowing them to launch attacks against Israel from its border. Since October 1987 there have been at least six such attempts to infiltrate Israel by use of Egyptian territory.

In addition to cross-border terrorism, Egypt has been the site of the assassination of Israeli citizens. In June 1984, Egyptian terrorists shot Israeli diplomat Zvi Kedar. In September of 1985, seven Israeli tourists were killed by an Egyptian soldier. In August 1986, Egyptian terrorists assassinated Israeli diplomat Albert Atrachki.

Finally, Egypt has engaged in an extensive build-up of its military along its Israeli border, in clear violation of troop level agreements reached at Camp David.

The Camp David process has been good to Egypt, which has reclaimed the 23,600 square-mile Sinai peninsula from Israel and gained funds and military support from the United States without sacrificing its standing in the Arab world. More important, Egypt has made these acquisitions without having to conform to either the letter or the spirit of the Camp David treaty.

In exchange for the promise of peace, Israel has sacrificed strategically and economically valuable territory. Israel's geopolitical position has been irreparably weakened. All of these losses could be deemed acceptable had Israel received a true peace; but that has not been the case.

A real peace treaty would have required that Egypt actually change its intentions toward Israel. But this is not what the Camp David treaty has meant. It has instead meant continued belligerence under the guise of peace.

The issue behind Camp David's record is whether forfeiting land brings peace. The Egyptian example shows that the Arab world can gain through negotiations as much as, if not more than, it can receive through battle, and that it need not even provide true peace in exchange.

THE BUREACRACY DOES WORK

HON. AL SWIFT

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. SWIFT. Mr. Speaker, the motivational technique that is least used in politics and government is positive reinforcement. The electorate tells us more frequently what we've done wrong than what we've done right. And, in turn, Members of Congress tend to berate the bureaucracy far more often than we praise it. That's too bad. It is as useful to let people know what they do that pleases us as it is to identify what does not.

I recently got a letter from a constituent who understands this very well. The objects of his praise were the people in his local Social Security office in Everett, WA. I asked his permission to put this letter in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD where others could see that usually government does work the way it is supposed to.

The letter was addressed, importantly, not to me but to "Dear helpful and concerned staff." I thank Mr. Leonard Gurian for writing the letter and I'm happy to share it with all of my colleagues.

I would like to thank you people for your concern and advice in my recent "misunderstanding" with the Social Security Administration. Even if there was no direct part in the resolving of the problem on your part the fact that you were there to give me some encouragement and advice was certainly comforting. You helped to give perspective that I did not have and could not have achieved elsewhere at so "little" cost.

I would also like to put on paper my feelings about the people at the local office of the Social Security office. With no exception they were polite, tolerant (of a man who was quite angry when he first went out to the office) informative, patient, straightforward, and actually, I felt, wanted to help me.

Too often we hear of bureaucrats who want to chalk up one more for the team (or for themselves) having shot down Joe Citizen. Not so here. I wish I had the name of the person who helped me at the window out there—she was excellent. Mr. Ron Ferwerda who ultimately passed judgment on my case could not have been any more fair. Perhaps he went by the book but how refreshing it was to be told that if I were prepared to culminate the business right then and there I would not have to come back for the second session.

When I went in for the appointment I felt quite strongly that I should not have to pay for 3 months of the over-payment because I had been advised when I applied for S.S. to ask for those months. Mr. Ferwerda agreed. Although I felt that someone, somewhere fouled up in sending me the money for the months I did not deserve, the fact is that the money was not mine and should be paid back.

Well, enough already. One hears so many horror stories about people trapped in the labyrinth of government red-tape over "sins" never committed it was indeed heartening to have come out of this business with a judgment that I felt was the only fair one. Thank you.

Sincerely,

LEONARD GURIAN,
Everett, WA 98201.

THE LONG-TERM HEALTH CARE APPROACH

HON. JOEL HEFLEY

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. HEFLEY. Mr. Speaker, it has been over 2 years since I first cautioned this body on the effects of enacting catastrophic health care coverage and a financing surtax. Today, the House will be asked to correct the catastrophic nightmare enacted during the 100th Congress. Hopefully a majority of my colleagues will join me in repealing this bad law and starting over in our search for a long-term approach to health care for our senior citizens.

This cannot be the end of it, however. The problem of health care for the elderly, and particularly long-term health care, is a problem we must not ignore. Currently, the elderly comprise 12 percent of our population and that number is expected to double by the year 2040. Approximately 1.3 million senior citizens are residents of nursing homes. By the year 2040, a projected 4.4 million senior citizens will require nursing home care, and another 14 million disabled seniors will be living in the community. This creates a situation where the present health care system will be inadequate.

Consequently, now is the time for Congress to enact an effective and efficient long-term health care plan for our elderly. Such a program must be affordable for our Medicare beneficiaries and, unlike the present catastrophic legislation, must address the real problems of catastrophic care.

Options such as the use of community-based services such as home care and adult daycare services could lower the cost of long-term health care. The unnecessary institutionalization of persons who are better served by community-based services is a financially wise alternative.

The private sector financing mechanism for long-term care has potential for addressing some of these concerns. The market for long-term care insurance is rapidly expanding, with approximately 70 companies now underwriting 420,000 persons. There is growing interest in increasing the coverage of long-term health care, while making it more affordable through employer-based group coverage.

In closing, I remind you that during the last session of Congress, we heard the wishes of the people concerning health care. The recent outcry concerning the catastrophic law suggests that Congress failed. With this in mind, I am calling on Congress to devise a plan that allows the private sector to play a significant role in responding to the catastrophic health care needs of our Nation with as little government interference as possible.

IN RECOGNITION OF MICHAEL I. PUPIN

HON. GEORGE W. GEKAS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I would like my colleagues to join me in recognizing a great Serbian-American who was born on this day in 1858.

Michael I. Pupin was born in Banat, which is in present day Yugoslavia. In 1874 he came to America with only 4 cents in his pocket. Within 9 years he earned a B.A. from Columbia University and 6 years later he obtained his Ph.D. from the University of Berlin. He became a professor of electronics at Columbia, and during his tenure, he continually pursued improved technology in America. Professor Pupin received a total of 34 patents for his inventions and won the 1924 Pulitzer Prize in biography for his work "From Immigrant to Inventor."

I include an article about this important American reprinted from the November 29, 1981 Buffalo Courier-Express.

MICHAEL PUPIN, FROM IMMIGRANT TO INVENTOR

[Reprinted from Buffalo Courier-Express, Sunday, November 29, 1981]

When he got off the ship at Castle Garden in 1874, a 16-year-old boy from Serbia had five cents in his pocket. Unable to resist a piece of prune pie, prunes being a Serbian delicacy, he invested his nickel in it, only to discover that the prunes consisted largely of pits. It was his introduction to American self-reliance.

This initial setback did not discourage Michael Pupin. He went on to become professor of electromagnetics at Columbia and the man who made it possible for us to talk to one another over long-distance telephones. Each week I walked past a building named after him, where generations of his students, their students, and their students' students, have studied physics.

His autobiography, "From Immigrant to Inventor," published in 1922, won the Pulitzer Prize. The book is document appropriate to that far-off time in which cheerfulness and good will invariably triumph over adversity. Seeing a copy in a bookstore recently, I couldn't resist grabbing it.

Pupin was an engaging mixture of loyalty to his rural Serbian origins and, at the same time, rebelliousness and a desire to rise in the world. He never quite put behind him the traditions and associations of his native village of Idvor, and even before he left it, he had acquired a police record of opposition to his country's government.

In the new world, he was badgered by a group of young rowdies for wearing a red fez, scuffled with their leader and wrestled him to the ground, only to be given a loud cheer by the others, who defended him when a large mustachioed policeman arrived. It was his second lesson in America.

He worked on a farm in Pennsylvania, learned English, returned to New York to do odd jobs and finally made his way to Columbia, where he encountered modern science and was transformed. The driving ambition which carried him through long hours of labor and study also drove him toward knowledge, and it is chacteristic of Pupin that for him, rising in the world of men and rising in one's knowledge of the natural world were essentially blurred.

When he went back to Europe for his first visit after 11 years, the same railroad conductor in Vienna who had earlier called him a Serbian swineherd now called him "gracious sir." Pupin gave him a big tip and reminded him of their earlier encounter, "America is the land of rapid changes," said the conductor.

Pupin was an example of what we now call the upwardly mobile. He had a gift for sloughing off provincial mannerisms and accommodating himself to another moral system. He took nearly everything at face value, and wealth and station never lost their fascination for him. Writing in the early 1920s, he referred to Warren G. Harding as that "ideal type of genuine American," which looks a little odd today.

But he accomplished much. No other discovery in his lifetime had aroused quite so much interest as that of the X-rays, and he was in the vanguard of their use. He was at that time the only physicist in the United States who has any experience with vacuum tubes, and so when Roentgen's discovery was first announced, Pupin was better prepared than anyone else on this side of the Atlantic to repeat it. On Jan. 2, 1896, he made the first X-ray photograph in America.

Soon thereafter, Dr. William T. Bull, a surgeon of great gifts, brought to Pupin a distinguished lawyer named Prescott Hall Butler. Butler had received a full shotgun charge in his hand in a hunting accident and was in considerable pain.

Pupin realized that the patient would not be able to stand the exposure of nearly an hour which X-ray photography then required. But his good friend Thomas Edison had sent him several fluorescent screens which were much more sensitive. "I decided," Pupin wrote, "to try a combination of Edison's fluorescent screen and the photographic plate.

He put the screen on the plate and Butler's hand on the screen, and a "beautiful" photograph was obtained with an exposure of only a few seconds. It showed the numerous shots "as if they had been drawn with pen and ink." Dr. Bull operated and extracted everyone of them in a "short and easy" operation.

Thus originated the process we all take for granted. Pupin grumpily complained that nobody gave him credit for the discovery, although he had described it in the journal Electricity on Feb. 12, 1896. The patient was more appreciative. When other offers to reward Pupin were refused, Butler proposed to establish a fellowship for Pupin at the Century Club which would guarantee Pupin two drinks a day for the rest of his life. "This offer," wrote Pupin, "was also refused."

Pupin conducted his research when there were no well-supplied laboratories and lavish grants. He and his colleague, Francis Crocker, had to earn money on their own with which to buy equipment. And all this in addition to a heavy teaching load. Research scientists today would recoil in horror from the conditions under which he worked.

Pupin dreamed of being a great discoverer in science. This was denied to him. He chose the title of his book deliberately, and it was as "inventor" that he knew he had truly achieved distinction. Yet the long-distance transmission line was no gadget produced by the tinkering around of some garret engineer. Rather, it resulted from the thoughtful pondering of a genuinely theoretical physicist.

His own discoveries have been eclipsed by those of his great pupils, like Edwin H. Armstrong. But this is as he would have wanted it to be. "The aim of his whole life," wrote Freeman Dyson, "was to imbue his fellowmen, and fellow-Americans in particular, with his own deep love for pure scientific knowledge."

A TRIBUTE TO CHARLES MARION COOPER

HON. WES WATKINS

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute and homage to a longtime member of my staff—Charles Marion Cooper. Charley passed from this life late yesterday evening at the age of 63 years old. For those who did not know Charley, they missed a rare opportunity, for he was a rare breed. He was part of the last of an era—an old-time newspaperman.

Charley was more than a staffer, he was a trusted personal friend. He was not only a great writer and staff member but a fine father figure to the staff. And, I might add, Charley was someone that you considered as a second dad or brother, if you will. He never met a stranger.

As part of this great institution we call the House of Representatives, Charley embodied that which we find so important—institutional knowledge. Charley Cooper worked in two gubernatorial, two senatorial, and three congressional campaigns. He lobbied for not only free markets but fair markets in petroleum and agriculture.

For 6 years he served as special assistant and press secretary, and administrative assistant in my office. He headed former Oklahoma Representative Clem McSpadden's office when the powerful Congressional Rural Caucus was formed.

He was an effective champion of rural Oklahoma. Those who knew him considered him a humorist and philosopher that could always be counted on for wisdom, advice, and counsel. No doubt, if Charley were here today he would weave his wisdom into a good story. He was always good for at least one if not two stories at any sitting.

In an 18-year news career in Oklahoma, Charley served as the editor of the Pryor Daily Times and worked for newpapers at Temple, Anadarko, and Antlers. Together with his wife, Allene Bary-Cooper, an artist-writer-photographer, he produced "The Homeplace: A Gathering of Voices," a coffeetable book on rural America.

A Capital correspondent for World Oil, he was a Washington lobbyist/writer/public relations director for the Independent Petroleum Association of America, 1975–77. He served as public relations director 1981–83 for the American agriculture movement and was the free-lance associate editor of the AAM Reporter at the time of his death. He was a board member of the American Family Farm Foundation.

In Oklahoma, he helped expose the 1964–65 asphalt price-fixing case that led to court judgments for the State while working for the Oklahoma Good Roads and Streets Association.

Candidates that he advised were U.S. Senator Fred R. Harris, U.S. Representative Toby Morris, Ed Edmondson and Clem McSpadden, Oklahoma Attorney General Larry Derryberry and Keith Cartwright, Preston Moore, and Clyde A. Wheeler, Jr.

He served two active duty tours in the Navy, was commander of two American Legion posts, was a Mason, and earned a college degree in Texas.

As so often Charley wrote in floor statements for me on occasions such as this one, I want to close with one of his favorites and Charley, I think it applies—"well done thou good and faithful servant." You will be missed by the staff and all that knew you. The world, the Congress, the State of Oklahoma, and numerous individuals are better off having known Charles Marion Cooper.

SEVEN REASONS WHY THE BUSH ACID EMISSIONS CAP IS A GOOD IDEA

HON. SHERWOOD L. BOEHLERT

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. BOEHLERT. Mr. Speaker, as the Energy and Commerce Committee considers H.R. 3030, the Dingell-Lent clean air bill proposed by President Bush, questions will be raised concerning a very important element of that package, the postcompliance cap on some emissions.

As EPA Administrator William Reilly recently told the Subcommittee on Energy and Power, it would be very difficult to view H.R. 3030 as an adequate, definitive solution to the acid rain problem if, as some propose, this environmental safeguard is dropped. In fact, it is the acide emissions cap of H.R. 3030 which makes that bill superior to H.R. 1470.

The cap language in H.R. 3030 deserves careful study and, if necessary, fine tuning. I don't profess to have all the answers on this one. But before giving any consideration to eliminating the cap, we should all recognize it for what it is—good environmental, energy, and economic policy. Here's why:

First. Without a cap, our multibillion-dollar national investment in acid rain controls could, over time, erode away. The Environmental Protection Agency forecasts up to a 20-percent erosion in emission reductions by 2010 without the safeguard of a cap. Such erosion would be a tragic, frustrating result for everyone.

Second. The acid emissions cap is intimately linked to the trading allowed under the Bush proposal. Inter-regional trading without a cap shortchanges the environment; a tight emissions limit without trading is needlessly costly to electric consumers. The integrity of the emissions market breaks down without the cap.

Third. The cap will lead to a long overdue emphasis in energy policy on efficiency and conservation. According to the Center for Clean Air Policy Analysis, the efficiency encouraged by a cap could: Halve cost impacts in States most-affected; reduce the need for costly new powerplants; enhance energy independence and industrial competitiveness relative to Japan and Europe; spur new technologies; and lower emissions of carbon dioxide, which contributes to global warming.

Fourth. The cap-and-trading scheme creates a form of cost-sharing requiring no new taxes or Federal subsidies. No matter what kind of plan is devised, the costs of acid rain controls will be felt throughout the national economy. So which is better: A fee imposed on utilities regardless of their contribution to the problem or their own cleanup requirements; or a system based on who can afford to pay for the largest, most cost-effective reductions? Utilities who make such reductions can sell excess allowances to others who cannot.

Fifth. The cap is compatible with economic growth. The record from 1973 to 1987 demonstrates that America can enjoy economic growth and increase coal utilization even as acid emissions decline. H.R. 3030 guarantees emissions will drop faster to environmentally acceptable levels and, with the cap, stay there well into a distant and uncertain future.

Sixth. State public utility commissions [PUC's] should appreciate the cap's benefit of all electric consumers.

Seventh. Several factors will effectively discourage hoarding of pollution allowances: Pressure from State PUC's to sell the allowances and give rate relief to customers; the unpredictable value of allowances in later years as the supply increases; and the pool of allowances that will be created by the incentives for cost-effective reductions by the industrial sector.

Mr. Speaker, I note with interest the efforts by several of my colleagues to eliminate arbitrary inequities under the proposed cap, and ensure its workability. The House Working Group on Acid Rain, which I cochair, looks forward to working with them in the pursuit of balanced environmental and energy policy.

But obviously, there are numerous economic and environmental benefits to the proposed acid emissions cap which merit our consideration before any efforts are made to eliminate it.

ST. PETER'S CHURCH CELEBRATES ITS 150TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. RICHARD J. DURBIN

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to congratulate St. Peter's Catholic Church in Quincy, Ill, on its 150th anniversary celebration. The church has sponsored a series of special events over the past 6 months to mark the event, and is holding a grand banquet on Wednesday, Oct. 11.

St. Peter's parish has 1,108 families, and a total of 3,200 parishioners—the largest in the city. St. Peter's School also is the largest parochial grade school in Quincy, with 338 students in grades K through eight.

The church has a long and illustrious history. The parish was founded June 13, 1839, on the southwest corner of Eighth and Maine Streets in Quincy. The original church was built for the city's English-speaking Irish Catholics, who until then had been served only by visiting missionaries and a German-speaking priest assigned to St. Boniface Church.

The church was renamed for Saint Peter in 1863. Tragically, a tornado demolished the building on April 12, 1945, and parishioners subsequently rebuilt the church at its present site on 25th and Maine. A rectory and convent opened in 1967, a school for the handicapped and the St. Peter Holy Children pre-school were opened just last year.

One of the major forces in the early days of the church was Father Peter McGirr, appointed pastor in 1862, who oversaw a large expansion of the church and school. It was Reverend McGirr who welcomed into the parish a runaway slave, Augustine Tolton, who later entered the seminary and went on to become the first black priest in the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I salute the parishioners and paster of St. Peter's the Rev. Roy Bauer, on the 150th anniversary of their church.

CELEBRATING NATIONAL CHILDREN'S DAY

HON. GEORGE W. GEKAS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, I want to draw the attention of my colleagues to a very special young person in my congressional district.

Frieda Dyson is a high school senior from Harrisburg, PA, who was selected to represent the State this week in Washington as a child ambassador. Frieda, and other child ambassadors from around the country are here to celebrate National Children's Day with a series of events intended to call attention to the state of our Nation's children. The ambassadors are helping Congress to focus on the positive possibilities open to young Americans, as well as to consider the pressing needs and problems facing our youth.

The ambassadors testified yesterday before the Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families and the Budget Committee Task Force on Human Resources. Their unique insight and experience was both moving and inspirational.

The testimony of my constituent, Frieda, focused on the importance of teens rising above peer pressure to stay away from drugs. Frieda knows a great deal about such inner strength. She lived in foster homes for the first 8 years of her life; yet Frieda has been able to overcome this difficult start. She is president of her senior class at the Harrisburg Academy, she tutors disadvantaged children after school, she aspires to be a writer, and is an articulate spokesperson on saying no to drugs. Needless to say, I am extremely proud to have this young lady in the 17th Congressional District.

I would like to take this opportunity to share with my colleagues a segment of Frieda's testimony from yesterday's hearing:

Children are malleable and impressionable. We are open to a lot of stresses and are vulnerable, but the reverse is true too. We are open to positive influences if they are made available to us; we need adult influences that are positive. More environmental emphasis needs to be focused on strengthening family units, stable homes and continued support will, over time, decrease drug usage rates among my peers. For further significant positive changes to occur there needs to be communication and cooperation between the youth of America and the leaders—the educators and the parents.

In conclusion, only through joint efforts on all levels and spheres of influence will the situation brighten. We, the youth of America, are looking to you, the present leaders, not necessarily for the answers to the drug crisis, but for your continued pledged commitment to us. As it has been said many times—we are the future and even more so, we are the present. We need your help and your concentrated efforts here and now.

Mr. Speaker, it is when I have the privilege of meeting young people like Frieda Dyson, I become more certain than ever that America is in good hands.

STAND UP FOR THE CHILDREN

HON. CLIFF STEARNS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to turn our attention to an issue which is close to all of our hearts—our Nation's children.

I am inserting into the RECORD here the lyrics to a song written and produced by two constituents of mine in Ocala, FL, which says beautifully that it is our duty and responsibility to care for and care about the children of the world. Their rights to a future that is safe, free, and healthy should be a priority to all of us, and I applaud the efforts of Robin MacBlane and Larry Whitler to bring attention to this important goal. Their song "Stand Up for the Children" is a wonderful tribute to their commitment, and I am proud to share it with you today.

STAND UP FOR THE CHILDREN

(Lyrics and music by Larry Whitler)

A child's smile
A child's laughter in the air
Is the most beautiful song I'll ever hear
But this world is cruel
And we've got to Stand up for the children

Teach them how to fight
Let them know you stand behind them
Let them know they have a right
To a free world
A safe world
A clean world
A drug free world, oh God
If I do anything
Let me stand up for the children of the world

A child rests
His little head upon my shoulder
And with each breath I feel upon my ear
I melt inside
I melt inside

A young girl strives
To do her best with all her talents
And there's a beautiful look within her eyes
As she sees her mom and dad applauding

SIXTY YEARS OF SERVICE TO MICHIGAN'S GASOLINE DEALERS

HON. JOHN D. DINGELL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the Service Station Dealers Association of Michigan. Established in 1929 as the Retail Gasoline Dealers Association of Michigan, this organization is currently celebrating its 60th anniversary.

For 60 years the SSDA has been in the business of promoting and protecting the interests of Michigan's gasoline retailers. It represents over 1,000 dealers and their families in the areas of oil company-dealer relationships, health and liability insurance, credit cards, and other dealer-related activities.

From its inception in 1929, the association has been a leader for the dealers of Michigan. From "Gasoline Lil," a noted SSDA lobbyist, to Cash Hauley and Chuck Shipley, former executive directors of the association, the retail gasoline dealers have been well served.

Currently, President Philip Bucalo, a Livonia Shell dealer, Executive Director Daniel Loepp, and the entire SSDA board are working hard to represent dealers' interests on a number of important issues including franchises, small business, and the environment.

Once again, congratulations to the Service Station Dealers Association of Michigan on the 60th anniversary of this fine organization. I am sure the next 60 years will see the SSDA continuing in its fine tradition of serving the gasoline dealers of the State of Michigan.

TIME TO FIGHT BACK IN OUR NATION'S CITIES

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, regardless of how many national drug strategies and drug bills we produce in the Congress and the executive branch, the war on drugs will not be won without grassroots involvement and support from the American people.

The National League of Cities has been involved in recent years in fighting the drug war on our local government front. The National League of Cities has been instrumental in forging a productive, working relationship among the chief executives who run our Nation's communities; a relationship that has led to a healthy exchange of ideas and strategies to combat the drug crisis in America's major cities. Consequently, we have witnessed a rebirth of grassroots warriors, lending hope to the cause of a drug-free America.

In order to help carry forward with this noble effort and continue the work being done by the National League of Cities, I am introducing today a House joint resolution to commemorate December 3–9, 1989, as "National Cities Fight Back Against Drugs Week." It is during this week, Mr. Speaker, that the National League of Cities hopes to shine the public spotlight on the important antidrug efforts taking place within our cities. We hope to inspire those who are working in the trenches to continue their work, and those who are standing on the sidelines will be persuaded, we hope, to join in on the action.

This special resolution is more than just a symbolic effort. The passage of this House resolution, Mr. Speaker, would bring about direct action and noticeable results in the war on drugs, through the scheduling of a variety of events in communities throughout the country. Churches, civic groups, law enforcement agencies and educators, parents and young people will be joining forces to let the drug traffickers know that we are not going to give up the reins on our communities. We must let them know that we are united in our stand against the pervasiveness of these poisons in our society.

Our cities have been devastated by the war on drugs. Entire communities are being held hostage by drug dealers and their agents who conduct their heinous trade with no regard for human life and the law. An entire generation of youth in our inner cities stands on the brink of being lost for the future because of the infatuation with crack and fast money. When our children begin to flock to the dead-end road of drug involvement—a road that almost always ends in death or incarceration—then something is truly wrong with America.

Mr. Speaker, some of our inner cities are so blighted that their populations consist mainly of hopeless and helpless individuals who turn to drugs because they have nowhere else to turn. They do not have jobs. They do not have education. They do not have opportunities and options. They are the homeless and the hungry. They are the forgotten and the ignored.

We must act and we must act now to restore order, along with hope and opportunity, in our cities. This resolution seeks to restore that order, hope, and opportunity.

Americans everywhere have said in poll after poll that they want to end the drug scourge. To the citizens in this country, the drug crisis is the No. 1 crisis in our Nation. Americans want us to solve this problem, and in doing so, we must realize and pay attention to what is happening in our inner cities.

I hope that all of my colleagues will support this resolution, and will take an active role in National Cities Fight Back Against Drugs Week.

SALUTE TO SIGMA CHI AT GEORGE WASHINGTON UNIVERSITY

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to salute Epsilon chapter of Sigma Chi fraternity at George Washington University on its 125th anniversary. The chapter was granted petition on December 10, 1864, and has since contributed to the development of hundreds of young men, emphasizing the ideals of friendship, justice, and learning.

Today, the excellence of Epsilon chapter is demonstrated by its academic success, record of community service, and campus involvement. For 3 consecutive years, the national fraternity has recognized Epsilon with the Peterson Outstanding Chapter Award, its highest honor. Through its 125 years, this chapter has produced community, State, and national leaders who have made positive contributions to our country.

As the son of a Sigma Chi, the father of three, including one Epsilon member, and a Sigma Chi myself, it is with great personal pleasure that I ask Congress to join me in extending congratulations and best wishes to Epsilon chapter.

THE FORESTRY AMENDMENT TO INTERIOR APPROPRIATIONS

HON. DENNY SMITH

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. DENNY SMITH. Mr. Speaker, as a Member who represents many timber dependent communities in Oregon, I have worked with my colleagues for months in an effort to achieve a short-term solution to the timber supply crisis facing the Pacific Northwest. My support for the amendment before us, however, is not without reservations about its long-term implications for both the Northwest and the entire Nation.

This is not a painless, easy compromise for the tens of thousands of forest products workers in the Pacific Northwest. The timber sale level in this amendment is a significant reduction from previous years. The amendment may keep people employed throughout the coming year, which I certainly support. In the long run, however, reduced harvest levels will result in economic chaos as tens of thousands of jobs are lost in the Northwest.

Every Member of this House needs to know that this amendment, and all other measures that reduce the public timber supply, will directly affect your constituents as well. Twenty percent of the wood products consumed in the United States come from public lands. Restricted domestic supply will lead to higher prices or a higher trade deficit from increased imports.

Higher timber prices will mean higher housing costs for your constituents, edging young couples and first-time buyers out of the housing market. Thirty percent of this Nation's building supplies are already imported, and nothing is being done to reverse that trend.

We in the Northwest have a good story to tell. Our region is the most productive timber region in the Nation. We can have a perpetual timber yield that provides a sustained supply of wood products for all Americans. And we can do so in an environmentally sound manner.

As we work for the long-term solution, we must be willing to examine the entire public land base in Oregon and Washington. The acres of old growth already preserved in national parks and in wilderness status must be counted toward any long-term solution.

In closing, let me reiterate that this was a truly, a compromise of a compromise, and one that is much more severe than the compromise originally proposed by the Oregon delegation at the summit in June 1989. It also relies on the good faith, constructive participation of the environmental community in order to make these provisions work. If that good faith is broken, I will be back next year to push for a solution that really works.

THANKS TO LIVERMORE'S MAYOR: DALE TURNER

HON. FORTNEY PETE STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I would like to extend my deepest appreciation to one of the finest citizens and community leaders in California's Ninth District. Mayor Dale Turner has, for the past 17 years, served the city of Livermore and the Livermore/Amador Valley in an elected and appointed position with great integrity and honor. Unfortunately for his constituents, Dale has decided not to seek reelection as Livermore's mayor.

Dale Turner's public life began when he was appointed to the Livermore Planning Commission in 1972. He then ran for the Livermore City Council in 1974, where he served until 1980. In that same year, Dale became Livermore's first directly elected mayor; a position he is now retiring from. Mr. Turner has served on many committees designed to improve the Livermore Valley quality of life and foster better relations with local communities. He has been particularly active in ensuring that the huge Lawrence Livermore and Sandia National Laboratories were good neighbors to the people of the valley.

Professionally, Mr. Turner is a graduate of the Pacific Coast Banking School/University of Washington, Louis Allen Management School and the American Institute of Banking. Mr. Turner has worked for local banks and currently holds a mortgage banking position.

Mayor Turner has served the people of Livermore with dignity and a commitment to excellence. He has never let anything but the quality of life and the future of Livermore influence his decisions as mayor. The people of Livermore are not only losing their mayor, but a true friend as well.

My wife, Carolyn Wente, and I wish him the very best in the years to come. We are sure he will continue to find new ways to provide civic and business leadership in the Greater Livermore Valley.

SENSE OF CONGRESS CONCERNING THE CONTINUED HUMAN RIGHTS VIOLATIONS BY THE PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing House Concurrent Resolution 208 a resolution concerning human rights violations by the People's Republic of China [PRC].

The daily arrests, beatings, and repression go on. Yet, there are some U.S. officials considering PRC admission to the General Agreement on Tariff and Trade [GATT].

There have also been high-level meetings between representatives of the administration and PRC officials. Secretary of State Baker has met twice with the Foreign Minister of the PRC.

I believe now is not the time for these sort of contacts and initiatives. There should first be a dramatic change of leadership in the PRC before we allow entry into the GATT, extend MFN, grant World Bank loans and meetings between high-level officials.

House Concurrent Resolution 208 expresses the sense of Congress that the state of human rights in the PRC and Tibet is still far too grim and that the proposed congressional sanctions and those put into place by the President should be upheld. Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to support House Concurrent Resolution 208.

I request that at this point in the RECORD a copy of House Concurrent Resolution 208 be printed in full.

H. CON RES. 208

Whereas on June 4, 1989, the Government of the People's Republic of China ordered an unprovoked, brutal, and indiscriminate assault on thousands of peaceful and unarmed demonstrators and onlookers in and around Tiananmen Square by units of the People's Liberation Army;

Whereas the Government of the People's Republic of China has engaged in widespread mass arrests in the aftermath of the June 4, 1989, military assault in Tiananmen Square, arresting thousands of students, workers, and others and executing scores of individuals;

Whereas security forces of the Government of the People's Republic of China have repeatedly assaulted peaceful demonstrators in Tibet and have imprisoned thousands of Tibetans for the expression of their political and religious beliefs;

Whereas freedom of emigration is currently being denied by the People's Republic of China to individuals supporting the prodemocracy movement, particularly to leaders of the movement who are currently residing in the United States and Australian Embassies in China, and to the citizens of Tibet, where martial law has been in effect since March of 1989;

Whereas a subcommission of the United Nations Human Rights Commission has voted 15 to 9 to have the full Commission examine charges that the People's Republic of China brutally suppressed the prodemocracy movement in China in violation of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, representing the first time that a permanent member of the United Nations Security Council has been censured in a United Nations forum for its human rights performance; and

Whereas harassment and intimidation continues within the People's Republic of China and within Tibet, where surveillance, arrests, beatings, and torture have been documented by independent, international human rights organizations, and as well as in the United States, where harassment of Chinese students participating in the prodemocracy movement has been reported widely by leading United States press organizations: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) the situation in the People's Republic of China and in Tibet remains as grim today as it was when President Bush first imposed sanctions on the People's Republic of China and when the House and Senate passed legislation calling for additional sanctions;

(2) there should be no relaxation of those Presidential sanctions, and the Congress should act swiftly to secure final enactment of its own proposed sanctions legislation;

(3) the President should confer with the other signatories of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and oppose any further meetings or any further action regarding the People's Republic of China's desire to accede to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade until martial law is lifted and human rights are restored in both the People's Republic of China and Tibet;

(4) the United States should continue to oppose any change in World Bank policy toward loans to the People's Republic of China, and continue to oppose the release of loan funding to the People's Republic of China until martial law is lifted and human rights are respected in both the People's Republic of China and Tibet; and

(5) the President should carefully consider withholding nondiscriminatory treatment (most favored nation treatment) for the products of the People's Republic China for an additional 12 months pursuant to section 402(d)(5) of the Trade Act of 1974, as proposed by the President on May 31, 1989, until there is freedom of emigration in both the People's Republic of China and Tibet.

THE 30TH ANNIVERSARY OF AFGE LOCAL 1923

HON. C. THOMAS McMILLEN

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. MCMILLEN of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, today I wish to give special recognition to the American Federation of Government Employees [AFGE] Local 1923 as they celebrate their 30th anniversary. I would like to extend my sincerest congratulations to this organization on their accomplishments and also recognize the week of October 1-7 as AFGE 1923 week as Gov. William Donald Schaefer has proclaimed it.

Local 1923 was founded on August 1, 1959, with the goal of fostering rights and protections for Federal employees of the Social Security Administration. Since its inception 30 years ago, under President William MacNeil, the membership of Local 1923 has grown to over 7,000 people who represent approximately 20,000 Social Security Administration, Office of the General Counsel, and Health Care Administration employees. This representation covers a five-state area, including Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Virginia, Delaware, and Maryland. Under its current president, John Gage, who also serves as the national AFGE vice president, Local 1923 has become a respected and admired organization throughout the political and labor arenas.

It is with great pride that I congratulate the AFGE Local 1923 on their 30 years of government employee services. I know that my colleagues will join me in offering best wishes for the continued success of this organization.

INTRODUCTION OF WHITE SANDS FAIR COMPENSATION ACT OF 1989

HON. JOE SKEEN

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. SKEEN. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing the White Sands Fair Compensation Act of 1989, which would authorize $17.5 million to individuals who lost their land or mining claims to the U.S. Government for the establishment of White Sands Missile Range during World War II.

This legislation establishes a 7-member commission which will evaluate the claims submitted by owners related to the taking of their property and make payments to those claimants not fully compensated. In evaluating claims, the Commission would determine the value the property had in 1975—when the U.S. Government permanently took the lands comprising White Sands Missile Range—based on established precedents for the value of similar real estate in New Mexico. Priority consideration would be given to the claims of ranchers and miners who owned property continously between 1941 and 1975.

To gain a broader understanding of the plight these individuals have undergone over nearly half a century, one must go back to the international strife that plagued this country of united Americans during the second World War. Most Americans were asked to sacrifice for the great causes this nation fought for.

The ranchers and miners affected by this legislation are just a few of the many patriotic individuals who made great sacrifices for this country. All of these fine people gave up their lands, their livelihood and their homes to the U.S. Government which pledged that these ranchers and miners would be returned their property once World War II ended. The productive land these people gave up was ultimately used to develop and detonate the most destructive weapon known to mankind—the atomic bomb. Nearly 45 years after Hiroshima and Nagasaki, and after the rebuilding of Japan and Europe, and after a bill authorizing the compensation of Japanese-Americans interned in American prisons during World War II, these ranchers and miners are still trying to rebuild their lives and salvage what is left of the future. In a real sense, the destruction of World War II has never ended for these individuals and their families and it is ironic that a nation which can establish a Marshall plan to rebuild Europe has failed to adequately compensate its own citizens.

The Aleutian and Pribilof Islands Restitution Act, title II of Public Law 100-383, provides a precedent for compensation of these White Sands ranchers and miners.

When the Japanese attacked the two westernmost Aleutian Islands during World War II, the U.S. military evacuated about 900 Aleuts from the Pribilof Islands and from many islands in the Aleutian chain. Though this action was militarily justified, the Aleuts were treated poorly during the relocation period. When the Aleuts returned to their villages after the war, they were confronted with wartime destruction, much of which was done by U.S. military personnel.

In Public Law 100-383, Congress stated: "The United States has not compensated the Aleuts adequately for the conversion or destruction of personal property, and the conversion or destruction of community property caused by the United States military occupation of Aleut villages during World War II. There is no remedy for the injustices suffered by the Aleuts during World War II except an Act of Congress providing appropriate compensation for those losses which are attributable to the conduct of United States forces and other officials and employees of the United States."

If this same standard were used for the White Sands ranchers and miners, it would allow them to be compensated for public domain lands included in the ranch and mining units, as this is an established precedent for ranch valuation in New Mexico.

I have introduced this bill as remedy for the 150 or so ranching families who were displaced by the creation of the White Sands Missile Range. This legislation would be a significant step in the process of bringing an end to this controversy. This bill is the result of six months of study and consultation with the ranchers and miners, their families, individuals of the New Mexico Cattle Growers Association and the range management specialists at New Mexcio State University.

GERMAN-AMERICAN DAY

HON. DENNIS M. HERTEL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. HERTEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today on the occasion to recognize German-American Day which will be celebrated all over the United States on October 6, 1989, and in Michigan by many of my constituents.

The President will sign a proclamation on October 6, 1989, which was adopted already in both Houses of Congress. Over 850 cities will celebrate this occasion with parades, festivals, dances and banquets. The richness of the German culture will be fully recognized and will demonstrate the contributions of Americans of German descent to the United States.

My constituents, many who are of German descent will be celebrating this day by attending a German-American heritage ball on Friday, October 6. The ball is an annual event which is held at the German-American Cultural Center in Detroit. As in the past, many Congressmen and Senators, and other local officials will be attending this event to show their appreciation for all that the German-American community has done.

The German-American Cultural Center is the host of this event and this celebration is considered the cultural event of the year among German-Americans in the Detroit area. Dancing and singing will be featured and the music will be provided by various German music groups along with the German American Cultural Center Orchestra. The center has also sponsored festivals and other cultural events throughout the year and have been very instrumental in helping to drawing the German-American community together.

My dear colleagues please join me in honoring the German-Americans and joining them in celebration in Michigan and in the United States.

THE BUCKTAIL COUNCIL OF THE BOY SCOUTS OF AMERICA

HON. WILLIAM F. CLINGER, JR.

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the Bucktail Council of the Boy Scouts of America. The Bucktail Council, located in DuBois, PA, encompasses all or part of four counties in my congressional district.

The Bucktail Council was one of two councils in the United States to have received this year's annual Gold Seal Award. The U.S. Department of Agriculture has presented this award annually since 1963, for outstanding conservation efforts to a local Boy Scout council in America.

The council has had an active Conservation Committee for over 15 years. Every 3 years the Bucktail Council Conservation Committee plans and executes a councilwide Conservation camporee, which is attended by more than 500 Scouts and Scouters.

In 1982, the council received the Green Seal Award for outstanding conservation contribution in the Northeast region. Because of the prestige of this award, the council was not eligible to be recognized for their accomplishment for another 5 years.

Council leaders indicate they will continue to have the council place a strong emphasis on conservation. Douglas L. Krofina, Bucktail Council executive, explains, "Conservation is more than planting a tree or building a jack dam; it is an ethic we must teach our children." I have been a long-time supporter of conservation and I applaud the Bucktail Council on its community spirit and its work on projects that help to control erosion and improve streams.

On behalf of the 23d District of Pennsylvania, I want to congratulate each and every member of the Bucktail Council of DuBois, on this notable accomplishment. The council's dedication is most impressive and deserves our recognition and our thanks.

CLEAR THE RUNWAY, HERE COME THE DUCKS

HON. DUNCAN HUNTER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, I am extremely privileged to honor a great American conservationist upon the realization of one of his lifetime efforts. Bert McKee's achievements at Edwards Air Force Base in California in establishing critically needed wetlands and waterfowl habitat demonstrate the creative thinking we so desperately need as Congress addresses the environmental problems facing our country. I hope that every Member will find some time to read about the great work of my friend, Bert McKee.

CLEAR THE RUNWAY, HERE COME THE DUCKS

(By Rich Roberts)

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE.—In this desert sky where eagles dare, ducks, too, will fly.

The site of aviation history will score a blow for wildlife with the re-creation of 170 acres of waterfowl wetlands. The Piute Ponds Expansion Project, in the southwest corner of Edwards' 470 square miles, will provide an enlarged rest area, with limited hunting, for weary ducks migrating along the Great Basin corridor of the Pacific Flyway—one of four major waterfowl migration routes of North America.

It's a joint venture of the Air Force, Ducks Unlimited, the California Department of Fish and Game and the Los Angeles County Sanitation District, Lancaster Division, each delighted that its own interests will be served.

By creating a gridwork of dikes, Lancaster will have more overflow ponds for its treated sewage, the Air Force won't worry so much about birds buzzing its aircraft or the runways flooding, and the wildlife people are so happy they could quack.

All it will take is a few bulldozers and $262,000, but the dream is a quarter-century old. It's Bert McKee's dream.

McKee, 86, of Arcadia, has a conservation history dating back to 1931, about 50 years before such causes became popular and six years before Ducks Unlimited was founded when the Dust Bowl era had dropped waterfowl populations to all-time lows. He chaired a local Junior Chamber of Commerce committee that was concerned about vanishing habitat—an issue now critical because of development and drought.

Later, in 1962, McKee became president of Ducks Unlimited which has grown to about 600,000 members, including 55,000 in California, and is perhaps the most effective wildlife conservation organization in the world.

McKee started hunting ducks in the desert in the 1930s when he bought into the nearby Wagas Club, one of the few ducks clubs spared during World War II when Edwards took over most of the land east of the Sierra Highway (California 14) between Lancaster and Mojave.

"They took out about 10 duck clubs," McKee said. "Some of them moved over on the west side [of the highway]. Most of 'em left the area . . . moved down to the Salton Sea or wherever they could get water."

There was once water here, too. Area maps indicate Rogers and Rosamond Dry Lakes on the base, and the Air Force wants to keep them that way, which is part of the story of how the project came about—that and the preseverance of Bert McKee.

Dedication ceremonies are scheduled Thursday alongside Shuttle Road where Columbia, Discovery and the ill-fated Challenger have rolled. McKee will be there, perhaps with his longtime duck-hunting friend Gen. Jimmy Doolittle, 91, who led the B-25 carrier-based raid on Tokyo in 1942.

The cost is being borne by an anonymous donor who earmarked the project as part of a $2-million gift to Ducks Unlimited. McKee, a former international president of DU, described the donor only as "an old duck hunter."

Perhaps he once used one of the old duck blinds that can still be seen on the site.

McKee started working on the Air Force to help the ducks in the mid-'60s.

"We started several times to get something going," he said. "It depended a great deal on who headed the [base]. We had a tremendous interest when [Maj.] Gen. [Irving L.] Branch was there in '65, then there was a lack of interest because a lot of these fellas had no interest in wildlife. We'd have it ready to do and they'd change administration, and we'd have to start all over again."

The breakthrough occurred as the end result of the Antelope Valley's population boom. The sanitation district was running out of places to dump used water.

Denton Guthrie, assistant state chairman for DU, said: "Every time somebody flushes their toilet out here, that water's gotta go someplace."

Since the late '50s, the district has had 320 acres of containment ponds for chemically treated effluent just west of the site. But as the population grew and those ponds overflowed, the water would flood Rosamond Dry Lake, which is an emergency landing site for test aircraft and lies directly under the Alpha Low Level Flight Corridor. The flooding not only made the lake unusable but drew birds into the area and raised the risk of what the Air Force calls "bird strikes," a danger with fatal implications.

Chris Rush, the civilian base natural resources planner, said: "We've had to restrict flight operations when it's flooded."

As the Air Force and the sanitation district became increasingly alarmed, McKee said, "I just kept plowing away."

Jimmy Doolittle's a great friend of mine. He went over there with me and attended meetings and talked. Most of our problem had been we weren't getting up high enough."

Doolittle helped McKee gain altitude in the Air Force hierarchy, and results followed.

"Finally, I went back to Washington and got to the people back there at the North American Wildlife Conference. They had two [representatives] from Edwards—the boys that were lukewarm on the deal—and they voted to really get the thing going."

It's only 170 acres, making a total of 490, which is less than a square mile. But when one considers that California has lost 95 percent of its wetlands, according to Mike Maier of the Waterfowl Habitat Owners Alliance, every little bit counts.

"We've destroyed more wetlands than any other part of the country," Maier said. "Two-thirds of the wetlands in California—267,000 acres—are now owned by private duck clubs."

That was the message McKee took to the Air Force.

"They knew they had to do something with all this land they were tying up," he said. "There are 300,000 acres in Edwards, and when you multiply all these military bases that aren't doing anything at all to encourage wildlife * * * the most important part of this is that we're establishing precedent."

This is the first significant wildlife habitat restoration project on a military base.

Guthrie said: "There are a lot of wildlife projects that, if done properly and managed properly wouldn't detract at all from military operations."

It's also the first DU project in Los Angeles County, which has no significant duck hunting on public lands and only three private clubs.

Until 1986, in fact, DU, which reported a net income of $67 million last year, spent all of its funds developing habitat in Canada, from where the birds come. Now it has expanded its projects to its MARSH program—Matching Aid to Restore States Habitat—working with groups such as these under its "Partners in Conservation" concept.

The Piute Ponds already have more than 200 species of birds. The project is targeted for ducks, but geese and other winged creatures, not unlike the space shuttle, are expected to use the site as a landing zone as they migrate between Canada and Mexico. A few will stay and nest. All waterfowl need is shallow water with a food supply.

From a month before hunting season to a month after, the sanitation district increases chlorination, but the birds seem to thrive.

Hunting will be limited. The only people allowed to hunt are military personnel, active or retired, and their dependents; base civilian personnel and contractors, and a few longtime local Rod and Gun Club members with "grandfather" privileges.

The limitations don't seem important to DU.

"Probably 50 percent of our members don't even hunt," Guthrie said. "They're just interested in saving the ducks."

Rollie Kienzle of Whittier, a lifelong hunter who belongs to the Rio Hondo DU chapter, said: "This isn't for hunting. This project is for conservation."

Maier: "This valley is a historic flyway, once populated by [Piute] Indians. It's reasonable to believe it was a wetlands at one time. People live where there's water."

In later days, McKee brought Air Force generals and astronauts out to hunt ducks around Edwards. John Wayne, Bing Crosby and other celebrities visited his ranch.

"In those days we had rugged individualists," he said. "We've got to teach more people what the art is. These fellas that go out and simply shoot ducks and don't do anything else are not gonna save the resource."

MISSING SERVICE PERSONNEL ACT LEGISLATION

HON. JOHN G. ROWLAND

OF CONNECTICUT

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. ROWLAND of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, today I am joining with the distinguished minority leader, BOB MICHEL, in introducing legislation to provide procedural due process in determining the status of missing service personnel.

Earlier this year, I introduced the Missing Service Personnel Act (H.R. 1730). The purpose of this bill is to correct the current method by which the U.S. Government accounts for missing service personnel, and to establish a more acceptable system for future servicemen.

Having been involved in the POW-MIA issue since the beginning of my tenure in Congress, I am aware of the differing opinions as to how best to make final determinations regarding missing service personnel. Throughout this time, my goal has steadfastly remained that Congress must find the most workable and acceptable solution to ending the pain and suffering of the families of those left unaccounted for.

To achieve this objective, today I have again written to Congresswoman BYRON, the chairperson of the House Armed Services Subcommittee on Military Personnel and Compensation. I have requested a hearing on both H.R. 1730 and the legislation I have introduced with Congressman MICHEL. I believe that the best way to formulate legislation ensuring that we do not repeat our Nation's past mistakes is to hold a congressional hearing on both proposals. We must work to pass the best legislation possible to address this critical issue.

THE INTRODUCTION OF THE SYSTEMATIC APPROACH FOR VALUE ENGINEERING [SAVE] ACT

HON. CARDISS COLLINS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mrs. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, not a day goes by that we don't pay homage to the national urgencies of our day, such as the needs to maximize our resources, decrease the national debt, increase our international competitiveness, reduce our trade deficit, and develop superior technologies and products. The difficulty is found in devising plans that address one or more of these concerns.

But there is, in fact, a process which deals with all of these issues: Value engineering.

Value engineering [VE] routinely yields sizable contract savings and improves quality at the same time. The beneficiaries include taxpayers, the governmental entity engaging the contractor, the contractor itself, the contractor's industry, and the American economy in general. In short, no one loses. This is a rare case of a "win-win" situation.

VE is a specialized, multifaceted, creative, team-conducted technique that defines the objective of a product, service, process or construction project and questions every step toward reaching it. It does so with an eye to reducing all costs—including initial and long-term costs—and completion time while improving quality, reliability, and aesthetics. Analysis covers the equipment, maintenance, repair, replacement, procedures and supplies involved. Life-cycle cost analysis is one of its many aspects and it differs from other cost-cutting techniques in that it is far more comprehensive, scientific, and creative.

It is widely accepted that VE saves no less than 3 percent of a contract's expense, and commonly that figure is 5 percent. At the same time, the cost of doing a VE review ranges from one-tenth to three-tenths of a percent. Thus, on a $2 million construction contract, the very minimum that would be saved would be $54,000 while savings of $98,000 is very likely. On a major military procurement contract for $1 billion over life-cycle, that translates to a range of savings from $27 million to $49 million. Based on VE usage in recent years, the ratio of VE costs to VE savings has ranged from 1:10 to 1:100, with 1:18 being the most frequent result.

Examples of VE successes are plentiful. In 1988, a VE review of a bridge repair project in Cleveland yielded $7 million in savings from a $26 million budget—27 percent savings—and shortened the period of the bridge being closed from 36 months to 20—44 percent. In 1986, the aircraft giant Hughes documented savings of $462.1 million from VE, and VE savings of $490 million were anticipated for the following year. Another giant, General Dynamics, saved the Air Force more than $25.4 million over the life of the F-16 program, retaining $941,058 as an incentive fee. And the list goes on.

Whenever VE has been examined, the invariable conclusion is that it should be used more often as it has an untapped potential too great to even estimate. The Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs held a hearing in 1987, from which it was made clear that VE has a shockingly successful track record and that vast savings are ready, willing and able to be attained. The Governmental Accounting Office has conducted at least 12 studies on VE in recent years, each one of which has touted VE's achievements and advocated its expanded use in a broad spectrum of activities. VE's utility is so well recognized that Donald Trump extolled its virtues in his recent book, "The Art Of The Deal." In regard to the building of a casino in Atlantic City, Trump writes:

One way we stood to save money was from something known as value engineering. A good example was the installation of the cooling towers for our air-conditioning system. Originally our architects placed them on the roof of the hotel tower. Through value engineering, we determined that we'd save a lot of money by installing them on a lower section of roof, just seven floors up, because that roof could be poured much sooner. In turn we'd be able to start all the piping and electrical work for the air-conditioning 6 months earlier.

I got the building finished right on schedule for a May 14 opening. That meant we'd be able to take advantage of the Memorial Day weekend, traditionally the best 3 days of the year for the casino business in Atlantic City. I also came in slightly under the original budget, at $218 million. It represented the first casino-hotel in Atlantic City ever built on time and on budget.

Numerous Federal departments, agencies, and other contracting authorities have already reaped substantial benefits from the use of VE. Among them are: Army Corps of Engineers, Veterans' Administration, General Services Administration, Army, Naval Facilities Engineering Command, Air Force, Federal Highway Administration, Navy, and the Environmental Protection Agency Wastewater Treatment Program.

But its past and present use would be characterized as sporadic, at best. The use of VE remains far below its potential.

Today I am introducing a bill which would require that VE reviews be conducted for:

Every construction contract exceeding $2 million;

Every "major" procurement contract;

Subcontracts of major procurement contracts for 25 percent of a contract's value and otherwise where deemed appropriate by the VE team; and

State and municipal contracts where the State or municipality is using Federal funds or operating under Federal authority.

By targeting only large Government contracts, VE efforts will be concentrated on the activities which will reap the greatest rewards. While a VE review of a $25,000 contract would most likely be cost effective—and should be done voluntarily—the bill would chase the more sizable savings.

To address the principal explanation for VE's sporadic usage—i.e., that the absence of top-level management support fosters resistance to change—my bill would also establish a VE office in each Federal department and agency to oversee the VE program and encourage contractor compliance. Where appropriate, the VE office could also conduct the VE reviews itself.

Some have suggested that this is not the appropriate time for legislation in light of the Office of Management and Budget's circular number A-131, which directed Executive branch offices to utilize VE. But A-131 has been ineffective. The Executive branch offices that had not employed VE before A-131 are still not relying on it. Still other offices are disregarding A-131's reporting requirements and I can only assume their use of VE to be inadequate. Putting a VE requirement into law would promote compliance and facilitate accountability and enforcement. It could not be eliminated by a subsequent order from this nor a future administration.

Moreover, the S.A.V.E. Act would go far beyond A-131 by applying VE to: All contracts within certain defined categories rather than simply "where appropriate" with authority to make case-by-case exceptions; State and local governments in connection with federally funded contracts; and large subcontracts.

In addition, each department and agency that engages in contracts would be directed by the S.A.V.E. Art to institutionalize VE in a separate VE office, staffed with professionals well versed in VE.

Mr. Speaker, we have a responsibility to take advantage of VE. Ironically enough, although VE was developed in the United States during World War II for the purposes of maximizing our resources and improving our defense capabilities, it has most effectively been used by the Japanese electronics and automobile industries. Isn't it time that we reap the fruits of our own brainchild? Isn't it time that we support this effort within our own Government?

RETIREMENT OF WILLIAM H. HOGAN, JR.

HON. NICHOLAS MAVROULES

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. MAVROULES. Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay tribute to an individual who, with the highest distinction, served the Committee on Armed Services, U.S. House of Representatives, as an assistant counsel, and then general counsel, Mr. William H. Hogan, Jr.

After over 20 years of outstanding service to the Committee on Armed Services, 2 years of service to the late Honorable William H. Bates, then ranking minority member of the committee, and over 23 years of service in the U.S. Navy, Bill is retiring.

Bill has assisted me for many years on the Armed Services Committee, but in addition, is a constituent of mine. Bill was born in Lynn, MA, and despite having traveled around the world with the Navy and the committee, rarely misses an opportunity to return to Massachusetts.

Bill has been in public service all his life. He began his career in August 1940, when he enlisted in the U.S. Navy. Except for 3 years following World War II, he served in the Navy until retirement in 1968 as captain, Judge Advocate General Corps.

In August 1968, Bill became assistant to the late Honorable William H. Bates, then ranking minority member of the House Committee on Armed Services. Upon Congressman Bate's death in 1969, Bill became assistant counsel to the Investigations Subcommittee, and shortly thereafter was appointed to the full committee staff as counsel. Upon organization of the committee for the 95th Congress in February 1977, Bill was appointed general counsel, and has served in that position for the last 12½ years.

During that time Bill participated in countless investigations, including the investigation into the massacre at My Lai, the first investigation into drug abuse in the military and the investigation of Honor Code violations at West Point, and provided invaluable expert advice to the members of the committee as counsel to numerous special subcommittees, including the Special Subcommittee on Defense Aspects of the Equal Employment Opportunity Program, the Special Subcommittee on Disciplinary Problems in the Navy, the Special Subcommittee to Probe Disturbances at Military Bases, and the Special Subcommittee on Intelligence.

Because of his special efforts and mastery of issues in such diverse areas as the naval petroleum reserves, CHAMPUS, the Uniform Code of Military Justice, admission of women to the service academies, and the contempt of Congress citations relating to the Watergate break-in, Bill contributed greatly to the committee's resolution of these critical issues.

On behalf of the Armed Services Committee, the Congress, and the Nation, I want to express our sincere appreciation to Bill Hogan for his selfless dedication, loyalty, professionalism, and the great contributions he has made to the security of this Nation. We wish him well in his retirement.

HONORING KEN LAHNER

HON. HENRY J. HYDE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest to my colleagues that they take a moment and read a transcript of an editorial tribute to an excellent public servant, Mr. Ken Lahner—a man who gave much of career to the people of DuPage County, IL, for the past 12 years. The editorial appeared recently in The Daily Journal of Wheaton, IL.

[From the Daily Journal, Aug. 9, 1989]

PUBLIC SERVICE LOSES ITS HARDEST WORKER

The image of Ken Lahner that will always stick in our minds is one in which he is sitting in the county building cafeteria very early in the morning, well before board members or administrators are even in the building.

He is on his second king-sized cup of black coffee and third or fourth cigarette, pouring over the pages of a computer printout the size of a Chicago phone directory. He will find the information he needs, boil it down to a page or two memo and have it copied for board members at a committee meeting in less than an hour.

Lahner last week confirmed rumors that he was leaving county government to take a management position in private industry.

His departure leaves more than a vacancy at the comptoller job he held. he was also a savvy politican who could convince people in Wheaton and Springfield to look past county board Chairman Jack Knuepfer's aloofness and see the wisdom of many of his programs.

His abilities to crunch members and lobby officials have been described as "genius."

Lahner's personal style made it hard not to like him. A permanent smile, a friendly pat on the back and a gravelly "Howya doin, guy" was a daily greeting. His rumpled "Det. Columbo" look of someone always with too much to do and never enough time is a sharp contrast to the pressed, urbane professional look of the modern politician.

As a county board member from 1978-82, Lahner was vice chairman of the influential finance committee and chaired the public works committee, helping to turn around the then-floundering department.

He was Knuepfer's floor whip and was labeled by the media as "Knuepfer's right-hand man." The assessment was accurate but politically fatal. He tried hard to repair the rift between the county and the DuPage Water Commission only to have Knuepfer lobby for legislation that dismantled the group.

He lost his country board seat by only 115 votes to Ray Soden, a county newcomer and Addison Township supervisor. Knuepfer rewarded Lahners loyalty and ability with the comptroller job, in effect making him the county administrator.

In whatever capacity for the county, he was on the job early, stayed late and was the only official one could count on finding at work late on Friday afternoons.

His ability and personal commitment to whatever job he tackles are unquestionable. He has earned thanks for his contributions and best wishes for personal success in his new direction.

SANFORD KANE—A LEADER IN THE SEMICONDUCTOR INDUSTRY

HON. J.J. PICKLE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, it has been my good fortune to have had the opportunity to work closely over the past few years with a man who is truly a national leader in the development of this country's semiconductor industry—Sanford L. Kane.

I rise today to call the attention of my colleagues to the announcement that the Semiconductor Industry Association [SIA] recently named Sandy as the recipient of its annual Appreciation Award in recognition of his contributions to the semiconductor industry. I want to join SIA in recognizing Sandy's outstanding work in developing the industry's ability to compete with foreign semiconductor manufacturers.

My involvement with Sandy began during his tenure as director of SEMATECH, the semiconductor manufacturing consortium located in Austin, TX. Sandy has now moved on to an important new challenge as the president and chief executive officer of U.S. Memories, Inc., an industry-led, privately financed joint venture of semiconductor producers aimed at establishing our country as a leader in production of dynamic random access memories or "DRAM's" the primary memory for computers. In this venture, he is making even greater contributions to our semiconductor industry.

Mr. Speaker, I congratulate Sandy Kane on this well-deserved recognition of his invaluable contributions to the semiconductor industry, and I look forward to working with him in the future to make the U.S. Memories project a reality and to make our Nation a leader once again in the computer industry.

RON CHAPMAN HONORED BY NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF BROADCASTERS

HON. MARTIN FROST

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to inform the Congress that Mr. Ron Chapman, a long-time radio personality in the Dallas/Fort Worth/North Texas area, has been awarded the National Association of Broadcasters' First Annual Marconi Radio Award for "Personality of the Year."

The radio station for which Ron Chapman works, KVIL, has also been named "Station of the Year" in the medium market category, logically in great part because of Ron Chapman's great contribution to their programming.

Winners were selected from 119 nominees across the country, with the presentation being made at the Grand Finale Gala closing the National Association of Broadcasters' Radio '89 Convention in New Orleans, LA, on September 16.

The prestigious awards were given to the legendary station and radio personalities of the year by a special ballot vote of NAB radio members and associate members

Mr. Speaker, congratulations are certainly in order for KVIL AM/FM of Dallas, and to Ron Chapman for their years of service to our community and for the NAB's glowing recognition of their efforts.

AID TO THE NICARAGUAN OPPOSITION

HON. MIKE SYNAR

OF OKLAHOMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. SYNAR. Mr. Speaker, today I voted against H.R. 3385, which provides $9 million designed to support the electoral process in Nicaragua, including direct funds for the opposition parties. I support an amendment to the bill offered by Representative DICK DURBIN.

I voted against the bill because I believe that we set a bad precedent in choosing and funding one party in a sovereign nation's election. I am afraid that sending aid to the opposition in Nicaragua may be followed by similar intervention in Cambodia, Angola, and other nations whose governments are not to our looking. This should not be our policy.

More important, this funding package may in fact be counterproductive to our goals of ensuring a free and fair election in Nicargua. Our support of the corrupt Somoza dynasty is still fresh in the minds of many Nicaraguans, not all of them Sandinista supporters. These Nicaraguans may be sympathetic to charges of "Yankee imperialism" if we provide direct support to the opposition in the election. The lack of details about exactly where the funds in this bill will be spent can only buttress such charges.

I realize that the purpose of this aid package is to ensure that the election in Nicaragua is fair. However, the great number of international observers who will be in Nicaragua next February should result in sufficient monitoring of the election. The election will be monitored by the United Nations, the Organization of American States, and a number of leaders of nations in the Western Hemisphere.

I supported the amendment offered by Representative DURBIN because it provides funds only for international monitoring by the Council of Freely Elected Heads of Government, of which former Presidents Jimmy Carter and Gerald Ford are delegates. This type of assistance cannot be construed as vote buying and is a legitimate way to support the democratic process in Nicaragua.

NAPLES PHILHARMONIC CENTER CREATES PUBLIC/PRIVATE PARTNERSHIP LEADING FLORIDA TO MAJOR CULTURAL ROLE

HON. TOM LEWIS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. LEWIS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, one of the enduring issues of contemporary debate is whether or not America has lost its will for leadership. Has its zest for risk-taking, that intangible quality that focuses on the potential for accomplishment rather than the safety of accommodation, cooled? Do we expect rather than dream? Some Cassandras say our self-indulgence and passivity has dulled our capacity for entrepreneurial initiatives.

Not so. I offer as substantive proof of the vitality of American enterprise the performing arts boom, in my State fueled by millions of dollars raised largely by private citizens willing to take the necessary risks. By 1992, Florida will have virtual chorus line of performing arts centers with a total price tag of nearly $250 million. Although State funding for the arts, which was an anemic $10,000 in 1966 has risen to $61.2 million, ranking Florida third nationally in terms of arts funding, a substantial catalyst has been the private sector dollars—$21.5 million in Tampa, $10 million in Fort Lauderdale, $20 million in West Palm Beach and $14.5 million in Clearwater.

One of the more dramatic examples of this unique partnership between private and public sectors will premiere this fall in Naples where a magnificent $17 million performing arts complex will open fully paid for, and able to achieve breakeven on a $4.8 million operating budget at 70 percent of its capacity. All of this due to the leadership of an indefatigable lady chief executive, 25 dedicated community leaders, 450 volunteers—and 7,200 local residents, businesses and foundations.

This Philharmonic Center for the Arts was described by the chairman of the National Endownment for the Arts as a "unique achievement" and was, he said, "especially remarkable * * * that it will open debt-free." The State's contributions were a modest $3.5 million.

The current performing arts boom in my State, of which the Naples complex is the most current example, reflects not only the maturation of our State but also the realization of the pivotal role culture has in a State's economic development. Not only do these centers bring new jobs and new business for suppliers and stimulate tourism but, as in the case of Naples, FL, it can anchor major real estate development. The Naples Philharmonic Center is the centerpiece of a $1.6 million planned community of 15,000 by Westinghouse Communities (of Naples). The discreet integration of villas, shops, restaurants—and culture—is expected to have minimally, a $40 million plus impact on the local economy, creating some 7,000 new jobs.

The Naples arts complex represents another dimension to this cultural boom—survivability. It is a product of modern business and marketing techniques rather than amateur enthusiasm and boosterism—which tends to fade over time. It all began, with a no-nonsense feasibility study, which led to a strategic plan and, ultimately, to the setting of 5-year objectives. This new breed of arts center also differs from conventional centers in that it sees as its primary mission to provide a varied arts schedule that can sustain its appeal to the community, and is educational as well. Many of the earlier arts centers functioned solely as rental halls.

Let me illustrate this point with a concise inventory of what the Naples Philharmonic Center embraces.

It features a 1,221-seat concert hall fronted by a giant stage larger than Carnegie Hall's or the New York State Theater's. Its orchestra pit can easily accommodate a full-scale orchestra. There is also a 300-seat theater with moveable stage, two domed, balconied art galleries and a courtyard sculpture garden. In addition to the usual arts amenities of dressing rooms, conference rooms, etc., there are seven teaching studios for master classes in music in collaboration with the University of Miami and a music library.

The cultural fare is as varied as the entertainment pages in any major newspaper. There's the Warsaw Philharmonic and The Academy of St. Martins-in-the-Fields; such Broadway hits as "Me and My Girl"; oldies like "Mame," "The Wiz" and "West Side Story"; concert artists like Andre Watts and Itzhak Pearlman; chamber music from the Lincoln Center ensemble; opera from the New York City Opera's national company; the heralded Miami City Ballet; international flavor via the Vienna Boys Choir; the Don Cossacks of the U.S.S.R. and the Hungarian State Folk Ensemble; singers Mel Torme, Shirley Jones and Helen Reddy; Pops via The Big Band Festival; jazz by Marian McPartland and New Orleans' Preservation Hall Jazz Band; family oriented features such as "A Christmas Carol"; Broadway on Ice; lectures by E.G. Marshall, Pearl Bailey, Sid Caesar and individual performances by Carol Channing and Rudoph Nureyev.

Typically, ticket sales cover about half the operating budget costs of an arts center. The Naples complex, because of its diversified programs—which can be produced autonomously one from another—expects ticket sales to cover 70 percent of the operating budget, the rest to be generated through a variety of properly conceived concessions, art gallery admissions, program income, contract fees with hotels and airlines and a host of special functions, from cooking seminars and film festivals to fashion shows.

The Naples center opens its inaugural season on November 6 with a modest endowment and a balanced budget—an accomplishment of some significance.

Thus, it will mark yet another major step in the emergence, I believe, of Florida as a major cultural State.

GERMAN-AMERICAN DAY, OCTOBER 5, 1989: A CELEBRATION OF FREINDSHIP

HON. E. THOMAS COLEMAN

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow October 5, 1989 we celebrate German-American Day here in Washington and in communities across the United States. And while the day has special meaning to millions of German-American citizens it also signifies the importance of the strong ties between America and the Federal Republic of Germany.

The role of German-Americans in our Nation's history began in fact before we were a nation. German people came early to the New World; their values and culture helped shape those early settlements that first would become the Colonies and then the United States of America. Their energy and enterprise were driving forces in the westward expansion of the Nation and in our development as an industrial and financial leader of the world.

Today nearly every community in the United States reflects the contribution of its German-American citizens.

As we celebrate German-American Day this year we also celebrate the 40th anniversary of the Federal Republic of Germany which was forged from the ruins of World War II. In the four decades since, the people of West Germany have reclaimed their tradition of freedom and self-determination, rebuilt their economy and taken their place among the leaders of the free world. West Germany has opened its doors to thousands of people to give them the opportunity to fullfill their hopes for a better life both for themselves and their children.

Within NATO, the ties between America and West Germany form a linchpin of Western security. Today, 50 percent of NATO's active land forces in central Europe, 50 percent of the ground-based air defense system, and 30 percent of all combat aircraft are German; including 250,000 U.S. troops, the FRG hosts a total of 400,000 allied personnel. Most of NATO's nuclear weapons are located on German soil.

I would note that earlier this year a number of security issues threatened NATO unity. Yet the strong allied ties forged over the past 40 years sustained the alliance and led to agreements on such sensitive issues as short-range nuclear weapons modernization and the number of low-flying aircraft exercises.

In additon to its security role, and perhaps as important in today's rapidly changing political climate in Eastern Europe, is West Germany's economic leadership. It has been a major factor in efforts to achieve European economic integration and an open, expanding world economy.

The economic ties between America and Germany are critical to both nations, with trade between them in 1988 valued at more than $40 billion. While there have been and continue to be differences between us on tariff and trade issues, our record of cooperation is good and that record supports the hope that we can resolve many of the economic issues of concern to each nation.

Mr. Speaker, we have enjoyed 45 years of peace in Europe. At the heart of this peace has been a free, democratic, and stable Federal Republic of German. This enormous achievement alone would justify our celebration tomorrow; combined with the historic contribution of German-Americans in our own country we have much indeed to celebrate.

THE GLOBAL ENVIRONMENTAL STANDARDS REPORTING ACT

HON. PETER J. VISCLOSKY

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce a bill today to greatly enhance our understanding of various environmental protection initiatives throughout the world—particularly those of our major trading partners.

My legislation, the Global Environmental Standards Reporting Act, would require the Environmental Protection Agency [EPA] to report to Congress annually on the environmental standards of our trading partners, particularly member nations of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, Mexico, Brazil, South Korea and Taiwan. The annual reports will focus on three specific questions—What environmental standards do these nations have? To what degree are these standards enforced? And, how much governmental assistance do foreign industries receive to meet their respective environmental obligaitons?

Industry in the United States incurs great costs to comply with our anti-pollution regulations. Stringent environmental standards do have a price tag. That price is paid for by our society, our workers and our economy. Furthermore, that cost impairs the ability of our domestic industries to achieve and maintain international competitiveness.

There is ilittle doubt that our domestic industry will have to deal with new and costly emission standards established by the Clean Air Act amendments now being considered in Congress. These standards will further influence our long-term competitiveness. Many of our trading partners do not subject their industries to rigorous environmental standards. Thus, they have a great competitive advantage. Of those that do have similar regulations, many do not enforce them. Because there is no repository of information regarding the environmental regulations of our trading partners, it is impossible to gauge their economic advantage. What data we do have is scattered and incomplete.

The report required by this legislation would evaluate environmental regulations on an industry-specific basis. While an annual report is required, I would expect the EPA to phase in this evaluation, starting with the industrial categories which are subject to new regulatory requirements in the United States. This would mean, for example, that the EPA would start with those industrial categories for which air toxics emission standards are first being promulgated under a revised section 112 of the Clean Air Act.

I would like to stress that the information derived from the required report is essential for environmental reasons as well as economic. As we compete in a global economy, so must we live in a global environment. Toxic air and polluted water know no international boundaries. It does not matter where the poluton is released, if the quantity is high enough it will eventually find its way to our nation's shores. The safety of our citizens and our world depends upon the maintenance of our global environment.

I am not advocating tariffs or trade barriers for the purpose of forcing other nations to bring their standards up to ours. Rather, that we initiate a process to encourage or assist others to do so at an accelerated pace. The compilation of sound, comprehensive information is a crucial first step that must be taken if we are to make a change for the better.

I believe that the bill I am introducing today takes a significant step toward building the information base we need to assess the effects of different environmental policies throughout the world. It will provide the information we need to rationally consider the arguments that we hear from various industries and their workers. In addition, it will expose those who have not joined the United States in making our Earth a more livable place so that we can take positive steps to encourage them to do so.

My bill would not trim any existing law or proposed environmental standard that is currently being discussed. Rather, it provides a way for the administration and Congress to effectively compare environmental efforts of other nations in what is being called a "global economy."

THE 250TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE COMMUNITY OF POINT PLEASANT

HON. PETER H. KOSTMAYER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. KOSTMAYER. Mr. Speaker, today, I rise to honor the community of Point Pleasant, Bucks County, PA, as it celebrates its 250th anniversary. Point Pleasant has retained its special character as a village. It still looks much as it did in the 19th century.

The beauty of this river village is a tribute to the efforts and concern of its citizens. I am pleased to share with my colleagues a brief history of Point Pleasant by residents Barbara and Don Morris with assistance from Jeff Marshall of the Bucks County Conservancy:

A BRIEF HISTORY OF POINT PLEASANT

Point Pleasant traces its modern day origins to the grant of a charter to Enoch Pearson, on June 23, 1739, to operate a ferry service across the Delaware River at the mouth of the Tohickon Creek. For many years, the part of Point Pleasant lying north of the Tohickon was known as Pearson's Ferry or Pearson's Landing. The part of the village south of the Tohickon was known as Black's Eddy, and later as Lower Black's Eddy, named after a prominent local family and the large and powerful eddy in the river that occurs at the south end of the village.

Lower Black's Eddy developed faster than did Pearson's Landing for several reasons, among them that the Indians remained active and hostile north of the Tohickon much after the area south of the creek had become relatively safe for settlers. A number of industries grew up in the area: Taverns, hotels, and stores to serve river commerce; a sawmill on the Tohickon in 1748; and at least one large fishery.

On February 29, 1828, the post office was transferred from Lower Black's Eddy to a location north of the Tohickon in Pearson's Ferry; and Joseph Hough, the postmaster, changed the name of the entire village to Point Pleasant.

The opening of the Delaware Canal in 1831 was one of the most important events in Point Pleasant's history, bringing unprecedented economic development and prosperity. By the mid-1860's four large hotels were operating in the village, and Point Pleasant had become the largest and one of the most important canal towns north of New Hope. Another major spur to development came with the opening of the five-span covered bridge over the Delaware River in 1855.

The covered bridge over the Delaware burned in 1892, and was rebuilt of steel. That bridge was taken out in the famous flood of August 1955, and has never been replaced. Point Pleasant thus had a bridge over the Delaware for exactly 100 years. The Delaware Canal continued in operation for exactly 100 years, ceasing commercial operations in 1931.

After the decline of canal traffic in the later 1800's, Point Pleasant became a vacation and resort center, with many people coming from Doylestown and Philadelphia to stay in one of the lovely hotels located there. Two U.S. Presidents, Grover Cleveland and William McKinley, came to Point Pleasant frequently to fish for shad.

Point Pleasant has five prehistoric archaeological sites, including one that was excavated as part of the pumping station. These sites have revealed materials from the Late Archaic Period—c. 4000–1500 B.C.

ANNUAL GERMAN-AMERICAN FRIENDSHIP DAY

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, in October 1683, 13 families from Krefeld set foot in the New World somewhere near Philadelphia. In the years since then the German ethnic presence in America has continued and grown. Looking for farmland in which to sink their roots, Germans-Americans were among the largest group in the move to America and westward, including my home State of Nebraska where they constitute the largest ethnic group. Almost one in four Americans can now claim some German ancestry.

German-American Friendship Day also gives us an opportunity to note the very special relationship we enjoy with the Federal Republic of Germany. The FRG is indeed a unique nation. Created during the chaotic years immediately following the Second World War, West Germany immediately found itself the focus of cold war tensions. We should recall that the FRG was created at a time when the Berlin airlift was in effect. At that time it was far from certain that a viable government could be formed in Bonn. It was a nation in ruins, a people divided, and a country at risk from Soviet aggression.

With massive American assistance from the Marshall plan, Germany was able to rebuild. Later they created the German Marshall Fund to help repay American generousity and good will. Their trust fund continues to benefit Americans. We can point with justifiable pride to the great achievements of our West German friends. West Germany has faced the obstacles that all youthful nations must face, and it has overcome those obstacles magnificently. In 40 years Germany has emerged from a devastating war and has become one of the leading nations in the free world. It has turned former adversaries into steadfast friends by its actions.

While the United States and Germany may occasionally differ on minor details of day-to-day policy, we enjoy a stable friendship because of our shared values. We are now bound inextricably together in a basic recognition of the dignity of man and respect of democratic principles. And, because we share a common vision of the world, we can expect the United States and the Federal Republic of Germany and our people to remain good friends and allies.

EDWARD DOYLE RECEIVING THE SAVINO FERRANTO HUMANITARIAN AWARD

HON. ELIOT L. ENGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor Edward Doyle who will be receiving the Savino Ferranto Humanitarian Award, which is given every year to a person who is active in his or her community and works to improve it. This year, Mr. Doyle's fine work in the city of Yonkers is being rewarded by the Yonkers Christopher Columbus Day Committee.

Edward Doyle, life long a resident of the city of Yonkers, has always been active in civic affairs. Mr. Doyle serves on the board of directors of the Angel Guardian for the Elderly and on the board of directors of A Brighter Tomorrow, a shelter for abused and battered women. He is also active in the March of Dimes and United Cerebral Palsy Association.

Since 1958, Mr. Doyle has worked at Castle Block Co. in Tarrytown and has been a member of Teamsters Local 456. In 1961, he was elected a vice president of local 456 and has held a number of other elected offices in this union. Since 1985, Mr. Doyle has served as secretary-treasurer and business manager of Teamsters Local 456. Mr. Doyle's late father was also active in local 456, serving as president for 10 years.

Mr. Doyle has a loving family, which includes his wife, Linda, and his three children Eddie, Jr., Carol Cassanelli, and Kim Doyle. They have always supported him in his efforts to improve the lot of others and I am sure that they are pleased that his endeavors are being rewarded.

I am proud of all the work Edward Doyle does in the city of Yonkers and am glad he is one of my constituents. I offer my sincere congratulations to Mr. Doyle for receiving this great honor.

VIOLETA CHAMORRO APPEALS TO EXPATRIATES

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call to the attention of my colleagues a speech recently given by Violeta Barrios Chamorro in Miami. Speaking on her first trip outside of Nicaragua as the presidential candidate of the National Opposition Union [UNO], Mrs. Chamorro urged Nicaraguans in exile to join their fellow countrymen in the long, hard struggle against the Sandinista dictatorship. As you will recall, 10 years ago the Sandinistas betrayed the people's revolution. They created an atmosphere of repression and hostility, and wreaked havoc on the Nicaraguan economy, ultimately destroying the hopes of its citizens for liberty. As the presidential candidate of UNO, Mrs. Chamorro represents the hope for the establishment of a democratic, free government in Nicaragua.

We in the United States have been awaiting a Nicaraguan Government that would respect the rights of its people. I urge my colleagues to carefully consider the remarks of Mrs. Chamorro in the text that follows:

VIOLETA CHAMORRO APPEALS TO EXPATRIATES

[Speech by Violeta Barrios Chamorro, presidential candidate of the National Opposition Unity, in Miami—date not given]

I have come with great pride today to this city—a city that became great thanks to the drive of a people that preferred freedom and exile to dictatorship. A city that became great thanks to the drive of the Cuban people, a courageous and rebellious but also progressive and hardworking people. The Cubans proved how much men are worth when they decide to be free. Using the trail blazed by the Cubans, another rebellious people came here and are also making this city great. I am referring to my people, and I have brought a message for them: The bell of freedom is ringing in Nicaragua! The time has come to make our small and long-suffering homeland great!

In my first trip outside the country as the presidential candidate of the National Opposition Union (UNO) and at my second big rally, I have come here to ask my compatriots to join me in the struggle that will free Nicaragua in February.

We believed in 1979 that it was worth fighting together to form a national government in which all would be represented and all would participate in the making of a new republic, which was what that historical moment demanded. However, the Sandinists never understood what Nicaragua wanted. They only understood what their masters, the Soviet Union and Cuba, were ordering them to do, and they spoiled that historical moment.

In the beginning, they had working for them a revolution supported by an entire nation, with a heroism that knew no bounds, and they used this to deceive others. However, they wasted this opportunity. In the beginning, when a Nicaraguan traveled abroad, everyone would look at him with respect. We were well-liked by the rest of the world. Ten years later, we have lost what we worked so hard for, and the current government is a beggar government that tours the world with an outstretched hand. It is a government that has made Nicaragua the poorest country on the continent. The Sandinists' international revolution ended up this way. Instead of leading and maintaining our national revolution, they put an end to everything. They declared themselves enemies of the United States, turned hostile to the democracies that had helped them, oppressed poor peasants until they wre forced to take up arms, censored newspapers and radio stations, and expropriated property owned by businessmen and humble market vendors.

There was not a single Nicaraguan who was not directly or indirectly affected by the Marxist-Leninist dictatorship. We have had no respite: repression, war, the recruitment of the young, and the cordoba devaluations. Destruction and death, that is what the Sandinist revolution is.

But I think that the time has come to rise from the rubble and brandish the banner of hope. I think that was the banner that was stained with blood when my husband was murdered. It is the banner of Nicaraguan brotherhood. It is the banner of unity against the dictatorship. It is the banner of freedom and justice. It is the banner of democracy. It is the banner I have picked up at this critical hour. It is the banner of UNO, because we are once again one [wordplay on the acronym UNO]. It is the banner under which Nicaragua will be a republic again.

It is a very big sacrifice to brandish this banner under the current conditions in Nicaragua because the Sandinists are using the most slanderous words, lies, vile deeds, and showing great disrespect. One feels that it is necessary to wade through mud to achieve freedom. However, it is also an honor. It is an honor to represent the heroic fighters who have maintained their opposition against all odds. It is an honor to represent those who have maintained their opposition to an ideology that goes against man and the history of Nicaragua. It is an honor to represent those who have fallen, who have been persecuted or incarcerated because they defended democracy. It is an honor to represent sons who were forced to die for an oppressing party and mothers who were forced to grieve because of a totalitarian party. It is an honor to be a symbol of the unity of all those who want a free nation and fatherland. It is an honor to represent the Nicaragua of mothers and widows who cry. It is an honor to unite all those who desire reconciliation among the Nicaraguan people so that Nicaragua can be a good home to return to, the home of the fraternal embrace, the home of peace.

We have a hard, perhaps heroic campaign ahead of us. We will win, and that victory will bring us a truly democratic, pluralist, and free government imbued with a deep human and Christian sentiment. In the UNO program, we guarantee—a guarantee backed by all the Nicaraguan democratic forces—a government with three separate branches: a democratic representative government that respects human rights, free enterprise, religion, and religious freedom. We do not want any one to leave Nicaragua because of poverty, persecution, or discrimination.

And I ask you, why were you forced to leave your country? For lack of freedom? The new government will work to guarantee forever the freedoms of all Nicaraguans. Did you leave your country because of the threat of militarism? The new government will work to reduce the Army to the minimum, to have an Army that will not be a burden to the people, that will not be a threat, that will not be a shame like the Sandinist Army that has served to threaten Central America. It has sacrificed a generation of 150,000 young men, who have lost their chances for an education or who were sent to die, instead of creating opportunities for them in life and exposing them to culture.

Did you leave your country because there were no opportunities, or because the CDS [Sandinist Defense Committee] was making life impossible for you, or because the communist commissars did not give you a chance to work? All that will be over when the people hand the new government its victory.

We will offer our friendship to the United States and to the democracies of the free world. We will regain our ability to obtain credit. There will be a free market for the merchant, for the industrialist, for anyone who has an enterprising spirit, and the cordoba will overcome inflation. We shall recover the good salaries and the justice the workers are demanding. We are not going to carry out a "world revolution" but a humble revolution for a people to recover their liberty and their capacity to produce, to work. That is why I come to ask my brothers for their encouragement and solidarity.

Brothers, I have come with a message of unity. It is a time when the fatherland asks as a first duty for everyone's support to achieve liberty in the fatherland. We are struggling to obtain the voters of the exiles. We shall exert pressure with all the might of the free world to obtain them. Those who are able to return to Nicaragua, return. Each of you add your little grain of sand so that Nicaragua can become a republic. While I ask you for this help, I also ask the United States for two things: to truly understand the sufferings of those in exile by granting Nicaraguans a legal provisional status and a permit to allow them to work until they return voluntarily to help rebuild Nicaragua; and to provide a great deal of political support and material aid so that February's elections will be clean and fair.

Nicaraguan friends, the die is cast! We are going to face the threat of a new, lying, and deceitful Sandinism. A Sandinism that does not live up to its agreements; that talks of socialism but has set up big personal businesses; that recruits youths to defend it and instead brainwashes them. The die is cast. In the face of this adversary, which has forced into exile a tremendous number of people like never before in our history; in the face of this adversary that produces war, exiles, and repression, democracy has raised its flag. It has raised its flag in Miami, among thousands of banished Nicaraguans, offering to open the fatherlands' doors to seek reconciliation for those who want to return. With all the generous aid from all the Nicaraguan, Cuban, and Hispanic communities in Miami, we shall open the doors to peace. We will open the doors to peace in the way that I feel today—with a fully open heart hoping for our liberation; hoping for a free and democratic Nicaragua that will hug to its breast all its children.

Long live Nicaragua! Thank you.

THEIR LIVES, FORTUNES, AND SACRED HONOR

HON. BOB McEWEN

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, October 4, 1989

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, Caesar Rodney was weary when he reached his plantation near Dover on the night of July 1, 1776. An outspoken advocate of American independence, Rodney was exhausted from many months of battling Delaware's Tories while building up and drilling the colony's militia. The 47-year-old son of a plantation owner, he was first elected to the colonial legislature in 1761, and sent to the First and Second Continental Congresses. Caesar Rodney was also afflicted with a painful and unsightly facial cancer. So terribly was he ravaged by the disease that he wore a green silk scarf over part of his face, and was described by one colleague as "an animated skeleton, with a bandaged head."

Tonight there was to be no rest for this weary patriot. An urgent message from his colleague, Thomas McKean, now demanded his presence in Philadelphia "at the earliest possible moment." McKean and George Read, the other two representatives from Delaware, were split on the issue of independence and Caesar Rodney's vote was needed if Delaware was to join the United States of America.

But Philadelphia was 80 miles away and a torrential rainstorm was swamping the region between the two cities. Exhausted, wracked by cancer, Rodney set out after dusk and rode all night through the pouring rain and the crashing thunder, stopping only long enough to change horses. As he raced through the stormy darkness, it must have occurred to Caesar Rodney that a political storm was rising out of Philadelphia that would change the course of history. It was a storm which had been building for more than a decade as the British Parliament and King George III imposed one oppressive measure after another on the colonies, increasing their taxes and decreasing their freedoms.

THE GRIEVANCES

The passage of the Stamp Act in 1765 had infuriated many wealthy and influential colonists, and was responsible for beginning the storm that settled over that historic assembly in Philadelphia in July 1776. These Americans had become angry not so much at the amount of taxes exacted as at the realization that this was only the opening move in a program of confiscatory taxation. If Parliament "may take from me one shilling in the pound," argues Richard Henry Lee of Virginia, "what security have I for the other nineteen?"

Although the Stamp Act was subsequently repealed, it had been followed by the Townshend Acts and the Writs of Assistance in 1767, the Boston Massacre in 1770, increasing interference in colonial governments, the Boston port bill in 1774, and other "injuries and usurpations, all having, in direct object, the establishment of an absolute tyranny over these states."

The tyrannical actions of the Crown were quickly followed by measured and sometimes violent reactions from the colonists. They had held a Stamp Act Congress in New York during September 1765, and that same year formed the Sons of Liberty, which one observer called a mob of gentlemen. Committees of Correspondence were organized in 1772 to exchange information among the colonies and mold public opinion in the developing struggle. And Continental Congresses were convened at Philadelphia in 1774 to deal with Britain's passage of the Intolerable Acts and in 1775 shortly after the Battles of Lexington and Concord.

The Second Continental Congress had constituted itself a provisional government and began making preparations for war with Britain, including the creation of a Continental Army under the command of George Washington. But even as late as January 6, 1774, the Congress adopted a resolution stating that the colonies "had no design to set up as an independent nation." Many men of influence were opposed to independence, preferring a return to the relationship of a dozen years earlier.

In January, however, a sensational pamphlet appeared in Philadelphia and stirred more revolutionary fervor than anything that had been written to that time. Entitled "Common Sense," the 25,000-word tract by Thomas Paine challenged British authority over the Colonies and bluntly stated that "the period of debate is closed; arms, as a last resort, must decide the contest."

In the months that followed, impassioned speeches were delivered from New Hampshire to Georgia, and the political tension became almost unbearable. Then, on June 7, Richard Henry Lee put this resolution before the Congress:

Resolved. That these United Colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent States, that they are absolved from all allegiance to the British Crown, and that all political connection between them and the State of Great Britian is, and ought to be, totally dissolved.

After several days of heated debate, final action on Lee's resolution was deferred until July 1, and men on both sides of the issue used the intervening weeks to lobby their own position. On July 1 the Colonies, balloting according to a majority of each delegation, approved the Lee resolution by a vote of 9 to 2, with South Carolina and Pennsylvania opposed, Delaware deadlocked, and New York abstaining. Unanimity was essential, so Edward Rutledge of South Carolina moved that a final vote be postponed until the following day.

THE GREAT DECISION

Thus had the stage been set as Caesar Rodney galloped up Chestnut Street to the statehouse in Philadelphia on the morning of July 2. The exhausted rider was enthusiastically greeted by Thomas McDean and escorted into the brick building were some 50 to 60 men were about to decide the fate of a continent.

There was no debate or discussion. The time had come to vote again on Richard Henry Lee's resolution. New England was unanimously for independence. New York still abstained, but New Jersey and Pennsylvania voted in the affirmative. The Pennsylvania delegation had been 4 to 3 against independence, but Robert Morris and John Dickinson deliberately stayed away from the statehouse during the balloting, allowing Pennsylvania, under the unit rule, to support independence despite instructions by which the two men felt themselves personally bound.

Delaware was called next by Charles Thomason, the Clerk of Congress, and Caesar Rodney, in a tired but clear voice, responded: "As I believe the voice of my constituents and of all sensible and honest men is in favor of independence, and my own judgment concurs with them, I vote for independence." Rodney knew very well that, now unable to go to England for treatment of his terrible cancer, he would die an early and horrible death.

There were no negative votes among the 5 southernmost Colonies—South Carolina went along for the sake of unity—and when the roll had been completed 12 Colonies had voted in favor of separation from Britain, and only New York had abstained. A monumental decision had been made, and now it would have to be implemented.

DECLARING THEMSELVES

The man chosen formally to declare the reasons for independence was Thomas Jefferson, a 33-year-old lawyer and plantation owner from Virginia. A member of the five-man drafting committee created immediately after the Lee resolution was introduced, Jefferson had proposed that John Adams of Massachusetts undertake the actual writing of the statement, but Adams declined. He said that the task should fall to his rival, Jefferson, on three counts: "Reason first, you are a Virginian, and Virginia ought to appear at the head of this business. Reason second, I am obnoxious, suspected, and unpopular; you are very much otherwise, Reason third, you can write ten times better than I can.

"Well," said Jefferson, "if you are decided, I will do as well as I can."

That he did his job well is obvious to anyone who has read the Declaration of Independence, particularly his statement of the self-evident truths that "all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. That, to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed."

On July 3, Jefferson's draft of the Declaration was submitted to the delegates from the 13 Colonies, and he suffered the pain of all authors at the hands of editors—in this case, half a hundred of them. The debate continued into the 4th of July and, in Jefferson's own words, "seemed as though it would run on interminable. The weather was oppressively warm and the room occupied by the delegates was hard by a livery stable * * * The horseflies swarmed thick and fierce, alighting on the legs of the members and biting hard through their thin silk stockings. Handkerchief in hand they lashed at the hungry pests to no avail."

The revisions were completed on the evening of July 4, the document was adopted without dissent, and the Declaration of Independence was ordered proclaimed throughout the United States. Only John Hancock signed the Declaration that day, and a formal signing by all the delegates was scheduled for August 2.

In the days that followed, copies of the Declaration of Independence were posted throughout the 13 States and read in public places. General Washington ordered that the document be read to each Army brigade on July 9, and he reported afterward to Congress on "the expressions and behavior of officers and men testifying their warmest approbation of it." Parades and demonstrations, patriotic observances and celebrations, were held across the States. Exuberant citizens of Bowling Green, NY, hauled down a large equestrian statue of George III and carried it to the Connecticut home of Gen. Oliver Wolcott, a Delegate to Congress. Wolcott's wife and children, and other ladies of the town, melted down the statue into 42,088 bullets for the American Army.

Meanwhile, the New York State Convention had finally voted to allow its delegates to approve the Declaration, and on July 15 New York became the 13th Colony to affirm independence.

THE SIGNING

Two weeks later, August 2, 1776, the Congress met again at the statehouse in Philadelphia to formalize with their signatures what they had adopted a month before. Not all of those who had voted for independence on July 2 were present in August. Some had left Congress; others were away and had to sign later; and, several new Delegates had since been elected.

Whatever their status that August, the 56 men who eventually signed the Declaration of Independence were under no illusions. They knew they were committing an act of high treason against the Crown and that the penalty for doing so was death by hanging. They understood quite clearly that they were indeed pledging "to each other our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor."

William Ellery, of Rhode Island, deliberately moved close to the signing table "to see how they all looked as they signed what might be their death warrants." He said that "undaunted resolution was displayed on every countenance."

John Hancock, of Massachusetts, the President of the Congress, had been the first to sign. "There!" he had said after writing his name in large, bold letters. "His Majesty can now read my name without spectacles, and can now double his reward of 500 pounds for my head. That is my defiance."

Hancock is also reported to have said that "we must be unanimous. There must be no pulling different ways; we must all hang together." To which the witty Benjamin Franklin, of Pennsylvania, reportedly replied: "Yes, we must all hang together, or most assuredly we shall all hang separately."

Stephen Hopkins, of Rhode Island, the second-oldest signer, was afflicted with palsy. "My hand trembles," he said as he handed the quill to William Ellery, "but my heart does not." And Charles Carroll, a new Delegate from Maryland and one of the wealthiest men in America, replied as he was asked by Hancock if he would sign: "Most willingly." When he had backed away from the table, one Delegate whispered, "There go a few millions!"

And so it went through the rest of the States, with George Walton, of Georgia, the last to affix his name to the historic document that day. Even George Read, of Delaware, who had voted against the Declaration on July 2, signed it; as did Robert Morris, of Pennsylvania, who had stayed away from the session rather than vote no as he was formally instructed to do.

It took only a few minutes to complete the signing, and it was agreed not to make the signatures public for 6 months to give the signers and their families as much time as possible to secure themselves against certain reprisals. Despite this precaution, it is probable that the British Government and their Tory allies knew the names of every signer long before they were released to the public.

MEN OF CHARACTER

These 56 men who spoke for some 2½ million American freemen were a spectacular group of individuals. That such men were present at the moment of America's birth strongly suggests that the same Divine Providence they invoked in the Declaration of Independence had indeed planned it that way.

The signers were public-spirited and patriotic citizens who had for years been important in the affairs of their local communities and governments. Ranging in age from 26—Edward Rutledge—to 70—Benjamin Franklin—they were for the most part materially well off in colonial society. Eleven Delegates were prosperous merchants, 9 were wealthy farmers or landowners, and 24 were lawyers or judges. The Colonies' most respected doctors, educators, and clergymen were numbered among their ranks.

Here were the elite of 18th century America, but few were elitist. They were moral men, mostly religious, and all men of integrity who had been welded together in a common purpose. They had a great deal to lose—life, liberty, and property—but they were convinced that the cause was worth the risk. That risk was not only substantial, it was imminent. On the day of the signing, the British fleet—an armada of dozens of ships with 42,000 sailors and soldiers—was waiting off the coast to crush these patriots and make an example of them. Behind that fleet was all the wealth and power of the British Empire.

Arrayed against such might was a Continental Army of 10,000 men; and a handful of poorly equipped and badly trained militia in the several States. Few with a knowledge of history would have predicted anything but disaster and ruin for those gathered in Philadelphia during the first week of August in 1776.

In point of fact, disaster and ruin was the lot of many of the signers. Nine died of wounds or hardship during the war. Five were jailed and brutally treated. One lost all 13 of his children; and the wives, sons, and daughters of others were killed, imprisoned, harassed, or deprived of all material possessions. Seventeen signers lost everything they owned, and all of them were hunted as traitors, with most separated from their homes and families.

But none of the signers ever betrayed his pledged word. There were no defectors. No one changed his mind. Lives and fortunes were lost, but their sacred honor was never sacrificed. Half continued to serve their country after the war—several as President, many as Members of Congress, Governors, and State legislators—and a number of them later played a role in drawing up the Constitution of the United States.

TRAGEDY AND TRIUMPH

The first signer to die, in 1777, was John Morton of Pennsylvania, a former crown officer who had been sent to Philadelphia to oppose independence. Once persuaded otherwise, however, Morton signed the Declaration and stood by his decision, though he was ostracized by his family and friends, many of whom were Tories. That reaction deeply hurt Morton, particularly when he was ignored even after he fell gravely ill early in 1777. On his deathbed, John Morton sent these final words to those who had rejected him: "Tell them that they will live to see the hour when they shall acknowledge it [the signing] to have been the most glorious service that I ever rendered to my country."

The New York signers—William Floyd, Philip Livingston, Francis Lewis, and Lewis Morris—were particularly vulnerable to British retaliation. The ink was hardly dry on the Declaration of Independence when Gen. William Howe landed 25,000 British soldiers on Long Island and inflicted nearly 20-percent casualties on the Continental Army in a battle on August 27. Washington ordered his forces to withdraw and the Redcoats laid waste to most of the countryside, destroying in the process the homes and lands of the four who signed for New York.

The wife of William Floyd escaped with her children by boat across Long Island Sound into Connecticut and died in 1781 without ever again seeing her home.

Philip Livingston lost two homes and much of his business property; but was able to sell some of his remaining holdings to help maintain the credit of the United States. He died in 1778 while separated from his family by the war.

Francis Lewis was away when the British ransacked his home, so they seized his wife, treated her brutally, and threw her into prison under foul conditions. Her health broke during captivity and Mrs. Lewis died shortly after being released in a 1778 prisoner exchange.

The other New York signer, Lewis Morris, lost his magnificent estate, "Morrisania," which was sacked and burned. He lived in poverty for years before he was able to restore his property. Yet he so conducted himself that Benjamin Rush of Pennsylvania said of Morris that "every attachment of his heart yielded to his love of his country."

Great hardships and suffering were also inflicted upon three signers from neighboring New Jersey; John Hart, at the insistence of his dying wife, finally left her bedside to flee as a party of Hessians approached his farm. He was hunted by soldiers and dogs and was forced to hide in the woods and caves of the Sourland Mountains during icy December weather. When he was at last able to return to his home, John Hart found that his wife had died and his 13 children were scattered throughout the countryside or in captivity. His own health began to deteriorate and he was dead by the third anniversary of the signing of the Declaration.

Richard Stockton was betrayed by a loyalist and seized by the British, who subjected him to frequent beatings and starvation. When he was finally freed in a prisoner exchange. Stockton was an invalid who died a short time later at the age of 51.

Abraham Clark, the New Jersey signer who was known as the "Poor Man's Counsellor," had two sons—both Army officers—who were captured and accorded barbarous treatment on the hellship Jersey. The British offered freedom for his boys if he would abandon the American cause, but Abraham Clark refused. When other Members of Congress heard of the plight of the Clark sons they ordered George Washington to take a British prisoner, preferably an officer, and starve him to death in a dark hole. The mere communication of that congressional order to General Howe was enough to end the persecution of the Clark brothers and they survived their imprisonment.

During the siege of Yorktown in 1781, the British forces were under heavy attack from some 16,000 American troops, 3,000 Virginia militia, and the French fleet. The militia commander was signer Thomas Nelson, Jr., who noticed that the artillery gunners were shelling everything in the vicinity except his own stately brick mansion, which was being used as British headquarters. "Why do you spare my house?" Nelson demanded of the gunners. "Sir, out of respect to you." an artilleryman replied. "Give me the cannon," Nelson shouted. The next round from the gun went through the mansion, killing the British officers inside and destroying the Nelson home.

Thomas Nelson, Jr., who died in poverty after paying off his wartime debts "like an honest man," said he was only honoring a pledge he had made 6 years before. "I am a merchant of Yorktown, but I am a Virginian first," he declared in the House of Burgesses. "Let my trade perish, I call to God to witness that if any British troops are landed in the County of York, of which I am Lieutenant, I will wait no orders, but will summon the militia and drive the invaders into the sea!"

Joseph Hewes of North Carolina was a Quaker with a long pacifist heritage, and for many months he sided with those in Congress who were opposed to independence. After much soul-searching, Hewes decided that his belief in liberty outweighed his pacifist convictions, and he joined those urging separation from England. During the war he devoted a superhuman effort to outfitting the Continental Navy, activity which alienated him from his fellow Quakers. "My country is entitled to my services, and I shall not shrink from the cause, even though it should cost me my life," he declared. Joseph Hewes died in 1779, literally from overwork, a lonely man separated by principle from his Quaker friends and family.

During the British assault on South Carolina in 1780, three of that State's signers—Thomas Heyward, Jr., Arthur Middleton, and Edward Rutledge—distinguished themselves in the defense of Charleston. All three were captured, refused a British offer to amnesty if they would repudiate the American cause, and were shipped to the crown stockade at St. Augustine, FL. Heyward defied the guards by writing new words to "God Save the King" and teaching the other prisoners to sing, "God Save the States" to the old tune. The three South Carolinians were given their freedom in a prisoner exchange late in 1781. Thomas Heyward returned to find that his wife had died in hardship during his imprisonment.

Such was the caliber of the men who signed the Declaration of Independence, the men who risked their lives, their fortunes, and their sacred honor to establish the American Republic and guarantee our rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit the happiness.

"These are the times that try men's souls," Thomas Paine wrote in "Common Sense". "The summer soldier and the sunshine patriot will, in this crisis, shrink from the service of his country; but he that stands it now deserves the thanks of man and woman. Tyranny, like Hell, is not easily conquered; yet we have this consolation with us, that the harder the conflict, the more glorious the triumph."

We, too, live in times that try men's souls. Like the Founding Fathers, we find the right to life and liberty threatened in our own country. We are burdened by an oppressive Government that "has erected a multitude of new offices and sent hither swarms of officers to harass our people and eat out their substance," a government that has left us exposed and vulnerable to a foreign enemy bent upon our destruction.

And we have our own "summer soldiers and sunshine patriots" who shrink from the service of our country. But we also have many more courageous and dedicated men and women—some in the Congress, others in the State legislatures, still more in the cities and towns among people of all walks of life—who will not submit to tyranny, who are now vigorously defending our rights and fighting for less government, more individual responsibility, and, with God's help, a better world. This too is a time for patriots. And it is a time to remember that "the harder the conflict, the more glorious the triumph."

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Any changes in committee scheduling will be indicated by placement of an asterisk to the left of the name of the unit conducting such meetings.

Meetings scheduled for Thursday October 5, 1989, may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.
